The Church Budget Office provides staff support to the First Presidency and gives overall administrative direction to the preparation of the annual Church budget. At the beginning of each annual budgeting cycle, budget guidelines are given to Church administrative department heads, international offices, missions, temples, and other units. Within these guidelines, budgets are constructed at the lowest levels of accountability and scrupulously reviewed through various levels of management and councils. The Budget Committee meets periodically to provide in-depth budget review and to formulate budget recommendations to the Council on the Disposition of Tithes.

The Appropriations Committee meets each week. All expenditure requests throughout the world, except those few which have been delegated to a lower level of administration by the Council on the Disposition of Tithes, are reviewed, checked to make certain the request is within budget, and appropriated. Expenditures that have been delegated are reported to the committee.

FINANCIAL CONTROLS. Financial controls are administered through the use of financial policy, budgeting, organization structure, and regular, comprehensive audits. Key financial policy comes from the Council on the Disposition of Tithes. Additional financial policy and procedure directives are issued by the Finance and Records Department, which, under the direction of the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric, is responsible for the administration of treasury accounting/controllership, taxation, and risk-management functions.

The Church has an Audit Committee composed of experienced businessmen who are not associated with the Church as employees or General Authorities. This committee reports directly to the First Presidency of the Church and works closely with the Finance and Records Department and the Auditing Department to ensure strict adherence to ethical principles and rigid financial policies and procedures. The Auditing Department also reports directly to the First Presidency of the Church and thus maintains its independence from all other departments. Its staff of certified public accountants performs ongoing audits of finance, operation, and computer systems for Church departments and other Church-controlled organizations. Responses to all audits are required and are monitored.

PARTICIPATION AND INVESTMENTS IN BUSINESS. The First Presidency has established other boards and committees to oversee the management of the Church's investments and reserves (see BUSINESS: CHURCH PARTICIPATION IN). Each of these key committees is chaired either by a member of the First Presidency or by another appointed General Authority.

The Investment Policy Committee is chaired by the First Presidency and includes the president of the Council of the Twelve, other members of the Twelve as appointed, and the Presiding Bishopric. Its purpose is to establish investment policy and strategy and to review key investment decisions.

The Deseret Management Corporation (DMC) is a corporation with its own board of directors. DMC functions as a holding company for most of the commercial businesses owned by the Church. These companies pay all taxes that are paid by commercial corporations. Some properties are also held for reasons other than investment. In addition to protecting the surroundings of sacred properties, such investments may be maintained to support the ecclesiastical efforts of the Church.

The Church still holds a few properties that were originally established to support commerce in LDS communities (see ECONOMIC HISTORY OF THE CHURCH). However, as a result of an evaluation of these holdings and their contributions to its mission, the Church has divested many such holdings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.
Doxey, Roy W. Tithing: The Lord's Law. Salt Lake City, 1976.

RICHARD C. EDGLEY
WILFORD G. EDLING

---

FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Members of the Church may make financial contributions in several ways, including payment of TITHING, donation of FAST OFFERINGS, and contributions to missionary work. Each kind of contribution is directed to a specific purpose and is based on admonitions in both ancient and modern scriptures (Mal. 3:8; D&C 119:4; cf. 2 Chr. 3:5–12; Rom. 15:26).

The payment of tithing is expected of each member regardless of age, income level, or circumstance. Faithful Latter-day Saints contribute one-tenth of their income annually to the Church. Members consider these tithing funds to be sacred monies, and leaders carefully administer their expenditures at each level of Church organization. Tithing is used to pay most of the operating expenses of the Church and also now funds the construction of buildings, including meetinghouses and temples.

Fast offerings are a second kind of financial contribution expected of all Church members. Once each month Church members are to abstain from food for at least two meals and contribute the cash equivalent of the savings as a "fast offering" to assist the poor and needy. These contributions are dispersed on both a local and Churchwide basis;

Council on the Disposition of Tithes, are reviewed, checked to make certain the request is within budget, and appropriated. Expenditures that have been delegated are reported to the committee.

FINANCIAL CONTROLS. Financial controls are administered through the use of financial policy, budgeting, organization structure, and regular, comprehensive audits. Key financial policy comes from the Council on the Disposition of Tithes. Additional financial policy and procedure directives are issued by the Finance and Records Department, which, under the direction of the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric, is responsible for the administration of treasury accounting/controllership, taxation, and risk-management functions.

The Church has an Audit Committee composed of experienced businessmen who are not associated with the Church as employees or General Authorities. This committee reports directly to the First Presidency of the Church and works closely with the Finance and Records Department and the Auditing Department to ensure strict adherence to ethical principles and rigid financial policies and procedures. The Auditing Department also reports directly to the First Presidency of the Church and thus maintains its independence from all other departments. Its staff of certified public accountants performs ongoing audits of finance, operation, and computer systems for Church departments and other Church-controlled organizations. Responses to all audits are required and are monitored.

PARTICIPATION AND INVESTMENTS IN BUSINESS. The First Presidency has established other boards and committees to oversee the management of the Church's investments and reserves (see BUSINESS: CHURCH PARTICIPATION IN). Each of these key committees is chaired either by a member of the First Presidency or by another appointed General Authority.

The Investment Policy Committee is chaired by the First Presidency and includes the president of the Council of the Twelve, other members of the Twelve as appointed, and the Presiding Bishopric. Its purpose is to establish investment policy and strategy and to review key investment decisions.

The Deseret Management Corporation (DMC) is a corporation with its own board of directors. DMC functions as a holding company for most of the commercial businesses owned by the Church. These companies pay all taxes that are paid by commercial corporations. Some properties are also held for reasons other than investment. In addition to protecting the surroundings of sacred properties, such investments may be maintained to support the ecclesiastical efforts of the Church.

The Church still holds a few properties that were originally established to support commerce in LDS communities (see ECONOMIC HISTORY OF THE CHURCH). However, as a result of an evaluation of these holdings and their contributions to its mission, the Church has divested many such holdings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.
Doxey, Roy W. Tithing: The Lord's Law. Salt Lake City, 1976.

RICHARD C. EDGLEY
WILFORD G. EDLING

---

FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Members of the Church may make financial contributions in several ways, including payment of TITHING, donation of FAST OFFERINGS, and contributions to missionary work. Each kind of contribution is directed to a specific purpose and is based on admonitions in both ancient and modern scriptures (Mal. 3:8; D&C 119:4; cf. 2 Chr. 3:5–12; Rom. 15:26).

The payment of tithing is expected of each member regardless of age, income level, or circumstance. Faithful Latter-day Saints contribute one-tenth of their income annually to the Church. Members consider these tithing funds to be sacred monies, and leaders carefully administer their expenditures at each level of Church organization. Tithing is used to pay most of the operating expenses of the Church and also now funds the construction of buildings, including meetinghouses and temples.

Fast offerings are a second kind of financial contribution expected of all Church members. Once each month Church members are to abstain from food for at least two meals and contribute the cash equivalent of the savings as a "fast offering" to assist the poor and needy. These contributions are dispersed on both a local and Churchwide basis;

they are shared as needed throughout the Church and are available to local bishops for the aid of needy persons in their wards. In extraordinary circumstances, as in the case of the 1985 Ethiopian famine, the Church has called a special fast to raise relief funds for a specific disaster (see ECONOMIC AID; HUMANITARIAN SERVICE). For many years, the value of the two meals foregone during the fast determined the amount of the monthly fast offering contribution. Today Church leaders suggest that the amount of the voluntary offering be associated less with the value of the two meals and more with ability to respond generously to need.

A third kind of contribution made by Church members supports missionary work, a major activity of the Church that is financed largely by individual families. Young men and women can be "called" on missions, usually at the ages of nineteen and twenty-one, respectively, and are responsible for most of their own financial support, including food, rent, clothes, and local transportation. Major travel expenses and medical care are provided from Church funds. Parents and Church leaders urge young people to begin earning and saving money for their missions at an early age. Contributions from parents, family members, and friends supplement the missionaries' own funds to make up the total financial support required. Beginning in 1991, support for missionaries called from North American stakes is donated directly to the Church at uniform rates, but redistributed by the Church to missionaries according to varying costs of living in different areas of missionary service. Married couples may also be called to serve missions, and they, too, are responsible for their own financial support.

Members confidentially submit tithing and other donations to their local BISHOPS. Each ward bishop receives tithing and then remits it to central Church offices. Assisted by financial clerks, bishops provide contribution slips to donors and maintain complete records. They also review contribution summaries confidentially with each member once a year. Contribution records are forwarded to Church headquarters in accordance with uniform practices. Stake officers conduct regular audits of these records and practices.

Bishops, assisted by other ward leaders, prepare and submit annual ward budgets to be approved by stake presidents (see WARD BUDGET). Funding levels are determined by the membership and activity level of the ward. One outcome of this procedure is that local expenditures are determined by local need and not by the resources of members in a particular ward.

Until 1990, ward operating budgets were mostly dependent on contributions from local members made in addition to regular tithes, fast offerings, and missionary fund contributions. Youth and adult activities, instructional manuals and equipment, and building maintenance were funded locally. Since 1990, in North American stakes tithing paid by Church members is used to fund all local programs, activities, and maintenance of physical facilities. Members perform some maintenance functions as a voluntary service.

The method of funding construction of Church buildings has also varied considerably over time. For many years, the building of meetinghouses was financed largely through contributions from the local members who would use the building. These building fund contributions were made in addition to the tithes, fast offerings, and missionary funds contributed by Church members. Building fund monies could be raised through request (assessment of members), through a variety of fund-raising projects (dinners, socials, etc.), and sometimes through donations of labor and materials (see BUILDING PROGRAM). Temples, which are buildings for special religious ceremonies, were financed for many years in much the same manner as local meetinghouses. Now meetinghouses and temples are constructed largely out of tithing funds.

Because the Church has no professional clergy, it is administered at every level through LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP, and officials other than the General Authorities contribute their time and talents without remuneration. Thus, events such as weddings, funerals, and baptisms are conducted by the lay ministry in Church-owned buildings at no charge to the member for services or facilities. Because the General Authorities are obliged to leave their regular employment for full-time Church service, they receive a modest living allowance provided from income on Church investments.

STEPHEN D. NADAULD

---

FINE ARTS

[Historically, the fine arts have been important to Latter-day Saints, who have encouraged participation in, and provided support for, art, dance, drama, litera-

they are shared as needed throughout the Church and are available to local bishops for the aid of needy persons in their wards. In extraordinary circumstances, as in the case of the 1985 Ethiopian famine, the Church has called a special fast to raise relief funds for a specific disaster (see ECONOMIC AID; HUMANITARIAN SERVICE). For many years, the value of the two meals foregone during the fast determined the amount of the monthly fast offering contribution. Today Church leaders suggest that the amount of the voluntary offering be associated less with the value of the two meals and more with ability to respond generously to need.

A third kind of contribution made by Church members supports missionary work, a major activity of the Church that is financed largely by individual families. Young men and women can be "called" on missions, usually at the ages of nineteen and twenty-one, respectively, and are responsible for most of their own financial support, including food, rent, clothes, and local transportation. Major travel expenses and medical care are provided from Church funds. Parents and Church leaders urge young people to begin earning and saving money for their missions at an early age. Contributions from parents, family members, and friends supplement the missionaries' own funds to make up the total financial support required. Beginning in 1991, support for missionaries called from North American stakes is donated directly to the Church at uniform rates, but redistributed by the Church to missionaries according to varying costs of living in different areas of missionary service. Married couples may also be called to serve missions, and they, too, are responsible for their own financial support.

Members confidentially submit tithing and other donations to their local BISHOPS. Each ward bishop receives tithing and then remits it to central Church offices. Assisted by financial clerks, bishops provide contribution slips to donors and maintain complete records. They also review contribution summaries confidentially with each member once a year. Contribution records are forwarded to Church headquarters in accordance with uniform practices. Stake officers conduct regular audits of these records and practices.

Bishops, assisted by other ward leaders, prepare and submit annual ward budgets to be approved by stake presidents (see WARD BUDGET). Funding levels are determined by the membership and activity level of the ward. One outcome of this procedure is that local expenditures are determined by local need and not by the resources of members in a particular ward.

Until 1990, ward operating budgets were mostly dependent on contributions from local members made in addition to regular tithes, fast offerings, and missionary fund contributions. Youth and adult activities, instructional manuals and equipment, and building maintenance were funded locally. Since 1990, in North American stakes tithing paid by Church members is used to fund all local programs, activities, and maintenance of physical facilities. Members perform some maintenance functions as a voluntary service.

The method of funding construction of Church buildings has also varied considerably over time. For many years, the building of meetinghouses was financed largely through contributions from the local members who would use the building. These building fund contributions were made in addition to the tithes, fast offerings, and missionary funds contributed by Church members. Building fund monies could be raised through request (assessment of members), through a variety of fund-raising projects (dinners, socials, etc.), and sometimes through donations of labor and materials (see BUILDING PROGRAM). Temples, which are buildings for special religious ceremonies, were financed for many years in much the same manner as local meetinghouses. Now meetinghouses and temples are constructed largely out of tithing funds.

Because the Church has no professional clergy, it is administered at every level through LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP, and officials other than the General Authorities contribute their time and talents without remuneration. Thus, events such as weddings, funerals, and baptisms are conducted by the lay ministry in Church-owned buildings at no charge to the member for services or facilities. Because the General Authorities are obliged to leave their regular employment for full-time Church service, they receive a modest living allowance provided from income on Church investments.

STEPHEN D. NADAULD

---

FINE ARTS

[Historically, the fine arts have been important to Latter-day Saints, who have encouraged participation in, and provided support for, art, dance, drama, litera- ture, music, and public speaking. For articles about LDS fine arts, see Angel Moroni Statue; Architecture; Art; Artists, Visual; Christus Statue; Folk Art; Material Culture; Sculptors; and Symbols. On dance, see Dance. On drama, see Cumorah Pageant; Drama; Pageants; Polynesian Cultural Center; and Salt Lake Theatre. On literature, see the entry Literature with articles on Drama, Novels, Personal Essays, Poetry, and Short Stories. On music, see Hymns and Hymnody; Mormon Tabernacle Choir; Mormon Youth Symphony and Chorus; and Tabernacle Organ. On public speaking, see Public Speaking.]

---

FIRESIDES

Firesides are informal gatherings of Church members and friends, often in homes or other congenial surroundings, as if around a fire. The premises are that the home is sacred ground and that all members are to “teach one another” and share experiences and training, that “all may be edified of all and that every man may have an equal privilege” (cf. D&C 88:122). Typically, firesides feature a single speaker reporting new developments, insights, or interesting experiences.

Religious firesides exhibit ties to the ancient fascination of the warmth and protection of a fire. In LDS life, firesides may be traceable to the exodus across the plains. After an arduous day of travel, the PIONEERS in the evening would arrange their wagons in a circle, and gather around the campfire to pray, sing, share their spiritual experiences, and rejoice in the progress and blessings of the day. Eliza R. SNOW wrote a typical song of this exodus:

The camp, the camp—its numbers swell—
Shout! Shout! O camp of Israel!
The king, the Lord of hosts is near,
His armies guard our front and rear [Journal of Eliza R. Snow].

In this spirit, one journal records, “It verily seemed that the glory of God rested down on the wagons and overspread the prairie.”

Holding firesides has become a common Sunday evening practice for socializing, fellowshiping, and learning. WARDS, STAKES, or REGIONS commonly sponsor firesides. They are frequently a forum for returned MISSIONARIES presenting cultural insights from their mission experiences, often with the use of slides, tapes, photos, and so forth.

By extension of the term, there are “morningsides” for high-school SEMINARY students who attend religious classes before school, and “noon-sides” for some who want to add meaningful religious moments to their lunch hour. Multistake firesides with large audiences are regularly held at BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY. Some satellite broadcasts beamed throughout the world from the Salt Lake TABERNACLE and featuring presentations from the general Church leaders are also called firesides.

In all firesides, essential elements prevail: prayer, music, the spoken word, and sometimes special activities or workshops. All in all, they encourage lay participation, sharing, and free expression, and lead to deeper comprehension of one’s heritage, both religious and cultural, and a “knowledge of history and of countries and of kingdoms” (D&C 93:53; 88:79).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Journal of Eliza R. Snow. Bancroft Library, UC Berkeley.

RONALD W. PATRICK

---

FIRSTBORN OF GOD

See: Jesus Christ: Names and Titles of

---

FIRST ESTATE

First estate refers to the unspecified period of time otherwise known as PREMORTAL LIFE. The words “first estate” in Jude 1:6 are the King James translation of the Greek arché. In other English versions the word is translated as “principality,” “domain,” “dominion,” “appointed spheres,” “responsibilities,” and “original rank.” In the context of Jude 1:6 each of these implies that certain intelligent beings existed in significant positions in the pre-earth life and fell from their favored status with God.

Latter-day Saints believe that all MANKIND were begotten as individual spirit children of God, with individual agency, prior to being born into MORTALITY. Using this agency, a third part of these spirits followed Lucifer and rebelled against God and the PLAN OF SALVATION that God proposed to bring about the eventual EXALTATION of his children through the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Because of their rebellion, these spirits “kept not their first estate” (Jude 1:6) and were subsequently cast out of heaven, being denied the

ture, music, and public speaking. For articles about LDS fine arts, see Angel Moroni Statue; Architecture; Art; Artists, Visual; Christus Statue; Folk Art; Material Culture; Sculptors; and Symbols. On dance, see Dance. On drama, see Cumorah Pageant; Drama; Pageants; Polynesian Cultural Center; and Salt Lake Theatre. On literature, see the entry Literature with articles on Drama, Novels, Personal Essays, Poetry, and Short Stories. On music, see Hymns and Hymnody; Mormon Tabernacle Choir; Mormon Youth Symphony and Chorus; and Tabernacle Organ. On public speaking, see Public Speaking.]

---

FIRESIDES

Firesides are informal gatherings of Church members and friends, often in homes or other congenial surroundings, as if around a fire. The premises are that the home is sacred ground and that all members are to “teach one another” and share experiences and training, that “all may be edified of all and that every man may have an equal privilege” (cf. D&C 88:122). Typically, firesides feature a single speaker reporting new developments, insights, or interesting experiences.

Religious firesides exhibit ties to the ancient fascination of the warmth and protection of a fire. In LDS life, firesides may be traceable to the exodus across the plains. After an arduous day of travel, the PIONEERS in the evening would arrange their wagons in a circle, and gather around the campfire to pray, sing, share their spiritual experiences, and rejoice in the progress and blessings of the day. Eliza R. SNOW wrote a typical song of this exodus:

The camp, the camp—its numbers swell—
Shout! Shout! O camp of Israel!
The king, the Lord of hosts is near,
His armies guard our front and rear [Journal of Eliza R. Snow].

In this spirit, one journal records, “It verily seemed that the glory of God rested down on the wagons and overspread the prairie.”

Holding firesides has become a common Sunday evening practice for socializing, fellowshiping, and learning. WARDS, STAKES, or REGIONS commonly sponsor firesides. They are frequently a forum for returned MISSIONARIES presenting cultural insights from their mission experiences, often with the use of slides, tapes, photos, and so forth.

By extension of the term, there are “morningsides” for high-school SEMINARY students who attend religious classes before school, and “noon-sides” for some who want to add meaningful religious moments to their lunch hour. Multistake firesides with large audiences are regularly held at BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY. Some satellite broadcasts beamed throughout the world from the Salt Lake TABERNACLE and featuring presentations from the general Church leaders are also called firesides.

In all firesides, essential elements prevail: prayer, music, the spoken word, and sometimes special activities or workshops. All in all, they encourage lay participation, sharing, and free expression, and lead to deeper comprehension of one’s heritage, both religious and cultural, and a “knowledge of history and of countries and of kingdoms” (D&C 93:53; 88:79).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Journal of Eliza R. Snow. Bancroft Library, UC Berkeley.

RONALD W. PATRICK

---

FIRSTBORN OF GOD

See: Jesus Christ: Names and Titles of

---

FIRST ESTATE

First estate refers to the unspecified period of time otherwise known as PREMORTAL LIFE. The words “first estate” in Jude 1:6 are the King James translation of the Greek arché. In other English versions the word is translated as “principality,” “domain,” “dominion,” “appointed spheres,” “responsibilities,” and “original rank.” In the context of Jude 1:6 each of these implies that certain intelligent beings existed in significant positions in the pre-earth life and fell from their favored status with God.

Latter-day Saints believe that all MANKIND were begotten as individual spirit children of God, with individual agency, prior to being born into MORTALITY. Using this agency, a third part of these spirits followed Lucifer and rebelled against God and the PLAN OF SALVATION that God proposed to bring about the eventual EXALTATION of his children through the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Because of their rebellion, these spirits “kept not their first estate” (Jude 1:6) and were subsequently cast out of heaven, being denied the

ture, music, and public speaking. For articles about LDS fine arts, see Angel Moroni Statue; Architecture; Art; Artists, Visual; Christus Statue; Folk Art; Material Culture; Sculptors; and Symbols. On dance, see Dance. On drama, see Cumorah Pageant; Drama; Pageants; Polynesian Cultural Center; and Salt Lake Theatre. On literature, see the entry Literature with articles on Drama, Novels, Personal Essays, Poetry, and Short Stories. On music, see Hymns and Hymnody; Mormon Tabernacle Choir; Mormon Youth Symphony and Chorus; and Tabernacle Organ. On public speaking, see Public Speaking.]

---

FIRESIDES

Firesides are informal gatherings of Church members and friends, often in homes or other congenial surroundings, as if around a fire. The premises are that the home is sacred ground and that all members are to “teach one another” and share experiences and training, that “all may be edified of all and that every man may have an equal privilege” (cf. D&C 88:122). Typically, firesides feature a single speaker reporting new developments, insights, or interesting experiences.

Religious firesides exhibit ties to the ancient fascination of the warmth and protection of a fire. In LDS life, firesides may be traceable to the exodus across the plains. After an arduous day of travel, the PIONEERS in the evening would arrange their wagons in a circle, and gather around the campfire to pray, sing, share their spiritual experiences, and rejoice in the progress and blessings of the day. Eliza R. SNOW wrote a typical song of this exodus:

The camp, the camp—its numbers swell—
Shout! Shout! O camp of Israel!
The king, the Lord of hosts is near,
His armies guard our front and rear [Journal of Eliza R. Snow].

In this spirit, one journal records, “It verily seemed that the glory of God rested down on the wagons and overspread the prairie.”

Holding firesides has become a common Sunday evening practice for socializing, fellowshiping, and learning. WARDS, STAKES, or REGIONS commonly sponsor firesides. They are frequently a forum for returned MISSIONARIES presenting cultural insights from their mission experiences, often with the use of slides, tapes, photos, and so forth.

By extension of the term, there are “morningsides” for high-school SEMINARY students who attend religious classes before school, and “noon-sides” for some who want to add meaningful religious moments to their lunch hour. Multistake firesides with large audiences are regularly held at BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY. Some satellite broadcasts beamed throughout the world from the Salt Lake TABERNACLE and featuring presentations from the general Church leaders are also called firesides.

In all firesides, essential elements prevail: prayer, music, the spoken word, and sometimes special activities or workshops. All in all, they encourage lay participation, sharing, and free expression, and lead to deeper comprehension of one’s heritage, both religious and cultural, and a “knowledge of history and of countries and of kingdoms” (D&C 93:53; 88:79).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Journal of Eliza R. Snow. Bancroft Library, UC Berkeley.

RONALD W. PATRICK

---

FIRSTBORN OF GOD

See: Jesus Christ: Names and Titles of

---

FIRST ESTATE

First estate refers to the unspecified period of time otherwise known as PREMORTAL LIFE. The words “first estate” in Jude 1:6 are the King James translation of the Greek arché. In other English versions the word is translated as “principality,” “domain,” “dominion,” “appointed spheres,” “responsibilities,” and “original rank.” In the context of Jude 1:6 each of these implies that certain intelligent beings existed in significant positions in the pre-earth life and fell from their favored status with God.

Latter-day Saints believe that all MANKIND were begotten as individual spirit children of God, with individual agency, prior to being born into MORTALITY. Using this agency, a third part of these spirits followed Lucifer and rebelled against God and the PLAN OF SALVATION that God proposed to bring about the eventual EXALTATION of his children through the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Because of their rebellion, these spirits “kept not their first estate” (Jude 1:6) and were subsequently cast out of heaven, being denied the opportunity of having a mortal body on this earth (D&C 29:36–38; Moses 4:1–4; Abr. 3:26–28; cf. Rev. 12:4, 7–9). All the remaining spirits proved themselves sufficiently faithful to be permitted the privilege of experiencing earth life with a PHYSICAL BODY (Abr. 3:22–26).

[See also Birth; Second Estate.]

ALEXANDER L. BAUGH

FIRST PRESIDENCY

The First Presidency is the governing body of and highest ranking quorum in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Its AUTHORITY, duties, and responsibilities extend over every person and all matters in the Church. This quorum usually consists of three persons—the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH and two counselors selected by the President. Joseph SMITH, the first President, called more than two men to assist him. Other Presidents have occasionally also used this practice of additional counselors as needed. Most recently, Spencer W. KIMBALL was assisted at times by three counselors.

The First Presidency was established in March 1832, two years after the founding of the Church. Jesse Gause and Sidney RIGDON were called to be counselors to Joseph Smith. Gause served in this position only until that December, when he proved unfaithful and was excommunicated. The calling was subsequently given to Frederick G. Williams, who was ordained on March 18, 1833 (D&C 81, 90). Further direction pertaining to the organization of the First Presidency was given in a revelation on priesthood in 1835. Three men were to be chosen and appointed, and ordained to that office by the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, “and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church” (D&C 107:22).

Latter-day Saints believe that the New Testament APOSTLES—PETER, JAMES, and JOHN—comprised a first presidency with Peter as the presiding officer, and with James and John as counselors. As an ancient first presidency, they functioned in a manner similar to the First Presidency today. For instance, the Bible describes occasions when Jesus dealt with Peter alone (Matt. 18:19; Luke 24:34), and others when the three apostles were involved (Matt. 17:1–3; 26:37–39; Mark 5:37–42). These passages suggest that the roles of these three men were different from the roles of the other apostles. As a first presidency, Peter, James, and John possessed the special authority to give Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY the KEYS of ministry in the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES. It is these keys that control the exercise of the priesthood by all others in the vital functions of the Church in modern times.

Members of the First Presidency are not co-equal. The authority rests solely with the President, the counselors having a subordinate role, with the first counselor having precedence over the second counselor. In the absence of the President, the counselors preside in meetings with the Council or Quorum of the Twelve Apostles and other GENERAL AUTHORITIES, and in the conferences of the Church. If the President is ill and unable to carry out all his functions, the counselors opportunity of having a mortal body on this earth (D&C 29:36–38; Moses 4:1–4; Abr. 3:26–28; cf. Rev. 12:4, 7–9). All the remaining spirits proved themselves sufficiently faithful to be permitted the privilege of experiencing earth life with a PHYSICAL BODY (Abr. 3:22–26).

President Wilford Woodruff (center), with second counselor Joseph F. Smith (right) and first counselor George Q. Cannon (left), at the time of the dedication of the Salt Lake Temple, April 6, 1893. John F. Bennett Collection. Photographer: Charles Ellis Johnson. Courtesy the Utah State Historical Society.

[See also Birth; Second Estate.]

ALEXANDER L. BAUGH

FIRST PRESIDENCY

The First Presidency is the governing body of and highest ranking quorum in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Its AUTHORITY, duties, and responsibilities extend over every person and all matters in the Church. This quorum usually consists of three persons—the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH and two counselors selected by the President. Joseph SMITH, the first President, called more than two men to assist him. Other Presidents have occasionally also used this practice of additional counselors as needed. Most recently, Spencer W. KIMBALL was assisted at times by three counselors.

The First Presidency was established in March 1832, two years after the founding of the Church. Jesse Gause and Sidney RIGDON were called to be counselors to Joseph Smith. Gause served in this position only until that December, when he proved unfaithful and was excommunicated. The calling was subsequently given to Frederick G. Williams, who was ordained on March 18, 1833 (D&C 81, 90). Further direction pertaining to the organization of the First Presidency was given in a revelation on priesthood in 1835. Three men were to be chosen and appointed, and ordained to that office by the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, “and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church” (D&C 107:22).

Latter-day Saints believe that the New Testament APOSTLES—PETER, JAMES, and JOHN—comprised a first presidency with Peter as the presiding officer, and with James and John as counselors. As an ancient first presidency, they functioned in a manner similar to the First Presidency today. For instance, the Bible describes occasions when Jesus dealt with Peter alone (Matt. 18:19; Luke 24:34), and others when the three apostles were involved (Matt. 17:1–3; 26:37–39; Mark 5:37–42). These passages suggest that the roles of these three men were different from the roles of the other apostles. As a first presidency, Peter, James, and John possessed the special authority to give Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY the KEYS of ministry in the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES. It is these keys that control the exercise of the priesthood by all others in the vital functions of the Church in modern times.

Members of the First Presidency are not co-equal. The authority rests solely with the President, the counselors having a subordinate role, with the first counselor having precedence over the second counselor. In the absence of the President, the counselors preside in meetings with the Council or Quorum of the Twelve Apostles and other GENERAL AUTHORITIES, and in the conferences of the Church. If the President is ill and unable to carry out all his functions, the counselors may conduct the affairs of the Church under his direction. In such a case, the counselors operate in close consultation with the President of the Council of the Twelve. However, the President of the Church remains the final authority.

President Wilford Woodruff (center), with second counselor Joseph F. Smith (right) and first counselor George Q. Cannon (left), at the time of the dedication of the Salt Lake Temple, April 6, 1893. John F. Bennett Collection. Photographer: Charles Ellis Johnson. Courtesy the Utah State Historical Society.

The selection of the counselors is the prerogative of the President. A new President may or may not choose to retain the counselors of his predecessor. The counselors are usually apostles, but in a few cases men have been called who were not ordained apostles, the first such being Sidney Rigdon (1832) and Frederick G. Williams (1833). More recently, Thorpe B. Isaacson was called in 1965 to serve in the First Presidency under David O. MCKAY. In some cases, the counselors have been apostles but not members of the Twelve, such as Alvin R. Dyer, another counselor to President McKay.

The general membership of the Church votes to sustain the First Presidency but does not elect them. Because members of the Church believe that the calling and authority of the First Presidency come from God, their vote is one of COMMON CONSENT, to ratify or oppose a selection that has already been made.

Doctrine and Covenants 107:9 states, "The Presidency of the High Priesthood, after the order of Melchizedek, have a right to officiate in all the offices in the church." As the highest level of authority, the Quorum of the First Presidency has the ultimate power of appointment, presidency, interpretation of DOCTRINE, and all other matters pertaining to the Church. Thus, all other quorums, councils, and organizations of the Church operate under the authority of this quorum.

Affairs administered directly by the First Presidency have included planning general and area conferences and solemn assemblies; budgeting, auditing, educational, historical, personnel, and other general Church departments; and temples. All other matters are administered by the Council of the Twelve, the PRESIDING BISHOPRIC, or the SEVENTY, under the direction of the First Presidency.

In the First Presidency, the decision making is to be unanimous. Close and careful consultation between the President and his counselors helps to assure a consensus (Hinckley, p. 50).

The First Presidency normally meets at least weekly as a unit, then in joint session with the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles to consider matters needing their attention. It is in this COUNCIL

The First Presidency in 1985: President Ezra Taft Benson (center), first counselor Gordon B. Hinckley (left), and second counselor Thomas S. Monson (right). The President of the Church has at least two counselors, who together with him form the First Presidency, which presides over the Church.

OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY AND THE QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES that any changes in administration or policy for the Church are considered and approved.

The First Presidency also meets weekly with the Presiding Bishopric. Meetings are held each month with all the General Authorities, where they are informed about any changes in programs or procedures. In addition, the First Presidency meets as needed with other councils, boards, and groups to which various responsibilities have been delegated.

Upon the death of the President, the Quorum of the First Presidency is automatically dissolved and the ultimate authority of the Church passes immediately to the Twelve, with the presiding officer being the President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. The counselors, if they are apostles, return to their respective positions in that quorum according to seniority of appointment. The First Presidency is reconstituted at the calling of a new President, who in every instance has been the President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and then he selects his own counselors. Once this is accomplished, supreme authority returns to the First Presidency.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hinckley, Gordon B. "In . . . Counsellors There Is Safety." Ensign 20 (Nov. 1990):48-51.

Article of Faith Number 4, by Michael Clane Graves (1982, acrylic on canvas). The first principles of the gospel, here represented geometrically, are faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Courtesy Museum of Fine Arts, Brigham Young University.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "The Administration of the Church." Ensign 9 (Nov. 1979):42–48.

J. LYNN ENGLAND
W. KEITH WARNER

FIRST PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL

The first principles and ordinances of the gospel are "first, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost" (A of F 4). The resurrected Savior taught that these principles constitute his "gospel": "Repent, all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may be sanctified by the reception of the Holy Ghost, that ye may stand spotless before me at the last day. Verily, verily, I say unto you, this is my gospel" (3 Ne. 27:20–21; cf. Acts 2:37–38). These four principles prepare one to enter the "strait and narrow path which leads to eternal life" (2 Ne. 31:17–18).

First, faith in Jesus Christ often begins with a desire to believe (Alma 32:26–28), which may be kindled by hearing or reading others' true testimonies of Christ and his atonement. One nourishes faith by patient obedience to God's commandments. Faith then grows through a process that includes REPENTANCE, baptism for REMISSION OF SINS, increased confidence in Christ, and eventually a Christlike nature (Hafen, pp. 141–200).

Repentance involves (1) realization of guilt; (2) godly sorrow and suffering; (3) confession for relief from the hurtful effects of sin; (4) restitution, as far as it is possible; (5) replacement of sin with obedience to God's requirements; and (6) acceptance of Christ's atoning sacrifice. Through the Atonement, if one repents, Christ's mercy satisfies the demands of justice.

Baptism, the third principle and first essential ordinance, is the fruit of repentance and is required of all who would be saved in the KINGDOM OF GOD (John 3:3–5; cf. 2 Ne. 9:23). Baptism has several purposes. It is a symbolic washing and cleansing of sins and is prerequisite to membership in the Church. When followed by the reception of the Holy Ghost, it is the doorway to personal SANCTIFICATION (Moro. 6:1–4). The prescribed method of baptism is by immersion in water by a PRIEST in the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD or by one who holds the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. "The symbolism of the rite is preserved in no other form" (AF, p. 137).

Being "born of the Spirit," or receiving the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, entitles one to the continual help, guidance, and comfort of the Holy Ghost. "The special office of the Holy Ghost is to enlighten and ennoble the mind, to purify and sanctify the soul, to incite to good works, and to reveal the things of God" (AF, p. 167). When asked how the Church differed from the other religions of the day, Joseph Smith replied that "we differed in mode of baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost . . . [and] that all other considerations [of differences from other churches] were contained in the gift of the Holy Ghost" (HC 4:42). The gift of the Holy Ghost is conferred by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS by a holder of the Melchizedek Priesthood.

Summarizing the process from faith and repentance to sanctification, the Book of Mormon prophet Mormon stated, "And the first fruits of repentance is baptism; and baptism cometh by faith unto the fulfilling the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins; and the remission of sins bringeth

Article of Faith Number 4, by Michael Clane Graves (1982, acrylic on canvas). The first principles of the gospel, here represented geometrically, are faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Courtesy Museum of Fine Arts, Brigham Young University.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "The Administration of the Church." Ensign 9 (Nov. 1979):42–48.

J. LYNN ENGLAND
W. KEITH WARNER

FIRST PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL

The first principles and ordinances of the gospel are "first, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost" (A of F 4). The resurrected Savior taught that these principles constitute his "gospel": "Repent, all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may be sanctified by the reception of the Holy Ghost, that ye may stand spotless before me at the last day. Verily, verily, I say unto you, this is my gospel" (3 Ne. 27:20–21; cf. Acts 2:37–38). These four principles prepare one to enter the "strait and narrow path which leads to eternal life" (2 Ne. 31:17–18).

First, faith in Jesus Christ often begins with a desire to believe (Alma 32:26–28), which may be kindled by hearing or reading others' true testimonies of Christ and his atonement. One nourishes faith by patient obedience to God's commandments. Faith then grows through a process that includes REPENTANCE, baptism for REMISSION OF SINS, increased confidence in Christ, and eventually a Christlike nature (Hafen, pp. 141–200).

Repentance involves (1) realization of guilt; (2) godly sorrow and suffering; (3) confession for relief from the hurtful effects of sin; (4) restitution, as far as it is possible; (5) replacement of sin with obedience to God's requirements; and (6) acceptance of Christ's atoning sacrifice. Through the Atonement, if one repents, Christ's mercy satisfies the demands of justice.

Baptism, the third principle and first essential ordinance, is the fruit of repentance and is required of all who would be saved in the KINGDOM OF GOD (John 3:3–5; cf. 2 Ne. 9:23). Baptism has several purposes. It is a symbolic washing and cleansing of sins and is prerequisite to membership in the Church. When followed by the reception of the Holy Ghost, it is the doorway to personal SANCTIFICATION (Moro. 6:1–4). The prescribed method of baptism is by immersion in water by a PRIEST in the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD or by one who holds the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. "The symbolism of the rite is preserved in no other form" (AF, p. 137).

Being "born of the Spirit," or receiving the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, entitles one to the continual help, guidance, and comfort of the Holy Ghost. "The special office of the Holy Ghost is to enlighten and ennoble the mind, to purify and sanctify the soul, to incite to good works, and to reveal the things of God" (AF, p. 167). When asked how the Church differed from the other religions of the day, Joseph Smith replied that "we differed in mode of baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost . . . [and] that all other considerations [of differences from other churches] were contained in the gift of the Holy Ghost" (HC 4:42). The gift of the Holy Ghost is conferred by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS by a holder of the Melchizedek Priesthood.

Summarizing the process from faith and repentance to sanctification, the Book of Mormon prophet Mormon stated, "And the first fruits of repentance is baptism; and baptism cometh by faith unto the fulfilling the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins; and the remission of sins bringeth meekness, and lowliness of heart; and because of meekness and lowliness of heart cometh the visitation of the Holy Ghost, which Comforter filleth with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer, until the end shall come, when all the saints shall dwell with God" (Moro. 8:25–26).

These four principles and ordinances of the gospel are "first" because they both initiate and enable the process of development from a spiritual rebirth to a divine nature.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hafen, Bruce C. The Broken Heart: Applying the Atonement to Life's Experiences. Salt Lake City, 1989.

Kimball, Spencer W. The Miracle of Forgiveness. Salt Lake City, 1969.

MARIE KARTCHNER HAFEN

FIRST VISION

The First Vision of the Prophet Joseph SMITH is the beginning point, the fountainhead, of the RESTORATION of the gospel in this DISPENSATION. This theophany occurred in a grove near Palmyra, New York, in the spring of 1820.

Joseph's narratives record that when he was in his twelfth year he began to sense the need for redemption and investigated several religious groups. A short time after his family moved to Manchester, New York, he witnessed unusual religious excitement in the area, bringing divisions of allegiance in his community and family. As converts began filing off to one faith and another, he observed that their professed good feelings for each other were lost in "a strife of words and a contest about opinions" (JS—H 1:5–8). Confused and concerned, he asked himself, "If any one of them be right which is it? And how shall I know it?" (Baekman, pp. 156, 162, 168; Jessee, p. 198).

Searching the scriptures, Joseph was influenced by an admonition to prayer in the epistle of JAMES. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God" (James 1:5). "Never," he later recalled, "did any passage of scripture come with more power to the heart of man than this did at this time to mine" (JS—H 1:12). He retired to a secluded grove near his father's log-cabin farmhouse and knelt in prayer (Baekman, p. 156).

A struggle with a satanic influence followed, but with divine help he survived it. As he continued to call upon God, he records, "I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me." Immediately he was delivered from oppressive darkness (JS—H 1:16). Within the light, he saw two personages "whose brightness and glory defy all description" and who "exactly resembled each other in features and likeness" (JS—H 1:17; WENTWORTH LETTER, Baekman, p. 169). One of them spoke his name, pointed to the other, and said, "This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" (JS—H 1:17). In what followed, Joseph learned that through Christ, who had taken upon himself the SINS of mankind, he was forgiven of his sins. "Behold I am the Lord of glory. I was crucified for the world that all those who believe on my name may have eternal life" (Baekman, p. 157). He was also assured of the reality and imminence of meekness, and lowliness of heart; and because of meekness and lowliness of heart cometh the visitation of the Holy Ghost, which Comforter filleth with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer, until the end shall come, when all the saints shall dwell with God" (Moro. 8:25–26).

First Vision, by Gary E. Smith (1979, oil on canvas, 24" × 30"). Unable to determine for himself what church or sect was right, fourteen-year-old Joseph Smith determined to ask God. Following his prayer, he recorded, "I saw two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name and said, pointing to the other—This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" (JS—H 1:17). Courtesy Blaine T. Hudson.

These four principles and ordinances of the gospel are "first" because they both initiate and enable the process of development from a spiritual rebirth to a divine nature.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hafen, Bruce C. The Broken Heart: Applying the Atonement to Life's Experiences. Salt Lake City, 1989.

Kimball, Spencer W. The Miracle of Forgiveness. Salt Lake City, 1969.

MARIE KARTCHNER HAFEN

FIRST VISION

The First Vision of the Prophet Joseph SMITH is the beginning point, the fountainhead, of the RESTORATION of the gospel in this DISPENSATION. This theophany occurred in a grove near Palmyra, New York, in the spring of 1820.

Joseph's narratives record that when he was in his twelfth year he began to sense the need for redemption and investigated several religious groups. A short time after his family moved to Manchester, New York, he witnessed unusual religious excitement in the area, bringing divisions of allegiance in his community and family. As converts began filing off to one faith and another, he observed that their professed good feelings for each other were lost in "a strife of words and a contest about opinions" (JS—H 1:5–8). Confused and concerned, he asked himself, "If any one of them be right which is it? And how shall I know it?" (Baekman, pp. 156, 162, 168; Jessee, p. 198).

Searching the scriptures, Joseph was influenced by an admonition to prayer in the epistle of JAMES. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God" (James 1:5). "Never," he later recalled, "did any passage of scripture come with more power to the heart of man than this did at this time to mine" (JS—H 1:12). He retired to a secluded grove near his father's log-cabin farmhouse and knelt in prayer (Baekman, p. 156).

A struggle with a satanic influence followed, but with divine help he survived it. As he continued to call upon God, he records, "I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me." Immediately he was delivered from oppressive darkness (JS—H 1:16). Within the light, he saw two personages "whose brightness and glory defy all description" and who "exactly resembled each other in features and likeness" (JS—H 1:17; WENTWORTH LETTER, Baekman, p. 169). One of them spoke his name, pointed to the other, and said, "This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" (JS—H 1:17). In what followed, Joseph learned that through Christ, who had taken upon himself the SINS of mankind, he was forgiven of his sins. "Behold I am the Lord of glory. I was crucified for the world that all those who believe on my name may have eternal life" (Baekman, p. 157). He was also assured of the reality and imminence of

First Vision, by Gary E. Smith (1979, oil on canvas, 24" × 30"). Unable to determine for himself what church or sect was right, fourteen-year-old Joseph Smith determined to ask God. Following his prayer, he recorded, "I saw two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name and said, pointing to the other—This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" (JS—H 1:17). Courtesy Blaine T. Hudson.

Christ's second coming "to bring to pass that which [hath] been spoken by the mouth of the prophets and apostles" (Backman, pp. 157, 167, 169; Jessee, p. 6). When he recovered himself, Joseph asked which church he should join and was told to join none because they all taught "incorrect doctrines"; they had a form of godliness, but "denied the power thereof" (cf. 2 Tim. 3:5). Further, he was told "that the fulness of the gospel should at some future time be made known unto me" (JS—H 1:17–20; Backman, pp. 163, 169; Jessee, p. 213). As he left the grove, he recalled, "My soul was filled with love," and for many days "I could rejoice with great joy and the Lord was with me" (Backman, p. 157).

Joseph's tranquillity was short-lived. At first, except from his family, he met only contempt from those who learned of his experience. He had not anticipated the bitter denunciations that this event would call forth.

On several occasions between 1832 and 1842, the young Prophet wrote or dictated accounts of the vision, each in a different setting, the last two for publication. Each record omits or adds some details. In 1832, for example, Joseph Smith wrote that prior to his First Vision he searched the scriptures and concluded that no society taught New Testament Christianity (Backman, p. 156; Jessee, p. 5). In the 1838 account he notes that he often said to himself, "Who of all these parties are right; or, are they all wrong together?" Later in this same account he parenthetically adds "(for at this time it had never entered into my heart that all were wrong)" (JS—H 1:10, 18; Jessee, pp. 198, 200).

Latter-day Saints regard this vision as authentic and revelatory of the nature of God. In the biblical and scriptural context, they see it as parallel to the VISIONS OF MOSES or the theophanies recorded in the Book of Mormon. Joseph himself compared his experiences in and after the vision to those of PAUL (JS—H 1:24; TPJS, p. 151).

LDS teaching is, in the words of Stephen L. Richards (a former counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY), "steeped in the verity of the First Vision." It undergirds the doctrine of an anthropomorphic God and theomorphic man, of the relationships of the persons of the Godhead, and of continual REVELATION. Mormon prayers, hymns, forms of worship, and eschatology are all rooted in this understanding. It renews the witness of the Hebrew prophets that visions are not the least but the most reliable mortal access to the divine; that the majesty, glory, and power of God are "beyond description"; that the biblical record of face-to-face communion with God is more than a strained metaphor. It confirms the New Testament testimony of the apostles that GOD THE FATHER and JESUS CHRIST are separate persons who manifest themselves as they are to the sons and daughters of God; and that the Son is in the similitude of the Father, and the Father in the similitude of the Son.

[See also Visions of Joseph Smith, Jr.; Religious Experience.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Backman, Milton V., Jr. Joseph Smith's First Vision. Salt Lake City, 1980.
 Smith, Joseph. The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith, comp. and ed. Dean C. Jessee. Salt Lake City, 1984.

MILTON V. BACKMAN, JR.

---

FOLK ART

Through a combination of religious and western American metaphors and images, the whole saga of the Church has been artistically represented, from its origins in 1820 in a grove near Palmyra, New York, to the present. Songs and stories about the migration to Utah and the colonization of the Great Basin, anecdotal biographies of Church leaders, folklore incidents of faith, and the miraculous and sometimes comical struggles of the pioneer Saints form integral parts of LDS culture (see ART IN MORMONISM). Mormon folk art perpetuates a sense of inclusiveness and serves to bind Latter-day Saints together and help define who they are. Overwhelmingly, Mormon folk art has been the work of a faithful, pragmatic people.

For Latter-day Saint artists, the migration west was "the worst of times and the best of times." Driven from Nauvoo, they faced the prospect of building a new Zion, a home in the mountains. Their folk art is richly expressive of connections to their past and of their unique experience on the frontier. When one pioneer woman, Bathsheba SMITH, packed her trunk for the journey into western territory, she carefully selected what to take and what to leave behind. Deep in the corner of her single trunk she placed her paints, paper, and brushes wrapped in cloth. She added her lace-making tools and fibers to make the beautiful delicate lace for which she was famous. These tools of Christ's second coming "to bring to pass that which [hath] been spoken by the mouth of the prophets and apostles" (Backman, pp. 157, 167, 169; Jessee, p. 6). When he recovered himself, Joseph asked which church he should join and was told to join none because they all taught "incorrect doctrines"; they had a form of godliness, but "denied the power thereof" (cf. 2 Tim. 3:5). Further, he was told "that the fulness of the gospel should at some future time be made known unto me" (JS—H 1:17–20; Backman, pp. 163, 169; Jessee, p. 213). As he left the grove, he recalled, "My soul was filled with love," and for many days "I could rejoice with great joy and the Lord was with me" (Backman, p. 157).

Joseph's tranquillity was short-lived. At first, except from his family, he met only contempt from those who learned of his experience. He had not anticipated the bitter denunciations that this event would call forth.

On several occasions between 1832 and 1842, the young Prophet wrote or dictated accounts of the vision, each in a different setting, the last two for publication. Each record omits or adds some details. In 1832, for example, Joseph Smith wrote that prior to his First Vision he searched the scriptures and concluded that no society taught New Testament Christianity (Backman, p. 156; Jessee, p. 5). In the 1838 account he notes that he often said to himself, "Who of all these parties are right; or, are they all wrong together?" Later in this same account he parenthetically adds "(for at this time it had never entered into my heart that all were wrong)" (JS—H 1:10, 18; Jessee, pp. 198, 200).

Latter-day Saints regard this vision as authentic and revelatory of the nature of God. In the biblical and scriptural context, they see it as parallel to the VISIONS OF MOSES or the theophanies recorded in the Book of Mormon. Joseph himself compared his experiences in and after the vision to those of PAUL (JS—H 1:24; TPJS, p. 151).

LDS teaching is, in the words of Stephen L. Richards (a former counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY), "steeped in the verity of the First Vision." It undergirds the doctrine of an anthropomorphic God and theomorphic man, of the relationships of the persons of the Godhead, and of continual REVELATION. Mormon prayers, hymns, forms of worship, and eschatology are all rooted in this understanding. It renews the witness of the Hebrew prophets that visions are not the least but the most reliable mortal access to the divine; that the majesty, glory, and power of God are "beyond description"; that the biblical record of face-to-face communion with God is more than a strained metaphor. It confirms the New Testament testimony of the apostles that GOD THE FATHER and JESUS CHRIST are separate persons who manifest themselves as they are to the sons and daughters of God; and that the Son is in the similitude of the Father, and the Father in the similitude of the Son.

[See also Visions of Joseph Smith, Jr.; Religious Experience.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Backman, Milton V., Jr. Joseph Smith's First Vision. Salt Lake City, 1980.
 Smith, Joseph. The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith, comp. and ed. Dean C. Jessee. Salt Lake City, 1984.

MILTON V. BACKMAN, JR.

---

FOLK ART

Through a combination of religious and western American metaphors and images, the whole saga of the Church has been artistically represented, from its origins in 1820 in a grove near Palmyra, New York, to the present. Songs and stories about the migration to Utah and the colonization of the Great Basin, anecdotal biographies of Church leaders, folklore incidents of faith, and the miraculous and sometimes comical struggles of the pioneer Saints form integral parts of LDS culture (see ART IN MORMONISM). Mormon folk art perpetuates a sense of inclusiveness and serves to bind Latter-day Saints together and help define who they are. Overwhelmingly, Mormon folk art has been the work of a faithful, pragmatic people.

For Latter-day Saint artists, the migration west was "the worst of times and the best of times." Driven from Nauvoo, they faced the prospect of building a new Zion, a home in the mountains. Their folk art is richly expressive of connections to their past and of their unique experience on the frontier. When one pioneer woman, Bathsheba SMITH, packed her trunk for the journey into western territory, she carefully selected what to take and what to leave behind. Deep in the corner of her single trunk she placed her paints, paper, and brushes wrapped in cloth. She added her lace-making tools and fibers to make the beautiful delicate lace for which she was famous. These tools of art she placed beneath the folds of a quilt made by her mother for her wedding day.

In a concrete sense, Bathsheba Smith was blending the old and the new by preserving the past and welcoming the future. When she once again took up her paints, this time in Utah, she would paint the story of the journey. Pioneer artist C. C. A. Christensen would do likewise, chronicling a story that would figure prominently in the folk art of the Mormon people. William Clayton would immortalize the faith of the pioneers in the words of a hymn: "Come, come, ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear; but with joy wend your way."

Mormon folk art was practical—functional, yet often beautiful and decorative. The imagery of the LDS pioneer quilt reflected a western preoccupation with the natural environment. Pine trees, oaks, and mountain laurels had always been favored quilt motifs, but new images, notably the sego lily and the BEEHIVE, told of the work of the Mormon pioneers in Deseret.

The beehive appears in every genre of Mormon folk art—quilts, paintings, sculptures, architecture, and gravestones. The stonework of nineteenth-century Mormon culture is a rich statement of popular values, legends, and religion. A strong visual connection exists between pioneer gravestone imagery and New England tombstone art. But the cemeteries of small towns throughout Utah speak also of the unique LDS belief system and pioneer heritage. In addition to traditional motifs, religious emblems associated with the outside of temples flourished in this lively local art form.

One need not travel far into rural Utah to notice the distinctive folk architecture that existed among the Saints. The most common design was the "I" house, or old "Nauvoo style" house. It was a tall two-story house with a chimney at each gable end and usually a symmetrical arrangement of doors and windows at the front. Larger homes were constructed by connecting two or three I houses together to create a "T," "L," or "H" house. The most common indigenous building material was adobe, a local unfired brick produced by a mixture of mud and straw.

Distinct Mormon folklore also reflected the Latter-day Saint belief system. Stories of visits from the THREE NEPHITES often served as spiritual landmarks for the teller, and Elder J. Golden Kimball became a sort of folk hero through stories about his experiences and wit. Like quilts, Mormon folklore had a very specific function: usually it sought to enhance the faith and the sense of spirit of its audience. The story of the migration of the Mormon pioneers and the building of Zion became almost a kind of modern-day scripture.

Early twentieth-century LDS women continued the pioneer tradition of their mothers. Their RELIEF SOCIETY "workdays" became the institutional means for preserving folk art traditions. The emphasis on homemaking reflected a respect for traditional art forms that were displayed in quilting, fine sewing, and other household arts and crafts. Homemaking day became a monthly social event as Relief Society sisters met in a group for home crafts, homemaking lessons, and supper. The result was sometimes a somewhat modern-day

Nauvoo Temple Sampler, by Ann Eckford (c. 1846, embroidered cross stitch, 15" × 20"). The names of the members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles as constituted in 1846 surround this cross stitch representation of the Nauvoo Temple. George Miller is also shown as president of the High Priests quorum (PHP), Bishop Newel K. Whitney as president of the Aaronic Priesthood (PAP), and stake president John Smith as patriarch. Church Museum of History and Art.

Pictorial Rug with Temples and Church Leaders, by Renben and Mary Ouzounian (c. 1955; wool, cotton, silk, goat hair; 270 cm × 360 cm). Armenian Latter-day Saints living in Aleppo (now Haleh), Syria, completed this rug during their long and uncertain wait for visas permitting them to join Church members in Utah. Among the motifs are the Rocky Mountains under American flags, covered wagons recalling earlier pioneers, and representations of the temples and Church presidents to that date. Church Museum of History and Art.

version of Mormon folk art, different from the more personal expression of nineteenth-century women.

In the mid-twentieth century the Church often adopted an institutional method of preserving past art forms. The Church-wide dance festivals held into the 1970s brought young people together from across the world to share in an evening of the celebration of folk dance forms. Similarly, roadshows gave expression to local members' talents in miniplays that often depicted pioneer heritage values and customs (see DRAMA). Musicals like My Turn on Earth and Saturday's Warrior in much the same way as nineteenth-century folklore perpetuated folk traditions about premortal existence and the significance of life on earth (see MUSIC).

Twentieth-century Mormon folk art also reflects a faithful people as the story of the founding events and of the pioneers continues to figure prominently in every type of folk art. In general, it features respect for traditional art forms and mass participation. Folk art forms now flourishing in many different cultures have been welcomed as personal expressions of the testimony and love of Church members around the world.

[See also Folklore; Material Culture.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brunvand, Jan Harold. A Guide for Collectors of Folklore in Utah. Salt Lake City, 1971.
 Cannon, Hal. The Grand Beehive. Salt Lake City, 1980.
 Fox, Sandi. Quilts in Utah. Salt Lake City, 1987.

MARTHA SONNTAG BRADLEY

FOLKLORE

Mormon folklore comprises that part of the Church's cultural heritage which Latter-day Saints pass on from person to person and from generation to generation, not through written documents or formal instruction but through the spoken word or customary example. That is, someone will listen to tales told at home or at a Church meeting about the sufferings of the Mormon pioneers and then will repeat these accounts to others; or a young girl will watch and then assist her grandmother make "temple quilts" (quilts on which the form of the Mormon temple in which a couple is married is stitched) for the marriages of each grandchild, and in the process will eventually learn to make her own quilts; or each evening children will be gathered by their parents into family prayer and then one day will continue the practice in their own families.

The materials of Mormon folklore fall roughly into three broad categories. First are things people make with words (from songs and stories of grandparents struggling to establish a New Zion in the harsh Great Basin Kingdom, to contemporary accounts of God's providential hand guiding "the affairs of the saints" and directing the efforts of missionaries in an ever-expanding church, to humorous tales that caricature Mormon foibles and version of Mormon folk art, different from the more personal expression of nineteenth-century women.

Pictorial Rug with Temples and Church Leaders, by Renben and Mary Ouzounian (c. 1955; wool, cotton, silk, goat hair; 270 cm × 360 cm). Armenian Latter-day Saints living in Aleppo (now Haleh), Syria, completed this rug during their long and uncertain wait for visas permitting them to join Church members in Utah. Among the motifs are the Rocky Mountains under American flags, covered wagons recalling earlier pioneers, and representations of the temples and Church presidents to that date. Church Museum of History and Art.

In the mid-twentieth century the Church often adopted an institutional method of preserving past art forms. The Church-wide dance festivals held into the 1970s brought young people together from across the world to share in an evening of the celebration of folk dance forms. Similarly, roadshows gave expression to local members' talents in miniplays that often depicted pioneer heritage values and customs (see DRAMA). Musicals like My Turn on Earth and Saturday's Warrior in much the same way as nineteenth-century folklore perpetuated folk traditions about premortal existence and the significance of life on earth (see MUSIC).

Twentieth-century Mormon folk art also reflects a faithful people as the story of the founding events and of the pioneers continues to figure prominently in every type of folk art. In general, it features respect for traditional art forms and mass participation. Folk art forms now flourishing in many different cultures have been welcomed as personal expressions of the testimony and love of Church members around the world.

[See also Folklore; Material Culture.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brunvand, Jan Harold. A Guide for Collectors of Folklore in Utah. Salt Lake City, 1971.
 Cannon, Hal. The Grand Beehive. Salt Lake City, 1980.
 Fox, Sandi. Quilts in Utah. Salt Lake City, 1987.

MARTHA SONNTAG BRADLEY

FOLKLORE

Mormon folklore comprises that part of the Church's cultural heritage which Latter-day Saints pass on from person to person and from generation to generation, not through written documents or formal instruction but through the spoken word or customary example. That is, someone will listen to tales told at home or at a Church meeting about the sufferings of the Mormon pioneers and then will repeat these accounts to others; or a young girl will watch and then assist her grandmother make "temple quilts" (quilts on which the form of the Mormon temple in which a couple is married is stitched) for the marriages of each grandchild, and in the process will eventually learn to make her own quilts; or each evening children will be gathered by their parents into family prayer and then one day will continue the practice in their own families.

The materials of Mormon folklore fall roughly into three broad categories. First are things people make with words (from songs and stories of grandparents struggling to establish a New Zion in the harsh Great Basin Kingdom, to contemporary accounts of God's providential hand guiding "the affairs of the saints" and directing the efforts of missionaries in an ever-expanding church, to humorous tales that caricature Mormon foibles and ease the pressures of “being in the world but not of it”). Second are things people make with their hands (from traditional implements, such as the Mormon hay derriek, to homemade “quiet books” designed to keep small children constructively occupied during church meetings, to home preserves and special holiday foods, to a decorative family Book of Remembrance [see MATERIAL CULTURE]). And third are things people make with their actions (from “creative dating” practices of youth, to special family celebrations of birth and baptismal dates, to family genealogical meetings, to church and community celebrations of traditional holidays from Thanksgiving to Pioneer Day).

This listing of examples focuses very consciously on the word “make,” because the categories of Mormon folklore are dynamic rather than static. Each recounting of a miraculous healing, each quilting of a familiar log-cabin pattern, each performance of a family birthday game is in every instance a new act of creation that speaks from both the past and the present. They speak from the past because the forms are traditional and recurring, having been developed by the LDS community over decades. They speak from the present because the forms are constantly reshaped to fit the needs of contemporary Latter-day Saints and to reflect contemporary values and concerns.

Because of this constant regeneration and reshaping of older forms, Mormon folklore lies not at the periphery but at the center of LDS culture. It is not, as is sometimes thought, simply a survival from the past kept alive primarily by older, less educated, and agrarian Church members; rather, it is a vital, functioning force in the lives of all Latter-day Saints. Further, as the Church continues to grow and change, new forms of folklore that speak more directly to present needs will sometimes replace the old. For just as Latter-day Saints in the pioneer era generated and transmitted folklore in response to the circumstances of their lives, so, too, contemporary Latter-day Saints will create and pass along folklore as they react to the strains and stresses, the joys and the sorrows of their lives. For example, converts to the Church living in the mission fields, away from church centers in the mountain West, may be little moved by tales of pioneer suffering and may know little of earlier stories of the providential saving of the pioneers’ crops from swarms of locusts or of the legends of the THREE NEPHITES; but they will know and tell stories of their own miraculous conversions and of the ridicule and suffering they endure, with the help of God, as they struggle to survive as the only Latter-day Saints in sometimes unfriendly and often hostile communities.

Properly to understand the Latter-day Saints, one must know their folklore—must see how it bolsters their faith, builds a sense of community, ties them to the past, and provides them an escape through humor from pressures that might otherwise be their undoing. Especially, one must understand Mormon folklore in order to understand the Mormon ethos. This is so because people tell stories about those events that interest them most or participate in customary practices that are most important to them. Because these stories and practices depend on the spoken word or on voluntary participation for their survival, those that fail to appeal broadly to a Mormon value center, a common body of LDS attitudes and beliefs, will simply cease to exist. Those that persist, therefore, serve as an excellent barometer for prevailing Mormon cultural and religious values.

In a number of Utah and western towns a Mormon temple, usually built on a hill or in the center of the valley, dominates the landscape, symbolizing for all who pass by the religious values that originally brought LDS settlers to the region. In towns and valleys surrounding the temples, in Sunday School classes, in family gatherings, among friends, the descendants and converts of these settlers relate stories that tell of the price paid for blessings now enjoyed, that give evidence of the providential hand of God in the lives of the faithful, that lift sagging spirits, bolster courage, promote obedience and give hope for the eventual and ultimate victory of Zion. The stories give a glimpse of this rich and ever-growing body of narratives, the lore of faith.

The question remains whether narratives embodying these values are really “true”—and, concomitantly, if they are not true, what is their ultimate value? Although the stories frequently are based on actual events, their details clearly change as they are passed along by word of mouth. These changes, however, do not occur randomly; they are dictated by cultural determinants. As stories are transmitted from person to person, they are often changed, usually unconsciously, to express the new tellers’ beliefs and to meet their needs. Because folk narratives mirror and reinforce these beliefs, and because the beliefs are themselves historical facts, moving people to action more handily than the realities on which they are based, they can yield valuable historical data. But it is more profitable to turn to them for other reasons, to view them not as history but as literature, and to discover in them not the ledger-book truths of actual events but expression of the people's heart and mind. To a greater or lesser degree, Mormon folk stories may or may not be factually accurate. But as keys to understanding the Latter-day Saints and their church, they are always true.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For studies in Mormon folklore see Austin Fife and Alta Fife, Saints of Sage and Saddle: Folklore Among the Mormons (Bloomington, Ind., 1956); and William A. Wilson, "The Study of Mormon Folklore: An Uncertain Mirror for Truth," Dialogue 22 (Winter 1989):95–110.

For bibliographic references see Jill Terry, "Exploring Belief and Custom: The Study of Mormon Folklore," Utah Folklife Newsletter 23 (Winter 1989):1–4; and William A. Wilson, "A Bibliography of Studies in Mormon Folklore," Utah Historical Quarterly 44 (1976):389–94.

WILLIAM A. WILSON

FOLLOWING THE BRETHREN

Latter-day Saints believe that God gives REVELATIONS to living PROPHETS and that their words, when so inspired, are to be received as his (D&C 1:38). It has therefore become common in the Church to say that Christ and his prophets are as one because they represent him (cf. John 17:21–23). This means that prophets, as agents of Christ, announce his gospel, and are one with him in teaching, testimony, and purpose (see UNITY). Thus, the scriptural injunction to follow Jesus and the baptismal COVENANT to obey his commandments also require following his prophets.

Among Latter-day Saints the injunction to "follow the Brethren" derives from this requirement of obedience to Jesus and to prophetic instruction. In this context, "the Brethren" are the GENERAL AUTHORITIES, particularly the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, who are formally sustained as prophets, seers, and revelators. The principle involved can be extended to include local priesthood leaders such as PRIESTHOOD QUORUM presidencies, BISHOPS and STAKE PRESIDENTS, and the presidencies of the women's auxiliary organizations—RELIEF SOCIETY, YOUNG WOMEN, and PRIMARY—within their respective jurisdictions. This extension of the principle to all Church leaders at every level is based on the recognition that all officers in the Church are entitled to revelation in their CALLINGS and on the assumption that they are in harmony with the Brethren. Referring specifically to the prophet who is currently President of the Church, the Lord has instructed members to "give heed unto all his words and commandments which he shall give unto you as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; For his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith" (D&C 21:4–5).

Latter-day Saints claim a variety of blessings from following prophetic instruction. Not only does following the Brethren unite the Saints, enabling them to advance the purposes of the RESTORATION more effectively, but it also allows them to receive the rewards of such obedience, which include the GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT.

Following the Brethren, however, does not imply blind obedience, for every member of the Church is entitled to an individual witness of the Holy Spirit that the leadership of the Church is inspired by God. For this reason, following the living prophet obliges members to live worthy to receive personal inspiration and revelation. It gives contemporary meaning to MOSES' desire that "all the Lord's people" be prophets and thus recipients of inspiration (Num. 11:29), and to the Savior's saying that all should "live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God" (D&C 84:44; Deut. 8:3; Matt. 4:4).

Because Church members are entitled to divine confirmation of prophetic declarations, there is no teaching among Latter-day Saints of "prophetic infallibility." As Joseph SMITH taught, "a prophet was a prophet only when . . . acting as such" (TPJS, p. 278). Prophets have personal and private opinions, and they are "subject to like passions," as all people are (see James 5:17; Mosiah 2:10–11). However, when acting under the influence of the Holy Spirit in the prophetic role, "whatsoever they shall speak . . . shall be the will of the Lord" (D&C 68:3–4; see SCRIPTURE). As the Savior told Joseph Smith, "He that receiveth my servants receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth my Father" (D&C 84:36–37; see also Matt. 10:40; 3 Ne. 28:34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Christiansen, ElRay L. "Sustaining the Authorities of the Church." Relief Society Magazine 44 (Feb. 1957):76–79.

than the realities on which they are based, they can yield valuable historical data. But it is more profitable to turn to them for other reasons, to view them not as history but as literature, and to discover in them not the ledger-book truths of actual events but expression of the people's heart and mind. To a greater or lesser degree, Mormon folk stories may or may not be factually accurate. But as keys to understanding the Latter-day Saints and their church, they are always true.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For studies in Mormon folklore see Austin Fife and Alta Fife, Saints of Sage and Saddle: Folklore Among the Mormons (Bloomington, Ind., 1956); and William A. Wilson, "The Study of Mormon Folklore: An Uncertain Mirror for Truth," Dialogue 22 (Winter 1989):95–110.

For bibliographic references see Jill Terry, "Exploring Belief and Custom: The Study of Mormon Folklore," Utah Folklife Newsletter 23 (Winter 1989):1–4; and William A. Wilson, "A Bibliography of Studies in Mormon Folklore," Utah Historical Quarterly 44 (1976):389–94.

WILLIAM A. WILSON

FOLLOWING THE BRETHREN

Latter-day Saints believe that God gives REVELATIONS to living PROPHETS and that their words, when so inspired, are to be received as his (D&C 1:38). It has therefore become common in the Church to say that Christ and his prophets are as one because they represent him (cf. John 17:21–23). This means that prophets, as agents of Christ, announce his gospel, and are one with him in teaching, testimony, and purpose (see UNITY). Thus, the scriptural injunction to follow Jesus and the baptismal COVENANT to obey his commandments also require following his prophets.

Among Latter-day Saints the injunction to "follow the Brethren" derives from this requirement of obedience to Jesus and to prophetic instruction. In this context, "the Brethren" are the GENERAL AUTHORITIES, particularly the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, who are formally sustained as prophets, seers, and revelators. The principle involved can be extended to include local priesthood leaders such as PRIESTHOOD QUORUM presidencies, BISHOPS and STAKE PRESIDENTS, and the presidencies of the women's auxiliary organizations—RELIEF SOCIETY, YOUNG WOMEN, and PRIMARY—within their respective jurisdictions. This extension of the principle to all Church leaders at every level is based on the recognition that all officers in the Church are entitled to revelation in their CALLINGS and on the assumption that they are in harmony with the Brethren. Referring specifically to the prophet who is currently President of the Church, the Lord has instructed members to "give heed unto all his words and commandments which he shall give unto you as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; For his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith" (D&C 21:4–5).

Latter-day Saints claim a variety of blessings from following prophetic instruction. Not only does following the Brethren unite the Saints, enabling them to advance the purposes of the RESTORATION more effectively, but it also allows them to receive the rewards of such obedience, which include the GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT.

Following the Brethren, however, does not imply blind obedience, for every member of the Church is entitled to an individual witness of the Holy Spirit that the leadership of the Church is inspired by God. For this reason, following the living prophet obliges members to live worthy to receive personal inspiration and revelation. It gives contemporary meaning to MOSES' desire that "all the Lord's people" be prophets and thus recipients of inspiration (Num. 11:29), and to the Savior's saying that all should "live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God" (D&C 84:44; Deut. 8:3; Matt. 4:4).

Because Church members are entitled to divine confirmation of prophetic declarations, there is no teaching among Latter-day Saints of "prophetic infallibility." As Joseph SMITH taught, "a prophet was a prophet only when . . . acting as such" (TPJS, p. 278). Prophets have personal and private opinions, and they are "subject to like passions," as all people are (see James 5:17; Mosiah 2:10–11). However, when acting under the influence of the Holy Spirit in the prophetic role, "whatsoever they shall speak . . . shall be the will of the Lord" (D&C 68:3–4; see SCRIPTURE). As the Savior told Joseph Smith, "He that receiveth my servants receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth my Father" (D&C 84:36–37; see also Matt. 10:40; 3 Ne. 28:34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Christiansen, ElRay L. "Sustaining the Authorities of the Church." Relief Society Magazine 44 (Feb. 1957):76–79.

Packer, Boyd K. "Follow the Brethren." Speeches of the Year, pp. 1–10. Provo, Utah, 1965.

Stapley, Delbert L. "Respect for Authority." IE 60 (Dec. 1957):914–15, 938.

MARK L. MCCONKIE

FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD

Modern scripture speaks unequivocally of the foreknowledge of God: "All things are present before mine eyes" (D&C 38:2). It affirms that God has a fulness of truth, a "knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come" (D&C 93:24, emphasis added).

Divine foreknowledge includes the power to know even the thoughts and intents of the human heart: "There is none else save God that knowest thy thoughts and the intents of thy heart" (D&C 6:16). Divine foreknowledge is at least, in part, knowledge of his own purposive plans for the cosmos and for humankind, plans that "cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught" (D&C 3:1). "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world" (Aets 15:18; Abr. 2:8). These include the conditions of the plan of salvation. For example, "God did elect or predestinate that all those who would be saved, should be saved in Christ Jesus, and through obedience to the Gospel" (TPJS, p. 189). It is likewise foreknown that all humankind will die, be resurrected, and be brought to judgment.

In scripture, the root terms for divine knowing connote more than a subject-object, cognitive relationship; they imply a close, direct, participative, affective awareness. Divine foreknowledge is the knowledge of a Heavenly Father, not knowledge of a metaphysical abstraction. Scriptures that speak of divine foreknowledge emphasize God's understanding of an experience with his people and their destiny rather than the content and logic of that knowledge. Anyone seeking to understand divine foreknowledge must begin by recognizing that scripture does not directly address the question as it has been formulated in philosophy and theology, where the emphasis is on the content and logic of knowledge. The scriptures are explicit that God knows all and that we can trust him. They have not been explicit about what that means philosophically or theologically. Consequently, short of new revelation, any answer to the theological question of God's foreknowledge can be only speculative.

In an attempt to reconcile divine foreknowledge and human freedom, major Jewish and Christian theologians and philosophers have offered three alternatives. In the first, both horns of the dilemma are affirmed: "Everything is foreseen, and freedom of choice is given." This is the position of Rabbi Akiba and Maimonides (Aboth 3, 19; Yad, Teshuvah 5:5), as well as of Augustine and Anselm (City of God 5.9–10; The Harmony of the Foreknowledge, the Predestination, and the Grace of God with Free Choice 1.3). Maimonides argues that though it is logically impossible for human foreknowledge of one's actions to be compatible with freedom, God's foreknowledge, which is of a different and mysterious kind, is compatible with freedom.

In the second, God's foreknowledge is limited. Since people are free, God knows the possibilities and probabilities of human choice, but not the inevitabilities. God is omniscient in knowing all that can be known; but not in knowing beforehand exactly how people will use their freedom, since that cannot be known because future, contingent events do not exist. This is the view of the Talmidist Gersonides (Levi Ben Gershon, 1288–1344; Millhamot Adonai, III, 6) and, with some modifications, of Charles Hartshorne and process philosophers.

In the third, humans are not genuinely free. Freedom is an illusion that arises from human ignorance of divine cause and necessity. All that individuals do is actually determined and predetermined. God both pre-knows and pre-causes all that occurs. This is the view of Spinoza and Calvin.

Historically, most Latter-day Saints have taken the first general position: everything is foreseen and freedom remains. Some have taken the second, that God's foreknowledge is not absolute. The third alternative, that human freedom is illusory, is incompatible with LDS belief in genuine free agency and responsibility. Praise and blame, accountability and judgment, are meaningless unless humans are free. Any doctrine of foreknowledge that undercuts this principle violates the spirit and letter of LDS scripture.

Consequently divine foreknowledge, however it is finally defined, is not PREDESTINATION. What God foresees is not, for that reason, divinely caused, even though it is in some sense known (Talmage, p. 317). Divine foreknowledge is the background of foreordination. But, again, foreordination is not pre-causation. Rather, "foreordination is a conditional bestowal of a role, a responsi-

Packer, Boyd K. "Follow the Brethren." Speeches of the Year, pp. 1–10. Provo, Utah, 1965.

Stapley, Delbert L. "Respect for Authority." IE 60 (Dec. 1957):914–15, 938.

MARK L. MCCONKIE

FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD

Modern scripture speaks unequivocally of the foreknowledge of God: "All things are present before mine eyes" (D&C 38:2). It affirms that God has a fulness of truth, a "knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come" (D&C 93:24, emphasis added).

Divine foreknowledge includes the power to know even the thoughts and intents of the human heart: "There is none else save God that knowest thy thoughts and the intents of thy heart" (D&C 6:16). Divine foreknowledge is at least, in part, knowledge of his own purposive plans for the cosmos and for humankind, plans that "cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught" (D&C 3:1). "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world" (Aets 15:18; Abr. 2:8). These include the conditions of the plan of salvation. For example, "God did elect or predestinate that all those who would be saved, should be saved in Christ Jesus, and through obedience to the Gospel" (TPJS, p. 189). It is likewise foreknown that all humankind will die, be resurrected, and be brought to judgment.

In scripture, the root terms for divine knowing connote more than a subject-object, cognitive relationship; they imply a close, direct, participative, affective awareness. Divine foreknowledge is the knowledge of a Heavenly Father, not knowledge of a metaphysical abstraction. Scriptures that speak of divine foreknowledge emphasize God's understanding of an experience with his people and their destiny rather than the content and logic of that knowledge. Anyone seeking to understand divine foreknowledge must begin by recognizing that scripture does not directly address the question as it has been formulated in philosophy and theology, where the emphasis is on the content and logic of knowledge. The scriptures are explicit that God knows all and that we can trust him. They have not been explicit about what that means philosophically or theologically. Consequently, short of new revelation, any answer to the theological question of God's foreknowledge can be only speculative.

In an attempt to reconcile divine foreknowledge and human freedom, major Jewish and Christian theologians and philosophers have offered three alternatives. In the first, both horns of the dilemma are affirmed: "Everything is foreseen, and freedom of choice is given." This is the position of Rabbi Akiba and Maimonides (Aboth 3, 19; Yad, Teshuvah 5:5), as well as of Augustine and Anselm (City of God 5.9–10; The Harmony of the Foreknowledge, the Predestination, and the Grace of God with Free Choice 1.3). Maimonides argues that though it is logically impossible for human foreknowledge of one's actions to be compatible with freedom, God's foreknowledge, which is of a different and mysterious kind, is compatible with freedom.

In the second, God's foreknowledge is limited. Since people are free, God knows the possibilities and probabilities of human choice, but not the inevitabilities. God is omniscient in knowing all that can be known; but not in knowing beforehand exactly how people will use their freedom, since that cannot be known because future, contingent events do not exist. This is the view of the Talmidist Gersonides (Levi Ben Gershon, 1288–1344; Millhamot Adonai, III, 6) and, with some modifications, of Charles Hartshorne and process philosophers.

In the third, humans are not genuinely free. Freedom is an illusion that arises from human ignorance of divine cause and necessity. All that individuals do is actually determined and predetermined. God both pre-knows and pre-causes all that occurs. This is the view of Spinoza and Calvin.

Historically, most Latter-day Saints have taken the first general position: everything is foreseen and freedom remains. Some have taken the second, that God's foreknowledge is not absolute. The third alternative, that human freedom is illusory, is incompatible with LDS belief in genuine free agency and responsibility. Praise and blame, accountability and judgment, are meaningless unless humans are free. Any doctrine of foreknowledge that undercuts this principle violates the spirit and letter of LDS scripture.

Consequently divine foreknowledge, however it is finally defined, is not PREDESTINATION. What God foresees is not, for that reason, divinely caused, even though it is in some sense known (Talmage, p. 317). Divine foreknowledge is the background of foreordination. But, again, foreordination is not pre-causation. Rather, "foreordination is a conditional bestowal of a role, a responsibility, or a blessing which, likewise, foresees but does not fix the outcome" (Maxwell, p. 71).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hartshorne, Charles, and William L. Reese. Philosophers Speak of God. Chicago, 1953.
- Maxwell, Neal A. "A More Determined Discipleship." Ensign 9 (Feb. 1979):69–73.
- Talmage, James E. The Vitality of Mormonism, pp. 317 ff. Boston, 1919.

JAMES E. FAULCONER

---

FOREORDINATION

Foreordination is the premortal selection of individuals to come forth in MORTALITY at specified times, under certain conditions, and to fulfill pre-designated responsibilities. In LDS interpretation, "foreordained" does not mean predetermined (see PREDESTINATION). It is the outcome of voluntary choice, not the violation or abrogation of it. The idea of preexistence and premortal preparation for earth life is hinted at in biblical sources, and evidence of it appears in some early Jewish-Christian sources. But it has been less prominent in later thought.

ABRAHAM was told that he was included among the valiant SPIRITS and was therefore chosen or foreordained before his birth to be a leader in God's kingdom on earth (Abr. 3:22–23). The Lord likewise informed Jeremiah, "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and . . . I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations" (Jer. 1:5). Alma<sup>2</sup> taught that priests belonging to a "holy order" were foreordained "according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works" (Alma 13:1, 3). The Prophet Joseph SMITH concluded that "every man who has a calling to minister to the inhabitants of the world was ordained to that very purpose in the Grand Council of heaven before this world was" (TPJS, p. 365). And in addition to these foreordinations to priesthood callings, many spirits may have been foreordained to specific nations and generations, which Paul characterized as the "bounds of habitation" (Acts 17:26), as well as to families and to varied assignments, work, or missions on earth.

While each of these selections is ultimately based on the omniscience and foreknowledge of God, several factors may influence one's earthly circumstances. Foreordination comes as a blessing or reward for premortal righteousness and valiant commitment to Jesus Christ. BIRTH into the house of ISRAEL and heirship to all the blessings of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are often seen as the birth-right of dedicated souls (see Eph. 1:4–5; Rom. 9:4). These rights and blessings may still be obtained by any and all who elect to receive them, whether in this life or the next. People sooner or later will manifest, as Elder B. H. Roberts, of the Seventy, taught, "the strength of that intelligence and nobility to which their spirits had attained in the heavenly kingdom before they took bodies upon earth" (T. Madsen, Defender of the Faith [Salt Lake City, 1980], p. 2). The Doctrine and Covenants teaches that men and women may come to God through RIGHTEOUSNESS and diligence and thus become numbered with those who are "sons [and daughters] of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God" (D&C 84:34).

Through faithfulness on earth, whatever one's premortal foreordination or prior covenants, one may, as PAUL taught, become "adopted" into the favored lineage: "They are not all Israel, which are of Israel" (Rom. 9:6). Many, that is, may be foreordained to high missions in mortality, but may, through sin, rebellion, or sloth, fail in their foreordinations and give up their blessings. Obedience to the COVENANTS and ORDINANCES of the gospel is a primary factor in determining ultimate election to the chosen lineage.

Latter-day Saints further believe that the times, places, and circumstances of birth into mortality may be the outcome of former covenants and decisions as well as that which would be best, in divine wisdom, to provide both opportunities and challenges for the individual's growth and development. Additionally, foreordination may also be based on God's own purposes and plans to bless all of his children. The specifics of these factors remain unclear. As a result, a person's premortal character can never be judged by his or her present station in life. Some of the most bitter and arduous circumstances may be, in the perspective of eternity, the most blessed, and perhaps even the situations that men and women elected and agreed to enter. Foreordination does not preclude the exercise of agency. Foreordination is a conditional preappointment to or bestowal of certain blessings and responsibilities.

bility, or a blessing which, likewise, foresees but does not fix the outcome" (Maxwell, p. 71).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hartshorne, Charles, and William L. Reese. Philosophers Speak of God. Chicago, 1953.
- Maxwell, Neal A. "A More Determined Discipleship." Ensign 9 (Feb. 1979):69–73.
- Talmage, James E. The Vitality of Mormonism, pp. 317 ff. Boston, 1919.

JAMES E. FAULCONER

---

FOREORDINATION

Foreordination is the premortal selection of individuals to come forth in MORTALITY at specified times, under certain conditions, and to fulfill pre-designated responsibilities. In LDS interpretation, "foreordained" does not mean predetermined (see PREDESTINATION). It is the outcome of voluntary choice, not the violation or abrogation of it. The idea of preexistence and premortal preparation for earth life is hinted at in biblical sources, and evidence of it appears in some early Jewish-Christian sources. But it has been less prominent in later thought.

ABRAHAM was told that he was included among the valiant SPIRITS and was therefore chosen or foreordained before his birth to be a leader in God's kingdom on earth (Abr. 3:22–23). The Lord likewise informed Jeremiah, "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and . . . I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations" (Jer. 1:5). Alma<sup>2</sup> taught that priests belonging to a "holy order" were foreordained "according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works" (Alma 13:1, 3). The Prophet Joseph SMITH concluded that "every man who has a calling to minister to the inhabitants of the world was ordained to that very purpose in the Grand Council of heaven before this world was" (TPJS, p. 365). And in addition to these foreordinations to priesthood callings, many spirits may have been foreordained to specific nations and generations, which Paul characterized as the "bounds of habitation" (Acts 17:26), as well as to families and to varied assignments, work, or missions on earth.

While each of these selections is ultimately based on the omniscience and foreknowledge of

God, several factors may influence one's earthly circumstances. Foreordination comes as a blessing or reward for premortal righteousness and valiant commitment to Jesus Christ. BIRTH into the house of ISRAEL and heirship to all the blessings of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are often seen as the birth-right of dedicated souls (see Eph. 1:4–5; Rom. 9:4). These rights and blessings may still be obtained by any and all who elect to receive them, whether in this life or the next. People sooner or later will manifest, as Elder B. H. Roberts, of the Seventy, taught, "the strength of that intelligence and nobility to which their spirits had attained in the heavenly kingdom before they took bodies upon earth" (T. Madsen, Defender of the Faith [Salt Lake City, 1980], p. 2). The Doctrine and Covenants teaches that men and women may come to God through RIGHTEOUSNESS and diligence and thus become numbered with those who are "sons [and daughters] of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God" (D&C 84:34).

Through faithfulness on earth, whatever one's premortal foreordination or prior covenants, one may, as PAUL taught, become "adopted" into the favored lineage: "They are not all Israel, which are of Israel" (Rom. 9:6). Many, that is, may be foreordained to high missions in mortality, but may, through sin, rebellion, or sloth, fail in their foreordinations and give up their blessings. Obedience to the COVENANTS and ORDINANCES of the gospel is a primary factor in determining ultimate election to the chosen lineage.

Latter-day Saints further believe that the times, places, and circumstances of birth into mortality may be the outcome of former covenants and decisions as well as that which would be best, in divine wisdom, to provide both opportunities and challenges for the individual's growth and development. Additionally, foreordination may also be based on God's own purposes and plans to bless all of his children. The specifics of these factors remain unclear. As a result, a person's premortal character can never be judged by his or her present station in life. Some of the most bitter and arduous circumstances may be, in the perspective of eternity, the most blessed, and perhaps even the situations that men and women elected and agreed to enter. Foreordination does not preclude the exercise of agency. Foreordination is a conditional preappointment to or bestowal of certain blessings and responsibilities.

Following Augustine and Calvin, some have interpreted the word "predestine" in Romans 8:29–30 and Ephesians 1:4–5 as meaning divine pre-causation. In this view, God is the ultimate causal agent, whereas man is always and only an effect. Latter-day Saints reject this interpretation. They believe that neither the Greek nor related scriptural sources lead to this view. Paul's usage of this term refers to being foreordained to divine sonship through Christ. Furthermore, since God knows "all things, for all things are present before [his] eyes" (D&C 38:1–2), he anticipates our choices. However, he does not make the choices for us. Knowing our potential, he foreordains those who will help to bring about his purposes. Latter-day Saints extend this concept to embrace foreordination to any divinely appointed ministry or function.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Maxwell, Neal A. "Meeting the Challenges of Today." Speeches of the Year, pp. 149–56. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Top, Brent L. The Life Before. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Winston, David. "Preexistence in the Wisdom of Solomon and Mormon Sources." In Reflections on Mormonism, ed. Truman Madsen, pp. 13–35. Salt Lake City, 1978.

BRENT L. TOP

FORGERIES OF HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS

The possibility of forgery must be considered by all historians as they ponder their evidence and by archivists as they build their collections. Forged Dutch colonial documents have been found in New York, and forgeries of Lone Star Republic documents have been identified in Texas.

One of the most famous forgeries in LDS history is the alleged "Joseph Smith Revelation" appointing James J. Strang his successor. It was created in the 1840s, probably by Strang, and is now located at the Beinecke Library at Yale University. The motives of Strang, who hoped to succeed Joseph Smith, were clear. Equally apparent were the reasons for the forgery of a pamphlet attributed to Joseph Smith's early associate, Oliver COWDERY. Defense in a Rehearsal of My Grounds for Separating Myself from the Latter Day Saints, supposedly written in Ohio in 1839, first appeared in an anti-Mormon publication in 1906 (Anderson, pp. 20–21). Others have attempted forgeries for money, ego, or the desire to influence or alter history.

The Hofmann forgeries of the 1980s have raised questions about some historical documents related to early Latter-day Saint history. In their search for new sources for information about the Church's formative period, historians were fascinated by the seemingly endless cache of historical documents supposedly located by Mark Hofmann. These documents purported to illuminate such topics as Joseph Smith's reception and translation of the records known as the Book of Mormon and the selection of his successor in Church leadership. Many, if not most, "Hofmann documents" turned out to be skillful forgeries. Hofmann had built a paper fortune from document dealing and duplicity, but when he was unable to produce additional promised documents for clients, he murdered a Salt Lake City businessman and the wife of an acquaintance in 1985. The subsequent investigation led to his arrest, confession of murder and forgery, and life sentence in the Utah State Prison.

The story of the Hofmann forgeries is the subject of several books and numerous articles. The case has deeply embarrassed both historians and the dealers and collectors who handled his documents. It has also prompted greater caution and healthy skepticism about the validity of purported historical documents of unknown background or provenance.

Documents that have been maintained in the official custody of a church or government agency throughout their life cycle should be considered more reliable than "newly found" documents. Scholars and archivists should be especially wary of those documents whose provenance is unclear. In all cases new and startling evidence must be critically evaluated against the standard of known and reliable documents.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. "The Second Witness of Priesthood." IE 71 [Sept. 1968]:15–16, 18, 20–22, 24.
- Jessee, Dean C. "New Documents and Mormon Beginnings." BYU Studies 24 (Fall 1984):392–428.
- Sillitoe, Linda, and Allen Roberts. Salamander: The Story of the Mormon Forgery Murders. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Whittaker, David J. "The Hofmann Maze: A Book Review Essay with a Chronology and Bibliography of the Hofmann Case." BYU Studies 29 (Winter 1989):67–124.

MAX J. EVANS

Following Augustine and Calvin, some have interpreted the word "predestine" in Romans 8:29–30 and Ephesians 1:4–5 as meaning divine pre-causation. In this view, God is the ultimate causal agent, whereas man is always and only an effect. Latter-day Saints reject this interpretation. They believe that neither the Greek nor related scriptural sources lead to this view. Paul's usage of this term refers to being foreordained to divine sonship through Christ. Furthermore, since God knows "all things, for all things are present before [his] eyes" (D&C 38:1–2), he anticipates our choices. However, he does not make the choices for us. Knowing our potential, he foreordains those who will help to bring about his purposes. Latter-day Saints extend this concept to embrace foreordination to any divinely appointed ministry or function.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Maxwell, Neal A. "Meeting the Challenges of Today." Speeches of the Year, pp. 149–56. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Top, Brent L. The Life Before. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Winston, David. "Preexistence in the Wisdom of Solomon and Mormon Sources." In Reflections on Mormonism, ed. Truman Madsen, pp. 13–35. Salt Lake City, 1978.

BRENT L. TOP

FORGERIES OF HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS

The possibility of forgery must be considered by all historians as they ponder their evidence and by archivists as they build their collections. Forged Dutch colonial documents have been found in New York, and forgeries of Lone Star Republic documents have been identified in Texas.

One of the most famous forgeries in LDS history is the alleged "Joseph Smith Revelation" appointing James J. Strang his successor. It was created in the 1840s, probably by Strang, and is now located at the Beinecke Library at Yale University. The motives of Strang, who hoped to succeed Joseph Smith, were clear. Equally apparent were the reasons for the forgery of a pamphlet attributed to Joseph Smith's early associate, Oliver COWDERY. Defense in a Rehearsal of My Grounds for Separating Myself from the Latter Day Saints, supposedly written in Ohio in 1839, first appeared in an anti-Mormon publication in 1906 (Anderson, pp. 20–21). Others have attempted forgeries for money, ego, or the desire to influence or alter history.

The Hofmann forgeries of the 1980s have raised questions about some historical documents related to early Latter-day Saint history. In their search for new sources for information about the Church's formative period, historians were fascinated by the seemingly endless cache of historical documents supposedly located by Mark Hofmann. These documents purported to illuminate such topics as Joseph Smith's reception and translation of the records known as the Book of Mormon and the selection of his successor in Church leadership. Many, if not most, "Hofmann documents" turned out to be skillful forgeries. Hofmann had built a paper fortune from document dealing and duplicity, but when he was unable to produce additional promised documents for clients, he murdered a Salt Lake City businessman and the wife of an acquaintance in 1985. The subsequent investigation led to his arrest, confession of murder and forgery, and life sentence in the Utah State Prison.

The story of the Hofmann forgeries is the subject of several books and numerous articles. The case has deeply embarrassed both historians and the dealers and collectors who handled his documents. It has also prompted greater caution and healthy skepticism about the validity of purported historical documents of unknown background or provenance.

Documents that have been maintained in the official custody of a church or government agency throughout their life cycle should be considered more reliable than "newly found" documents. Scholars and archivists should be especially wary of those documents whose provenance is unclear. In all cases new and startling evidence must be critically evaluated against the standard of known and reliable documents.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. "The Second Witness of Priesthood." IE 71 [Sept. 1968]:15–16, 18, 20–22, 24.
- Jessee, Dean C. "New Documents and Mormon Beginnings." BYU Studies 24 (Fall 1984):392–428.
- Sillitoe, Linda, and Allen Roberts. Salamander: The Story of the Mormon Forgery Murders. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Whittaker, David J. "The Hofmann Maze: A Book Review Essay with a Chronology and Bibliography of the Hofmann Case." BYU Studies 29 (Winter 1989):67–124.

MAX J. EVANS

---

FORGIVENESS

Sec: Remission of Sins

---

FOX, RUTH MAY

Ruth May Fox (1853–1958) devoted many years to the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association (YWMIA; in 1977 YOUNG WOMEN), serving as president from 1929 to 1937, following her tenure as first counselor to President Martha Horne Tingey from 1905 to 1929. Vibrant and spirited, Ruth May Fox was a woman of great strength and refined features. A poet and songwriter, she wrote the text to "Carry On," a hymn traditionally associated with the Mutual Improvement Association; it was introduced and featured at that association's June conference in 1930. She was an advocate of woman suffrage and education, evidenced in part by her sponsorship of the Traveling Library Program and her focus on self-education.

Ruth May Fox (1853–1958), third general president of the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association, served from 1929 to 1937. From the Utah State Historical Society collection. Courtesy Nelson Wadsworth.

Ruth May Fox was born November 16, 1853, in Westbury, Wiltshire, England, the daughter of Mary Ann Harding and James May. Five months later, her parents joined the LDS Church. After her mother's death in 1855, her father was called to be a traveling elder for the Church, causing her to live with various LDS families and relatives until she was approximately eight years old, when her father took her to Yorkshire, where he was employed. Around 1865 he emigrated to America, where Ruth joined him a few months later, and soon after, he remarried. The family lived in the Philadelphia area for two years, during which time she worked in factories to earn enough money to help finance their journey to Utah.

In July 1867 the Mays started for Utah, first traveling to North Platte, Nebraska. After securing supplies for their journey, they had only enough money to buy one yoke of cattle, so they shared a wagon with another family and walked most of the way to Utah.

Ruth worked in the Deseret (Salt Lake City) and Ogden Woolen Mills, where her father was a carder, and used her earnings to help purchase the family home. She then attended John Morgan's College in Salt Lake City for four months, which ended her formal education. When her father returned to Salt Lake City and started his own mill, she helped him operate the heavy equipment.

On May 8, 1873, when she was nineteen and he was twenty, she married Jesse Williams Fox, Jr.; they were blessed with twelve children. Ruth and Jesse prospered in the early years of their marriage, but met financial difficulties around 1888. Soon after, Jesse took a second wife, without any forewarning to Ruth. He eventually lost his business, accumulated large debts, and lost the family home. The two families lived separately, and as Jesse lived with the other household, Ruth was largely left to her own resources to survive. In 1900 she and her children ran the Saint Omer Boarding House to supplement their income; in 1914 she began work as a typist for the YWMIA. She lived with her children from 1914 until her death in 1958, resuming housekeeping only to nurse her husband through illnesses in 1921 and from 1927 until his death in 1928.

Among Ruth May Fox's lifelong beliefs was a strong commitment to suffrage for women. She was active in the Utah Woman Suffrage Association and the Republican party and helped draft the suffrage clause of the Utah Constitution. She served as president of the Utah Woman's Press Club, treasurer of the Utah Woman Suffrage Association, chairman of the Salt Lake County Second Precinct Ladies' Republican Club, and board member of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society and of Traveler's Aid Society. She died on April 12, 1958, in Salt Lake City at the age of 104.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Ruth May Fox (1853–1967 [sic])." In Kenneth W. Godfrey, Audrey M. Godfrey, and Jill Mulvay-Derr, eds., Women's Voices: An Untold History of the Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Salt Lake City, 1982.

Thatcher, Linda. "'I Care Nothing for Politics': Ruth May Fox, Forgotten Suffragist." Utah Historical Quarterly 49 (Summer 1981):239–53.

LINDA THATCHER

FREEDOM

The gospel of Jesus Christ does not represent freedom merely as a philosophic concept or abstract possibility, but establishes it at the foundations of the creation of the world and as the fundamental condition of God's dealings with his children. As a general expression the word "freedom" refers to AGENCY, liberty, independence, and autonomy. Freedom, or the genuine possibility of choosing, necessarily defines the most basic condition of human beings in the temporal world.

Latter-day Saint scriptures teach that the pre-mortal life was an environment of choice in which God proposed to his spirit children a PLAN OF SALVATION for their growth and advancement (see Job 38:6–7; 2 Ne. 2:17; D&C 29:36; Abr. 3:22–28). In earth life, with bodies of flesh and bone and vast new possibilities of action, God's children would be free to make choices within the whole spectrum of good and evil. They would also experience the necessary consequences of those choices. "And we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell; And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them" (Abr. 3:24–25).

God promised those who would do his will that they would be redeemed from their errors and sins and gain eternal life. Satan opposed the Father's plan, aware that this more extensive freedom involved the risk of spiritual death, where some would be separated from the Father by their sins, would not repent, and thus could not return to dwell in his kingdom. To avert such a separation, Satan proposed an environment without freedom and hence without sin. Consequently, all would return to the Father, but without moral improvement or advancement (see DEVIL). The "honor" for their return would belong to Satan (Isa. 14:13; Moses 4:1).

A majority of God's spirit children joyfully elected freedom over bondage, knowledge over ignorance, advancement over stagnation, and even danger over security; so the temporal world was created, with freedom as its unconditional ground. The temporal world is an environment of choices and thus of moral action and ACCOUNTABILITY as people are summoned to do the will of God. Men and women may not evade or escape their freedom, for reality always appears as a set of choices informed by some kind of understanding of good, the outcome of which defines in some measure the course of human events. The Book of Mormon says of this decision, Wherefore, men are free according to the flesh; and all things are given them which are expedient unto man. And they are free to choose liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil; for he seeketh that all men might be miserable like unto himself [2 Ne. 2:27].

FREEDOM AND HUMAN CHOICE. Latter-day Saints understand, however, that not all of God's children will find themselves in situations of equal freedom. All people are born into a world created by the acts and beliefs of those who lived before them. These differences are preserved in the traditions, institutions, and practices that have been handed down. While God gives everyone the LIGHT OF CHRIST that draws each to the good, the traditions and practices into which some are born may conceal the truth and lead such people into harmful and sinful acts. For these, God will have mercy (Alma 9:15–16).

Still others are born into situations where the truth is widely known and the opportunity to do good is broadly available. Yet they do evil in the

was active in the Utah Woman Suffrage Association and the Republican party and helped draft the suffrage clause of the Utah Constitution. She served as president of the Utah Woman's Press Club, treasurer of the Utah Woman Suffrage Association, chairman of the Salt Lake County Second Precinct Ladies' Republican Club, and board member of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society and of Traveler's Aid Society. She died on April 12, 1958, in Salt Lake City at the age of 104.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Ruth May Fox (1853–1967 [sic])." In Kenneth W. Godfrey, Audrey M. Godfrey, and Jill Mulvay-Derr, eds., Women's Voices: An Untold History of the Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Salt Lake City, 1982.

Thatcher, Linda. "'I Care Nothing for Politics': Ruth May Fox, Forgotten Suffragist." Utah Historical Quarterly 49 (Summer 1981):239–53.

LINDA THATCHER

FREEDOM

The gospel of Jesus Christ does not represent freedom merely as a philosophic concept or abstract possibility, but establishes it at the foundations of the creation of the world and as the fundamental condition of God's dealings with his children. As a general expression the word "freedom" refers to AGENCY, liberty, independence, and autonomy. Freedom, or the genuine possibility of choosing, necessarily defines the most basic condition of human beings in the temporal world.

Latter-day Saint scriptures teach that the pre-mortal life was an environment of choice in which God proposed to his spirit children a PLAN OF SALVATION for their growth and advancement (see Job 38:6–7; 2 Ne. 2:17; D&C 29:36; Abr. 3:22–28). In earth life, with bodies of flesh and bone and vast new possibilities of action, God's children would be free to make choices within the whole spectrum of good and evil. They would also experience the necessary consequences of those choices. "And we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell; And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them" (Abr. 3:24–25).

God promised those who would do his will that they would be redeemed from their errors and

sins and gain eternal life. Satan opposed the Father's plan, aware that this more extensive freedom involved the risk of spiritual death, where some would be separated from the Father by their sins, would not repent, and thus could not return to dwell in his kingdom. To avert such a separation, Satan proposed an environment without freedom and hence without sin. Consequently, all would return to the Father, but without moral improvement or advancement (see DEVIL). The "honor" for their return would belong to Satan (Isa. 14:13; Moses 4:1).

A majority of God's spirit children joyfully elected freedom over bondage, knowledge over ignorance, advancement over stagnation, and even danger over security; so the temporal world was created, with freedom as its unconditional ground. The temporal world is an environment of choices and thus of moral action and ACCOUNTABILITY as people are summoned to do the will of God. Men and women may not evade or escape their freedom, for reality always appears as a set of choices informed by some kind of understanding of good, the outcome of which defines in some measure the course of human events. The Book of Mormon says of this decision, Wherefore, men are free according to the flesh; and all things are given them which are expedient unto man. And they are free to choose liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil; for he seeketh that all men might be miserable like unto himself [2 Ne. 2:27].

FREEDOM AND HUMAN CHOICE. Latter-day Saints understand, however, that not all of God's children will find themselves in situations of equal freedom. All people are born into a world created by the acts and beliefs of those who lived before them. These differences are preserved in the traditions, institutions, and practices that have been handed down. While God gives everyone the LIGHT OF CHRIST that draws each to the good, the traditions and practices into which some are born may conceal the truth and lead such people into harmful and sinful acts. For these, God will have mercy (Alma 9:15–16).

Still others are born into situations where the truth is widely known and the opportunity to do good is broadly available. Yet they do evil in the face of the truth and thus create consequences that reduce their choices, distance themselves from the Spirit of God, and bring upon themselves unhappiness, destruction, and the darkness of Satan's power (Gal. 5:13–25). Furthermore, they do not suffer alone from the consequences of their choices. The ill-used freedom of some can result in the undeserved suffering of others, and while this is unjust, the risk of unwarranted suffering is necessarily present in a world where evil exists. Nevertheless, this condition too serves God's purpose, for some adversity humbles people before God (Alma 32:12–16). Through earthly trials men and women are tried and tested, but thereby progress and unfold the talents and gifts that God has given them (2 Ne. 2:11; Alma 62:41; D&C 122:1–9). When a whole people choose darkness over light, however, they create a legacy of confinement for following generations that sometimes has to be divinely corrected (e.g., Gen. 6:5–7; Lev. 18:24–30; Moses 8:22–30; Hel. 10:11–12).

On the other hand, those who choose good are made more free by a larger presence of the HOLY GHOST in their lives, and a greater power to know and do God's will (John 7:16–18; 8:29–32; Alma 19:33). Therefore, the good choices of some can bless the lives of others. As a consequence of the righteous works of a few (see Gal. 5–6), previously limited lives can expand to enjoy new and positive opportunities, while old injustices and grievances are brought to settlement. In the measure that the institutions and beliefs of a people embody truth and virtue and oppose corruption and depravity, an environment of greater freedom develops. A fulness is achieved when God establishes his kingdom on earth and reveals to humankind knowledge, power, gifts, and ordinances that open up the way to complete salvation and exaltation. The city of Enoch, as well as the righteous people living in America for 200 years after the visit of the resurrected Savior (see 4 Ne. 1), established high-water marks in the history of human freedom. In this sense, then, God not only calls individuals to live righteous lives, but summons them as his people to make covenants with him and to justly exercise his power as a community of the faithful. Freedom, therefore, should not be seen as merely a possibility of individuals, for it opens up to its fulness only within the kingdom of the righteous (see D&C 138, esp. verse 18).

FREEDOM AND GOVERNMENT. The scriptures further teach that God instituted governments to bless humankind on the earth (see CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA; POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS). Good government must do more than preserve order; it must protect freedom, ensure justice, and secure the general welfare. “And the law of the land which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before me” (D&C 98:5; see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW). God proclaims, “I, the Lord God, make you free, therefore ye are free indeed; and the law also maketh you free” (D&C 98:8). The law protects individuals and their liberties from the arbitrary and deleterious acts of others. The genuine rule of law requires that all be equally subject to rules that are prospective, widely known, and publicly arrived at through mechanisms of government that have been and continue to be consensually agreed upon. The law secures peace by proscribing choices injurious to others, ensures justice by holding all accountable to the law in accordance with fair procedures, and secures the general welfare through the passage of laws that regulate and coordinate social intercourse to the benefit of all. In exchange for these advantages, citizens must fulfill their obligations to sustain and support the government. In the end, the environment of freedom is enhanced and expanded through good government.

Nevertheless, governments are often oppressive and act to restrict freedom and establish privileges for the few by arbitrarily setting up public rules and applying them unevenly without proper safeguards. The abuse of political power is most offensive and bondage nearly complete when freedom of conscience and its expression in free speech are restricted and the right to worship God openly according to one's own beliefs is abridged. In the end, Latter-day Saints believe that the claims of government should be limited to its own proper domain and not allowed to encroach upon the province of freedom to act according to moral conscience. To avoid such political evil, Latter-day Saints are encouraged not only to support constitutional government and the processes it establishes but also to work for laws that bring about freedom and encourage virtue. In this larger sense, the scriptures summon those who follow Jesus to go the extra mile, to give more than they receive, to do good without thought of what they might gain in return. Thus, as citizens, Latter-day Saints are obligated to go beyond the pursuit of self-interest; they are committed to serve others, to bring about the common good, and to secure the general welfare of the people.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Oaks, Dallin H. "Free Agency and Freedom." In The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 1–17. Salt Lake City, 1989.

DAVID E. BOHN

FREEMASONRY IN NAUVOO

The introduction of Freemasonry in NAUVOO had both political and religious implications. When Illinois Grand Master Abraham Jonas visited Nauvoo on March 15, 1842, to install the Nauvoo Masonic Lodge, he inaugurated an era of difficulty with other Illinois Masons and introduced to Nauvoo ancient ritual bearing some similarity to the LDS temple ordinances (see FREEMASONRY AND THE TEMPLE).

Regular Masonic procedure calls for an existing lodge to sponsor each new proposed lodge. Early in the summer of 1841, several Latter-day Saints who were Masons, including Lucius N. Scovil, a key figure in Nauvoo Freemasonry, asked Bodley Lodge No. 1, in Quincy, Illinois, to request that the Illinois Grand Lodge appoint certain individuals as officers of a Nauvoo lodge. Indicating that the persons named were unknown in Quincy as Masons, the lodge returned the letter with instructions for further action.

Less than a year later, Nauvoo had a lodge without the normal sponsorship. Grand Master Jonas apparently waived the rule and granted Nauvoo a "special dispensation" to organize. He also made Joseph SMITH and his counselor, Sidney RIGDON, "Masons at sight." Some believe that Jonas was willing to follow this course because he envisioned the growing Mormon vote supporting his own political ambitions (see NAUVOO POLITICS). Although the action may have endeared him to some Latter-day Saints, it antagonized other Masons. Joseph Smith had reason to expect that the Saints might benefit from the network of friendship and support normally associated with the fraternal organization, but instead, the Nauvoo Lodge only produced friction.

Jonas published an account of the March 15 installation of the Nauvoo Lodge in his newspaper, Columbia Advocate. "Never in my life did I witness a better dressed or more orderly and well-behaved assemblage," he wrote (IHC 4:565–66). During the installation ceremonies, held in the grove near the temple site, Joseph Smith officiated as Grand Chaplain. That evening, with the Masons assembled in his office, the Prophet received the first degree of Freemasonry. Nauvoo Masons then commenced weekly early morning meetings.

In August 1842, Bodley Lodge No. 1 protested the granting of a dispensation to the Nauvoo Lodge, resulting in a temporary suspension of activities. An investigation found that approximately three hundred Latter-day Saints had become Masons during the brief existence of the lodge, but found no irregularities warranting dissolution. The Grand Lodge not only authorized reinstatement of the Nauvoo Lodge but subsequently granted dispensations for other lodges nearby made up principally of Latter-day Saints. Eventually nearly 1,500 LDS men became associated with Illinois Freemasonry, including many members of the Church's governing priesthood bodies—this at a time when the total number of non-LDS Masons in Illinois lodges barely reached 150.

As long-time rivals of Nauvoo for political and economic ascendancy, neighboring Masons feared and resisted Mormon domination of Freemasonry. Charging the Nauvoo Lodge with balloting for more than one applicant at a time, receiving applicants into the fraternity on the basis that they reform in the future, and making Joseph Smith a Master Mason on sight, enemies forced an investigation in October 1843. The Grand Lodge summoned Nauvoo officials to Jacksonville, Illinois. Armed with pertinent books and papers, Lucius Scovil and Henry G. Sherwood answered the allegations. Though the examining committee reported that everything appeared to be in order, it expressed fear that there might be something wrong, and recommended a year's suspension. At this point, Grand Master Jonas, in an impassioned speech, declared that the books of the Nauvoo Lodge were the best-kept he had seen and stated his conviction that but for the fact that the Nauvoo Lodge was composed of Mormons, it would stand as the highest lodge in the state. A committee was appointed to make a thorough investigation in Nauvoo. Though the committee reported no wrongdoing, the Nauvoo Lodge was again suspended. The injunction was later removed, but the Nauvoo Lodge continued to lack the support of its fellow Masons.

In April 1844, the Nauvoo Lodge dedicated a new Masonic hall. By this time, the lodge had the common good, and to secure the general welfare of the people.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Oaks, Dallin H. "Free Agency and Freedom." In The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 1–17. Salt Lake City, 1989.

DAVID E. BOHN

FREEMASONRY IN NAUVOO

The introduction of Freemasonry in NAUVOO had both political and religious implications. When Illinois Grand Master Abraham Jonas visited Nauvoo on March 15, 1842, to install the Nauvoo Masonic Lodge, he inaugurated an era of difficulty with other Illinois Masons and introduced to Nauvoo ancient ritual bearing some similarity to the LDS temple ordinances (see FREEMASONRY AND THE TEMPLE).

Regular Masonic procedure calls for an existing lodge to sponsor each new proposed lodge. Early in the summer of 1841, several Latter-day Saints who were Masons, including Lucius N. Scovil, a key figure in Nauvoo Freemasonry, asked Bodley Lodge No. 1, in Quincy, Illinois, to request that the Illinois Grand Lodge appoint certain individuals as officers of a Nauvoo lodge. Indicating that the persons named were unknown in Quincy as Masons, the lodge returned the letter with instructions for further action.

Less than a year later, Nauvoo had a lodge without the normal sponsorship. Grand Master Jonas apparently waived the rule and granted Nauvoo a "special dispensation" to organize. He also made Joseph SMITH and his counselor, Sidney RIGDON, "Masons at sight." Some believe that Jonas was willing to follow this course because he envisioned the growing Mormon vote supporting his own political ambitions (see NAUVOO POLITICS). Although the action may have endeared him to some Latter-day Saints, it antagonized other Masons. Joseph Smith had reason to expect that the Saints might benefit from the network of friendship and support normally associated with the fraternal organization, but instead, the Nauvoo Lodge only produced friction.

Jonas published an account of the March 15 installation of the Nauvoo Lodge in his newspaper, Columbia Advocate. "Never in my life did I witness a better dressed or more orderly and well-behaved assemblage," he wrote (IHC 4:565–66). During the installation ceremonies, held in the grove near the temple site, Joseph Smith officiated as Grand Chaplain. That evening, with the Masons assembled in his office, the Prophet received the first degree of Freemasonry. Nauvoo Masons then commenced weekly early morning meetings.

In August 1842, Bodley Lodge No. 1 protested the granting of a dispensation to the Nauvoo Lodge, resulting in a temporary suspension of activities. An investigation found that approximately three hundred Latter-day Saints had become Masons during the brief existence of the lodge, but found no irregularities warranting dissolution. The Grand Lodge not only authorized reinstatement of the Nauvoo Lodge but subsequently granted dispensations for other lodges nearby made up principally of Latter-day Saints. Eventually nearly 1,500 LDS men became associated with Illinois Freemasonry, including many members of the Church's governing priesthood bodies—this at a time when the total number of non-LDS Masons in Illinois lodges barely reached 150.

As long-time rivals of Nauvoo for political and economic ascendancy, neighboring Masons feared and resisted Mormon domination of Freemasonry. Charging the Nauvoo Lodge with balloting for more than one applicant at a time, receiving applicants into the fraternity on the basis that they reform in the future, and making Joseph Smith a Master Mason on sight, enemies forced an investigation in October 1843. The Grand Lodge summoned Nauvoo officials to Jacksonville, Illinois. Armed with pertinent books and papers, Lucius Scovil and Henry G. Sherwood answered the allegations. Though the examining committee reported that everything appeared to be in order, it expressed fear that there might be something wrong, and recommended a year's suspension. At this point, Grand Master Jonas, in an impassioned speech, declared that the books of the Nauvoo Lodge were the best-kept he had seen and stated his conviction that but for the fact that the Nauvoo Lodge was composed of Mormons, it would stand as the highest lodge in the state. A committee was appointed to make a thorough investigation in Nauvoo. Though the committee reported no wrongdoing, the Nauvoo Lodge was again suspended. The injunction was later removed, but the Nauvoo Lodge continued to lack the support of its fellow Masons.

In April 1844, the Nauvoo Lodge dedicated a new Masonic hall. By this time, the lodge had been severed from the Grand Lodge and one Illinois Mason had been expelled from his lodge for attending the dedication. The Nauvoo Lodge continued its activities in the newly built hall until April 10, 1845, when Brigham YOUNG advised Lucius Scovil to suspend the work of the Masons in Nauvoo. Only a few additional meetings were held prior to the Latter-day Saints' departure for the Great Basin in 1846.

Joseph Smith participated minimally in Freemasonry and, as far as is known, attended the Nauvoo Masonic Lodge on only three occasions. Nonetheless, LDS Masons commented on his mastery of its orders, tenets, and principles and of his understanding of the allegorical symbolism of its instructions.

Most scholars who have looked carefully at the Nauvoo Masonic Lodge agree that it was more victim than villain. All agree that widespread anti-Mormon feelings and the extensive hatred of Latter-day Saints by local rivals, and not irregularities or misconduct, caused the controversy with regard to the Masonic Lodge in Nauvoo.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hogan, Mervin B. "Mormonism and Freemasonry: The Illinois Episode." In Little Masonic Library, ed. Silas H. Shepherd, Lionel Vibert, and Roseoe Pound, Vol. 2, pp. 267-326. Richmond, Va., 1977.
- Ivins, Anthony W. The Relationship of "Mormonism" and Freemasonry. Salt Lake City, 1934.
- McGavin, E. Cecil. Mormonism and Masonry. Salt Lake City, 1954.

KENNETH W. GODFREY

FREEMASONRY AND THE TEMPLE

Students of both Mormonism and Freemasonry have pondered possible relationships between Masonic rites and the LDS TEMPLE ceremony. Although some argue that Joseph SMITH borrowed elements of Freemasonry in developing the temple ceremony, the ENDOWMENT is more congruous with LDS scriptures (especially the BOOK OF ABRAHAM and the BOOK OF MOSES) and ancient ritual than with Freemasonry. Latter-day Saints view the ORDINANCES as a revealed restoration of ancient temple ceremony and only incidentally related to Freemasonry. The two are not antithetical, however, nor do they threaten each other, and neither institution discourages research regarding the ancient origins of their two ceremonies.

Many sacred ceremonies existed in the ancient world. Modified over centuries, these rituals existed in some form among ancient Egyptians, Coptic Christians, Israelites, and Masons, and in the Catholic and Protestant liturgies. Common elements include the wearing of special clothing, ritualistic speech, the dramatization of archetypal themes, instruction, and the use of symbolic gestures. One theme common to many—found in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, the Egyptian pyramid texts, and Coptic PRAYER CIRCLES, for example—is man's journey through life and his quest, following death, to successfully pass the sentinels guarding the entrance to eternal bliss with the gods. Though these ceremonies vary greatly, significant common points raise the possibility of a common remote source.

The Egyptian pyramid texts, for example, feature six main themes: (1) emphasis on a primordial written document behind the rites; (2) purification (including anointing, lustration, and clothing); (3) the Creation (resurrection and awakening texts); (4) the garden (including tree and ritual meal motifs); (5) travel (protection, a ferryman, and Osirian texts); and (6) ascension (including victory, coronation, admission to heavenly company, and Horus texts). Like such ancient ceremonies, the LDS temple endowment presents aspects of these themes in figurative terms. It, too, presents, not a picture of immediate reality, but a model setting forth the pattern of human life on earth and the divine plan of which it is part.

Masonic ceremonies are also allegorical, depicting life's states—youth, manhood, and old age—each with its associated burdens and challenges, followed by death and hoped-for immortality. There is no universal agreement concerning when Freemasonry began. Some historians trace the order's origin to Solomon, Enoch, or even Adam. Others argue that while some Masonic symbolism may be ancient, as an institution it began in the Middle Ages or later.

Though in this DISPENSATION the LDS endowment dates from Kirtland and Nauvoo (see KIRTLAND TEMPLE; NAUVOO TEMPLE), Latter-day Saints believe that temple ordinances are as old as man and that the essentials of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST, including its necessary ritual and teachings, were first revealed to Adam. These saving principles and ordinances were subsequently re-

been severed from the Grand Lodge and one Illinois Mason had been expelled from his lodge for attending the dedication. The Nauvoo Lodge continued its activities in the newly built hall until April 10, 1845, when Brigham YOUNG advised Lucius Scovil to suspend the work of the Masons in Nauvoo. Only a few additional meetings were held prior to the Latter-day Saints' departure for the Great Basin in 1846.

Joseph Smith participated minimally in Freemasonry and, as far as is known, attended the Nauvoo Masonic Lodge on only three occasions. Nonetheless, LDS Masons commented on his mastery of its orders, tenets, and principles and of his understanding of the allegorical symbolism of its instructions.

Most scholars who have looked carefully at the Nauvoo Masonic Lodge agree that it was more victim than villain. All agree that widespread anti-Mormon feelings and the extensive hatred of Latter-day Saints by local rivals, and not irregularities or misconduct, caused the controversy with regard to the Masonic Lodge in Nauvoo.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hogan, Mervin B. "Mormonism and Freemasonry: The Illinois Episode." In Little Masonic Library, ed. Silas H. Shepherd, Lionel Vibert, and Roseoe Pound, Vol. 2, pp. 267-326. Richmond, Va., 1977.
- Ivins, Anthony W. The Relationship of "Mormonism" and Freemasonry. Salt Lake City, 1934.
- McGavin, E. Cecil. Mormonism and Masonry. Salt Lake City, 1954.

KENNETH W. GODFREY

FREEMASONRY AND THE TEMPLE

Students of both Mormonism and Freemasonry have pondered possible relationships between Masonic rites and the LDS TEMPLE ceremony. Although some argue that Joseph SMITH borrowed elements of Freemasonry in developing the temple ceremony, the ENDOWMENT is more congruous with LDS scriptures (especially the BOOK OF ABRAHAM and the BOOK OF MOSES) and ancient ritual than with Freemasonry. Latter-day Saints view the ORDINANCES as a revealed restoration of ancient temple ceremony and only incidentally related to Freemasonry. The two are not antithetical, however, nor do they threaten each other, and neither institution discourages research regarding the ancient origins of their two ceremonies.

Many sacred ceremonies existed in the ancient world. Modified over centuries, these rituals existed in some form among ancient Egyptians, Coptic Christians, Israelites, and Masons, and in the Catholic and Protestant liturgies. Common elements include the wearing of special clothing, ritualistic speech, the dramatization of archetypal themes, instruction, and the use of symbolic gestures. One theme common to many—found in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, the Egyptian pyramid texts, and Coptic PRAYER CIRCLES, for example—is man's journey through life and his quest, following death, to successfully pass the sentinels guarding the entrance to eternal bliss with the gods. Though these ceremonies vary greatly, significant common points raise the possibility of a common remote source.

The Egyptian pyramid texts, for example, feature six main themes: (1) emphasis on a primordial written document behind the rites; (2) purification (including anointing, lustration, and clothing); (3) the Creation (resurrection and awakening texts); (4) the garden (including tree and ritual meal motifs); (5) travel (protection, a ferryman, and Osirian texts); and (6) ascension (including victory, coronation, admission to heavenly company, and Horus texts). Like such ancient ceremonies, the LDS temple endowment presents aspects of these themes in figurative terms. It, too, presents, not a picture of immediate reality, but a model setting forth the pattern of human life on earth and the divine plan of which it is part.

Masonic ceremonies are also allegorical, depicting life's states—youth, manhood, and old age—each with its associated burdens and challenges, followed by death and hoped-for immortality. There is no universal agreement concerning when Freemasonry began. Some historians trace the order's origin to Solomon, Enoch, or even Adam. Others argue that while some Masonic symbolism may be ancient, as an institution it began in the Middle Ages or later.

Though in this DISPENSATION the LDS endowment dates from Kirtland and Nauvoo (see KIRTLAND TEMPLE; NAUVOO TEMPLE), Latter-day Saints believe that temple ordinances are as old as man and that the essentials of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST, including its necessary ritual and teachings, were first revealed to Adam. These saving principles and ordinances were subsequently revealed to SETH; NOAH; MELCHIZEDEK; ABRAHAM, and each prophet to whom the priesthood was given, including PETER. Latter-day Saints believe that the ordinances performed in LDS temples today replicate rituals that were part of God's teachings from the beginning.

The Prophet Joseph Smith suggested that the endowment and Freemasonry in part emanated from the same ancient spring. Thus, some Nauvoo Masons thought of the endowment as a restoration of a ritual only imperfectly preserved in Freemasonry and viewed Joseph Smith as a master of the underlying principles and allegorical symbolism (Heber C. Kimball to Parley P. Pratt, June 17, 1842, Church Archives). The philosophy and major tenets of Freemasonry are not fundamentally incompatible with the teaching, theology, and doctrines of the Latter-day Saints. Both emphasize morality, sacrifice, CONSECRATION, and service, and both condemn selfishness, sin, and greed. Furthermore, the aim of Masonic ritual is to instruct—to make truth available so that man can follow it.

Resemblances between the two rituals are limited to a small proportion of actions and words; indeed, some find that the LDS endowment has more similarities with the Pyramid texts and the Coptic documents than with Freemasonry. Even where the two rituals share symbolism, the fabric of meanings is different. In addition to creation and life themes, one similarity is that both call for the participants to make COVENANTS. Yet, the endowment alone ties covenants to eternal blessings and to Jesus Christ. The Masonic ceremony does not emphasize PRIESTHOOD or the need to be commissioned by God to represent him. The active participation of God in the world and in men's lives is a distinctly LDS temple motif. While Masons believe in an undefined, impersonal God, everything in the LDS endowment emanates from, or is directed to, God who is a personage and man's eternal Father. The endowment looks to the eternities and to eternal lives, but Freemasonry is earth-bound, pervaded by human legend and hope for something better.

Freemasonry is a fraternal society, and in its ritual all promises, oaths, and agreements are made between members. In the temple endowment all covenants are between the individual and God. In Freemasonry, testing, grading, penalizing, or sentencing accords with the rules of the fraternity or membership votes. In the endowment, God alone is the judge. Within Freemasonry, rank and promotions are of great importance, while in the LDS temple rites there are no distinctions: all participants stand equal before God. The clash between good and evil, including SATAN's role, is essential to, and vividly depicted in, the endowment, but is largely absent from Masonic rites. Temple ceremonies emphasize SALVATION FOR THE DEAD through vicarious ordinance work, such as BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD; nothing in Masonic ritual allows for proxies acting on behalf of the dead. Women participate in all aspects of LDS temple rites; though Freemasonry has women's auxiliaries, Masonic ritual excludes them. The endowment's inclusion of females underscores perhaps the most fundamental difference between the two rites: LDS temple rites unite husbands and wives, and their children, in eternal families (see ETERNAL LIVES; MARRIAGE). Latter-day Saint SEALINGS would be completely out of place in the context of Masonic ceremonies.

Thus, Latter-day Saints see their temple ordinances as fundamentally different from Masonic and other rituals and think of similarities as remnants from an ancient original.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ivins, Anthony W. The Relationship of "Mormonism" and Freemasonry. Salt Lake City, 1934.
- Madsen, Truman G., ed. The Temple in Antiquity. Provo, Utah, 1984.
- Nibley, Hugh W. The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri: An Egyptian Endowment. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- Packer, Boyd K. The Holy Temple. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Shepherd, Silas H.; Lionel Vibert; and Roscoe Pound, eds. Little Masonic Library, 5 vols. Richmond, Va., 1977, esp. Mervin B. Hogan, "Mormonism and Freemasonry: The Illinois Episode," Vol. 2, pp. 267–326.

KENNETH W. GODFREY

---

FRIEND, THE

Published monthly since January 1971 for children to age twelve, the Friend replaced the CHILDREN'S FRIEND, which was published from 1902 through 1970. The goal of the Friend is to reach the children of the Church directly, even those not involved with the PRIMARY, by presenting the gospel "while reinforcing the values of the stable homes" (Anderson, p. 13). It attempts to fulfill this goal by

vealed to SETH; NOAH; MELCHIZEDEK; ABRAHAM, and each prophet to whom the priesthood was given, including PETER. Latter-day Saints believe that the ordinances performed in LDS temples today replicate rituals that were part of God's teachings from the beginning.

The Prophet Joseph Smith suggested that the endowment and Freemasonry in part emanated from the same ancient spring. Thus, some Nauvoo Masons thought of the endowment as a restoration of a ritual only imperfectly preserved in Freemasonry and viewed Joseph Smith as a master of the underlying principles and allegorical symbolism (Heber C. Kimball to Parley P. Pratt, June 17, 1842, Church Archives). The philosophy and major tenets of Freemasonry are not fundamentally incompatible with the teaching, theology, and doctrines of the Latter-day Saints. Both emphasize morality, sacrifice, CONSECRATION, and service, and both condemn selfishness, sin, and greed. Furthermore, the aim of Masonic ritual is to instruct—to make truth available so that man can follow it.

Resemblances between the two rituals are limited to a small proportion of actions and words; indeed, some find that the LDS endowment has more similarities with the Pyramid texts and the Coptic documents than with Freemasonry. Even where the two rituals share symbolism, the fabric of meanings is different. In addition to creation and life themes, one similarity is that both call for the participants to make COVENANTS. Yet, the endowment alone ties covenants to eternal blessings and to Jesus Christ. The Masonic ceremony does not emphasize PRIESTHOOD or the need to be commissioned by God to represent him. The active participation of God in the world and in men's lives is a distinctly LDS temple motif. While Masons believe in an undefined, impersonal God, everything in the LDS endowment emanates from, or is directed to, God who is a personage and man's eternal Father. The endowment looks to the eternities and to eternal lives, but Freemasonry is earth-bound, pervaded by human legend and hope for something better.

Freemasonry is a fraternal society, and in its ritual all promises, oaths, and agreements are made between members. In the temple endowment all covenants are between the individual and God. In Freemasonry, testing, grading, penalizing, or sentencing accords with the rules of the fraternity or membership votes. In the endowment, God alone is the judge. Within Freemasonry, rank and promotions are of great importance, while in the LDS temple rites there are no distinctions: all participants stand equal before God. The clash between good and evil, including SATAN's role, is essential to, and vividly depicted in, the endowment, but is largely absent from Masonic rites. Temple ceremonies emphasize SALVATION FOR THE DEAD through vicarious ordinance work, such as BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD; nothing in Masonic ritual allows for proxies acting on behalf of the dead. Women participate in all aspects of LDS temple rites; though Freemasonry has women's auxiliaries, Masonic ritual excludes them. The endowment's inclusion of females underscores perhaps the most fundamental difference between the two rites: LDS temple rites unite husbands and wives, and their children, in eternal families (see ETERNAL LIVES; MARRIAGE). Latter-day Saint SEALINGS would be completely out of place in the context of Masonic ceremonies.

Thus, Latter-day Saints see their temple ordinances as fundamentally different from Masonic and other rituals and think of similarities as remnants from an ancient original.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ivins, Anthony W. The Relationship of "Mormonism" and Freemasonry. Salt Lake City, 1934.
- Madsen, Truman G., ed. The Temple in Antiquity. Provo, Utah, 1984.
- Nibley, Hugh W. The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri: An Egyptian Endowment. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- Packer, Boyd K. The Holy Temple. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Shepherd, Silas H.; Lionel Vibert; and Roscoe Pound, eds. Little Masonic Library, 5 vols. Richmond, Va., 1977, esp. Mervin B. Hogan, "Mormonism and Freemasonry: The Illinois Episode," Vol. 2, pp. 267–326.

KENNETH W. GODFREY

---

FRIEND, THE

Published monthly since January 1971 for children to age twelve, the Friend replaced the CHILDREN'S FRIEND, which was published from 1902 through 1970. The goal of the Friend is to reach the children of the Church directly, even those not involved with the PRIMARY, by presenting the gospel "while reinforcing the values of the stable homes" (Anderson, p. 13). It attempts to fulfill this goal by printing contemporary, historical, scriptural, and imaginative stories, often with pictures; recipes and crafts; games and pencil activities such as hidden pictures, scriptural matching, and connect-the-dots drawings; a calendar for the month; stories of Church leaders and other inspiring people; suggestions for reading; specials for the holidays; "Friend to Friend" discussions with Church leaders; and "Messages from the First Presidency" or from other GENERAL AUTHORITIES.

Keenly aware of the challenges facing children in the 1990s, the Friend tries to fill their needs and help parents as they raise their children in the very difficult modern world. The Friend attempts to meet President Spencer W. KIMBALL's challenge "to support the parents in teaching their children to pray and walk uprightly before the Lord" (Oman and Madsen, p. 39).

The editors of the Friend have been Lucile Reading (1971–1982) and Vivian Paulsen (1982–).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Lavina Fielding. "The Church and Children." Ensign 8 (Apr. 1978):6–13.
- Hinckley, Gordon B. "A Friend for Every Child." IE 73 (Dec. 1970):97–98.
- Oman, Susan, and Carol Madsen. "100 Years of Primary." Ensign 8 (Apr. 1978):32–39.

ELIZABETH WAILQUIST

---

FULNESS OF THE GOSPEL

The phrase "fulness of the gospel" refers to the whole doctrine of redemption demonstrated and taught in the ministry and life of Jesus Christ. It "consists in those laws, doctrines, ordinances, powers, and authorities needed to enable men to gain the fulness of salvation" (MD, p. 333).

Fulness is a term sometimes used in the scriptures to describe Christ himself, regarding both his stature as the Son of God and what he offered mankind. John, in bearing witness of the Savior, said, "And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace" (John 1:16). To receive the fulness the Savior offered is to accept him as the one who made salvation possible for all through the Atonement and to follow his teachings. Thus, to experience a fulness of joy requires one to keep God's commandments (D&C 93:27).

Christ himself declared the fulness of his gospel: "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will . . . , that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:38–40).

Latter-day Saints believe that every PROPHET, from whatever DISPENSATION, prophesied of Christ. But the phrase fulness of the gospel implies that periods have occurred when the gospel was not on the earth in its fulness, either in doctrine or in ordinance. The Book of Mormon was described by a heavenly messenger to Joseph Smith in 1820 as "giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent," and "the fulness of the everlasting Gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior" (JS—H 1:34).

President Ezra Taft BENSON explains: "The Book of Mormon contains the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ (D&C 20:9). That does not mean it contains every teaching, every doctrine ever revealed. Rather, it means that in the Book of Mormon we will find the fulness of those doctrines required for our salvation. And they are taught plainly and simply so that even children can learn the ways of salvation and exaltation" (Benson, pp. 18–19).

NEPHI<sup>1</sup>, a Book of Mormon prophet living centuries before the coming of Christ, indicated that the fulness of the gospel would not always be on the earth. In a vision of the Lord's future ministry, he saw that parts of the gospel would be altered and tampered with. Nephi wrote, speaking of the Bible, "When it proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew it contained the fulness of the gospel of the Lord, of whom the twelve apostles bear record." But men have taken away from the Bible "many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord have they taken away," which resulted in a loss of the gospel (cf. 1 Ne. 13:24–29).

Latter-day Saints believe that this apostasy and corruption of the scriptures necessitated a later restoration of the fulness of the gospel through prophets called of God. This restoration began with the FIRST VISION of 1820 to the Prophet Joseph Smith and continued with subsequent revelations, including modern SCRIPTURE and priesthood AUTHORITY, which remain today in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

[See also Restoration of All Things; Restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.]

printing contemporary, historical, scriptural, and imaginative stories, often with pictures; recipes and crafts; games and pencil activities such as hidden pictures, scriptural matching, and connect-the-dots drawings; a calendar for the month; stories of Church leaders and other inspiring people; suggestions for reading; specials for the holidays; "Friend to Friend" discussions with Church leaders; and "Messages from the First Presidency" or from other GENERAL AUTHORITIES.

Keenly aware of the challenges facing children in the 1990s, the Friend tries to fill their needs and help parents as they raise their children in the very difficult modern world. The Friend attempts to meet President Spencer W. KIMBALL's challenge "to support the parents in teaching their children to pray and walk uprightly before the Lord" (Oman and Madsen, p. 39).

The editors of the Friend have been Lucile Reading (1971–1982) and Vivian Paulsen (1982–).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Lavina Fielding. "The Church and Children." Ensign 8 (Apr. 1978):6–13.
- Hinckley, Gordon B. "A Friend for Every Child." IE 73 (Dec. 1970):97–98.
- Oman, Susan, and Carol Madsen. "100 Years of Primary." Ensign 8 (Apr. 1978):32–39.

ELIZABETH WAILQUIST

---

FULNESS OF THE GOSPEL

The phrase "fulness of the gospel" refers to the whole doctrine of redemption demonstrated and taught in the ministry and life of Jesus Christ. It "consists in those laws, doctrines, ordinances, powers, and authorities needed to enable men to gain the fulness of salvation" (MD, p. 333).

Fulness is a term sometimes used in the scriptures to describe Christ himself, regarding both his stature as the Son of God and what he offered mankind. John, in bearing witness of the Savior, said, "And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace" (John 1:16). To receive the fulness the Savior offered is to accept him as the one who made salvation possible for all through the Atonement and to follow his teachings. Thus, to experience a fulness of joy requires one to keep God's commandments (D&C 93:27).

Christ himself declared the fulness of his gospel: "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will . . . , that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:38–40).

Latter-day Saints believe that every PROPHET, from whatever DISPENSATION, prophesied of Christ. But the phrase fulness of the gospel implies that periods have occurred when the gospel was not on the earth in its fulness, either in doctrine or in ordinance. The Book of Mormon was described by a heavenly messenger to Joseph Smith in 1820 as "giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent," and "the fulness of the everlasting Gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior" (JS—H 1:34).

President Ezra Taft BENSON explains: "The Book of Mormon contains the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ (D&C 20:9). That does not mean it contains every teaching, every doctrine ever revealed. Rather, it means that in the Book of Mormon we will find the fulness of those doctrines required for our salvation. And they are taught plainly and simply so that even children can learn the ways of salvation and exaltation" (Benson, pp. 18–19).

NEPHI<sup>1</sup>, a Book of Mormon prophet living centuries before the coming of Christ, indicated that the fulness of the gospel would not always be on the earth. In a vision of the Lord's future ministry, he saw that parts of the gospel would be altered and tampered with. Nephi wrote, speaking of the Bible, "When it proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew it contained the fulness of the gospel of the Lord, of whom the twelve apostles bear record." But men have taken away from the Bible "many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord have they taken away," which resulted in a loss of the gospel (cf. 1 Ne. 13:24–29).

Latter-day Saints believe that this apostasy and corruption of the scriptures necessitated a later restoration of the fulness of the gospel through prophets called of God. This restoration began with the FIRST VISION of 1820 to the Prophet Joseph Smith and continued with subsequent revelations, including modern SCRIPTURE and priesthood AUTHORITY, which remain today in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

[See also Restoration of All Things; Restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. A Witness and a Warning. Salt Lake City, 1988.

DEAN B. FARNSWORTH

"FUNDAMENTALISTS"

"Mormon Fundamentalism" denotes the beliefs and practices of contemporary SCHISMATIC GROUPS that claim to follow all the teachings of the Prophet Joseph SMITH. They often style themselves believers in the "fulness of the gospel," which they assert must include PLURAL MARRIAGE and sometimes the UNITED ORDER.

The Fundamentalist movement began after the issuance of the MANIFESTO of 1890, which publicly declared an official end to plural marriage in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The period from 1890 to 1904 was one of confusion for some over the application and extent of the ban on new plural marriages in the Church. For example, since the Manifesto referred to "marriages violative of the law of the land," some felt the prohibition did not apply outside the United States. In 1904 the Manifesto was therefore officially and publicly proclaimed to be worldwide in jurisdiction and overall scope.

Following this second pronouncement, unyielding Fundamentalists continued to hold that God requires all "true" believers to abide by the principle of polygamy, irrespective of Church mandate. This insistence has separated Fundamentalists from mainstream Mormonism. In the 1920s, Lorin C. Woolley of Centerville, Utah, claimed God had authorized him to perpetuate plural marriage, saying he received this commission while a young man in 1886 through the ministration of Jesus Christ, John TAYLOR, and Joseph Smith. His assertion further polarized the Fundamentalists and the Church.

Some Fundamentalists of the 1920s rejected Woolley's claims to authority and went their separate ways. Charles Kingston settled in Bountiful, Utah, and set up a type of united order community that persists as a relatively closed society. Alma Dayer LeBaron moved to Mesa, Arizona, and eventually to Juarez, Mexico, laying the groundwork for the Church of the Firstborn of the Fullness of Times and offshoots such as the Church of the Lamb of God. Other Fundamentalists have broken away through the years, making various religious claims.

Despite these defections, the majority of Fundamentalists remained an organized group, showing small but steady gains in adherents. In the mid-1930s, a united order colony was established in an isolated community near the Utah-Arizona border called Short Creek, now Colorado City, Arizona. Property was held in a trust called the United Effort. This colony has become a haven for many Fundamentalists, although a majority of their followers still reside in the Salt Lake City area.

In the mid-1940s, Utah and Arizona law officials raided the Short Creek community and broke up polygamous families, putting husbands in jail and children in foster homes. Fundamentalist leaders remained in state prison until September 24, 1945 (the fifty-fifth anniversary of the Woodruff Manifesto), when they issued a public statement indicating their intention to cease ignoring the law of the land. They returned to their families and refrained from violating the law for a time.

A few years later, a major schism in the Colorado City group occurred over the question of priesthood authority and the right to rule. Joseph Musser (the ostensible leader of the group), Rulon Allred, his brothers, and a few others broke away and started their own group, which has grown to about 2,000 members through conversion and births and is now known as the United Apostolic Brethren. In 1976, Rulon Allred, then leader of the group, was murdered, evidently by a plural wife of Ervil LeBaron, of the Church of the Lamb of God. Owen Allred replaced his brother as leader. The Colorado City group reorganized, with Leroy Johnson assuming leadership, and in 1990 was one of the largest fundamentalist groups, numbering in the thousands. Upon Johnson's death (Nov. 25, 1986, at Hildale, Utah) a power struggle ensued; schisms continue in the Colorado City group over authority and legal title to property.

Fundamentalists claim to believe in the four LDS STANDARD WORKS, the early history of the Church, and the prophets of the RESTORATION up to, and including, John Taylor. Fundamentalist doctrines of priesthood presidency are derived from a unique interpretation of Doctrine and Covenants section 84, which they claim refers to a priesthood council or hierarchy of seven men designated as "high priest" apostles. Various claims to succession have led to the current schisms in these

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. A Witness and a Warning. Salt Lake City, 1988.

DEAN B. FARNSWORTH

"FUNDAMENTALISTS"

"Mormon Fundamentalism" denotes the beliefs and practices of contemporary SCHISMATIC GROUPS that claim to follow all the teachings of the Prophet Joseph SMITH. They often style themselves believers in the "fulness of the gospel," which they assert must include PLURAL MARRIAGE and sometimes the UNITED ORDER.

The Fundamentalist movement began after the issuance of the MANIFESTO of 1890, which publicly declared an official end to plural marriage in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The period from 1890 to 1904 was one of confusion for some over the application and extent of the ban on new plural marriages in the Church. For example, since the Manifesto referred to "marriages violative of the law of the land," some felt the prohibition did not apply outside the United States. In 1904 the Manifesto was therefore officially and publicly proclaimed to be worldwide in jurisdiction and overall scope.

Following this second pronouncement, unyielding Fundamentalists continued to hold that God requires all "true" believers to abide by the principle of polygamy, irrespective of Church mandate. This insistence has separated Fundamentalists from mainstream Mormonism. In the 1920s, Lorin C. Woolley of Centerville, Utah, claimed God had authorized him to perpetuate plural marriage, saying he received this commission while a young man in 1886 through the ministration of Jesus Christ, John TAYLOR, and Joseph Smith. His assertion further polarized the Fundamentalists and the Church.

Some Fundamentalists of the 1920s rejected Woolley's claims to authority and went their separate ways. Charles Kingston settled in Bountiful, Utah, and set up a type of united order community that persists as a relatively closed society. Alma Dayer LeBaron moved to Mesa, Arizona, and eventually to Juarez, Mexico, laying the groundwork for the Church of the Firstborn of the Fullness of Times and offshoots such as the Church of the Lamb of God. Other Fundamentalists have broken away through the years, making various religious claims.

Despite these defections, the majority of Fundamentalists remained an organized group, showing small but steady gains in adherents. In the mid-1930s, a united order colony was established in an isolated community near the Utah-Arizona border called Short Creek, now Colorado City, Arizona. Property was held in a trust called the United Effort. This colony has become a haven for many Fundamentalists, although a majority of their followers still reside in the Salt Lake City area.

In the mid-1940s, Utah and Arizona law officials raided the Short Creek community and broke up polygamous families, putting husbands in jail and children in foster homes. Fundamentalist leaders remained in state prison until September 24, 1945 (the fifty-fifth anniversary of the Woodruff Manifesto), when they issued a public statement indicating their intention to cease ignoring the law of the land. They returned to their families and refrained from violating the law for a time.

A few years later, a major schism in the Colorado City group occurred over the question of priesthood authority and the right to rule. Joseph Musser (the ostensible leader of the group), Rulon Allred, his brothers, and a few others broke away and started their own group, which has grown to about 2,000 members through conversion and births and is now known as the United Apostolic Brethren. In 1976, Rulon Allred, then leader of the group, was murdered, evidently by a plural wife of Ervil LeBaron, of the Church of the Lamb of God. Owen Allred replaced his brother as leader. The Colorado City group reorganized, with Leroy Johnson assuming leadership, and in 1990 was one of the largest fundamentalist groups, numbering in the thousands. Upon Johnson's death (Nov. 25, 1986, at Hildale, Utah) a power struggle ensued; schisms continue in the Colorado City group over authority and legal title to property.

Fundamentalists claim to believe in the four LDS STANDARD WORKS, the early history of the Church, and the prophets of the RESTORATION up to, and including, John Taylor. Fundamentalist doctrines of priesthood presidency are derived from a unique interpretation of Doctrine and Covenants section 84, which they claim refers to a priesthood council or hierarchy of seven men designated as "high priest" apostles. Various claims to succession have led to the current schisms in these groups. Many independent Fundamentalists believe the claims to authority of the two main groups are flawed; they thus live and believe apart from those groups.

The thread that binds all Fundamentalists together is their belief that the LDS Church has improperly changed doctrines and practices. One independent Fundamentalist published a book listing ninety-five purported changes, thus mimicking Martin Luther's ninety-five theses. Prominent among these criticisms are the abrogation of plural marriage, cessation of living the united order, alleged loss of revelation to the Church since 1890, purported forfeiture of keys of the priesthood due to termination of the practice of plural marriage, supposed repudiation of "true" knowledge of the GODHEAD, changes in the method of missionary work (failure to preach without purse or scrip), asserted corruption of temple garments and ordinances, cessation of the gathering of Israel to Utah, changing the method of priesthood conferral, and allowing all worthy male members of the Church to hold the priesthood, regardless of race.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, J. Max. The Polygamy Story: Fiction and Fact. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Kraut, Ogden. Ninety-five Theses. Dugway, Utah, n.d.
- Truth Magazine. Salt Lake City, 1935–1956.

J. MAX ANDERSON

---

G

---

---

GABRIEL

Sec: Angels

---

GAMBLING

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints condemns gambling, games of chance, and lotteries as moral evils and admonishes its members not to participate in them in any form. Gambling is based on the morally wrong philosophy of getting something for nothing, of taking money without giving fair value in exchange. Not only is gambling morally wrong, but it is also bad economics for customers. The lavish gambling centers around the world stand as ample evidence that the chances of winning are weighted heavily in favor of the establishment and against the bettor. This same remoteness of winning is part of state-run lotteries. The chance of purchasing a winning ticket in one 1990 state lottery was noted by the news media as 1 in 14 million. The Church considers lotteries as gambling, and the First Presidency has asked Latter-day Saints not to participate in them and to oppose establishing them in their states:

There can be no question about the moral ramifications of gambling, including government-sponsored lotteries. Public lotteries are advocated as a means of relieving the burden of taxation. It has been demonstrated, however, that all too often lotteries only add to the problems of the financially disadvantaged by taking money from them and giving nothing of value in return. The poor and the elderly become victims of the inducements that are held out to purchase lottery tickets on the remote chance of winning a substantial prize. It is sad to see governments now promoting what they once enacted laws to forbid. We urge members of the Church to join with others with similar concerns in opposing the legalization of gambling and government-sponsorship of lotteries [Church News, Oct. 5, 1986, p. 4].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Oaks, Dallin H. "Gambling—Morally Wrong and Politically Unwise." Ensign 17 (June 1987):69–75.

CHARLES D. TATE, JR.

---

GARDEN OF EDEN

The significance of the Garden of Eden is fundamental among the beliefs of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and is referred to in each of the STANDARD WORKS. As one of the final steps in the Creation, God planted a garden eastward in Eden and placed in it varieties of animals and plants (Gen. 2:8–9). It was an idyllic environment, without enmity among living things and without death. ADAM and Eve were given domin-

---

G

---

---

GABRIEL

Sec: Angels

---

GAMBLING

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints condemns gambling, games of chance, and lotteries as moral evils and admonishes its members not to participate in them in any form. Gambling is based on the morally wrong philosophy of getting something for nothing, of taking money without giving fair value in exchange. Not only is gambling morally wrong, but it is also bad economics for customers. The lavish gambling centers around the world stand as ample evidence that the chances of winning are weighted heavily in favor of the establishment and against the bettor. This same remoteness of winning is part of state-run lotteries. The chance of purchasing a winning ticket in one 1990 state lottery was noted by the news media as 1 in 14 million. The Church considers lotteries as gambling, and the First Presidency has asked Latter-day Saints not to participate in them and to oppose establishing them in their states:

There can be no question about the moral ramifications of gambling, including government-sponsored lotteries. Public lotteries are advocated as a means of relieving the burden of taxation. It has been demonstrated, however, that all too often lotteries only add to the problems of the financially disadvantaged by taking money from them and giving nothing of value in return. The poor and the elderly become victims of the inducements that are held out to purchase lottery tickets on the remote chance of winning a substantial prize. It is sad to see governments now promoting what they once enacted laws to forbid. We urge members of the Church to join with others with similar concerns in opposing the legalization of gambling and government-sponsorship of lotteries [Church News, Oct. 5, 1986, p. 4].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Oaks, Dallin H. "Gambling—Morally Wrong and Politically Unwise." Ensign 17 (June 1987):69–75.

CHARLES D. TATE, JR.

---

GARDEN OF EDEN

The significance of the Garden of Eden is fundamental among the beliefs of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and is referred to in each of the STANDARD WORKS. As one of the final steps in the Creation, God planted a garden eastward in Eden and placed in it varieties of animals and plants (Gen. 2:8–9). It was an idyllic environment, without enmity among living things and without death. ADAM and Eve were given dominion over all things and directed to cultivate and beautify the garden (Gen. 2:15). However, in this pristine condition, Adam and Eve would have had no children (2 Ne. 2:22–25; Moses 5:11).

God placed the tree of knowledge of good and evil in the midst of the garden and gave Adam and Eve their AGENCY whether to partake of its fruit (Moses 7:32). Unless they ate, they would remain forever in the garden, limited in their ability to progress and without posterity. However, while partaking would bring opportunity to bear children and to learn good from evil by experience, including sorrow, pain, and death, they would be exiled temporarily from the presence of God. The decision of Eve and Adam to transgress a commandment of God and partake of the fruit of the tree brought mortality and death to them and to their posterity; for it made possible the human family upon the earth (2 Ne. 2:25). The FALL OF ADAM also made the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST necessary.

Neither biblical records nor secular history and archaeological research identify the dimensions or the location of the garden in terms of the present-day surface of the earth. Latter-day revelation specifies that as a mortal, Adam lived at ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN in what is now Daviess County, Missouri (D&C 107:53–56; 116:1; 117:8). Several early LDS leaders, among them Brigham YOUNG and Heber C. KIMBALL, stated that the Prophet Joseph SMITH taught them that the Garden of Eden was located in what is now Jackson County, Missouri (JD 10:235; cf. 11:336–7; DS 3:74).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cowley, Matthias F. Wilford Woodruff, p. 481. Salt Lake City, 1964.

GRAHAM W. DOXEY

---

GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE

See: Gethsemane

---

GARMENTS

The word “garment” has distinctive meanings to Latter-day Saints. The white undergarment worn by those members who have received the ORDINANCE of the temple ENDOWMENT is a ceremonial one. All adults who enter the temple are required to wear it. In LDS TEMPLES, men and women who receive priesthood ordinances wear this undergarment and other priestly robes. The garment is worn at all times, but the robes are worn only in the temple. Having made COVENANTS of righteousness, the members wear the garment under their regular clothing for the rest of their lives, day and night, partially to remind them of the sacred covenants they have made with God.

The white garment symbolizes purity and helps assure modesty, respect for the attributes of God, and, to the degree it is honored, a token of what PAUL regarded as taking upon one the whole armor of God (Eph. 6:13; cf. D&C 27:15). It is an outward expression of an inward covenant, and symbolizes Christlike attributes in one’s mission in life. Garments bear several simple marks of orientation toward the gospel principles of OBEDIENCE, TRUTH, life, and DISCIPLESHIP in Christ.

An agency of the Church manufactures these garments in contemporary, comfortable, and lightweight fabrics. They are available for purchase through Church DISTRIBUTION CENTERS.

SCRIPTURE, as well as legends from many lands and cultures, points toward the significance of saeral clothing. A biblical tradition teaches that ADAM and EVE, prior to their expulsion from Eden, wore sacred clothing. “Unto Adam also and to his wife did the Lord God make coats of skins, and clothed them” (Gen. 3:21). These were given in a context of REPENTANCE and forgiveness, and of offering SACRIFICE and making covenants.

In antiquity, priestly vestments were part of widespread tradition. The Targums (Aramaic paraphrases of the Old Testament) teach that these garments were “precious garments” or “glorious garments” or “garments of honor.” Rabbi Eleazer called them “coats of glory.” A rabbinic source asks: “And what were those garments?” The answer is, “The vestments of the High Priesthood, with which the Almighty clothed them because Adam was the world’s first-born” (Kasher, Encyclopedia of Biblical Interpretation, Vol. I, p. 137). In MOSES’ time those who officiated in the Tabernacle wore a certain kind of garment: “And [Moses] put upon [Aaron] the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it unto him therewith” (Lev. 8:7; see Testament of Levi 8). Latter-day Saints similarly wear temple garments in connection with their priesthood functions.

ion over all things and directed to cultivate and beautify the garden (Gen. 2:15). However, in this pristine condition, Adam and Eve would have had no children (2 Ne. 2:22–25; Moses 5:11).

God placed the tree of knowledge of good and evil in the midst of the garden and gave Adam and Eve their AGENCY whether to partake of its fruit (Moses 7:32). Unless they ate, they would remain forever in the garden, limited in their ability to progress and without posterity. However, while partaking would bring opportunity to bear children and to learn good from evil by experience, including sorrow, pain, and death, they would be exiled temporarily from the presence of God. The decision of Eve and Adam to transgress a commandment of God and partake of the fruit of the tree brought mortality and death to them and to their posterity; for it made possible the human family upon the earth (2 Ne. 2:25). The FALL OF ADAM also made the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST necessary.

Neither biblical records nor secular history and archaeological research identify the dimensions or the location of the garden in terms of the present-day surface of the earth. Latter-day revelation specifies that as a mortal, Adam lived at ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN in what is now Daviess County, Missouri (D&C 107:53–56; 116:1; 117:8). Several early LDS leaders, among them Brigham YOUNG and Heber C. KIMBALL, stated that the Prophet Joseph SMITH taught them that the Garden of Eden was located in what is now Jackson County, Missouri (JD 10:235; cf. 11:336–7; DS 3:74).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cowley, Matthias F. Wilford Woodruff, p. 481. Salt Lake City, 1964.

GRAHAM W. DOXEY

---

GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE

See: Gethsemane

---

GARMENTS

The word “garment” has distinctive meanings to Latter-day Saints. The white undergarment worn by those members who have received the ORDINANCE of the temple ENDOWMENT is a ceremonial one. All adults who enter the temple are required to wear it. In LDS TEMPLES, men and women who receive priesthood ordinances wear this undergarment and other priestly robes. The garment is worn at all times, but the robes are worn only in the temple. Having made COVENANTS of righteousness, the members wear the garment under their regular clothing for the rest of their lives, day and night, partially to remind them of the sacred covenants they have made with God.

The white garment symbolizes purity and helps assure modesty, respect for the attributes of God, and, to the degree it is honored, a token of what PAUL regarded as taking upon one the whole armor of God (Eph. 6:13; cf. D&C 27:15). It is an outward expression of an inward covenant, and symbolizes Christlike attributes in one’s mission in life. Garments bear several simple marks of orientation toward the gospel principles of OBEDIENCE, TRUTH, life, and DISCIPLESHIP in Christ.

An agency of the Church manufactures these garments in contemporary, comfortable, and lightweight fabrics. They are available for purchase through Church DISTRIBUTION CENTERS.

SCRIPTURE, as well as legends from many lands and cultures, points toward the significance of sacred clothing. A biblical tradition teaches that ADAM and EVE, prior to their expulsion from Eden, wore sacred clothing. “Unto Adam also and to his wife did the Lord God make coats of skins, and clothed them” (Gen. 3:21). These were given in a context of REPENTANCE and forgiveness, and of offering SACRIFICE and making covenants.

In antiquity, priestly vestments were part of widespread tradition. The Targums (Aramaic paraphrases of the Old Testament) teach that these garments were “precious garments” or “glorious garments” or “garments of honor.” Rabbi Eleazer called them “coats of glory.” A rabbinic source asks: “And what were those garments?” The answer is, “The vestments of the High Priesthood, with which the Almighty clothed them because Adam was the world’s first-born” (Kasher, Encyclopedia of Biblical Interpretation, Vol. I, p. 137). In MOSES’ time those who officiated in the Tabernacle wore a certain kind of garment: “And [Moses] put upon [Aaron] the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it unto him therewith” (Lev. 8:7; see Testament of Levi 8). Latter-day Saints similarly wear temple garments in connection with their priesthood functions.

The clergy and many of the committed in almost all major faiths wear special clothing. For Latter-day Saints, among whom there is no professional ministry, men and women from all walks of life share in the CALLINGS, responsibilities, and blessings of the priesthood. Their sacred clothing, representing covenants with God, is worn under rather than outside their street clothes.

In a Messianic passage Isaiah declared: "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness" (Isa. 61:10). In the current dispensation, the principle has been reaffirmed in prophetic idiom: "Zion must increase in beauty, . . . and put on her beautiful garments" (D&C 82:14). Latter-day Saints believe that all such clothing is symbolic of the submission, sanctification, and spotless purity of those who desire to serve God and Christ and ultimately regain their eternal presence (D&C 61:34; 135:5).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Nibley, Hugh W. Sacred Vestments, 38 pages. Provo, Utah, 1984.
- Packer, Boyd K. The Holy Temple. Salt Lake City, 1980.

EVELYN T. MARSHALL

GATES, SUSA YOUNG

Susa (Susan, Susannah) Gates was born on March 18, 1856, in Salt Lake City. A writer, publisher, advocate for women's achievements, educator, missionary, genealogist, temple worker, wife, and mother of thirteen children, she was fond of saying, "Keep busy in the face of discouragement" (Person, p. 208).

The second daughter of Brigham Young's twenty-second wife, Lucy Bigelow Young, Susa Young has been called "the most versatile and prolific LDS writer ever to take up the pen in defense of her religion" (Cracroft, p. 73). Following private education that included music and ballet, she entered the University of Deseret at age thirteen. The next year she became co-editor of the College Lantern, possibly the first western college newspaper.

In 1872, at age sixteen, she married Dr. Alma Bailey Dunford; they had two children, Leah Eudora Dunford and Alma Bailey Dunford. The marriage ended in divorce in 1877. The next year, Susa Young Gates (1856–1933), daughter of Brigham Young, was a leader, editor, trustee of Brigham Young University, active in the local and national women's organizations, and the mother of ten sons and three daughters. Courtesy Utah State Historical Society.

Susa entered BRIGHAM YOUNG ACADEMY in Provo and, while a student, founded the department of music and conducted a choir. During a trip to the Sandwich Islands (Hawaii), she renewed her acquaintance with Jacob F. Gates, whom she married on January 5, 1880. The success of their marriage has been attributed to their mutual respect for, and support of, one another's work. Only four of the eleven children born to this marriage survived to adulthood: Emma Lucy Gates Bowen, Brigham Cecil Gates, Harvey Harris (Hal) Gates, and Franklin Young Gates.

During the 1880s and 1890s, Susa Gates focused her energy on childbearing and child-rearing, missionary work, education, writing, and women's concerns. After completing a Church mission with her husband to the Sandwich Islands in 1889, she founded the Young Woman's Journal.

The clergy and many of the committed in almost all major faiths wear special clothing. For Latter-day Saints, among whom there is no professional ministry, men and women from all walks of life share in the CALLINGS, responsibilities, and blessings of the priesthood. Their sacred clothing, representing covenants with God, is worn under rather than outside their street clothes.

In a Messianic passage Isaiah declared: "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness" (Isa. 61:10). In the current dispensation, the principle has been reaffirmed in prophetic idiom: "Zion must increase in beauty, . . . and put on her beautiful garments" (D&C 82:14). Latter-day Saints believe that all such clothing is symbolic of the submission, sanctification, and spotless purity of those who desire to serve God and Christ and ultimately regain their eternal presence (D&C 61:34; 135:5).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Nibley, Hugh W. Sacred Vestments, 38 pages. Provo, Utah, 1984.
Packer, Boyd K. The Holy Temple. Salt Lake City, 1980.

EVELYN T. MARSHALL

GATES, SUSA YOUNG

Susa (Susan, Susannah) Gates was born on March 18, 1856, in Salt Lake City. A writer, publisher, advocate for women's achievements, educator, missionary, genealogist, temple worker, wife, and mother of thirteen children, she was fond of saying, "Keep busy in the face of discouragement" (Person, p. 208).

The second daughter of Brigham Young's twenty-second wife, Lucy Bigelow Young, Susa Young has been called "the most versatile and prolific LDS writer ever to take up the pen in defense of her religion" (Cracroft, p. 73). Following private education that included music and ballet, she entered the University of Deseret at age thirteen. The next year she became co-editor of the College Lantern, possibly the first western college newspaper.

In 1872, at age sixteen, she married Dr. Alma Bailey Dunford; they had two children, Leah Eudora Dunford and Alma Bailey Dunford. The marriage ended in divorce in 1877. The next year, Susa Young Gates (1856–1933), daughter of Brigham Young, was a leader, editor, trustee of Brigham Young University, active in the local and national women's organizations, and the mother of ten sons and three daughters. Courtesy Utah State Historical Society.

Susa entered BRIGHAM YOUNG ACADEMY in Provo and, while a student, founded the department of music and conducted a choir. During a trip to the Sandwich Islands (Hawaii), she renewed her acquaintance with Jacob F. Gates, whom she married on January 5, 1880. The success of their marriage has been attributed to their mutual respect for, and support of, one another's work. Only four of the eleven children born to this marriage survived to adulthood: Emma Lucy Gates Bowen, Brigham Cecil Gates, Harvey Harris (Hal) Gates, and Franklin Young Gates.

During the 1880s and 1890s, Susa Gates focused her energy on childbearing and child-rearing, missionary work, education, writing, and women's concerns. After completing a Church mission with her husband to the Sandwich Islands in 1889, she founded the Young Woman's Journal.

It was adopted as the official magazine for the Young Ladies Mutual Improvement Association (see YOUNG WOMEN) in 1897. She founded the Utah Woman's Press Club, became press chairman of the National Council of Women, and founded the RELIEF SOCIETY MAGAZINE, which she edited until 1922. She wrote biographies of Lydia Knight and of her father, Brigham Young, novels including John Stevens' Courtship and The Prince of Ur, a pamphlet entitled the "Teachings of Brigham Young," and a history of women in the Church, on which she was still working at the time of her death.

Concern for women's achievements was a prominent force in Susa Gates's life. During the 1890s, while she was most occupied with raising her own children, she became a charter member of the National Household Economic Association and was a representative to women's congresses in Denver, Washington, D.C., Toronto, and London, where she was invited to speak on the topic "Equal Moral Standards for Men and Women" and where she joined other women of the International Council, including Susan B. Anthony, for tea with Queen Victoria.

At the turn of the century, Susa suffered a nervous and physical breakdown. Ill for three years, she was forced to terminate a mission that she and her husband had begun in 1902. A priesthood blessing that promised her she would live to do temple work marked the beginning of her recovery. She underwent a year of intense spiritual introspection and later wrote of that period, "I disciplined my taste, my desires and my impulses—severely disciplining my appetite, my tongue, my acts . . . and how I prayed!" (Person, p. 212). While maintaining her commitments to family and women's advancement, she focused her energy on genealogy and temple work.

In 1906, Susa Young Gates organized genealogical departments in two newspapers, the Inter Mountain Republican and the Deseret News, and wrote columns for both papers over the next ten years. She produced instructional manuals for genealogists, devised a systematic index of names for the Church, and published the Surname Book and Racial History. In 1915, she introduced genealogical class work at the International Genealogy Conference in San Francisco and became head of the Research Department and Library of the Genealogical Society of Utah in 1923. She personally cataloged more than 16,000 names of the Young family. She spent much time in the last years of her life doing ordinance work in the Salt Lake Temple with her husband. She died on May 27, 1933.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. "Blessed Damozels: Women in Mormon History." Dialogue 6 (Summer 1971):22–31.
- Cracroft, R. Paul. "Susa Young Gates: Her Life and Literary Work." Master's thesis, University of Utah, 1951.
- Person, Carolyn W. D. "Susa Young Gates." In Mormon Sisters: Women in Early Utah, ed. Claudia L. Bushman, pp. 198–223. Cambridge, Mass., 1976.

LOUISE PLUMMER

---

GATHERING

For Latter-day Saints, the gathering of ISRAEL involves bringing together the heirs of the covenant to designated places where they can enjoy the blessings of temples (see ABRAHAMIC COVENANT; COVENANT ISRAEL; PROMISED LAND). Latter-day Saints believe in "the literal gathering of Israel" and hold that, along with a vital future role for the Old World Jerusalem, "Zion (the New Jerusalem) will be built upon the American continent" (A of F 10). Church members still look for an eventual temple and permanent headquarters to be built in ZION, a NEW JERUSALEM in Missouri.

Early Latter-day Saints first encountered the concept of a New Jerusalem separate from the Old World Jerusalem in Book of Mormon prophecies that the land of America was to be "the place of the New Jerusalem" (3 Ne. 20:22; Ether 13:3). More information came in September 1830, soon after the Church was organized, when a revelation mentioned building a New Jerusalem near the Missouri River at a location soon to be revealed (D&C 28:9). Another revelation that same month enjoined the Saints to "bring to pass the gathering of [the Lord's] elect," suggesting both the work of missionaries and the physical gathering of the faithful to a designated location. It also stressed that the Saints should be "gathered in unto one place" (D&C 29:7–8).

In NAUVOO, Joseph SMITH taught that "in any age of the world" the object of gathering the people of God was the same—"to build unto the Lord an house whereby he could reveal unto his people the ordinances" of his temple (WJS, p. 212). The gathering was necessary to build a temple, and a temple was a prerequisite for the establishment of

It was adopted as the official magazine for the Young Ladies Mutual Improvement Association (see YOUNG WOMEN) in 1897. She founded the Utah Woman's Press Club, became press chairman of the National Council of Women, and founded the RELIEF SOCIETY MAGAZINE, which she edited until 1922. She wrote biographies of Lydia Knight and of her father, Brigham Young, novels including John Stevens' Courtship and The Prince of Ur, a pamphlet entitled the "Teachings of Brigham Young," and a history of women in the Church, on which she was still working at the time of her death.

Concern for women's achievements was a prominent force in Susa Gates's life. During the 1890s, while she was most occupied with raising her own children, she became a charter member of the National Household Economic Association and was a representative to women's congresses in Denver, Washington, D.C., Toronto, and London, where she was invited to speak on the topic "Equal Moral Standards for Men and Women" and where she joined other women of the International Council, including Susan B. Anthony, for tea with Queen Victoria.

At the turn of the century, Susa suffered a nervous and physical breakdown. Ill for three years, she was forced to terminate a mission that she and her husband had begun in 1902. A priesthood blessing that promised her she would live to do temple work marked the beginning of her recovery. She underwent a year of intense spiritual introspection and later wrote of that period, "I disciplined my taste, my desires and my impulses—severely disciplining my appetite, my tongue, my acts . . . and how I prayed!" (Person, p. 212). While maintaining her commitments to family and women's advancement, she focused her energy on genealogy and temple work.

In 1906, Susa Young Gates organized genealogical departments in two newspapers, the Inter Mountain Republican and the Deseret News, and wrote columns for both papers over the next ten years. She produced instructional manuals for genealogists, devised a systematic index of names for the Church, and published the Surname Book and Racial History. In 1915, she introduced genealogical class work at the International Genealogy Conference in San Francisco and became head of the Research Department and Library of the Genealogical Society of Utah in 1923. She personally cataloged more than 16,000 names of the Young family. She spent much time in the last years of her life doing ordinance work in the Salt Lake Temple with her husband. She died on May 27, 1933.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. "Blessed Damozels: Women in Mormon History." Dialogue 6 (Summer 1971):22–31.
- Cracroft, R. Paul. "Susa Young Gates: Her Life and Literary Work." Master's thesis, University of Utah, 1951.
- Person, Carolyn W. D. "Susa Young Gates." In Mormon Sisters: Women in Early Utah, ed. Claudia L. Bushman, pp. 198–223. Cambridge, Mass., 1976.

LOUISE PLUMMER

---

GATHERING

For Latter-day Saints, the gathering of ISRAEL involves bringing together the heirs of the covenant to designated places where they can enjoy the blessings of temples (see ABRAHAMIC COVENANT; COVENANT ISRAEL; PROMISED LAND). Latter-day Saints believe in "the literal gathering of Israel" and hold that, along with a vital future role for the Old World Jerusalem, "Zion (the New Jerusalem) will be built upon the American continent" (A of F 10). Church members still look for an eventual temple and permanent headquarters to be built in ZION, a NEW JERUSALEM in Missouri.

Early Latter-day Saints first encountered the concept of a New Jerusalem separate from the Old World Jerusalem in Book of Mormon prophecies that the land of America was to be "the place of the New Jerusalem" (3 Ne. 20:22; Ether 13:3). More information came in September 1830, soon after the Church was organized, when a revelation mentioned building a New Jerusalem near the Missouri River at a location soon to be revealed (D&C 28:9). Another revelation that same month enjoined the Saints to "bring to pass the gathering of [the Lord's] elect," suggesting both the work of missionaries and the physical gathering of the faithful to a designated location. It also stressed that the Saints should be "gathered in unto one place" (D&C 29:7–8).

In NAUVOO, Joseph SMITH taught that "in any age of the world" the object of gathering the people of God was the same—"to build unto the Lord an house whereby he could reveal unto his people the ordinances" of his temple (WJS, p. 212). The gathering was necessary to build a temple, and a temple was a prerequisite for the establishment of Zion. Consequently, at each of the Saints' headquarters gathering places, a temple site was designated, and in KIRTLAND, Nauvoo, and Salt Lake City, temples were constructed. Gathering also provided a refuge, a place for mutual protection and spiritual reinforcement and instruction. It strengthened LDS communities and brought economic and political benefits as well (see CITY PLANNING).

The Kirtland area in northeastern Ohio was the first gathering place. But when converts from New York arrived there in May 1831, they learned that Ohio would be a gathering place only "for a little season" (D&C 51:16). Some left that same year for Missouri once it was revealed that Zion was to be built in Jackson County, Missouri, a land "appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints" (D&C 57:1-3; see also MISSOURI: LDS COMMUNITIES IN JACKSON AND CLAY COUNTIES).

For the following seven years the Church had two gathering places—Ohio, the site of the Saints' first temple, and Missouri, the site of the City of Zion. However, in 1838, less than two years after the dedication of the KIRTLAND TEMPLE, opposition drove the Ohio faithful from that temple-city. The persecution in Missouri that earlier had forced the Saints from Jackson County now forced them from their new headquarters in Far West, Missouri, before temples could be built (see MISSOURI CONFLICT). Between 1839 and 1846, Latter-day Saints gathered by the thousands at Nauvoo, Illinois, where they again completed a temple before leaving, in the face of violence, for a gathering place in the Rocky Mountains (see SALT LAKE VALLEY; WESTWARD MIGRATION).

Although the major current purposes for gathering the faithful into a single place have been accomplished, belief in the necessity of gathering the elect continues. Members in all parts of the world are now encouraged to remain in their own communities and "build Zion" in their own wards and stakes (see IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION). Temples have now been built in many countries, and missionaries further the establishment of Zion by gathering "the pure in heart" (D&C 97:21) to the stakes of Zion throughout the world.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cook, Lyndon, and Andrew Ehat, eds. Words of Joseph Smith, pp. 209-216. Provo, Utah, 1980.

RONALD D. DENNIS

GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH

The Genealogical Society of Utah, organized in 1894, became The Genealogical Society of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1944. In 1976 it became The Genealogical Department, and in 1987 the name was changed to The Family History Department. Each name change brought renewed emphasis and expanded resources to further the search for ancestors. The name Genealogical Society still continues as the microfilm section of the Family History Department of the Church.

The central purpose of the organization is expressed in a statement by Elder Joseph Fielding SMITH: "Salvation for the dead is the system whereunder those who would have accepted the gospel in this life, had they been permitted to hear it, will have the chance to accept it in the spirit world, and will then be entitled to all the blessings which passed them by in mortality" (DS 2:100-196). Provisions have been made, therefore, for the living to provide, vicariously, ordinances of salvation for their deceased family forebears and friends. This cannot be done without information about the dead.

In April 1894, President Wilford WOODRUFF said, "We want the Latter-day Saints from this time to trace their genealogies as far as they can, and to be sealed to their fathers and mothers . . . and run this chain as far as you can get it" (Durham, p. 157). On November 13, 1894, the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church authorized the organization of the Genealogical Society of Utah as an aid to genealogical research, and appointed Franklin D. Richards president. Of this beginning Archibald F. Bennett, a later executive secretary, gave the following historical summary: "It was to be benevolent, educational, and religious in purpose—benevolent in gathering together into a library books that would help the people trace their ancestry; educational in teaching the people how to trace their ancestry . . . ; religious in that they would do all in their power to encourage the people to perform in the temples all the necessary ordinances" (Genealogical Society of Utah, minutes, Nov. 13, 1894, Genealogical Department of the Church).

Some of the widely known facilities and resources that have been established over the past century to facilitate these purposes are: (1) the

Zion. Consequently, at each of the Saints' headquarters gathering places, a temple site was designated, and in KIRTLAND, Nauvoo, and Salt Lake City, temples were constructed. Gathering also provided a refuge, a place for mutual protection and spiritual reinforcement and instruction. It strengthened LDS communities and brought economic and political benefits as well (see CITY PLANNING).

The Kirtland area in northeastern Ohio was the first gathering place. But when converts from New York arrived there in May 1831, they learned that Ohio would be a gathering place only "for a little season" (D&C 51:16). Some left that same year for Missouri once it was revealed that Zion was to be built in Jackson County, Missouri, a land "appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints" (D&C 57:1-3; see also MISSOURI: LDS COMMUNITIES IN JACKSON AND CLAY COUNTIES).

For the following seven years the Church had two gathering places—Ohio, the site of the Saints' first temple, and Missouri, the site of the City of Zion. However, in 1838, less than two years after the dedication of the KIRTLAND TEMPLE, opposition drove the Ohio faithful from that temple-city. The persecution in Missouri that earlier had forced the Saints from Jackson County now forced them from their new headquarters in Far West, Missouri, before temples could be built (see MISSOURI CONFLICT). Between 1839 and 1846, Latter-day Saints gathered by the thousands at Nauvoo, Illinois, where they again completed a temple before leaving, in the face of violence, for a gathering place in the Rocky Mountains (see SALT LAKE VALLEY; WESTWARD MIGRATION).

Although the major current purposes for gathering the faithful into a single place have been accomplished, belief in the necessity of gathering the elect continues. Members in all parts of the world are now encouraged to remain in their own communities and "build Zion" in their own wards and stakes (see IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION). Temples have now been built in many countries, and missionaries further the establishment of Zion by gathering "the pure in heart" (D&C 97:21) to the stakes of Zion throughout the world.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cook, Lyndon, and Andrew Ehat, eds. Words of Joseph Smith, pp. 209-216. Provo, Utah, 1980.

RONALD D. DENNIS

GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH

The Genealogical Society of Utah, organized in 1894, became The Genealogical Society of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1944. In 1976 it became The Genealogical Department, and in 1987 the name was changed to The Family History Department. Each name change brought renewed emphasis and expanded resources to further the search for ancestors. The name Genealogical Society still continues as the microfilm section of the Family History Department of the Church.

The central purpose of the organization is expressed in a statement by Elder Joseph Fielding SMITH: "Salvation for the dead is the system whereunder those who would have accepted the gospel in this life, had they been permitted to hear it, will have the chance to accept it in the spirit world, and will then be entitled to all the blessings which passed them by in mortality" (DS 2:100-196). Provisions have been made, therefore, for the living to provide, vicariously, ordinances of salvation for their deceased family forebears and friends. This cannot be done without information about the dead.

In April 1894, President Wilford WOODRUFF said, "We want the Latter-day Saints from this time to trace their genealogies as far as they can, and to be sealed to their fathers and mothers . . . and run this chain as far as you can get it" (Durham, p. 157). On November 13, 1894, the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church authorized the organization of the Genealogical Society of Utah as an aid to genealogical research, and appointed Franklin D. Richards president. Of this beginning Archibald F. Bennett, a later executive secretary, gave the following historical summary: "It was to be benevolent, educational, and religious in purpose—benevolent in gathering together into a library books that would help the people trace their ancestry; educational in teaching the people how to trace their ancestry . . . ; religious in that they would do all in their power to encourage the people to perform in the temples all the necessary ordinances" (Genealogical Society of Utah, minutes, Nov. 13, 1894, Genealogical Department of the Church).

Some of the widely known facilities and resources that have been established over the past century to facilitate these purposes are: (1) the

FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY at Salt Lake City; (2) the extensive collection of microfilmed and microfiche records of family history; and (3) the INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI).

1. The Family History Library is the largest of its kind in the world. Patrons come from all over the globe to search for information about past generations. More than 1,000 branches of this library have been established in forty-three countries to make these records available to all who are interested.

2. The microfilm and microfiche collection is continually expanding. From 1938 to the present, irreplaceable records have been preserved on microfilms. Some 1.5 million rolls of microfilm and approximately 200,000 microfiche containing the names of an estimated 1.5 billion deceased people are now available to researchers.

3. The IGI includes names and vital statistics of millions of people who lived between the early 1500s and 1875 in some ninety countries, alphabetized by surname and arranged geographically. Millions of names are added each year. This index is accessible on microfiche and is computerized.

These and other resources have aided millions of researchers in finding their "roots," and have made possible the performance of TEMPLE ORDINANCES for millions who lived and died without that opportunity.

The continued commitment to identify ancestors and provide temple ordinances for them which began in this dispensation with divine revelations to the Prophet Joseph SMITH, and was furthered by the organization of the Genealogical Society of Utah, and has enabled millions of genealogists throughout the world to develop a strong association between family history and The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Durham, C. Homer, ed. Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, p. 157. Salt Lake City, 1946.

GEORGE D. DURRANT

---

GENEALOGY

[Genealogy is a record of lineage showing the descent of a person or family from an ancestor or ancestors. Searching for and compiling genealogical information

are sacred responsibilities to Latter-day Saints. Therefore, extensive activity is conducted by the Church and by members to obtain and record vital statistical information, to compile family histories, and to strengthen family ties both on earth and in the hereafter. In LDS doctrine the family is of eternal significance. Thus, three major purposes of compiling genealogical records are to identify one's roots, to perform saving ordinances in a temple for persons who did not receive them in mortal life, and to seal individuals together for eternity as families.

Articles relating to this subject are Ancestral File; Baptism for the Dead; Book of Remembrance; Born in the Covenant; Elijah, Spirit of; Family; Family History; Family History Centers; Family History Library; Family Organizations; Family Registry; FamilySearch; Genealogical Society of Utah; Granite Mountain Record Vault; International Genealogical Index (IGI); Name Extraction Program; Personal Ancestral File; Salvation of the Dead; Sealing; Temple Ordinances; Temples; World Conferences on Records.]

---

GENERAL AUTHORITIES

General Authorities are men called to serve at the highest levels of leadership in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. As general PRIESTHOOD officers of the Church, they have Churchwide rather than local stewardship and may receive assignments anywhere in the world. In order of precedence, the General Authorities include the FIRST PRESIDENCY, QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, quorums of the SEVENTY, and PRESIDING BISHOPRIC (see ORGANIZATION). First Presidency members and the senior member of the Quorum of the Twelve are addressed as "President." The Twelve Apostles and members of the quorums of the Seventy are addressed as "Elder." Members of the Presiding Bishopric are addressed as "Bishop." As a group, they are often referred to as "the Brethren."

Like all who serve in the Church, these men are lay leaders and do not solicit their assignments. They are "called of God, by prophecy, and by the laying on of hands by those who are in authority" (A of F 5; see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP). They are called by a member of the First Presidency; subsequently, their names are presented to the Church MEMBERSHIP for a sustaining vote each year during general conference and in WARD and STAKE conferences.

Members of the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve are sustained as PROPHETS, SEERS,

FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY at Salt Lake City; (2) the extensive collection of microfilmed and microfiche records of family history; and (3) the INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI).

1. The Family History Library is the largest of its kind in the world. Patrons come from all over the globe to search for information about past generations. More than 1,000 branches of this library have been established in forty-three countries to make these records available to all who are interested.

2. The microfilm and microfiche collection is continually expanding. From 1938 to the present, irreplaceable records have been preserved on microfilms. Some 1.5 million rolls of microfilm and approximately 200,000 microfiche containing the names of an estimated 1.5 billion deceased people are now available to researchers.

3. The IGI includes names and vital statistics of millions of people who lived between the early 1500s and 1875 in some ninety countries, alphabetized by surname and arranged geographically. Millions of names are added each year. This index is accessible on microfiche and is computerized.

These and other resources have aided millions of researchers in finding their "roots," and have made possible the performance of TEMPLE ORDINANCES for millions who lived and died without that opportunity.

The continued commitment to identify ancestors and provide temple ordinances for them which began in this dispensation with divine revelations to the Prophet Joseph SMITH, and was furthered by the organization of the Genealogical Society of Utah, and has enabled millions of genealogists throughout the world to develop a strong association between family history and The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Durham, C. Homer, ed. Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, p. 157. Salt Lake City, 1946.

GEORGE D. DURRANT

---

GENEALOGY

[Genealogy is a record of lineage showing the descent of a person or family from an ancestor or ancestors. Searching for and compiling genealogical information

are sacred responsibilities to Latter-day Saints. Therefore, extensive activity is conducted by the Church and by members to obtain and record vital statistical information, to compile family histories, and to strengthen family ties both on earth and in the hereafter. In LDS doctrine the family is of eternal significance. Thus, three major purposes of compiling genealogical records are to identify one's roots, to perform saving ordinances in a temple for persons who did not receive them in mortal life, and to seal individuals together for eternity as families.

Articles relating to this subject are Ancestral File; Baptism for the Dead; Book of Remembrance; Born in the Covenant; Elijah, Spirit of; Family; Family History; Family History Centers; Family History Library; Family Organizations; Family Registry; FamilySearch; Genealogical Society of Utah; Granite Mountain Record Vault; International Genealogical Index (IGI); Name Extraction Program; Personal Ancestral File; Salvation of the Dead; Sealing; Temple Ordinances; Temples; World Conferences on Records.]

---

GENERAL AUTHORITIES

General Authorities are men called to serve at the highest levels of leadership in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. As general PRIESTHOOD officers of the Church, they have Churchwide rather than local stewardship and may receive assignments anywhere in the world. In order of precedence, the General Authorities include the FIRST PRESIDENCY, QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, quorums of the SEVENTY, and PRESIDING BISHOPRIC (see ORGANIZATION). First Presidency members and the senior member of the Quorum of the Twelve are addressed as "President." The Twelve Apostles and members of the quorums of the Seventy are addressed as "Elder." Members of the Presiding Bishopric are addressed as "Bishop." As a group, they are often referred to as "the Brethren."

Like all who serve in the Church, these men are lay leaders and do not solicit their assignments. They are "called of God, by prophecy, and by the laying on of hands by those who are in authority" (A of F 5; see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP). They are called by a member of the First Presidency; subsequently, their names are presented to the Church MEMBERSHIP for a sustaining vote each year during general conference and in WARD and STAKE conferences.

Members of the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve are sustained as PROPHETS, SEERS,

FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY at Salt Lake City; (2) the extensive collection of microfilmed and microfiche records of family history; and (3) the INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI).

1. The Family History Library is the largest of its kind in the world. Patrons come from all over the globe to search for information about past generations. More than 1,000 branches of this library have been established in forty-three countries to make these records available to all who are interested.

2. The microfilm and microfiche collection is continually expanding. From 1938 to the present, irreplaceable records have been preserved on microfilms. Some 1.5 million rolls of microfilm and approximately 200,000 microfiche containing the names of an estimated 1.5 billion deceased people are now available to researchers.

3. The IGI includes names and vital statistics of millions of people who lived between the early 1500s and 1875 in some ninety countries, alphabetized by surname and arranged geographically. Millions of names are added each year. This index is accessible on microfiche and is computerized.

These and other resources have aided millions of researchers in finding their "roots," and have made possible the performance of TEMPLE ORDINANCES for millions who lived and died without that opportunity.

The continued commitment to identify ancestors and provide temple ordinances for them which began in this dispensation with divine revelations to the Prophet Joseph SMITH, and was furthered by the organization of the Genealogical Society of Utah, and has enabled millions of genealogists throughout the world to develop a strong association between family history and The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Durham, C. Homer, ed. Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, p. 157. Salt Lake City, 1946.

GEORGE D. DURRANT

---

GENEALOGY

[Genealogy is a record of lineage showing the descent of a person or family from an ancestor or ancestors. Searching for and compiling genealogical information

are sacred responsibilities to Latter-day Saints. Therefore, extensive activity is conducted by the Church and by members to obtain and record vital statistical information, to compile family histories, and to strengthen family ties both on earth and in the hereafter. In LDS doctrine the family is of eternal significance. Thus, three major purposes of compiling genealogical records are to identify one's roots, to perform saving ordinances in a temple for persons who did not receive them in mortal life, and to seal individuals together for eternity as families.

Articles relating to this subject are Ancestral File; Baptism for the Dead; Book of Remembrance; Born in the Covenant; Elijah, Spirit of; Family; Family History; Family History Centers; Family History Library; Family Organizations; Family Registry; FamilySearch; Genealogical Society of Utah; Granite Mountain Record Vault; International Genealogical Index (IGI); Name Extraction Program; Personal Ancestral File; Salvation of the Dead; Sealing; Temple Ordinances; Temples; World Conferences on Records.]

---

GENERAL AUTHORITIES

General Authorities are men called to serve at the highest levels of leadership in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. As general PRIESTHOOD officers of the Church, they have Churchwide rather than local stewardship and may receive assignments anywhere in the world. In order of precedence, the General Authorities include the FIRST PRESIDENCY, QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, quorums of the SEVENTY, and PRESIDING BISHOPRIC (see ORGANIZATION). First Presidency members and the senior member of the Quorum of the Twelve are addressed as "President." The Twelve Apostles and members of the quorums of the Seventy are addressed as "Elder." Members of the Presiding Bishopric are addressed as "Bishop." As a group, they are often referred to as "the Brethren."

Like all who serve in the Church, these men are lay leaders and do not solicit their assignments. They are "called of God, by prophecy, and by the laying on of hands by those who are in authority" (A of F 5; see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP). They are called by a member of the First Presidency; subsequently, their names are presented to the Church MEMBERSHIP for a sustaining vote each year during general conference and in WARD and STAKE conferences.

Members of the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve are sustained as PROPHETS, SEERS,

AND REVELATORS. They are commissioned to be special witnesses of Jesus Christ and his Church, and together with the Seventy they are to bear witness of him and "to build up the church, and regulate all the affairs of the same in all nations" (D&C 107:21–26, 33–35).

As assigned, General Authorities may travel throughout the world to preach the gospel, train and instruct local leaders and members, preside at stake conferences, organize new stakes, call and set apart new STAKE PRESIDENCIES, and generally look after the interests of the Church. They may also be called upon to address the Church membership at General Conference.

In addition, General Authorities fulfill administrative responsibilities at Church headquarters, directly overseeing the Church's efforts in such areas as MISSIONARY work, Church history, FAMILY HISTORY (genealogy), TEMPLE WORSHIP, priesthood, FINANCES and RECORD KEEPING, curriculum, PUBLIC COMMUNICATIONS, and the BUILDING PROGRAM. Some serve on the Church Board of Education, overseeing the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM and sitting on boards of trustees for Church-owned colleges and BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY.

General Authorities, particularly members of the quorums of the Seventy, may be assigned to live away from Church headquarters for a time and serve in AREA PRESIDENCIES, presiding over regions and stakes in those areas. Occasionally some are called as MISSION PRESIDENTS or TEMPLE PRESIDENTS, although non-General Authorities most often serve in these positions.

Wives and children of General Authorities may be called to serve in regular Church assignments in their home wards and stakes. Wives of General Authorities who are serving in area presidencies may be called to assist with AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS such as the PRIMARY, YOUNG WOMEN, and RELIEF SOCIETY in the countries where their husbands are serving. General Authorities themselves are not called to serve in the local organizations.

The general presidencies and boards of the Church's auxiliary organizations are sustained as general officers of the Church, but they are not General Authorities. They are set apart for a time as general officers for their specific auxiliary organization.

Unlike local leaders, who maintain their normal vocations while serving in Church assignments, General Authorities set aside their careers to devote their full time to the ministry of their office. The living allowance given General Authorities rarely if ever equals the earnings they sacrifice to serve full-time in the Church.

First Presidency (1925–1931). Left to right: First counselor Anthony W. Ivins, President Heber J. Grant, and second counselor Charles W. Nibley.

Members of the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve serve for life. Other General Authorities serve either until limited by age or health or for temporary periods. They may be released or receive emeritus status. After their service they return to ward and stake responsibilities.

Calls from one group to another are possible. For example, any General Authority may be called to serve in the First Presidency or Quorum of the Twelve, although previous service as a General Authority is not a prerequisite for these positions. Men from many nations have been called to serve as General Authorities.

Life as a General Authority demands great sacrifices of time and energy. It requires heavy involvement in decision making and continual travel away from home and family. But the work is rewarding. "I have witnessed the miracles that come with faith," said President Gordon B. Hinckley when serving as Second Counselor in the First Presidency. "I have seen the evidences of true goodness and greatness in men and women living under a great variety of circumstances. I have observed in a very intimate and wonderful way the workings of the power of the Almighty among his children" (p. 7).

There is striking UNITY among the General Authorities, which is at least partly due to decision making by COMMON CONSENT. "The General Authorities are all individuals, each with his own personality,” said President Hinckley. “Each brings to his responsibilities a wide variety of experience and background. When matters come up for discussion in the leading councils of the Church, each is free to express his views. As one observes that interesting process at work, it is fascinating to witness the power of the Holy Spirit influence these men. Initial differences, never sharp but nonetheless perceptible, soften and meld into an expression of unity” (p. 6).

General Authorities hold general authority over the Church. Quorum of the Twelve Apostles (1921–1931): Seated (left to right): Rudger Clawson, Reed Smoot, George Albert Smith, George Franklin Richards, Orson F. Whitney, David O. McKay. Standing (left to right): Joseph Fielding Smith, James E. Talmage, Stephen L. Richards, Richard R. Lyman, Melvin J. Ballard, John A. Widtsoe.

Although they have general administrative authority and are entitled to INSPIRATION regarding the governing of Church affairs, General Authorities respect the right each member of the Church has to receive personal REVELATION. The Lord told Joseph SMITH that the gospel was restored so “that every man [and woman] might speak in the name of God” (D&C 1:20).

General Authorities are men who, through years of experience in Church service, have proven to be faithful, effective, and devoted leaders and servants. As witnesses of the Lord and as general officers of the Church, they are trusted, loved, and respected throughout the Church.

[See also Following the Brethren.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J., ed. The Presidents of the Church: Biographical Essays. Salt Lake City, 1986.
- Flake, Lawrence R. Mighty Men of Zion: General Authorities of the Last Dispensation. Salt Lake City, 1974.
- Hinckley, Gordon B. “He Slumbers Not, nor Sleeps.” Ensign 13 (May 1983):5–8.
- Presidents of the Church: “They That Move the Cause of Zion.”* Salt Lake City, 1979.
- Tanner, N. Eldon. “The Administration of the Church.” Ensign 9 (Nov. 1979):42–48.
- Updated information on newly called General Authorities is available in the Deseret News Church Almanac, published biennially.

MARVIN K. GARDNER

GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS

The General Handbook of Instructions is the official book of instruction for Church leaders, mainly STAKE PRESIDENTS and BISHOPS. Church leaders who receive the handbook include GENERAL AUTHORITIES, Church department heads, general auxiliary presidencies, temple presidents, and officers in stakes, wards, missions, districts, and branches. It is a handbook of Church policy and practices, not doctrine. The FIRST PRESIDENCY and QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES prepare the handbook to provide uniform procedures and methods for local leaders as they minister to the members and direct Church affairs in their areas throughout the world. Other Church handbooks, such as those for PRIESTHOOD and AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS, are based on the General Handbook of Instructions.

Handbooks have included such things as instruction on (1) Church administration and meetings; (2) calling members to Church positions and releasing them from such calls; (3) ordaining members to priesthood offices; (4) performing ORDINANCES and giving BLESSINGS; (5) doing sacred temple work, and family history; (6) responding to calls for missionary service; (7) keeping records, reports, and accounting for finances; (8) applying Church discipline; and (9) implementing Church policies on such matters as buildings and property, moral issues, and medical and health issues.

The first edition of the handbook was a fourteen-page booklet of shirt-pocket size published in 1899. It instructed stake and ward leaders in how to receive, process, and account for members' tithing, most of which was farm produce and livestock rather than money. The Church revised the handbook annually until 1910 and, thereafter, about every five years. The most significant and constant change that has prompted the revisions has been the growth of the Church from 271,681 members in 1899 to more than 7 million in 1990. Other factors that have prompted revisions include the shift in North American members from an agrarian to an urban society, the immigration of converts, the Depression of the 1930s, the wars in the twentieth century, the increase of sensitive social issues, and the transitions from a membership centered in Utah to a membership in North America, and ultimately, to an international Church. Between revisions, letters from the First Presidency to local leaders and items in the priesthood Bulletin update instructions in the handbook.

The handbook is written in terms of principles, as far as possible, rather than explicit directions. Local leaders apply the principles in their stakes, wards, and branches as they are directed by spiritual inspiration.

The General Handbook of Instructions is pre-eminent among Church publications in both its preparation and its use as an authoritative guide for local Church leaders.

FRANK O. MAY, JR.

GENTILES

[In the Bible, the Hebrew and Greek words translated into English as "Gentile" signified other peoples; i.e., "not Israelite" and later "not Jewish." For Latter-day Saints, "Gentile" generally means "not Latter-day Saint," although the meaning also extends to include "not Jewish" and "not Lamanite." These latter senses are rooted partly in scripture, where the distinction between Gentiles and Israelites or Jews is firmly maintained, and partly in the language adopted by early leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In the LDS scriptural view, Gentiles play an important role in the restoration of the gospel in the latter days (1 Ne. 13:38–39; 22:6–11; 3 Ne. 21:1–6) and in the latter-day work of gathering Israel (1 Ne. 22:12; 3 Ne. 21:6, 22–29). For discussions related to this topic, see Abrahamic Covenant; Gentiles, Fulness of; Israel: Gathering of Israel; and Law of Adoption.]

GENTILES, FULNESS OF

The "fulness of the Gentiles" is a term for a doctrine taught in the New Testament, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. It refers to a process whereby, after Jesus' ministry among his Jewish countrymen, the gospel was preached to Gentiles in the MERIDIAN OF TIME. Jesus told his Jewish listeners that the kingdom of God would be taken from them "and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. 21:43). He also said that many Gentiles would sit down in the kingdom of heaven with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Matt. 8:5–12). Paul taught that in his day the Gentiles would be given an opportunity to receive the gospel, be adopted into the house of Israel, and receive the blessings of the covenant

GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS

The General Handbook of Instructions is the official book of instruction for Church leaders, mainly STAKE PRESIDENTS and BISHOPS. Church leaders who receive the handbook include GENERAL AUTHORITIES, Church department heads, general auxiliary presidencies, temple presidents, and officers in stakes, wards, missions, districts, and branches. It is a handbook of Church policy and practices, not doctrine. The FIRST PRESIDENCY and QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES prepare the handbook to provide uniform procedures and methods for local leaders as they minister to the members and direct Church affairs in their areas throughout the world. Other Church handbooks, such as those for PRIESTHOOD and AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS, are based on the General Handbook of Instructions.

Handbooks have included such things as instruction on (1) Church administration and meetings; (2) calling members to Church positions and releasing them from such calls; (3) ordaining members to priesthood offices; (4) performing ORDINANCES and giving BLESSINGS; (5) doing sacred temple work, and family history; (6) responding to calls for missionary service; (7) keeping records, reports, and accounting for finances; (8) applying Church discipline; and (9) implementing Church policies on such matters as buildings and property, moral issues, and medical and health issues.

The first edition of the handbook was a fourteen-page booklet of shirt-pocket size published in 1899. It instructed stake and ward leaders in how to receive, process, and account for members' tithing, most of which was farm produce and livestock rather than money. The Church revised the handbook annually until 1910 and, thereafter, about every five years. The most significant and constant change that has prompted the revisions has been the growth of the Church from 271,681 members in 1899 to more than 7 million in 1990. Other factors that have prompted revisions include the shift in North American members from an agrarian to an urban society, the immigration of converts, the Depression of the 1930s, the wars in the twentieth century, the increase of sensitive social issues, and the transitions from a membership centered in Utah to a membership in North America, and ultimately, to an international Church. Between revisions, letters from the First Presidency to local leaders and items in the priesthood Bulletin update instructions in the handbook.

The handbook is written in terms of principles, as far as possible, rather than explicit directions. Local leaders apply the principles in their stakes, wards, and branches as they are directed by spiritual inspiration.

The General Handbook of Instructions is pre-eminent among Church publications in both its preparation and its use as an authoritative guide for local Church leaders.

FRANK O. MAY, JR.

GENTILES

[In the Bible, the Hebrew and Greek words translated into English as "Gentile" signified other peoples; i.e., "not Israelite" and later "not Jewish." For Latter-day Saints, "Gentile" generally means "not Latter-day Saint," although the meaning also extends to include "not Jewish" and "not Lamanite." These latter senses are rooted partly in scripture, where the distinction between Gentiles and Israelites or Jews is firmly maintained, and partly in the language adopted by early leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In the LDS scriptural view, Gentiles play an important role in the restoration of the gospel in the latter days (1 Ne. 13:38–39; 22:6–11; 3 Ne. 21:1–6) and in the latter-day work of gathering Israel (1 Ne. 22:12; 3 Ne. 21:6, 22–29). For discussions related to this topic, see Abrahamic Covenant; Gentiles, Fulness of; Israel: Gathering of Israel; and Law of Adoption.]

GENTILES, FULNESS OF

The "fulness of the Gentiles" is a term for a doctrine taught in the New Testament, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. It refers to a process whereby, after Jesus' ministry among his Jewish countrymen, the gospel was preached to Gentiles in the MERIDIAN OF TIME. Jesus told his Jewish listeners that the kingdom of God would be taken from them "and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. 21:43). He also said that many Gentiles would sit down in the kingdom of heaven with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Matt. 8:5–12). Paul taught that in his day the Gentiles would be given an opportunity to receive the gospel, be adopted into the house of Israel, and receive the blessings of the covenant

GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS

The General Handbook of Instructions is the official book of instruction for Church leaders, mainly STAKE PRESIDENTS and BISHOPS. Church leaders who receive the handbook include GENERAL AUTHORITIES, Church department heads, general auxiliary presidencies, temple presidents, and officers in stakes, wards, missions, districts, and branches. It is a handbook of Church policy and practices, not doctrine. The FIRST PRESIDENCY and QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES prepare the handbook to provide uniform procedures and methods for local leaders as they minister to the members and direct Church affairs in their areas throughout the world. Other Church handbooks, such as those for PRIESTHOOD and AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS, are based on the General Handbook of Instructions.

Handbooks have included such things as instruction on (1) Church administration and meetings; (2) calling members to Church positions and releasing them from such calls; (3) ordaining members to priesthood offices; (4) performing ORDINANCES and giving BLESSINGS; (5) doing sacred temple work, and family history; (6) responding to calls for missionary service; (7) keeping records, reports, and accounting for finances; (8) applying Church discipline; and (9) implementing Church policies on such matters as buildings and property, moral issues, and medical and health issues.

The first edition of the handbook was a fourteen-page booklet of shirt-pocket size published in 1899. It instructed stake and ward leaders in how to receive, process, and account for members' tithing, most of which was farm produce and livestock rather than money. The Church revised the handbook annually until 1910 and, thereafter, about every five years. The most significant and constant change that has prompted the revisions has been the growth of the Church from 271,681 members in 1899 to more than 7 million in 1990. Other factors that have prompted revisions include the shift in North American members from an agrarian to an urban society, the immigration of converts, the Depression of the 1930s, the wars in the twentieth century, the increase of sensitive social issues, and the transitions from a membership centered in Utah to a membership in North America, and ultimately, to an international Church. Between revisions, letters from the First Presidency to local leaders and items in the priesthood Bulletin update instructions in the handbook.

The handbook is written in terms of principles, as far as possible, rather than explicit directions. Local leaders apply the principles in their stakes, wards, and branches as they are directed by spiritual inspiration.

The General Handbook of Instructions is pre-eminent among Church publications in both its preparation and its use as an authoritative guide for local Church leaders.

FRANK O. MAY, JR.

GENTILES

[In the Bible, the Hebrew and Greek words translated into English as "Gentile" signified other peoples; i.e., "not Israelite" and later "not Jewish." For Latter-day Saints, "Gentile" generally means "not Latter-day Saint," although the meaning also extends to include "not Jewish" and "not Lamanite." These latter senses are rooted partly in scripture, where the distinction between Gentiles and Israelites or Jews is firmly maintained, and partly in the language adopted by early leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In the LDS scriptural view, Gentiles play an important role in the restoration of the gospel in the latter days (1 Ne. 13:38–39; 22:6–11; 3 Ne. 21:1–6) and in the latter-day work of gathering Israel (1 Ne. 22:12; 3 Ne. 21:6, 22–29). For discussions related to this topic, see Abrahamic Covenant; Gentiles, Fulness of; Israel: Gathering of Israel; and Law of Adoption.]

GENTILES, FULNESS OF

The "fulness of the Gentiles" is a term for a doctrine taught in the New Testament, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. It refers to a process whereby, after Jesus' ministry among his Jewish countrymen, the gospel was preached to Gentiles in the MERIDIAN OF TIME. Jesus told his Jewish listeners that the kingdom of God would be taken from them "and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. 21:43). He also said that many Gentiles would sit down in the kingdom of heaven with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Matt. 8:5–12). Paul taught that in his day the Gentiles would be given an opportunity to receive the gospel, be adopted into the house of Israel, and receive the blessings of the covenant people (Rom. 9–11), concluding that “blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in” (Rom. 11:25).

Jesus prophesied the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion of the people of Judah among all nations “until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled” (Luke 21:24; JST Luke 21:24, 32). As latter-day revelation makes clear, “the times” of the Gentiles refers to the time when the fulness of the gospel will come among them (D&C 45:24–28). Latter-day revelation further teaches that in the last days the restored gospel will “go forth unto the ends of the earth, unto the Gentiles first, and then, behold, and lo, they shall turn unto the Jews” (D&C 90:9–11), so “that all who will hear may hear” (D&C 1:11) and “all the families of the earth be blessed” (Abr. 2:11). When the Gentiles reject the gospel, “the times of the Gentiles [will] be fulfilled” (D&C 45:29–30).

In 1823 the angel Moroni told Joseph Smith “that the fulness of the Gentiles was soon to come in” (JS—H 1:41). During the ministry of the resurrected Jesus among Book of Mormon peoples, he foretold the coming forth of the restored gospel among the Gentiles and warned that when they reject the fulness of his gospel and are lifted up in pride and all manner of wickedness, he will take his gospel from among them (3 Ne. 16:7–10). After they reject the gospel, it will be offered to the house of Israel (3 Ne. 16:11–12). Thus, Gentiles who have accepted the gospel will be numbered with Israel and escape the judgments that are to come upon the wicked (3 Ne. 16:13–14). In the dispensation of the fulness of times, the Gentiles will have been first to receive the gospel, and the first (Israel) will be the last (cf. 1 Ne. 13:42; MD, pp. 721–22).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nyman, Monte S. An Ensign to All People, pp. 49–56. Salt Lake City, 1987.

MONTE S. NYMAN

---

GETHSEMANE

The name Gethsemane (derived from Hebrew “oil press”) is mentioned twice in the Bible, both in the New Testament (Matt. 26:36; Mark 14:32); in each case, it is called a “place” (Greek chōrion, “piece of land”) to which Jesus Christ and his apostles retired after their last supper together. The fourth gospel calls the area “a garden” (John 18:1). For Latter-day Saints, Gethsemane was the scene of Jesus’ greatest agony, even surpassing that which he suffered on the cross, an understanding supported by Mark’s description of Jesus’ experience (Mark 14:33–39).

According to Luke 22:43–44, Jesus’ anguish was so deep that “his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground,” an observation that harmonizes with the view that Jesus suffered most in Gethsemane during his ATONEMENT. Even though these verses are missing in some of the earliest extant manuscripts of Luke’s gospel, their content is confirmed in modern revelation (e.g., D&C 19:18). The evidence for Jesus’ extreme agony in Gethsemane is buttressed by a prophecy in the Book of Mormon and a statement by the resurrected Savior recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants. About 125 B.C., a Book of Mormon king, BENJAMIN, recounted in an important address a prophecy of the coming MESSIAH spoken to him by an angel during the previous night. Concerning the Messiah’s mortal experience, the angel declared that “he shall suffer temptations, and pain of body, hunger, thirst, and fatigue, even more than man can suffer, except it be unto death; for behold, blood cometh from every pore, so great shall be his anguish for the wickedness and the abominations of his people” (Mosiah 3:7). The Doctrine and Covenants gives the following poignant words of the resurrected Jesus: “Behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer if they would repent; . . . which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit” (D&C 19:16, 18).

Modern LDS leaders have emphasized that Jesus’ most challenging experience came in Gethsemane. Speaking in a general conference of the Church in 1982, Marion G. Romney, a member of the FIRST PRESIDENCY, observed that Jesus suffered “the pains of all men, which he did, principally, in Gethsemane, the scene of his great agony” (Ensign 12 [May 1982]:6). Church President Ezra Taft BENSON wrote that “it was in Gethsemane that Jesus took on Himself the sins of the world, in Gethsemane that His pain was equivalent to the cumulative burden of all men, in Gethsemane that He descended below all things so that all could repent and come to Him” (Benson, p. 7).

people (Rom. 9–11), concluding that “blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in” (Rom. 11:25).

Jesus prophesied the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion of the people of Judah among all nations “until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled” (Luke 21:24; JST Luke 21:24, 32). As latter-day revelation makes clear, “the times” of the Gentiles refers to the time when the fulness of the gospel will come among them (D&C 45:24–28). Latter-day revelation further teaches that in the last days the restored gospel will “go forth unto the ends of the earth, unto the Gentiles first, and then, behold, and lo, they shall turn unto the Jews” (D&C 90:9–11), so “that all who will hear may hear” (D&C 1:11) and “all the families of the earth be blessed” (Abr. 2:11). When the Gentiles reject the gospel, “the times of the Gentiles [will] be fulfilled” (D&C 45:29–30).

In 1823 the angel Moroni told Joseph Smith “that the fulness of the Gentiles was soon to come in” (JS—H 1:41). During the ministry of the resurrected Jesus among Book of Mormon peoples, he foretold the coming forth of the restored gospel among the Gentiles and warned that when they reject the fulness of his gospel and are lifted up in pride and all manner of wickedness, he will take his gospel from among them (3 Ne. 16:7–10). After they reject the gospel, it will be offered to the house of Israel (3 Ne. 16:11–12). Thus, Gentiles who have accepted the gospel will be numbered with Israel and escape the judgments that are to come upon the wicked (3 Ne. 16:13–14). In the dispensation of the fulness of times, the Gentiles will have been first to receive the gospel, and the first (Israel) will be the last (cf. 1 Ne. 13:42; MD, pp. 721–22).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nyman, Monte S. An Ensign to All People, pp. 49–56. Salt Lake City, 1987.

MONTE S. NYMAN

---

GETHSEMANE

The name Gethsemane (derived from Hebrew “oil press”) is mentioned twice in the Bible, both in the New Testament (Matt. 26:36; Mark 14:32); in each case, it is called a “place” (Greek chōrion, “piece of land”) to which Jesus Christ and his apostles retired after their last supper together. The fourth gospel calls the area “a garden” (John 18:1). For Latter-day Saints, Gethsemane was the scene of Jesus’ greatest agony, even surpassing that which he suffered on the cross, an understanding supported by Mark’s description of Jesus’ experience (Mark 14:33–39).

According to Luke 22:43–44, Jesus’ anguish was so deep that “his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground,” an observation that harmonizes with the view that Jesus suffered most in Gethsemane during his ATONEMENT. Even though these verses are missing in some of the earliest extant manuscripts of Luke’s gospel, their content is confirmed in modern revelation (e.g., D&C 19:18). The evidence for Jesus’ extreme agony in Gethsemane is buttressed by a prophecy in the Book of Mormon and a statement by the resurrected Savior recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants. About 125 B.C., a Book of Mormon king, BENJAMIN, recounted in an important address a prophecy of the coming MESSIAH spoken to him by an angel during the previous night. Concerning the Messiah’s mortal experience, the angel declared that “he shall suffer temptations, and pain of body, hunger, thirst, and fatigue, even more than man can suffer, except it be unto death; for behold, blood cometh from every pore, so great shall be his anguish for the wickedness and the abominations of his people” (Mosiah 3:7). The Doctrine and Covenants gives the following poignant words of the resurrected Jesus: “Behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer if they would repent; . . . which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit” (D&C 19:16, 18).

Modern LDS leaders have emphasized that Jesus’ most challenging experience came in Gethsemane. Speaking in a general conference of the Church in 1982, Marion G. Romney, a member of the FIRST PRESIDENCY, observed that Jesus suffered “the pains of all men, which he did, principally, in Gethsemane, the scene of his great agony” (Ensign 12 [May 1982]:6). Church President Ezra Taft BENSON wrote that “it was in Gethsemane that Jesus took on Himself the sins of the world, in Gethsemane that His pain was equivalent to the cumulative burden of all men, in Gethsemane that He descended below all things so that all could repent and come to Him” (Benson, p. 7).

While tradition locates Gethsemane on the lower slopes of the Mount of Olives, the exact spot remains unknown. Luke associates it with the Mount of Olives (Luke 22:39), and John notes that it lay across the Kidron brook (John 18:1), which flows from the north along Jerusalem's east side. The particular use of "place" (Greek topos) to describe the spot in the gospels of Luke and John suggests that the location was bound up with Jesus' destiny and consequently possesses a sacred character (Luke 22:40; John 18:2). It was a spot that Jesus and his disciples customarily visited (Luke 22:39), which allowed Judas and the others to find him on the night of his arrest (John 18:2).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. Come Unto Christ. Salt Lake City, 1983.
 Maxwell, Neal A. "The New Testament—A Matchless Portrait of the Savior." Ensign 16 (Dec. 1986):20–27.
 Wilkinson, John. Jerusalem as Jesus Knew It, pp. 125–31. London, 1978.

S. KENT BROWN

---

GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST

The gift of the HOLY GHOST is the right or privilege of receiving divine manifestations, spiritual gifts, and direction from the Holy Ghost. This gift is conferred upon members of the Church by the LAYING ON OF HANDS following BAPTISM. It is considered one of the essential ORDINANCES of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST and an absolute prerequisite of SALVATION.

The Holy Ghost is the third member of the GODHEAD, while the gift of the Holy Ghost consists of the privilege to receive inspiration, manifestations, and other spiritual gifts and blessings from that member of the Godhead (TPJS, p. 199). Among the most important spiritual blessings associated with the gift of the Holy Ghost is the sanctifying or cleansing power of the Holy Ghost, whereby men and women are BORN OF GOD. Through this BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST, individual hearts and desires are cleansed and spirits made pure as the culmination of the process of repentance and baptism (2 Ne. 31:13, 17; 3 Ne. 27:20). Other important manifestations of the Holy Ghost include bearing witness of Jesus Christ and of divine truths, providing spiritual guidance and warning as appropriate, and enabling discernment of right and wrong.

The gift of the Holy Ghost is understood to be the key to all of the "spiritual gifts" found in the Church, including the gifts of PROPHECY and REVELATION, of healing, of speaking in tongues, and of the translation and interpretation of tongues. These distinctive GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT normally are manifested only among those who have received the gift of the Holy Ghost and who qualify by their needs and their worthiness for such divine assistance, even as the original apostles of Christ received these gifts only after the Holy Ghost came upon them on the Day of Pentecost (Acts 2:1–17).

In LDS practice, the gift of the Holy Ghost is given by the laying-on of hands as indicated in the New Testament (see Acts 8:17–18; 19:2–6; 2 Tim. 1:6; Heb. 6:2), normally immediately following or within a few days of the baptism by water. A bearer of the Melchizedek Priesthood (usually joined by a few others holding the same priesthood) lays his hands upon the head of the newly baptized member, calls the person by name, confirms him or her a member of the Church, and says, "Receive the Holy Ghost." The exact wording of this ordinance is not prescribed, but it always involves the CONFIRMATION of MEMBERSHIP, the bestowal of the gift of the Holy Ghost, and a reference to the priesthood authority by which the ordinance is performed. These basic components of the ordinance often are followed by a verbal BLESSING that offers counsel and direction to the new member. In proxy TEMPLE ORDINANCE work for deceased persons, the same basic confirmation follows the ordinance of baptism for the dead.

The New Testament account of how the Saints in Samaria received the gift of the Holy Ghost makes clear that bestowal of this gift requires a higher AUTHORITY than is needed for performing baptisms (see Acts 8:14–17).

When Jesus Christ visited the Nephites, he first gave authority to baptize (3 Ne. 11:22), and in a subsequent visit he gave authority to bestow the Holy Ghost, as he touched and spoke to each of the twelve disciples individually (3 Ne. 18:36–37). Whereas baptisms can be performed by priests in the Aaronic Priesthood, the Holy Ghost can be conferred only by bearers of the higher or Melchizedek Priesthood (Moro. 2:2; JS—H 1:70). JOHN THE BAPTIST referred to this fundamental distinction between the two priesthoods: "I indeed

While tradition locates Gethsemane on the lower slopes of the Mount of Olives, the exact spot remains unknown. Luke associates it with the Mount of Olives (Luke 22:39), and John notes that it lay across the Kidron brook (John 18:1), which flows from the north along Jerusalem's east side. The particular use of "place" (Greek topos) to describe the spot in the gospels of Luke and John suggests that the location was bound up with Jesus' destiny and consequently possesses a sacred character (Luke 22:40; John 18:2). It was a spot that Jesus and his disciples customarily visited (Luke 22:39), which allowed Judas and the others to find him on the night of his arrest (John 18:2).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. Come Unto Christ. Salt Lake City, 1983.
 Maxwell, Neal A. "The New Testament—A Matchless Portrait of the Savior." Ensign 16 (Dec. 1986):20–27.
 Wilkinson, John. Jerusalem as Jesus Knew It, pp. 125–31. London, 1978.

S. KENT BROWN

---

GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST

The gift of the HOLY GHOST is the right or privilege of receiving divine manifestations, spiritual gifts, and direction from the Holy Ghost. This gift is conferred upon members of the Church by the LAYING ON OF HANDS following BAPTISM. It is considered one of the essential ORDINANCES of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST and an absolute prerequisite of SALVATION.

The Holy Ghost is the third member of the GODHEAD, while the gift of the Holy Ghost consists of the privilege to receive inspiration, manifestations, and other spiritual gifts and blessings from that member of the Godhead (TPJS, p. 199). Among the most important spiritual blessings associated with the gift of the Holy Ghost is the sanctifying or cleansing power of the Holy Ghost, whereby men and women are BORN OF GOD. Through this BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST, individual hearts and desires are cleansed and spirits made pure as the culmination of the process of repentance and baptism (2 Ne. 31:13, 17; 3 Ne. 27:20). Other important manifestations of the Holy Ghost include bearing witness of Jesus Christ and of divine truths, providing spiritual guidance and warning as appropriate, and enabling discernment of right and wrong.

The gift of the Holy Ghost is understood to be the key to all of the "spiritual gifts" found in the Church, including the gifts of PROPHECY and REVELATION, of healing, of speaking in tongues, and of the translation and interpretation of tongues. These distinctive GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT normally are manifested only among those who have received the gift of the Holy Ghost and who qualify by their needs and their worthiness for such divine assistance, even as the original apostles of Christ received these gifts only after the Holy Ghost came upon them on the Day of Pentecost (Acts 2:1–17).

In LDS practice, the gift of the Holy Ghost is given by the laying-on of hands as indicated in the New Testament (see Acts 8:17–18; 19:2–6; 2 Tim. 1:6; Heb. 6:2), normally immediately following or within a few days of the baptism by water. A bearer of the Melchizedek Priesthood (usually joined by a few others holding the same priesthood) lays his hands upon the head of the newly baptized member, calls the person by name, confirms him or her a member of the Church, and says, "Receive the Holy Ghost." The exact wording of this ordinance is not prescribed, but it always involves the CONFIRMATION OF MEMBERSHIP, the bestowal of the gift of the Holy Ghost, and a reference to the priesthood authority by which the ordinance is performed. These basic components of the ordinance often are followed by a verbal BLESSING that offers counsel and direction to the new member. In proxy TEMPLE ORDINANCE work for deceased persons, the same basic confirmation follows the ordinance of baptism for the dead.

The New Testament account of how the Saints in Samaria received the gift of the Holy Ghost makes clear that bestowal of this gift requires a higher AUTHORITY than is needed for performing baptisms (see Acts 8:14–17).

When Jesus Christ visited the Nephites, he first gave authority to baptize (3 Ne. 11:22), and in a subsequent visit he gave authority to bestow the Holy Ghost, as he touched and spoke to each of the twelve disciples individually (3 Ne. 18:36–37). Whereas baptisms can be performed by priests in the Aaronic Priesthood, the Holy Ghost can be conferred only by bearers of the higher or Melchizedek Priesthood (Moro. 2:2; JS—H 1:70). JOHN THE BAPTIST referred to this fundamental distinction between the two priesthoods: "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I . . . he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire" (Matt. 3:11).

The gift of the Holy Ghost is formally bestowed upon an individual only once, but the spiritual benefits associated with this gift can and should be continuous during a lifetime. Latter-day Saints are taught to strive to live so as to have the Holy Ghost as a "constant companion" to strengthen them and help them choose the right (D&C 121:46). The granting of the gift alone, however, does not insure these inspirations. The actual reception of the Holy Ghost is conditional upon the humility, faith, and worthiness of the individual who has had the gift bestowed on him or her. President Joseph F. SMITH taught that the gift of the Holy Ghost confers upon worthy and desirous members "the right to receive . . . the power and light of truth of the Holy Ghost, although [they] may often be left to [their] own spirit and judgment" (GD, pp. 60–61).

The gift of the Holy Ghost is referred to by the Prophet Joseph SMITH as one of the basic principles and ordinances of the gospel, being integrally linked to faith in Jesus Christ, repentance, and baptism by immersion for the REMISSION OF SINS (see FIRST PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL; A of F 4). Together these four constitute the "first principles" of the gospel of Jesus Christ (see GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST; 3 Ne. 27:19–21) and the only means whereby men and women can be cleansed of all sin—to become pure and spotless and worthy to enter the presence of God.

The Holy Ghost continues to aid in the process of spiritual purification through "the baptism by fire," which has been described in these words: "By the power of the Holy Ghost—who is the Sanctifier (3 Ne. 27:19–21)—dross, iniquity, carnality, sensuality, and every evil thing is burned out of the repentant soul as if by fire; the cleansed person becomes literally a new creature of the Holy Ghost. . . . He is born again" (MD, p. 73). The Savior referred to this spiritual rebirth when he told Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5).

A single experience of being "born again" does not alone insure salvation. It is also necessary for a person to "endure to the end," an essential element of the gospel of Christ (2 Ne. 31:20; 3 Ne. 27:16–17). The prophet Nephi<sup>1</sup> taught that

ENDURING TO THE END requires that one "feast upon the words of Christ," following the guidance of the Holy Ghost in "all things what ye should do" (2 Ne. 32:3–5). The gift of the Holy Ghost thus ensures that divine guidance and spiritual renewal take place throughout one's life, provided that the requisite repentance and humility are manifested.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lampe, G. W. H. "Holy Spirit." In The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 626–39. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- Shepherd, M. H., Jr. "Hands, Laying on of." In The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 521–22. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 157–70.

BRUCE DOUGLAS PORTER

---

GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT

The seventh Article of Faith of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints reads: "We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, and so forth." All such heavenly endowments come as gifts of the Spirit—that is, through the grace of God and the operation and power of the HOLY GHOST. As prerequisites to obtaining such gifts, a person must receive the ordinances of baptism and the bestowal of the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST from an authorized priesthood holder, must earnestly seek to obtain the gift or gifts, and must make sincere efforts to keep the Lord's COMMANDMENTS.

Clearly the Spirit can grant any gift that would fill a particular need; hence, no exhaustive list is possible, but many gifts have been promised the Church. Through the New Testament, readers are familiar with the six specified above: the two related to the gifts of tongues and their interpretation, or the power to speak in a language not previously learned and the ability to interpret such speech; the gift of prophecy, exhibited sometimes in the predictive sense but more often in the sense that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy" (Rev. 19:10); revelation, or the heaven-inspired receipt of knowledge, wisdom, or direction; visions, or visual spiritual manifestations such as PROPHETS have received in all ages and as Joel predicted for many others in the latter days (Joel 2:28–29); healing, or the power to "lay hands on the sick" that they may recover (Mark 16:18).

baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I . . . he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire" (Matt. 3:11).

The gift of the Holy Ghost is formally bestowed upon an individual only once, but the spiritual benefits associated with this gift can and should be continuous during a lifetime. Latter-day Saints are taught to strive to live so as to have the Holy Ghost as a "constant companion" to strengthen them and help them choose the right (D&C 121:46). The granting of the gift alone, however, does not insure these inspirations. The actual reception of the Holy Ghost is conditional upon the humility, faith, and worthiness of the individual who has had the gift bestowed on him or her. President Joseph F. SMITH taught that the gift of the Holy Ghost confers upon worthy and desirous members "the right to receive . . . the power and light of truth of the Holy Ghost, although [they] may often be left to [their] own spirit and judgment" (GD, pp. 60–61).

The gift of the Holy Ghost is referred to by the Prophet Joseph SMITH as one of the basic principles and ordinances of the gospel, being integrally linked to faith in Jesus Christ, repentance, and baptism by immersion for the REMISSION OF SINS (see FIRST PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL; A of F 4). Together these four constitute the "first principles" of the gospel of Jesus Christ (see GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST; 3 Ne. 27:19–21) and the only means whereby men and women can be cleansed of all sin—to become pure and spotless and worthy to enter the presence of God.

The Holy Ghost continues to aid in the process of spiritual purification through "the baptism by fire," which has been described in these words: "By the power of the Holy Ghost—who is the Sanctifier (3 Ne. 27:19–21)—dross, iniquity, carnality, sensuality, and every evil thing is burned out of the repentant soul as if by fire; the cleansed person becomes literally a new creature of the Holy Ghost. . . . He is born again" (MD, p. 73). The Savior referred to this spiritual rebirth when he told Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5).

A single experience of being "born again" does not alone insure salvation. It is also necessary for a person to "endure to the end," an essential element of the gospel of Christ (2 Ne. 31:20; 3 Ne. 27:16–17). The prophet Nephi<sup>1</sup> taught that

ENDURING TO THE END requires that one "feast upon the words of Christ," following the guidance of the Holy Ghost in "all things what ye should do" (2 Ne. 32:3–5). The gift of the Holy Ghost thus ensures that divine guidance and spiritual renewal take place throughout one's life, provided that the requisite repentance and humility are manifested.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lampe, G. W. H. "Holy Spirit." In The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 626–39. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- Shepherd, M. H., Jr. "Hands, Laying on of." In The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 521–22. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 157–70.

BRUCE DOUGLAS PORTER

---

GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT

The seventh Article of Faith of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints reads: "We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, and so forth." All such heavenly endowments come as gifts of the Spirit—that is, through the grace of God and the operation and power of the HOLY GHOST. As prerequisites to obtaining such gifts, a person must receive the ordinances of baptism and the bestowal of the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST from an authorized priesthood holder, must earnestly seek to obtain the gift or gifts, and must make sincere efforts to keep the Lord's COMMANDMENTS.

Clearly the Spirit can grant any gift that would fill a particular need; hence, no exhaustive list is possible, but many gifts have been promised the Church. Through the New Testament, readers are familiar with the six specified above: the two related to the gifts of tongues and their interpretation, or the power to speak in a language not previously learned and the ability to interpret such speech; the gift of prophecy, exhibited sometimes in the predictive sense but more often in the sense that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy" (Rev. 19:10); revelation, or the heaven-inspired receipt of knowledge, wisdom, or direction; visions, or visual spiritual manifestations such as PROPHETS have received in all ages and as Joel predicted for many others in the latter days (Joel 2:28–29); healing, or the power to "lay hands on the sick" that they may recover (Mark 16:18).

Scripturally, gifts of the Spirit are among the signs that “follow them that believe” (Mark 16:17). Eager to receive such promised gifts but lacking in understanding, some of the early converts to the Church (1831–32) became caught up in “spiritual” excesses that were common to revivalist campground meetings, with which they were familiar. In early days in KIRTLAND, OHIO, the Prophet Joseph SMITH observed, “many false spirits were introduced . . . many ridiculous things were entered into . . . [that would] cause the Spirit of God to be withdrawn” (TPJS, pp. 213–14). In congregations around Kirtland, Parley P. PRATT specifically noted “disgusting” spiritual operations, “unseemly gestures,” people falling “into ecstasies, and . . . drawn into contortions . . . fits” (Pratt, p. 61). Joseph Smith condemned such practices as unnatural and without useful purpose, since they communicated no intelligence (TPJS, pp. 204, 214). Thus dissociating the Church from the spiritual extravagances of frontier Christianity, the authorities moved swiftly against such erroneous practices, reclaiming those members whom they could and excommunicating those who persisted in their error.

In the doctrinal unfolding of the infant Church, Joseph Smith received revelations relating to spiritual gifts, notably that of March 8, 1831 (now D&C 46). Having first warned against deception by false spirits, the revelation set out the gifts much as PAUL and MORONI<sup>2</sup> did for the first-century and the Nephite churches, respectively (see 1 Cor. 12; Moroni 10). Mentioned besides the six above were knowledge; wisdom; faith to be healed; the working of MIRACLES; knowledge of the ways in which gifts may be administered; and the DISCERNMENT of spirits, whether they are of God or of the devil. Listed too was the gift of the Spirit’s witness of Jesus Christ and his atonement for the sins of the world, and, for some, the gift of believing the words of one who declares that witness (D&C 46:14).

The revelation promises at least one gift to every faithful Latter-day Saint. Bishops and other presiding officers, by virtue of their CALLINGS to watch over the Church, may receive multiple gifts, including the special gift of discernment to detect false from true spirits. On the latter point, Joseph Smith cautioned about “the common error of considering all supernatural manifestations to be of God,” warning that evil spirits as well as heavenly ones can, for example, speak in tongues and interpret them; and that in their deception they may even give recognition to the Savior and his authorized servants (TPJS, pp. 206–13, 229; also Luke 4:33–35; Acts 16:16–18).

Many early LDS journals recount experiences with spiritual gifts: In 1830 Newel Knight saw a vision of heaven apparently similar to what the martyr Stephen described (“Newel Knight’s Journal,” pp. 52–53). In Kirtland in 1831, Chloe Smith, who had been languishing near death, was instantly restored to health under Joseph Smith’s ministration (Pratt, pp. 66–67). At a meeting in Ontario, Canada, in 1833, Lydia Bailey (later Knight) spoke in tongues (Journal History, Oct. 19, 1833). Following Heber C. Kimball’s prophetic promise in 1836 that a son would be born to Parley and Thankful Pratt, childless after ten years of marriage, a son was born a year later (Pratt, pp. 130–31, 165). Then as now, both leaders and the general membership were blessed with such gifts.

Gifts of the Spirit are to be sought for their beneficial effect rather than for their remarkable character (see 1 Cor. 14). In fact, as Joseph Smith observed, only one or two of the gifts are visible when in operation. In its commonly understood sense, the gift of tongues is one such, but President Joseph F. SMITH stressed its more practical aspect: “I needed the gift of tongues once, and the Lord gave it to me. I was in a foreign land, sent to preach the gospel to a people whose language I could not understand. Then I sought earnestly for the gift of tongues, and by this gift and by study, in a hundred days after landing upon those islands I could talk to the people in their language as I now talk to you in my native tongue. This was a gift that was worthy of the gospel. There was a purpose in it” (Smith, p. 201). In this way, the gift is frequently enjoyed by LDS missionaries today.

Throughout the world, Latter-day Saints report a variety of spiritual gifts in the normal course of their lives. Faithful members commonly receive through the Spirit the gift of the testimony of Jesus Christ and his restored gospel—and those individual testimonies constitute the strength of the Church; the gift of knowledge of spiritual things is enjoyed widely; daily, PRIESTHOOD bearers lay hands on the heads of sick family members or friends, as requested (see James 5:14–15), and bring them heaven’s healing powers, frequently with instant effect; men, women, and young persons receive revelation as needed for the benefit of themselves, their families, or those whom they serve in Church callings. Virtually all of these activities and others of comparable spiritual significance go on in the privacy of home and heart without any public awareness of them.

All spiritual gifts are needed in the Church (1 Cor. 12), but that some are more to be desired than others is evident from Paul's writings: One is to seek the best gifts. Of special significance for all who desire "a more excellent way" (1 Cor. 12:31) is to receive and develop the gift of CHARITY. This "pure love of Christ" is a fundamental mark of true DISCIPLESHIP, a prerequisite to ETERNAL LIFE, and a quality one is therefore to pray and work for with all energy of heart (Moroni 7:47–48; 10:21; Ether 12:34). Paul's masterful exposition on charity (1 Cor. 13) further defines this attribute and confirms love as the great commandment and the Christian's crucial need. Disciples are to manifest this gift and also desire others (1 Cor. 14:1), working by the power of God and by the gifts of the Spirit (Moro. 10:25).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "Newel Knight's Journal." In Scraps of Biography. Salt Lake City, 1883.
- Pratt, Parley P. Autobiography of Parley Parker Pratt. Salt Lake City, 1967.
- Smith, Joseph F. Gospel Doctrine. Salt Lake City, 1977.

II. GEORGE BICKERSTAFF

GOD

Latter-day Saints declare, "We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in His Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost" (A of F 1). Joseph SMITH offered the following clarification: "The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man's; the Son also; but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit" (D&C 130:22; see GOD THE FATHER; HOLY GHOST; JESUS CHRIST).

The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are three separate and distinct beings who constitute one GODHEAD. Generally speaking, the Father is the Creator, the Son is the Redeemer, and the Holy Ghost is the Comforter and Testifier (cf. MFP 5:26–34; TPJS, p. 190). Many scriptural passages illustrate the distinct character of the members of the Godhead. For example, at the baptism of Jesus, while he was in the water, the Father's voice was heard from heaven, and the Holy Ghost descended

"like a dove" and rested upon the Son (Matt. 3:13–17; see JESUS CHRIST: BAPTISM). All three persons were manifested separately and simultaneously. Also, Jesus said, "My Father is greater than I" (John 14:28), and in another place declared, "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (John 5:22). Further, Jesus pointed to the Father and himself as two separate witnesses of the divinity of his work (John 5:32–37; 8:12–18). On the MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION the heavenly Father identified the mortal Jesus to Peter, James, and John as "my beloved Son" (Matt. 17:5). Moreover, the Son often prayed to his Father. In Gethsemane he prayed to the Father while in deep anguish (Mark 14:32–39; cf. Luke 22:40–46; D&C 19:16–19), and on the cross he cried out to the Father, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matt. 27:46; Mark 15:34; cf. Ps. 22:1). All of these passages clearly show that the Father is a being distinct from the Son. Although they are one in mind and purpose, they are two separate individuals and bear testimony of one another (cf. 3 Ne. 11:7–11).

The way in which the Godhead is one is illustrated by Jesus' prayer that his disciples would be one, even as he and the Father are one (John 17:21–22; cf. 3 Ne. 11:27, 32–36; 28:10–11). Here he was praying for his disciples' unity of mind, purpose, and testimony, not for the merger of their identities into a single being. He prayed that they would be one in desire, purpose, and objective, exactly as he and his Father are (TPJS, p. 372; see UNITY).

The Father, as God, is omnipotent, omniscient, and, through his spirit, omnipresent (see LIGHT OF CHRIST). He is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, abundant in goodness. His course is one eternal round. He is a God of truth and no respecter of persons. He personifies love.

Though Latter-day Saints extensively use the scriptures to learn about God, their fundamental knowledge concerning him is based upon the Prophet Joseph Smith's FIRST VISION, the Prophet's subsequent revelatory experiences, and individual personal REVELATION. While mankind may reason or speculate concerning the existence of God, and his nature, the principal way by which they can know about God is dependent upon his revealing himself to them (see TESTIMONY OF JESUS CHRIST).

Before A.D. 325, the date of the first Christian ecumenical council at Nicaea, the nature of God was debated by philosophers and people of faith.

serve in Church callings. Virtually all of these activities and others of comparable spiritual significance go on in the privacy of home and heart without any public awareness of them.

All spiritual gifts are needed in the Church (1 Cor. 12), but that some are more to be desired than others is evident from Paul's writings: One is to seek the best gifts. Of special significance for all who desire "a more excellent way" (1 Cor. 12:31) is to receive and develop the gift of CHARITY. This "pure love of Christ" is a fundamental mark of true DISCIPLESHIP, a prerequisite to ETERNAL LIFE, and a quality one is therefore to pray and work for with all energy of heart (Moroni 7:47–48; 10:21; Ether 12:34). Paul's masterful exposition on charity (1 Cor. 13) further defines this attribute and confirms love as the great commandment and the Christian's crucial need. Disciples are to manifest this gift and also desire others (1 Cor. 14:1), working by the power of God and by the gifts of the Spirit (Moro. 10:25).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "Newel Knight's Journal." In Scraps of Biography. Salt Lake City, 1883.
- Pratt, Parley P. Autobiography of Parley Parker Pratt. Salt Lake City, 1967.
- Smith, Joseph F. Gospel Doctrine. Salt Lake City, 1977.

II. GEORGE BICKERSTAFF

GOD

Latter-day Saints declare, "We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in His Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost" (A of F 1). Joseph SMITH offered the following clarification: "The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man's; the Son also; but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit" (D&C 130:22; see GOD THE FATHER; HOLY GHOST; JESUS CHRIST).

The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are three separate and distinct beings who constitute one GODHEAD. Generally speaking, the Father is the Creator, the Son is the Redeemer, and the Holy Ghost is the Comforter and Testifier (cf. MFP 5:26–34; TPJS, p. 190). Many scriptural passages illustrate the distinct character of the members of the Godhead. For example, at the baptism of Jesus, while he was in the water, the Father's voice was heard from heaven, and the Holy Ghost descended

"like a dove" and rested upon the Son (Matt. 3:13–17; see JESUS CHRIST: BAPTISM). All three persons were manifested separately and simultaneously. Also, Jesus said, "My Father is greater than I" (John 14:28), and in another place declared, "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (John 5:22). Further, Jesus pointed to the Father and himself as two separate witnesses of the divinity of his work (John 5:32–37; 8:12–18). On the MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION the heavenly Father identified the mortal Jesus to Peter, James, and John as "my beloved Son" (Matt. 17:5). Moreover, the Son often prayed to his Father. In Gethsemane he prayed to the Father while in deep anguish (Mark 14:32–39; cf. Luke 22:40–46; D&C 19:16–19), and on the cross he cried out to the Father, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matt. 27:46; Mark 15:34; cf. Ps. 22:1). All of these passages clearly show that the Father is a being distinct from the Son. Although they are one in mind and purpose, they are two separate individuals and bear testimony of one another (cf. 3 Ne. 11:7–11).

The way in which the Godhead is one is illustrated by Jesus' prayer that his disciples would be one, even as he and the Father are one (John 17:21–22; cf. 3 Ne. 11:27, 32–36; 28:10–11). Here he was praying for his disciples' unity of mind, purpose, and testimony, not for the merger of their identities into a single being. He prayed that they would be one in desire, purpose, and objective, exactly as he and his Father are (TPJS, p. 372; see UNITY).

The Father, as God, is omnipotent, omniscient, and, through his spirit, omnipresent (see LIGHT OF CHRIST). He is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, abundant in goodness. His course is one eternal round. He is a God of truth and no respecter of persons. He personifies love.

Though Latter-day Saints extensively use the scriptures to learn about God, their fundamental knowledge concerning him is based upon the Prophet Joseph Smith's FIRST VISION, the Prophet's subsequent revelatory experiences, and individual personal REVELATION. While mankind may reason or speculate concerning the existence of God, and his nature, the principal way by which they can know about God is dependent upon his revealing himself to them (see TESTIMONY OF JESUS CHRIST).

Before A.D. 325, the date of the first Christian ecumenical council at Nicaea, the nature of God was debated by philosophers and people of faith.

Since then, the concept of God has been the subject of ecumenical councils, philosophical discussions, and creeds. None of these is the source of the LDS understanding of God. To be sure, many classical arguments for the existence of God have been advanced, including the ontological arguments of Anselm, the five "proofs" of St. Thomas Aquinas, the teleological argument of Descartes, the ethical argument of Leibniz, and the postulates of practical reason of Kant. As impressive as any of these might be as achievements of the human intellect, none of them is the source of faith in God for Latter-day Saints, whose faith is based upon personal testimony grounded in personal experience (see EPISTEMOLOGY; FAITH; REASON AND REVELATION).

The last chapter of the Book of Mormon records this promise: "And when ye shall receive these things [of God], I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost. And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things" (Moro. 10:4-5). The personal witness that one receives in answer to prayer is called a TESTIMONY. Latter-day Saints teach that through this source a person can receive a sure witness that God lives, a confirmation regarding the various principles that the scriptures teach, and clarification where it is needed.

Belief in God, or a measure of faith in him, is essential to finding the reality of his existence. Inasmuch as God exists, and human beings are his children, it is important for men and women to know these facts because such knowledge is a component of ETERNAL LIFE (John 17:3). Individuals need to know that they are themselves eternal beings, that they are dependent upon God for their earthly existence (cf. Mosiah 2:21), and that their future condition depends on how they relate to God and keep his commandments (see COMMANDMENTS; OBEDIENCE).

God loves his children and has provided the means for them to realize their divine potential (see GODHOOD). God has given humankind the program for his children as a whole (see PLAN OF SALVATION), and through the gift of the Holy Ghost he gives special guidance to individuals as they seek it (see INSPIRATION). God revealed his will to prophets in ancient times and to apostles in the MERIDIAN OF TIME, and he continues to reveal himself to living prophets and apostles in the latter days.

Learning of God's existence creates the desire to know him, and know what he would have one do or be. As one's faith and knowledge of God increase, one desires more and more to keep God's commandments and feel close to him (see FAITH). The Prophet Joseph Smith taught that knowing the true character of God forms the basis for the faith that leads to salvation (Lectures on Faith 4:1; see LECTURES ON FAITH). Jesus promised that the Comforter, or Holy Ghost, would be sent to one who keeps God's commandments (John 14:26). The ideal is to enjoy that influence continuously.

The Prophet Joseph Smith said, "It is the first principle of the Gospel to know for a certainty the character of God, and to know that we may converse with him as one man converses with another, and that he was once a man like us: yea, that God himself, the Father of us all, dwelt on an earth, the same as Jesus Christ himself did" (TPJS, pp. 345-46). Further, "God himself was once as we are now, and is an exalted man, and sits enthroned in yonder heavens! That is the great secret. If the veil were rent today, and the great God who holds this world in its orbit, and who upholds all worlds and all things by his power, was to make himself visible,—I say, if you were to see him today, you would see him like a man in form—like yourselves in all the person, image, and very form as a man; for Adam was created in the very fashion, image and likeness of God, and received instruction from, and walked, talked and conversed with him, as one man talks and communes with another" (TPJS, p. 345).

Thus, all humans must learn from God who they are, where they came from, why they are on earth, where they are going, and what their eternal potential is, by studying the scriptures and receiving personal revelation. All things center in God.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "The Father and the Son: A Doctrinal Exposition by the First Presidency and the Twelve." MFP 5:26-34.
- Kimball, Spencer W. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS 1:1-55. Salt Lake City, 1954.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 29-51. Salt Lake City, 1965.

DAVID H. YARN, JR.

---

GOD, ATTRIBUTES OF

Sec: God; God the Father; Godhood; Lectures on Faith

---

GOD THE FATHER

[This entry is composed of four articles:

- Overview
- Names and Titles
- Glory of God
- Work and Glory of God

The first article is an introduction to doctrines about God the Father and the sources where they may be found. The second article lists the main names and titles by which God is known in LDS scripture. The third article offers a brief discussion of the Glory of God. The concluding article in this entry elaborates on the concept of the purposes of God in relation to mankind.]

OVERVIEW

Latter-day Saints commonly refer to God the Eternal Father as Elohim, a Hebrew plural ('elohim) meaning God or gods, and to his Son Jesus Christ as Jehovah (see ELOHIM; JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST). Distinguishing between the persons of the Father and the Son is not possible with more ambiguous terms like “God”; therefore, referring to the Father as “Elohim” is a useful convention as long as one remembers that in some passages of the Hebrew Bible the title 'elohim does not refer exclusively to the person of God the Father. A less ambiguous term for God the Father in LDS parlance might be “Ahman” (cf. D&C 78:15, 20), which, according to Elder Orson PRATT, is a name of the Father (JD 2:342).

In Church theology, the doctrine of the nature of God is established more clearly by the First Vision of the Prophet Joseph SMITH than by anything else. Here, Joseph Smith saw for himself that the Father and the Son were two separate and distinct beings, each possessing a body in whose image and likeness mortals are created. For Latter-day Saints, no theological or philosophical propositions about God can override the primary experience of the Prophet (see FIRST VISION).

In one sense, it creates a slight distortion to focus on one member of the Godhead and discuss his characteristics in isolation from those of the other two, for Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one in mind, one in purpose, and one in character (John 10:30; 17:11, 21–23). Most of what can be said of the Father is also true of the Son and vice versa. The Prophet Joseph Smith said that the Son does nothing for which the Father is not the exemplar (TPJS, p. 312; cf. John 5:19–20).

Yet God the Father is not one in substance with the Son or the Holy Spirit, but is a separate being. The Father existed prior to the Son and the Holy Ghost and is the source of their divinity. In classical terms, LDS theology is subordinationist; that is, it views the Son and the Holy Ghost as subordinate to and dependent upon God the Eternal Father. They are his offspring. Thus Joseph Smith referred to the Father as “God the first” to emphasize his priority in the Godhead (TPJS, p. 190). The Son and the Holy Spirit were “in the beginning, with God,” but the Father alone existed before the beginning of the universe as it is known. He is ultimately the source of all things and the Father of all things, for in the beginning he begot the Son, and through the instrumentality of his agent, the Son, the Father accomplished the creation of all things.

Latter-day Saints perceive the Father as an exalted Man in the most literal, anthropomorphic terms. They do not view the language of Genesis as allegorical; human beings are created in the form and image of a God who has a physical form and image (Gen. 1:26). The Prophet Joseph Smith explained, “The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man’s; the Son also; but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit” (D&C 130:22). Thus, “God is a Spirit” (John 4:24) in the sense that the Holy Ghost, the member of the Godhead who deals most often and most directly with humans, is a God and a spirit, but God the Father and God the Son are spirits with physical, resurrected bodies. Latter-day Saints deny the abstract nature of God the Father and affirm that he is a concrete being, that he possesses a physical body, and that he is in space and time. They further reject any idea that God the Father is “totally other,” unknowable, or incomprehensible. In LDS doctrine, knowing the Father and the Son is a prerequisite to eternal life (John 17:3; D&C 88:49). In the opinion of many Latter-day Saints, the concept of an abstract, incomprehensible deity constitutes an intrusion of Greek philosophical categories upon the biblical record.

The Father, Elohim, is called the Father because he is the literal father of the spirits of mortals (Heb. 12:9). This paternity is not allegorical. All individual human spirits were begotten (not created from nothing or made) by the Father in a pre-mortal state, where they lived and were nurtured by Heavenly Parents. These spirit children of the Father come to earth to receive mortal bodies; there is a literal family relationship among humankind. Joseph Smith taught, "If men do not comprehend the character of God, they do not comprehend themselves" (TPJS, p. 343). Gods and humans represent a single divine lineage, the same species of being, although they and he are at different stages of progress. This doctrine is stated concisely in a well-known couplet by President Lorenzo SNOW: "As man now is, God once was: as God now is, man may be" (see GODHOOD). This principle is clearly demonstrated in the person of Jesus Christ, a God who became mortal, and yet a God like whom mortals may become (Rom. 8:29; 2 Cor. 3:18). But the maxim is true of the Father as well. As the Prophet Joseph Smith said, "God himself was once as we are now, and is an exalted man, and sits enthroned in yonder heavens! That is the great secret" (TPJS, p. 345). Thus, the Father became the Father at some time before "the beginning" as humans know it, by experiencing a mortality similar to that experienced on earth. There has been speculation among some Latter-day Saints on the implications of this doctrine, but nothing has been revealed to the Church about conditions before the "beginning" as mortals know it. The important points of the doctrine for Latter-day Saints are that Gods and humans are the same species of being, but at different stages of development in a divine continuum, and that the heavenly Father and Mother are the heavenly pattern, model, and example of what mortals can become through obedience to the gospel (see MOTHER IN HEAVEN). Knowing that they are the literal offspring of Heavenly Parents and that they can become like those parents through the gospel of Jesus Christ is a wellspring of religious motivation. With God as the literal Father and with humans having the capacity to become like him, the basic religious questions "Where did I come from?" "Why am I here?" and "What is my destiny?" are fundamentally answered.

Latter-day Saints also attribute omnipotence and omniscience to the Father. He knows all things relative to the universe in which mortals live and is himself the source and possessor of all true power manifest in it. This is part of what it means to be exalted, and this is why human beings may safely put their faith and trust in God the Father, an exalted being. Nevertheless, in most things dealing with this world, the Father works through a mediator, his Son, Jesus Christ. With few exceptions, scriptural references to God, or even to the Father, have Jesus Christ as the actual subject, for the Father is represented by his Son. On those few recorded occasions when the Father has plainly manifested himself, he has apparently limited his personal involvement to bearing witness of the Son, as at the baptism of Jesus (Matt. 3:17), at the transfiguration (Matt. 17:5), in his witness to the Nephites and Lamanites (3 Ne. 11:7), and in Joseph Smith's First Vision (JS—H 1:17). Christ is the agent of the Father, and since he alone, by his atonement, has made access to the Father possible, Latter-day Saints worship and pray to the Father and offer all other sacred performances to him in the name of the Son, Jesus Christ (Moses 5:8).

Another important personal attribute of the Father is his perfect love (1 Jn. 4:8). Because of this love, it is the nature of the Father to improve everything and everyone to the extent that they will allow. Out of preexisting chaos, matter unorganized, the Father created an orderly universe. Out of preexisting intelligence, he begat spirit children. Even those of his children who will not cooperate and obey, and who cannot therefore become like him, he still saves, if they will allow it, and places them in lesser kingdoms of glory (D&C 76:42–43; see SALVATION): "For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man" (Moses 1:39). The love of the Father is not limited to those who worship and obey him, although their rewards will be greatest, but it is extended to all of his children. The Father's work, and his glory, is to love and to lift all of his children as far as they will allow him. Latter-day Saints believe it is the intention of the Father to make all human beings as happy as they possibly can be. To that end, the Father authored the PLAN OF SALVATION. The Father desires that all human beings be exalted like himself, receive the powers and the joys that he possesses, and experience a fulness of joy in eternity. The limiting factor is the degree to which humans, by exercising their faith and obedience and by making wise choices, will permit the Father to bless them in achieving this goal. Sometimes having faith in God means having faith that the Father's plan will do what it is designed to do—to bring maximum happiness to human beings. Nevertheless, Latter-day Saints believe, in contrast to some other views, that the Father will never violate individual agency by forcing his children to exaltation and happiness. Coercion in any degree, even in the form of predestination to the celestial kingdom, is abhorrent to the nature of the Father. All relationships to him or associations with him are voluntary.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cannon, Donald Q., and Larry E. Dahl. The Prophet Joseph Smith's King Follett Discourse: A Six Column Comparison of Original Notes and Amalgamations. Provo, Utah, 1983.
- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 58-65. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS, Vol. 1, pp. 1-17.

STEPHEN E. ROBINSON

NAMES AND TITLES

Known names and titles of God the Eternal Father are limited in number, especially when compared to the names applied to Jesus Christ (see JESUS CHRIST, NAMES AND TITLES OF). Latter-day Saints understand the Godhead to consist of three separate individuals: the Father; Jesus Christ, his Son; and the Holy Ghost (D&C 130:22). Therefore, when the need exists to distinguish God the Father from the other two members of the Godhead, Church members select from the names found in scripture.

GOD. Among Latter-day Saints, the title "God" generally identifies God the Father. Occasionally, God may refer to the unified Godhead of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost (cf. 2 Ne. 31:21; D&C 20:28) and at times to each member individually (AF, pp. 159-63). This characteristic makes the attempt to distinguish the Father from Jesus Christ in scripture very difficult at times. Significantly, Jesus' declarations that he and the Father are "one," and to know one is to know the other, indicate that the unity or "oneness" of the Godhead—in purpose and mind and testifying of one another—is of primary worth and seems to diminish the importance of making distinctions among its members. The scriptures teach that a person will come to know the Father by first knowing Christ (John 14:6-23; D&C 84:35-38; 93:1-22; 132:12). Jesus' instructions that his believers are to be "one" with him as he is "one" with the Father are basic to his doctrine (cf. John 17:1-26; 3 Ne. 11:32-36).

FATHER, FATHER IN HEAVEN. The name-title "Father in Heaven" refers to the director of creation and Father of the spirits of all mankind (MFP 5:26-27). Jesus used the terms "my Father," "our Father," and "the Father" when teaching about and praying to his Father. The Aramaic word 'abba (father) has carried over into English translations of the New Testament (Mark 14:36; Rom. 8:15; Gal. 4:6). In the Book of Mormon, the resurrected Jesus continually used the title "Father" when referring to the Father in Heaven (e.g., 3 Ne. 11:11; 19:20-23). In some instances, however, Father may refer to the Son (see JESUS CHRIST: FATHERHOOD AND SONSHIP). According to both the New Testament and Book of Mormon, faithful souls who are converted to Jesus Christ and who make personal covenants with him are spiritually reborn, becoming "his sons and his daughters" (e.g., Mosiah 5:7; cf. 1 Cor. 4:15; 2 Cor. 6:18; MFP 5:27-31).

GOD THE FATHER. The combination of the title "God" and the appellative "Father" specifies the Father of Jesus Christ and of all spirits. Latter-day Saints worship God the Father and Jesus Christ and pray to the Father in the name of Christ as directed by the Lord (D&C 88:64).

ELOHIM. The commonly used term for "God" or "gods" in the Hebrew Bible is 'elohim, a plural form whose singular is 'eloah or 'el and has the meaning of "lofty one" or "exalted one." Early Church leaders adopted the policy of designating God the Father by the exalted name-title "Elohim" (cf. MFP 5:26; see ELOHIM; NAME OF GOD). This terminology has continued down to the present.

JEHOVAH, LORD, LORD GOD. The term "LORD," printed with capital letters in many English versions of the Old Testament, is a substitute for the name Jehovah (yhwh in the Hebrew Bible). Even though Latter-day Saints identify Jesus Christ as Jehovah (3 Ne. 15:3-5; cf. D&C 110:1-4; see JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST), they utilize the title "Lord" for both the Father and the Son, as is common throughout scripture. The title "Lord God" in the Hebrew Bible is a compound of 'elohim preceded by either yhwh (Jehovah) or adonai (lord or master). This combined name-title refers mainly to Jehovah in the Old Testament. In the New Testament, the Book of Mormon, and in other latter-day scriptures, "Lord God" can mean either the Father (e.g., Moses 4:1–4) or the Son (Mosiah 3:21).

AHMAN. In two revelations to Joseph SMITH (D&C 78:20; 95:17), Jesus Christ referred to himself as "the Son Ahman," allowing the possibility that "Ahman" may be a word meaning God, and one of the names of the Father (see AHMAN). The name also appears in a compound place name, ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN (D&C 116:1; 117:8, 11).

MAN OF HOLINESS. Adam learned by revelation that one of the names of God the Father is "Man of Holiness" (Moses 6:57). Enoch also recorded God's words: "Behold, I am God; Man of Holiness is my name; Man of Counsel is my name; and Endless and Eternal is my name" (Moses 7:35; see ENDLESS AND ETERNAL).

In the Bible and latter-day scripture, other titles for God carry valuable meaning: "Father of Spirits," "God of all other Gods," "Endless," "The Living God," and "Lord of Sabaoth [Hebrew for "Hosts"], which is by interpretation, the creator of the first day, the beginning and the end" (D&C 95:7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Talmage, James E. AF. Salt Lake City, 1915.

GLADE L. BURGON

GLORY OF GOD

Glory is an intrinsic attribute and emanation of God, which LDS SCRIPTURES associate with divine law and with the power and Spirit that "proceedeth forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space" (D&C 88:7–13). Prominent terms for this "spirit of glory" (1 Pet. 4:14) are the Spirit of God, the HOLY SPIRIT, the Spirit of the Lord, the light of truth, the LIGHT OF CHRIST, and the Spirit of Christ. This all-pervading Spirit is so pure and refined that it is not perceptible to mortals under ordinary circumstances (D&C 131:7–8; TPJS, pp. 207, 301–332). Yet on occasion, the prophets testify, the innate glory has been visibly manifest as flaming spiritual fire (Ex. 24:17; Acts 2:3; Hel. 5:43–45; 3 Ne. 17:24; 19:13–14; HC 1:30–32). Moses and Jesus were transfigured by the same glorifying power (Ex. 34:29–35; Matt. 17:2).

Because glory radiates from God, he is described as "a consuming fire" (Deut. 4:24; cf. Isa.

33:14). God may withhold or conceal his glory (TPJS, pp. 162, 181, 325). But he may also radiate such transcendent light and heat that no mortal flesh can endure his presence (Mal. 4:1; D&C 133:41, 49; HC 1:17, 37). Only when clothed by the Spirit can anyone endure the glorious presence of God (Moses 1:2, 11; D&C 67:11).

The spirit of glory permeates God's creations (D&C 63:59; 88:41). Therefore, they are kingdoms of glory, and to behold any or the least of his creations is to behold a portion of his glory (Moses 1:5; Ps. 19:1; D&C 88:45–47; TPJS, p. 351). Since God's works are endless, his glory is ever-increasing (Abr. 3:12; Moses 1:38; 7:30). His "work and glory" are to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of his children (Moses 1:39). As Jesus' submission to the will of his Father glorified both himself and his Father, so does the obedience of his children glorify both themselves and God (John 13:31; 17:1). Oneness with God is achieved through this relationship of glory (John 17:21–23; D&C 88:60).

The degree to which mortal men and women acquire and live the moral and spiritual principles of light and truth inherent in divine INTELLIGENCE determines the degree to which they will be filled with the glory of God when resurrected and, therefore, the sphere of glory they will inherit in eternity (D&C 88:22–32; 93:20, 28; 130:18–19; TPJS, p. 366).

RODNEY TURNER

WORK AND GLORY OF GOD

A revelation received by Moses between his experience at the burning bush (Ex. 3:1–4:17) and his return to Egypt (Ex. 4:20; cf. Moses 1:26) describes the work and glory of God as "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man" (Moses 1:39). One of the most frequently quoted passages of scripture in LDS sermons, this declaration elucidates the chief object of God's actions on behalf of his children.

Earlier in this vision, Moses had "beheld many lands; and each land was called earth, and there were inhabitants on the face thereof" (Moses 1:29). Then the Lord told him that "as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works" (1:38). After receiving this expansive, orienting view of God's creations, Moses asked the Lord, “Tell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them?” (1:30).

The Lord answered the first question by explaining that “this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39). Creating worlds and populating them with his children are major parts of God’s “work.” He creates EARTHS as dwelling places for his spirit children, where they receive physical bodies and learn to walk by faith. Whereas IMMORTALITY is never-ending life, ETERNAL LIFE means to become like God (see GODHOOD). Thus, God’s “glory” consists in mankind’s attainment of everlasting glory, the ultimate being eternal life.

In answer to Moses’ second question (i.e., “by what thou madest them?”), the Lord stated that worlds were created by the power of the “Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth” (Moses 1:32). This passage underscores the view that the creative acts of God, which include all inhabitable worlds (Moses 1:33; cf. John 1:1–2), are done through the Only Begotten as God’s agent, and are done in grace and truth for the benefit of his children.

DENNIS L. LARGEY

GODHEAD

[For discussions about the three members of the Godhead and their divine attributes and manifestations in the world, see GOD; GOD THE FATHER; ELOHIM; MAN OF HOLINESS; JESUS CHRIST; HOLY GHOST; HOLY SPIRIT; GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST; DOVE; SIGN OF. See also GODHOOD; ENDLESS AND ETERNAL; NAME OF GOD; INTELLIGENCE; FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD; OMNIPOTENT GOD, OMNIPRESENCE OF GOD, OMNISCIENCE OF GOD.]

Latter-day Saints believe in God the Father; his Son, Jesus Christ; and the Holy Ghost (A of F 1). These three Gods form the Godhead, which holds the keys of power over the universe. Each member of the Godhead is an independent personage, separate and distinct from the other two, the three being in perfect unity and harmony with each other (AF, chap. 2).

This knowledge concerning the Godhead derives primarily from the Bible and the revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith (see SMITH, JOSEPH: TEACHINGS OF JOSEPH SMITH). For example, the three members of the Godhead were separately manifested at the baptism of Jesus (Matt. 3:16–17) and at the stoning of Stephen (Acts 7:55–56). Joseph Smith commented, “Peter and Stephen testify that they saw the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God. Any person that had seen the heavens opened knows that there are three personages in the heavens who hold the keys of power, and one presides over all” (TPJS, p. 312).

On June 16, 1844, in his last Sunday sermon before his martyrdom, Joseph Smith declared that “in all congregations” he had taught “the plurality of Gods” for fifteen years: “I have always declared God to be a distinct personage, Jesus Christ a separate and distinct personage from God the Father, and that the Holy Ghost was a distinct personage and a Spirit; and these three constitute three distinct personages and three Gods” (TPJS, p. 370). The two earliest surviving accounts of Joseph’s FIRST VISION do not give details on the Godhead, but that he consistently taught that the Father and the Son were separate personages is clearly documentable in most periods of his life (e.g., D&C 76:23 [1832]; 137:3 [1836]; his First Vision, JS–H 1:17 [recorded 1838]; D&C 130:22 [1843]). While the fifth LECTURE ON FAITH (1834) does not identify the Holy Ghost as a “personage,” it affirms that “the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit constitute the Godhead” (cf. Millet, pp. 223–34).

Although the three members of the Godhead are distinct personages, their Godhead is “one” in that all three are united in their thoughts, actions, and purpose, with each having a fulness of knowledge, truth, and power. Each is a God. This does not imply a mystical union of substance or personality. Joseph Smith taught:

Many men say there is one God; the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost are only one God. I say that is a strange God anyhow—three in one, and one in three! It is a curious organization anyhow. “Father, I pray not for the world, but I pray for those that thou hast given me . . . that they may be one as we are.” . . . I want to read the text to yon myself—“I am agreed with the Father and the Father is agreed with me, and we are agreed as one.” The Greek shows that it should be agreed. “Father, I pray for them which thou hast given me out of the world, . . . that they all may be agreed,” and all come to dwell in unity [TPJS, p. 372; cf. John 17:9–11, 20–21; also cf. WJS, p. 380].

The unity prayed for in John 17 provides a model for the LDS understanding of the unity of the God-

Lord, “Tell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them?” (1:30).

The Lord answered the first question by explaining that “this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39). Creating worlds and populating them with his children are major parts of God’s “work.” He creates EARTHS as dwelling places for his spirit children, where they receive physical bodies and learn to walk by faith. Whereas IMMORTALITY is never-ending life, ETERNAL LIFE means to become like God (see GODHOOD). Thus, God’s “glory” consists in mankind’s attainment of everlasting glory, the ultimate being eternal life.

In answer to Moses’ second question (i.e., “by what thou madest them?”), the Lord stated that worlds were created by the power of the “Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth” (Moses 1:32). This passage underscores the view that the creative acts of God, which include all inhabitable worlds (Moses 1:33; cf. John 1:1–2), are done through the Only Begotten as God’s agent, and are done in grace and truth for the benefit of his children.

DENNIS L. LARGEY

GODHEAD

[For discussions about the three members of the Godhead and their divine attributes and manifestations in the world, see GOD; GOD THE FATHER; ELOHIM; MAN OF HOLINESS; JESUS CHRIST; HOLY GHOST; HOLY SPIRIT; GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST; DOVE; SIGN OF. See also GODHOOD; ENDLESS AND ETERNAL; NAME OF GOD; INTELLIGENCE; FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD; OMNIPOTENT GOD, OMNIPRESENCE OF GOD, OMNISCIENCE OF GOD.]

Latter-day Saints believe in God the Father; his Son, Jesus Christ; and the Holy Ghost (A of F 1). These three Gods form the Godhead, which holds the keys of power over the universe. Each member of the Godhead is an independent personage, separate and distinct from the other two, the three being in perfect unity and harmony with each other (AF, chap. 2).

This knowledge concerning the Godhead derives primarily from the Bible and the revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith (see SMITH, JOSEPH: TEACHINGS OF JOSEPH SMITH). For example, the three members of the Godhead were separately manifested at the baptism of Jesus (Matt. 3:16–17) and at the stoning of Stephen (Acts 7:55–56). Joseph Smith commented, “Peter and Stephen testify that they saw the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God. Any person that had seen the heavens opened knows that there are three personages in the heavens who hold the keys of power, and one presides over all” (TPJS, p. 312).

On June 16, 1844, in his last Sunday sermon before his martyrdom, Joseph Smith declared that “in all congregations” he had taught “the plurality of Gods” for fifteen years: “I have always declared God to be a distinct personage, Jesus Christ a separate and distinct personage from God the Father, and that the Holy Ghost was a distinct personage and a Spirit; and these three constitute three distinct personages and three Gods” (TPJS, p. 370). The two earliest surviving accounts of Joseph’s FIRST VISION do not give details on the Godhead, but that he consistently taught that the Father and the Son were separate personages is clearly documentable in most periods of his life (e.g., D&C 76:23 [1832]; 137:3 [1836]; his First Vision, JS–H 1:17 [recorded 1838]; D&C 130:22 [1843]). While the fifth LECTURE ON FAITH (1834) does not identify the Holy Ghost as a “personage,” it affirms that “the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit constitute the Godhead” (cf. Millet, pp. 223–34).

Although the three members of the Godhead are distinct personages, their Godhead is “one” in that all three are united in their thoughts, actions, and purpose, with each having a fulness of knowledge, truth, and power. Each is a God. This does not imply a mystical union of substance or personality. Joseph Smith taught:

Many men say there is one God; the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost are only one God. I say that is a strange God anyhow—three in one, and one in three! It is a curious organization anyhow. “Father, I pray not for the world, but I pray for those that thou hast given me . . . that they may be one as we are.” . . . I want to read the text to yon myself—“I am agreed with the Father and the Father is agreed with me, and we are agreed as one.” The Greek shows that it should be agreed. “Father, I pray for them which thou hast given me out of the world, . . . that they all may be agreed,” and all come to dwell in unity [TPJS, p. 372; cf. John 17:9–11, 20–21; also cf. WJS, p. 380].

The unity prayed for in John 17 provides a model for the LDS understanding of the unity of the God-

head—one that is achieved among distinct individuals by unity of purpose, through faith, and by divine will and action. Joseph Smith taught that the Godhead was united by an “everlasting covenant [that] was made between [these] three personages before the organization of this earth” relevant to their administration to its inhabitants (TPJS, p. 190). The prime purpose of the Godhead and of all those united with them is “to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39; Hinckley, p. 49–51).

Each member of the Godhead fulfills particular functions in relation to each of the others and to mankind. God the Father presides over the Godhead. He is the Father of all human spirits and of the physical body of Jesus Christ. The human body was formed in his image.

Jesus Christ, the Firstborn son of God the Father in the spirit and the Only Begotten son in the flesh, is the creative agent of the Godhead and the redeeming mediator between the Father and mankind. By him God created all things, and through him God revealed the laws of salvation. In him shall all be made alive, and through his atonement all mankind may be reconciled with the Father.

The Holy Ghost is a personage of spirit who bears witness to truth. The Father and the Holy Ghost bear witness of the Son, and the Son and the Holy Ghost bear witness of the Father (3 Ne. 11:32; cf. John 8:18). Through the Holy Ghost, revelations of the Father and of the Son are given.

The LDS doctrine of the Godhead differs from the various concepts of the Trinity. Several postbiblical trinitarian doctrines emerged in Christianity. This “dogmatic development took place gradually, against the background of the emanationist philosophy of Stoicism and Neoplatonism (including the mystical theology of the latter), and within the context of strict Jewish monotheism” (ER 15:54). Trinitarian doctrines sought to elevate God’s oneness or unity, ultimately in some cases describing Jesus as homoousious (of the same substance) with the Father in order to preclude any claim that Jesus was not fully divine. LDS understanding, formulated by latter-day revelation through Joseph Smith, rejects the idea that Jesus or any other personage loses individuality by attaining Godhood or by standing in divine and eternal relationships with other exalted beings.

[See also Christology; Deification.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hinckley, Gordon B. “The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.” Ensign 16 (Nov. 1986):49–51.
- Millet, Robert L. “The Supreme Power over All Things: The Doctrine of the Godhead in the Lectures on Faith.” In The Lectures on Faith in Historical Perspective, ed. L. Dahl and C. Tate, pp. 221–40. Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Roberts, B. H. “The Doctrine of the Church in Respect of the Godhead.” IE 1 (Aug. 1898):754–69.

PAUL E. DAHL

---

GODHOOD

Logically and naturally, the ultimate desire of a loving Supreme Being is to help his children enjoy all that he enjoys. For Latter-day Saints, the term “godhood” denotes the attainment of such a state—one of having all divine attributes and doing as God does and being as God is. Such a state is to be enjoyed by all exalted, embodied, intelligent beings (see DEIFICATION; ETERNAL PROGRESSION; EXALTATION; GOD; PERFECTION). The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that all resurrected and perfected mortals become gods (cf. Gen. 3:22; Matt. 5:48). They will dwell again with GOD THE FATHER, and live and act like him in endless worlds of happiness, power, love, glory, and knowledge; above all, they will have the power of procreating endless lives. Latter-day Saints believe that Jesus Christ attained godhood (see CHRISTOLOGY) and that he marked the path and led the way for others likewise to become exalted divine beings by following him (cf. John 14:3).

The LDS conception of godhood is central to their understanding of why God creates and acts. Latter-day Saints believe in a God who “cleaves unto” other eternal INTELLIGENCES (D&C 88:40) and wants to make them happy. Joseph Smith observed, “Happiness is the object and design of our existence; and will be the end thereof, if we pursue the path that leads to it; and this path is virtue, uprightness, faithfulness, holiness, and keeping all the commandments of God” (TPJS, p. 255). Happiness is the goal of existence, and God created this world in order to promote happiness (2 Ne. 2:25). Because he loves the world, he gave his “only begotten Son” (John 3:16). God gives commandments to help mankind achieve happiness. Joseph Smith wrote: “In obedience there is joy and peace unspotted, unalloyed; and as God has designed our happiness—and the happiness of all His creatures, head—one that is achieved among distinct individuals by unity of purpose, through faith, and by divine will and action. Joseph Smith taught that the Godhead was united by an “everlasting covenant [that] was made between [these] three personages before the organization of this earth” relevant to their administration to its inhabitants (TPJS, p. 190). The prime purpose of the Godhead and of all those united with them is “to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39; Hinckley, p. 49–51).

Each member of the Godhead fulfills particular functions in relation to each of the others and to mankind. God the Father presides over the Godhead. He is the Father of all human spirits and of the physical body of Jesus Christ. The human body was formed in his image.

Jesus Christ, the Firstborn son of God the Father in the spirit and the Only Begotten son in the flesh, is the creative agent of the Godhead and the redeeming mediator between the Father and mankind. By him God created all things, and through him God revealed the laws of salvation. In him shall all be made alive, and through his atonement all mankind may be reconciled with the Father.

The Holy Ghost is a personage of spirit who bears witness to truth. The Father and the Holy Ghost bear witness of the Son, and the Son and the Holy Ghost bear witness of the Father (3 Ne. 11:32; cf. John 8:18). Through the Holy Ghost, revelations of the Father and of the Son are given.

The LDS doctrine of the Godhead differs from the various concepts of the Trinity. Several postbiblical trinitarian doctrines emerged in Christianity. This “dogmatic development took place gradually, against the background of the emanationist philosophy of Stoicism and Neoplatonism (including the mystical theology of the latter), and within the context of strict Jewish monotheism” (ER 15:54). Trinitarian doctrines sought to elevate God’s oneness or unity, ultimately in some cases describing Jesus as homoousious (of the same substance) with the Father in order to preclude any claim that Jesus was not fully divine. LDS understanding, formulated by latter-day revelation through Joseph Smith, rejects the idea that Jesus or any other personage loses individuality by attaining Godhood or by standing in divine and eternal relationships with other exalted beings.

[See also Christology; Deification.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hinckley, Gordon B. “The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.” Ensign 16 (Nov. 1986):49–51.
- Millet, Robert L. “The Supreme Power over All Things: The Doctrine of the Godhead in the Lectures on Faith.” In The Lectures on Faith in Historical Perspective, ed. L. Dahl and C. Tate, pp. 221–40. Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Roberts, B. H. “The Doctrine of the Church in Respect of the Godhead.” IE 1 (Aug. 1898):754–69.

PAUL E. DAHL

---

GODHOOD

Logically and naturally, the ultimate desire of a loving Supreme Being is to help his children enjoy all that he enjoys. For Latter-day Saints, the term “godhood” denotes the attainment of such a state—one of having all divine attributes and doing as God does and being as God is. Such a state is to be enjoyed by all exalted, embodied, intelligent beings (see DEIFICATION; ETERNAL PROGRESSION; EXALTATION; GOD; PERFECTION). The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that all resurrected and perfected mortals become gods (cf. Gen. 3:22; Matt. 5:48). They will dwell again with GOD THE FATHER, and live and act like him in endless worlds of happiness, power, love, glory, and knowledge; above all, they will have the power of procreating endless lives. Latter-day Saints believe that Jesus Christ attained godhood (see CHRISTOLOGY) and that he marked the path and led the way for others likewise to become exalted divine beings by following him (cf. John 14:3).

The LDS conception of godhood is central to their understanding of why God creates and acts. Latter-day Saints believe in a God who “cleaves unto” other eternal INTELLIGENCES (D&C 88:40) and wants to make them happy. Joseph Smith observed, “Happiness is the object and design of our existence; and will be the end thereof, if we pursue the path that leads to it; and this path is virtue, uprightness, faithfulness, holiness, and keeping all the commandments of God” (TPJS, p. 255). Happiness is the goal of existence, and God created this world in order to promote happiness (2 Ne. 2:25). Because he loves the world, he gave his “only begotten Son” (John 3:16). God gives commandments to help mankind achieve happiness. Joseph Smith wrote: “In obedience there is joy and peace unspotted, unalloyed; and as God has designed our happiness—and the happiness of all His creatures, he never has—He never will institute an ordinance or give a commandment to His people that is not calculated in its nature to promote that happiness which He has designed, and which will not end in the greatest amount of good and glory to those who become the recipients of his law and ordinances” (TPJS, pp. 256–57). The Book of Mormon refers to God’s plan of salvation as “the great plan of happiness” (Alma 42:8). In this sense, God creates in order to increase the total happiness in the universe.

As the Supreme Being in the universe, God has the greatest capacity for happiness. Thus, to maximize joy in others, God desires them to be as much like him as possible. “For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39; cf. Ps. 16:11). This latter-day scripture is understood to mean that God’s goal is to help men and women share in the kind of eternal life he lives. Joseph Smith wrote: “God . . . was more intelligent, [and he] saw proper to institute laws whereby [his children] could have a privilege to advance like himself. The relationship we have with God places us in a situation to advance in knowledge. He has power to institute laws to instruct the weaker intelligences, that they may be exalted with himself, so that they might have one glory upon another, and all that knowledge, power, glory, and intelligence, which is requisite in order to save them in the world of spirits” (TPJS, p. 354).

All of God’s spirit children have within them a divine nature with the potential to become like him. To become more like God, individuals must gain increased light and truth and follow all the commandments that God has given. They must know God (John 17:3; D&C 88:49) and see him (1 Jn. 3:2). Those who achieve this level of perfection will become joint-heirs with Christ: “For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. . . . And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together” (Rom. 8:14–17). “All that [the] Father hath” shall be given to them (D&C 84:37–38). In biblical terms, those who are worthy to share in all the power and glory that God himself has are called “gods”: “Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High” (Ps. 82:6; John 10:34–38). Latter-day scriptures refer to several persons, including Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who once lived on earth and who are now resurrected beings and have become gods (D&C 132:37).

Most people are accustomed to using the term “God” to identify only one being, the Father. But the scriptures sometimes use the term to designate others as well. In this sense, while the faithful worship only one God in spirit and in truth, there exist other beings who have attained the necessary intelligence and righteousness to qualify for the title “god.” Jesus Christ is a god and is a separate personage, distinct from God the Father (see GODHEAD).

People qualify themselves for this rank and degree of exaltation by bringing themselves fully in line with all that God has commanded them to do: “Here, then, is eternal life—to know the only wise and true God; and you have got to learn how to be Gods yourselves, and to be kings and priests to God, . . . namely, by going from one small degree to another, and from a small capacity to a great one; from grace to grace, from exaltation to exaltation, until you attain to the resurrection of the dead, and are able to dwell in everlasting burnings, and to sit in glory, as do those who sit enthroned in everlasting power” (TPJS, pp. 346–47).

Joseph Smith also wrote, “Every man who reigns in celestial glory is a God to his dominions” (TPJS, p. 374). This does not mean that any person ever would or could supplant God as the Supreme Being in the universe; but it does mean that through God’s plan and with his help, all men and women have the capacity to participate in God’s eternal work. People participate in this work by righteous living, by giving birth to children in mortality and helping them live righteous lives, and by bringing others to Christ. Moreover, Latter-day Saints believe that those who become gods will have the opportunity to participate even more fully in God’s work of bringing eternal life to other beings. God is referred to as “Father in Heaven” because he is the father of all human spirits (Heb. 12:9; cf. Acts 17:29), imbuing them with divine potentials. Those who become like him will likewise contribute to this eternal process by adding further spirit offspring to the eternal family.

Latter-day Saints believe that God achieved his exalted rank by progressing much as man must progress and that God is a perfected and exalted man: “God himself was once as we are now, and is an exalted man, and sits enthroned in yonder heavens! That is the great secret. If the veil were rent today, and the great God who holds this world in its orbit, and who upholds all worlds and all things by his power, was to make himself visible,—I say, if you were to see him today, you would see him like a man in form—like yourselves in all the person, image, and very form as a man; for Adam was created in the very fashion, image and likeness of God, and received instruction from, and walked, talked and conversed with him, as one man talks and communes with another” (TPJS, p. 345).

Much of the LDS concept of godhood is expressed in a frequently cited aphorism written in 1840 by Lorenzo SNOW, fifth President of the Church. At the time, Snow was twenty-six years old, having been baptized four years earlier. He recorded in his journal that he attended a meeting in which Elder H. G. Sherwood explained the parable of the Savior regarding the husbandman who hired servants and sent them forth at different hours of the day to labor for him in his vineyard. Snow continued, as recorded in his sister’s biography of him: “The Spirit of the Lord rested mightily upon me—the eyes of my understanding were opened, and I saw as clear as the sun at noonday, with wonder and astonishment, the pathway of God and man. I formed the following couplet which expresses the revelation, as it was shown me. . . . As man now is, God once was: As God now is, man may be” (Eliza R. Snow, p. 46).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Snow, Eliza R. Biography and Family Record of Lorenzo Snow. Salt Lake City, 1884.

Snow, LeRoi C. “Devotion to a Divine Inspiration.” IE 22 (1919):653–62.

Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 65–67. Salt Lake City, 1960.

K. CODELL CARTER

GOLD PLATES

On September 21, 1823, the angel Moroni appeared to Joseph SMITH and instructed him about a record engraved on thin goldlike sheets. The record, written by MORONI<sup>2</sup>, his father MORMON, and other ancient inhabitants of the Americas, was buried in a stone box in a hill not far from the Smith residence. Moroni eventually delivered these plates to Joseph, who translated and published them as the Book of Mormon and returned them to Moroni. While the plates were in Joseph’s keeping, others saw them, including eleven witnesses whose testimonies appear in all editions of the book. Various descriptions provided by eyewitnesses suggest that the plates may have been made of a gold alloy, measured about 6 inches by 8 inches (15.2 cm by 20.3 cm), were 6 inches (15.2 cm) thick, and weighed about 50 pounds (22.7 kg).

[See also Book of Mormon Plates and Records; Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith; Book of Mormon Witnesses; Plates, Metal.]

GRANT R. HARDY

GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM

On April 3, 1836, the keys of the “dispensation of the gospel of Abraham” were committed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY in the Kirtland Temple as part of the RESTORATION OF ALL THINGS in the DISPENSATION OF THE FULLNESS OF TIMES (D&C 110:12). It was promised that through latter-day recipients of the gospel and their seed, all generations who accept it shall be blessed (HC 2:434–36). This renewed the promise that was given anciently to Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3; Abr. 2:6, 9–11; cf. Gal. 3:7–9, 29).

Latter-day Saints teach that Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham and many others headed DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL. Divine blessings and commandments were bestowed appropriate to the circumstances of the faithful people of God in each dispensation.

The gospel dispensation of Abraham includes the PATRIARCHAL ORDER OF THE PRIESTHOOD and the eternal marriage covenant (D&C 131:1–4; 132:28–30; see also MARRIAGE: ETERNAL MARRIAGE), by which the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT is perpetuated from generation to generation among the faithful. Abraham was given a promise of innumerable posterity both in the world and out of the world. This promise is renewed for all who obey the gospel of Jesus Christ and receive the priesthood covenant of celestial marriage, “and by this law is the continuation of the works of [the] Father” among mankind both in time and eternity (D&C 132:31–33). The restoration of all things included the restoration of the KEYS to Joseph Smith to make it possible in modern times for all who do today, and the great God who holds this world in its orbit, and who upholds all worlds and all things by his power, was to make himself visible,—I say, if you were to see him today, you would see him like a man in form—like yourselves in all the person, image, and very form as a man; for Adam was created in the very fashion, image and likeness of God, and received instruction from, and walked, talked and conversed with him, as one man talks and communes with another” (TPJS, p. 345).

Much of the LDS concept of godhood is expressed in a frequently cited aphorism written in 1840 by Lorenzo SNOW, fifth President of the Church. At the time, Snow was twenty-six years old, having been baptized four years earlier. He recorded in his journal that he attended a meeting in which Elder H. G. Sherwood explained the parable of the Savior regarding the husbandman who hired servants and sent them forth at different hours of the day to labor for him in his vineyard. Snow continued, as recorded in his sister’s biography of him: “The Spirit of the Lord rested mightily upon me—the eyes of my understanding were opened, and I saw as clear as the sun at noonday, with wonder and astonishment, the pathway of God and man. I formed the following couplet which expresses the revelation, as it was shown me. . . . As man now is, God once was: As God now is, man may be” (Eliza R. Snow, p. 46).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Snow, Eliza R. Biography and Family Record of Lorenzo Snow. Salt Lake City, 1884.

Snow, LeRoi C. “Devotion to a Divine Inspiration.” IE 22 (1919):653–62.

Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 65–67. Salt Lake City, 1960.

K. CODELL CARTER

GOLD PLATES

On September 21, 1823, the angel Moroni appeared to Joseph SMITH and instructed him about a record engraved on thin goldlike sheets. The record, written by MORONI<sup>2</sup>, his father MORMON, and other ancient inhabitants of the Americas, was buried in a stone box in a hill not far from the Smith residence. Moroni eventually delivered these plates to Joseph, who translated and published them as the Book of Mormon and returned them to Moroni. While the plates were in Joseph’s keeping, others saw them, including eleven witnesses whose testimonies appear in all editions of the book. Various descriptions provided by eyewitnesses suggest that the plates may have been made of a gold alloy, measured about 6 inches by 8 inches (15.2 cm by 20.3 cm), were 6 inches (15.2 cm) thick, and weighed about 50 pounds (22.7 kg).

[See also Book of Mormon Plates and Records; Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith; Book of Mormon Witnesses; Plates, Metal.]

GRANT R. HARDY

GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM

On April 3, 1836, the keys of the “dispensation of the gospel of Abraham” were committed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY in the Kirtland Temple as part of the RESTORATION OF ALL THINGS in the DISPENSATION OF THE FULLNESS OF TIMES (D&C 110:12). It was promised that through latter-day recipients of the gospel and their seed, all generations who accept it shall be blessed (HC 2:434–36). This renewed the promise that was given anciently to Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3; Abr. 2:6, 9–11; cf. Gal. 3:7–9, 29).

Latter-day Saints teach that Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham and many others headed DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL. Divine blessings and commandments were bestowed appropriate to the circumstances of the faithful people of God in each dispensation.

The gospel dispensation of Abraham includes the PATRIARCHAL ORDER OF THE PRIESTHOOD and the eternal marriage covenant (D&C 131:1–4; 132:28–30; see also MARRIAGE: ETERNAL MARRIAGE), by which the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT is perpetuated from generation to generation among the faithful. Abraham was given a promise of innumerable posterity both in the world and out of the world. This promise is renewed for all who obey the gospel of Jesus Christ and receive the priesthood covenant of celestial marriage, “and by this law is the continuation of the works of [the] Father” among mankind both in time and eternity (D&C 132:31–33). The restoration of all things included the restoration of the KEYS to Joseph Smith to make it possible in modern times for all who do today, and the great God who holds this world in its orbit, and who upholds all worlds and all things by his power, was to make himself visible,—I say, if you were to see him today, you would see him like a man in form—like yourselves in all the person, image, and very form as a man; for Adam was created in the very fashion, image and likeness of God, and received instruction from, and walked, talked and conversed with him, as one man talks and communes with another” (TPJS, p. 345).

Much of the LDS concept of godhood is expressed in a frequently cited aphorism written in 1840 by Lorenzo SNOW, fifth President of the Church. At the time, Snow was twenty-six years old, having been baptized four years earlier. He recorded in his journal that he attended a meeting in which Elder H. G. Sherwood explained the parable of the Savior regarding the husbandman who hired servants and sent them forth at different hours of the day to labor for him in his vineyard. Snow continued, as recorded in his sister’s biography of him: “The Spirit of the Lord rested mightily upon me—the eyes of my understanding were opened, and I saw as clear as the sun at noonday, with wonder and astonishment, the pathway of God and man. I formed the following couplet which expresses the revelation, as it was shown me. . . . As man now is, God once was: As God now is, man may be” (Eliza R. Snow, p. 46).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Snow, Eliza R. Biography and Family Record of Lorenzo Snow. Salt Lake City, 1884.

Snow, LeRoi C. “Devotion to a Divine Inspiration.” IE 22 (1919):653–62.

Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 65–67. Salt Lake City, 1960.

K. CODELL CARTER

GOLD PLATES

On September 21, 1823, the angel Moroni appeared to Joseph SMITH and instructed him about a record engraved on thin goldlike sheets. The record, written by MORONI<sup>2</sup>, his father MORMON, and other ancient inhabitants of the Americas, was buried in a stone box in a hill not far from the Smith residence. Moroni eventually delivered these plates to Joseph, who translated and published them as the Book of Mormon and returned them to Moroni. While the plates were in Joseph’s keeping, others saw them, including eleven witnesses whose testimonies appear in all editions of the book. Various descriptions provided by eyewitnesses suggest that the plates may have been made of a gold alloy, measured about 6 inches by 8 inches (15.2 cm by 20.3 cm), were 6 inches (15.2 cm) thick, and weighed about 50 pounds (22.7 kg).

[See also Book of Mormon Plates and Records; Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith; Book of Mormon Witnesses; Plates, Metal.]

GRANT R. HARDY

GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM

On April 3, 1836, the keys of the “dispensation of the gospel of Abraham” were committed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY in the Kirtland Temple as part of the RESTORATION OF ALL THINGS in the DISPENSATION OF THE FULLNESS OF TIMES (D&C 110:12). It was promised that through latter-day recipients of the gospel and their seed, all generations who accept it shall be blessed (HC 2:434–36). This renewed the promise that was given anciently to Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3; Abr. 2:6, 9–11; cf. Gal. 3:7–9, 29).

Latter-day Saints teach that Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham and many others headed DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL. Divine blessings and commandments were bestowed appropriate to the circumstances of the faithful people of God in each dispensation.

The gospel dispensation of Abraham includes the PATRIARCHAL ORDER OF THE PRIESTHOOD and the eternal marriage covenant (D&C 131:1–4; 132:28–30; see also MARRIAGE: ETERNAL MARRIAGE), by which the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT is perpetuated from generation to generation among the faithful. Abraham was given a promise of innumerable posterity both in the world and out of the world. This promise is renewed for all who obey the gospel of Jesus Christ and receive the priesthood covenant of celestial marriage, “and by this law is the continuation of the works of [the] Father” among mankind both in time and eternity (D&C 132:31–33). The restoration of all things included the restoration of the KEYS to Joseph Smith to make it possible in modern times for all who do the works of Abraham to inherit the covenant and blessings of Abraham.

[See also Seed of Abraham.]

JOEL A. FLAKE

GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST

[This entry is discussed below under two headings:

The Gospel in LDS Teaching

Etymological Considerations for “Gospel”

The first division outlines the Latter-day Saint conception of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the fundamental teaching of the Church, as it is presented in scripture and in the teachings of the modern prophets. The second explores the complex history of the term and its possible meanings, particularly in Greek-speaking New Testament times.]

THE GOSPEL IN LDS TEACHING

JESUS CHRIST and his APOSTLES and PROPHETS have repeatedly announced the “good news” or “gospel” that by coming to Christ, a person may be saved. The Father is the author of the gospel, but it is called the gospel of Jesus Christ because, in agreement with the Father’s plan, Christ’s ATONEMENT makes the gospel operative in human lives. Christ’s gospel is the only true gospel, and “there shall be no other name given nor any other way nor means whereby salvation can come unto the children of men, only in and through the name of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent” (Mosiah 3:17; cf. Acts 4:12).

Even though Latter-day Saints use the term “gospel” in several ways, including traditional Christian usages, the Book of Mormon and other latter-day SCRIPTURES define it precisely as the way or means by which an individual can come to Christ. In all these scriptural passages, the gospel or DOCTRINE of Christ teaches that salvation is available through his authorized servants to all who will (1) believe in Christ; (2) repent of their SINS; (3) be baptized in water as a witness of their willingness to take his name upon them and keep his COMMANDMENTS; (4) receive the Holy Ghost by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS; and (5) endure to the end. All who obey these commandments and receive the BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST and endure in faith, hope, and charity will be found guiltless at the last day and will enter into the kingdom of heaven (Alma 7:14–16, 24–25; Heb. 6:1–2).

THE PLAN OF SALVATION. President Brigham YOUNG taught that the “Gospel of the Son of God that has been revealed is a plan or system of laws and ordinances, by strict obedience to which the people who inhabit this earth are assured that they may return again into the presence of the Father and the Son” (JD, 13:233). The gospel of Jesus Christ is a key part of the PLAN OF SALVATION (or plan of redemption), which provides an opportunity for all people to obtain ETERNAL LIFE. Because of the FALL OF ADAM, which has passed upon all individuals by inheritance, all are subject to a PHYSICAL DEATH and a SPIRITUAL DEATH (2 Ne. 9:4–12; D&C 29:39–45; 1 Cor. 15:12–22) and cannot save themselves. God, the loving Father of all spirits, has declared that it is his work and glory “to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39). For this purpose he provided a savior, Jesus Christ, who, because of his perfect LOVE, his sinlessness, and his being the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, was both willing and able to offer himself as a sacrifice for the sins of the world (John 3:16). Through his atonement, Christ redeemed all men, women, and children unconditionally from the two deaths occasioned by the transgression of Adam and Eve, and will also redeem them from their own sins, if they accept and obey his gospel (Moses 6:62; D&C 20:17–25; 76:40–53).

BASIC ELEMENTS. Modern revelations state that the Book of Mormon contains “the fulness of the gospel” (D&C 20:9; 27:5; 42:12). Of all the standard works, the Book of Mormon contains the most detailed exposition of the gospel. In three separate passages the basic elements of the gospel are explained by a prophet or by Jesus himself (2 Ne. 31:2–32:6; 3 Ne. 11:31–41; 27:13–21). Each of these passages is framed by the affirmation that “this is my doctrine” or “this is my gospel.” The revelations to the Prophet Joseph SMITH confirm these Book of Mormon statements of the gospel in every detail (see D&C 18:17–23; 19:29–31; 20:25–29).

These core texts repeat the basic elements of the gospel message several times in slightly varied ways. Joseph SMITH referred to them in abbreviated form as “the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel” (A of F 4).

the works of Abraham to inherit the covenant and blessings of Abraham.

[See also Seed of Abraham.]

JOEL A. FLAKE

GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST

[This entry is discussed below under two headings:

The Gospel in LDS Teaching

Etymological Considerations for “Gospel”

The first division outlines the Latter-day Saint conception of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the fundamental teaching of the Church, as it is presented in scripture and in the teachings of the modern prophets. The second explores the complex history of the term and its possible meanings, particularly in Greek-speaking New Testament times.]

THE GOSPEL IN LDS TEACHING

JESUS CHRIST and his APOSTLES and PROPHETS have repeatedly announced the “good news” or “gospel” that by coming to Christ, a person may be saved. The Father is the author of the gospel, but it is called the gospel of Jesus Christ because, in agreement with the Father’s plan, Christ’s ATONEMENT makes the gospel operative in human lives. Christ’s gospel is the only true gospel, and “there shall be no other name given nor any other way nor means whereby salvation can come unto the children of men, only in and through the name of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent” (Mosiah 3:17; cf. Acts 4:12).

Even though Latter-day Saints use the term “gospel” in several ways, including traditional Christian usages, the Book of Mormon and other latter-day SCRIPTURES define it precisely as the way or means by which an individual can come to Christ. In all these scriptural passages, the gospel or DOCTRINE of Christ teaches that salvation is available through his authorized servants to all who will (1) believe in Christ; (2) repent of their SINS; (3) be baptized in water as a witness of their willingness to take his name upon them and keep his COMMANDMENTS; (4) receive the Holy Ghost by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS; and (5) endure to the end. All who obey these commandments and receive the BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST and endure in faith, hope, and charity will be found guiltless at the last day and will enter into the kingdom of heaven (Alma 7:14–16, 24–25; Heb. 6:1–2).

THE PLAN OF SALVATION. President Brigham YOUNG taught that the “Gospel of the Son of God that has been revealed is a plan or system of laws and ordinances, by strict obedience to which the people who inhabit this earth are assured that they may return again into the presence of the Father and the Son” (JD, 13:233). The gospel of Jesus Christ is a key part of the PLAN OF SALVATION (or plan of redemption), which provides an opportunity for all people to obtain ETERNAL LIFE. Because of the FALL OF ADAM, which has passed upon all individuals by inheritance, all are subject to a PHYSICAL DEATH and a SPIRITUAL DEATH (2 Ne. 9:4–12; D&C 29:39–45; 1 Cor. 15:12–22) and cannot save themselves. God, the loving Father of all spirits, has declared that it is his work and glory “to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man” (Moses 1:39). For this purpose he provided a savior, Jesus Christ, who, because of his perfect LOVE, his sinlessness, and his being the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, was both willing and able to offer himself as a sacrifice for the sins of the world (John 3:16). Through his atonement, Christ redeemed all men, women, and children unconditionally from the two deaths occasioned by the transgression of Adam and Eve, and will also redeem them from their own sins, if they accept and obey his gospel (Moses 6:62; D&C 20:17–25; 76:40–53).

BASIC ELEMENTS. Modern revelations state that the Book of Mormon contains “the fulness of the gospel” (D&C 20:9; 27:5; 42:12). Of all the standard works, the Book of Mormon contains the most detailed exposition of the gospel. In three separate passages the basic elements of the gospel are explained by a prophet or by Jesus himself (2 Ne. 31:2–32:6; 3 Ne. 11:31–41; 27:13–21). Each of these passages is framed by the affirmation that “this is my doctrine” or “this is my gospel.” The revelations to the Prophet Joseph SMITH confirm these Book of Mormon statements of the gospel in every detail (see D&C 18:17–23; 19:29–31; 20:25–29).

These core texts repeat the basic elements of the gospel message several times in slightly varied ways. Joseph SMITH referred to them in abbreviated form as “the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel” (A of F 4).

1. Faith. LDS teaching emphasizes FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST as the first principle of the gospel. The priority of faith is twofold. The individual who accepts the gospel must start with faith in Jesus Christ, believing in him and his power to save people from their sins. Without faith, no one would be strongly motivated to repent and to live the rest of the gospel principles. Faith is also fundamental to the other elements of the gospel in that each of them is dependent on acts of faith in important ways. In this sense, NEPHI<sub>1</sub> compares living the gospel to entering a strait and narrow path that leads to eternal life. The gate by which one can enter this path is repentance and baptism. With the guidance of the Holy Ghost, one can follow the path, exercising faith and enduring to the end. Thus, faith in Jesus Christ is a link between what one does to enter the gate and what must be done thereafter. One cannot have entered the gate by repenting and making baptismal covenants “save it were by the word of Christ with unshaken faith in him, relying wholly upon the merits of him who is mighty to save” (2 Ne. 31:19). After starting on this strait and narrow path, one cannot reach salvation except by “press[ing] forward with a steadfastness [faith] in Christ . . . feasting upon the word of Christ” (2 Ne. 31:20), which includes those things that the HOLY GHOST tells one to do (2 Ne. 32:3, 5).

2. Repentance. The centrality of faith is emphasized by the way the gospel is presented in the Book of Mormon, with faith usually mentioned in the center and the call to REPENTANCE at the first. Individuals must forsake their sins and offer up “a sacrifice . . . [of] a broken heart and a contrite spirit.” This requires that the sinner come down into the depths of HUMILITY and become “as a little child” (3 Ne. 9:20–22).

3. Baptism. The gospel emphasizes the absolute need for baptism for those accountable and capable of sin. Like repentance, baptism is also a commandment, and candidates for salvation must be baptized in order to obey the commandment (see 2 Ne. 31:6–7).

This essential ordinance is a witness to the Father that the repentant individual has covenanted with God to keep his commandments and has taken upon himself or herself the name of Christ. Faith in Jesus Christ, repentance, and baptism are the gate by which one enters into the way that leads to eternal life (2 Ne. 31:13–15). Because infants are incapable of sin or of making such covenants, parents are instructed to prepare them for baptism by the time they reach eight years of age, the age of ACCOUNTABILITY established in revelation (D&C 68:25–28; see INFANT BAPTISM).

4. The Holy Ghost. While water baptism symbolizes purification and rising from death to life, the actual cleansing or REMISSION OF SINS comes by obedience, and as a gift from God “by fire and by the Holy Ghost” (2 Ne. 31:17; Matt. 3:11), by which the individual is BORN OF GOD, having become a “new creature” (Mosiah 27:24–26; 1 Pet. 1:23). This spiritual experience is a witness from the Father and the Son that the sacrifice of the penitent has been accepted. After Jesus had taught the Nephites and they were baptized, “the Holy Ghost did fall upon them, and they were filled with the Holy Ghost and with fire” (3 Ne. 19:13; cf. Acts 2:4).

The GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, administered by the laying on of hands by one having authority, includes the promise “If ye will enter in by the way, and receive the Holy Ghost, it will show unto you all things what ye should do” (2 Ne. 32:5). This gift is a constant companion by which the individual receives “the words of Christ” directly for guidance in his or her own life, in addition to inspired instruction from Church leaders (2 Ne. 32:3; see also John 14:26; 16:13).

5. Endure to the End. “Enduring to the end” is the scriptural phrase describing the subsequent life of a member of Christ’s church who has embraced the first principles of the gospel and has entered the gate that leads to eternal life. Once on this strait and narrow path, the member must press forward in faith, and continue in obedience to all the commandments of God.

Faith is linked with hope and charity. Receiving a remission of sins generates a hope of salvation. This is more than a desire, and gives a feeling of assurance. Such hope grows continually brighter through the workings of the Holy Ghost if one is consistently obedient (Ether 12:4). Charity, the “pure love of Christ,” is characteristic of those who obey the commandments (Moro. 7:3–4, 47). Such persons reflect to others the same kind of pure love that they experience from the Lord.

6. Salvation. In addition to receiving daily blessings, Jesus Christ promises that those who comply with all of the principles and ordinances will receive eternal life. As revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith, salvation entails becoming an HEIR to the fulness of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM (D&C 76:50–70).

All LDS standard works contain clear statements of the gospel of Jesus Christ (see D&C 10:63–70; 11:9–24; 19:29–32; 20:37; 33:10–13; 39:6; 68:25; Moses 5:14–15, 58; 6:50–53). Latter-day Saints find the same concept in many New Testament passages (Matt. 3:11; 24:13–14; Acts 2:38; 19:4–6; Rom. 1:16), although frequently only a few of the six key elements are specifically mentioned in any one passage. This is also true of the Book of Mormon. For example, the promise “They that believe in him shall be saved” (2 Ne. 2:9) may be understood as a merism (an abbreviation of a formula retaining only the first and last elements) that implicitly invokes all six components even though they are not mentioned individually. Another merism states that believing in Jesus and enduring to the end is life eternal (2 Ne. 33:4; cf. v. 9).

OTHER MEANINGS. Although emphasis is placed on truths necessary for salvation, LDS usage of the term “gospel” is not confined to the scriptural definition. Latter-day Saints commonly refer to the entire body of their religious beliefs as “the gospel.” By the broadest interpretation, all TRUTH originating with God may be included within the gospel. President Joseph F. SMITH said:

In the theological sense, the gospel means more than just the tidings of good news, with accompanying joy to the souls of men, for it embraces every principle of eternal truth. There is no fundamental principle, or truth anywhere in the universe, that is not embraced in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and it is not confined to the simple first principles, such as faith in God, repentance from sin, baptism for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, although these are absolutely essential to salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of God [pp. 85–86].

Notwithstanding this wide range of meanings associated with the gospel, as President Smith explained, the saving truths encompassed by the first principles are indispensable and must be followed to obtain salvation. They are the central focus of the Church’s teachings and practices. Latter-day Saints are under strict command to share the fundamental, first principles of the gospel with others so that all may have an equal chance to obtain salvation. Proselytizing efforts of individual members and full-time MISSIONARIES are intended to invite others to come to Christ through obedience to gospel principles and ordinances.

President Ezra Taft BENSON has similarly explained that “the gospel can be viewed from two perspectives. In the broadest sense, the gospel embraces all truth, all light, all revealed knowledge to mankind. In a more restrictive sense the gospel means the doctrine of the Fall . . . [and] atonement.” Clarifying the restrictive sense, he explained:

When the Savior referred to his gospel, He meant the . . . laws, covenants, and ordinances that men must comply with to work out their salvation. He meant faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance from all sin, baptism by immersion by a legal administrator for the remission of our sins, and the receipt of the gift of the Holy Ghost, and finally he meant that one should be valiant in his testimony of Jesus until the end of his days. This is the gospel Jesus preached [p. 30].

Those who die without hearing the gospel while in MORTALITY will receive this opportunity in the SPIRIT WORLD. The necessary ordinances of baptism and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost will be performed on behalf of the dead by living members in Latter-day Saint TEMPLES. The deceased will decide for themselves whether to accept or reject the ordinances performed in their behalf (see SALVATION OF THE DEAD).

ETERNAL NATURE OF THE GOSPEL. Latter-day Saints believe that the gospel has always existed and will continue to exist throughout the eternities. The Prophet Joseph Smith said, “The great Jehovah contemplated the whole of the events connected with the earth, pertaining to the plan of salvation, before it rolled into existence, or ever ‘the morning stars sang together’ for joy” (TPJS, p. 220). The eternal nature of the gospel was also emphasized by President John TAYLOR, who declared that “the gospel is a living, abiding, eternal, and unchangeable principle that has existed co-equal with God, and always will exist, while time and eternity endure, wherever it is developed and made manifest” (p. 88).

LDS scriptures explain that after the Lord had taught Adam and Eve the plan of salvation and the gospel (Moses 5:4–11), Adam was “caught away by the Spirit of the Lord” into the water where he was baptized. Following his baptism, the “Spirit of God descended upon him, and thus he was born of the Spirit" (Moses 6:48–68). In later describing this experience, Enoch explained that God ealled upon Adam with his own voice, teaching him the same gospel set out in other scriptures:

If thou wilt turn unto me, and hearken unto my voice, and believe, and repent of all thy transgressions, and be baptized, even in water, in the name of mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth, which is Jesus Christ, the only name which shall be given under heaven, whereby salvation shall come unto the children of men, ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost [Moses 6:52].

Latter-day scripture records that Adam and Eve taught their children the gospel, but that Satan came among them and persuaded some to love him more than God (Moses 5:13; see DEVIL). Thus it has been with the descendants of Adam and Eve, and in this situation, the Lord called upon people everywhere to believe in the Son and to repent of their sins that they might be saved. This gospel message was a "firm decree" sent forth "in the world, until the end thereof," and was preached from the beginning by ANGELS, by the voice of God, and by the Holy Ghost (Moses 5:12–15, 58–59).

Latter-day Saints understand the history of the world in terms of periods of faithfulness and of APOSTASY. Although there have been many times when the gospel of Jesus Christ has been lost from the earth, it has repeatedly been restored through prophets sent to declare new DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL. The gospel has been given to successive generations and will maintain its efficacy forever. The RESTORATION of the fulness of the gospel to Joseph Smith initiated the "last dispensation," or the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES, and he was promised that the gospel will never again be taken from the earth. The gospel of Jesus Christ continues to be the only means given under heaven whereby men and women can come to their Savior and be saved, and is the standard against which all people will be judged (see JUDGMENT DAY).

ETYMOLOGICAL CONSIDERATIONS FOR "GOSPEL"

The English word "gospel" is derived from the Old English godspel (god story). It was chosen by English translators of the NEW TESTAMENT as a translation of the Greek euaggelion (Latin, evangelium) or "good news." The term is used in the New Testament principally to refer to the message of salvation through Jesus Christ, often referred to as the "gospel of Jesus Christ" (Mark 1:1) or the "gospel of the Kingdom of God" (Mark 1:14; Luke 8:1). The gospel or "good news" in the New Testament is the "glad tidings" to all that if they will come to Christ and keep his commandments, they will be saved (Matt. 7:21; Mark 16:15–16). PAUL uses euaggelion more than other New Testament writers, adopting both noun and verb forms of the Greek term. The practice of referring to written accounts of the life and ministry of Jesus as "gospels" arose among Christians in the first century and was well established by the second.

Although latter-day scriptures give a more definite and formulaic concept of the gospel, their teaching is consistent with and enhanced by scholarly reflections on the possible etymologies of the New Testament term. Both Hebrew and Greek antecedents occur in verb and derivative noun forms, the primary sense referring to the delivery of messages, particularly good news—victory in battle being a common example. This is expanded in Isaiah by application to the herald who announces the return of exiles to Jerusalem, proclaiming the good news of prosperity and deliverance and the kingship of Jehovah (Isaiah 52:7; see Friedrich, p. 708).

Ancient Greek usage of euaggelion included the ideas of liberation from enemies and deliverance from demonic powers. It can refer to oracular sayings, but more precisely to their fulfillment. This cluster of meanings made euaggelion an appropriate term for New Testament writers who understood the gospel as the means by which men can escape the evil powers of this world and as the fulfillment of ancient prophecies of a coming Messiah.

Religious usage of euaggelion before Christian times was common to the popular imperial cults in which the worship of Greek and Roman emperors was believed to bring wealth and power in various forms. When first used by Christians, this language must have been ironic, having the effect of forcing its hearers and readers to compare Caesar on his throne and Christ on the cross, and to make the corresponding choice between the universal pursuit of power and wealth (material benefits) in this world and the singular way of faith, repentance, and the Spirit taught by Jesus. This implicit comparison becomes explicit when three New Testament gospels report Jesus' instruction to "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's" (Mark 12:17; cf. Matt. 22:21 and Luke 20:25). Paul uses the same irony when he calls the gospel a mystery (see Friedrich, pp. 712, 723–25; Eph. 6:19). The disappointment of some with Jesus as Messiah was precisely that he was not the kind of savior worshipped in the cults of emperors.

The Book of Mormon uses the terms "gospel" and "doctrine" interchangeably, in a way that is consistent with New Testament usage, at least to the extent that both imply communications that can be reduced to verbal statements (see DOCTRINE). The New Testament term "doctrine" (didaskalia) means "teaching" and refers either to the doctrine of Christ, or to the vain teachings of people or devils. Similarly, Book of Mormon writers use both "gospel" and "doctrine" to refer to a teaching that can be reduced to a set of statements or "points of . . . doctrine" (1 Ne. 15:14; Hel. 11:22).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Collins, Raymond F. "Gospel." Encyclopedia of Religion, Vol. 6, pp. 79–82. New York, 1987.
- Friedrich, Gerhard. "Euaggelizomai, Euaggelion, . . ." In Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, Gerhard Kittel, ed., Vol. 2, pp. 707–737. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964.
- Nibbley, Hugh. "Prophets and Glad Tidings." In CWIIN 3: 259–67.
- Piper, O. A. "Gospel." In Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 442–48. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- Roberts, B. H. The Gospel: An Exposition of Its First Principles and Man's Relationship to Deity. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Smith, Joseph F. GD, pp. 85–86, 95–106.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 52–170.
- Taylor, John. Gospel Kingdom. Salt Lake City, 1964.
- Yarn, David H., Jr. The Gospel: God, Man, and Truth. Salt Lake City, 1965.

NOEL B. REYNOLDS

GRACE

One of the most controversial issues in Christian theology is whether salvation is the free gift of unmerited grace or is earned through good WORKS. Paul's statement that "a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law" (Rom. 3:28) is frequently cited to support the former view, while James's statement that "faith without works is dead" (James 2:20) is often quoted in favor of the latter view. The LDS doctrine that salvation requires both grace and works is a revealed yet commonsense reconciliation of these contradictory positions.

C. S. Lewis wrote that this dispute "does seem to me like asking which blade in a pair of scissors is most necessary" (p. 129). And in one way or another almost all Christian denominations ultimately accept the need for both grace and works, but the differences in meaning and emphasis among the various doctrinal traditions remain substantial.

LDS doctrine contains an affirmative sense of interaction between grace and works that is unique not only as to these concepts but also reflects the uniqueness of the restored gospel's view of man's nature, the FALL OF ADAM, the ATONEMENT, and the process of salvation. At the same time, the LDS view contains features that are similar to basic elements of some other traditions. For example, the LDS insistence that such works as ORDINANCES be performed with proper priesthood AUTHORITY resembles the Catholic teaching that its sacraments are the requisite channels of grace. Also the LDS emphasis on the indispensability of personal faith and REPENTANCE in a direct relationship with God echoes traditional Protestant teachings. The LDS position "is not a convenient eclecticism, but a repossession [through the Restoration] of a New Testament understanding that reconciles Paul and James" (Madsen, p. 175).

The Church's emphasis on personal responsibility and the need for self-disciplined obedience may seem to de-emphasize the role of Christ's grace; however, for Latter-day Saints, obedience is but one blade of the scissors. All of LDS theology also reflects the major premise of the Book of Mormon that without grace there is no salvation: "For we know that it is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do" (2 Ne. 25:23). The source of this grace is the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ: "Mercy cometh because of the atonement" (Alma 42:23).

The teachings of Christian theology since the Middle Ages are rooted in the belief that, primarily because of the effects of the Fall and original sin, humankind has an inherently evil nature. In both the Catholic and the Protestant traditions, only the grace of God can overcome this natural evil. Various Christian writers have disputed the extent to which the bestowal of grace completely overcomes man's dark nature. In the fifth century,

God the things that are God's" (Mark 12:17; cf. Matt. 22:21 and Luke 20:25). Paul uses the same irony when he calls the gospel a mystery (see Friedrich, pp. 712, 723–25; Eph. 6:19). The disappointment of some with Jesus as Messiah was precisely that he was not the kind of savior worshipped in the cults of emperors.

The Book of Mormon uses the terms "gospel" and "doctrine" interchangeably, in a way that is consistent with New Testament usage, at least to the extent that both imply communications that can be reduced to verbal statements (see DOCTRINE). The New Testament term "doctrine" (didaskalia) means "teaching" and refers either to the doctrine of Christ, or to the vain teachings of people or devils. Similarly, Book of Mormon writers use both "gospel" and "doctrine" to refer to a teaching that can be reduced to a set of statements or "points of . . . doctrine" (1 Ne. 15:14; Hel. 11:22).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Collins, Raymond F. "Gospel." Encyclopedia of Religion, Vol. 6, pp. 79–82. New York, 1987.
- Friedrich, Gerhard. "Euaggelizomai, Euaggelion, . . ." In Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, Gerhard Kittel, ed., Vol. 2, pp. 707–737. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964.
- Nibbley, Hugh. "Prophets and Glad Tidings." In CWIIN 3: 259–67.
- Piper, O. A. "Gospel." In Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 442–48. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- Roberts, B. H. The Gospel: An Exposition of Its First Principles and Man's Relationship to Deity. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Smith, Joseph F. GD, pp. 85–86, 95–106.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 52–170.
- Taylor, John. Gospel Kingdom. Salt Lake City, 1964.
- Yarn, David H., Jr. The Gospel: God, Man, and Truth. Salt Lake City, 1965.

NOEL B. REYNOLDS

GRACE

One of the most controversial issues in Christian theology is whether salvation is the free gift of unmerited grace or is earned through good WORKS. Paul's statement that "a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law" (Rom. 3:28) is frequently cited to support the former view, while James's statement that "faith without works is dead" (James 2:20) is often quoted in favor of the latter view. The LDS doctrine that salvation requires both grace and works is a revealed yet commonsense reconciliation of these contradictory positions.

C. S. Lewis wrote that this dispute "does seem to me like asking which blade in a pair of scissors is most necessary" (p. 129). And in one way or another almost all Christian denominations ultimately accept the need for both grace and works, but the differences in meaning and emphasis among the various doctrinal traditions remain substantial.

LDS doctrine contains an affirmative sense of interaction between grace and works that is unique not only as to these concepts but also reflects the uniqueness of the restored gospel's view of man's nature, the FALL OF ADAM, the ATONEMENT, and the process of salvation. At the same time, the LDS view contains features that are similar to basic elements of some other traditions. For example, the LDS insistence that such works as ORDINANCES be performed with proper priesthood AUTHORITY resembles the Catholic teaching that its sacraments are the requisite channels of grace. Also the LDS emphasis on the indispensability of personal faith and REPENTANCE in a direct relationship with God echoes traditional Protestant teachings. The LDS position "is not a convenient eclecticism, but a repossession [through the Restoration] of a New Testament understanding that reconciles Paul and James" (Madsen, p. 175).

The Church's emphasis on personal responsibility and the need for self-disciplined obedience may seem to de-emphasize the role of Christ's grace; however, for Latter-day Saints, obedience is but one blade of the scissors. All of LDS theology also reflects the major premise of the Book of Mormon that without grace there is no salvation: "For we know that it is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do" (2 Ne. 25:23). The source of this grace is the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ: "Mercy cometh because of the atonement" (Alma 42:23).

The teachings of Christian theology since the Middle Ages are rooted in the belief that, primarily because of the effects of the Fall and original sin, humankind has an inherently evil nature. In both the Catholic and the Protestant traditions, only the grace of God can overcome this natural evil. Various Christian writers have disputed the extent to which the bestowal of grace completely overcomes man's dark nature. In the fifth century, reflecting his personal struggle with what he believed to be his own inherent evil nature, Augustine saw grace as the only escape from the evil of earthly pleasures and the influence of the worldly "city of man." In the thirteenth century Thomas Aquinas was more sanguine, recognizing the serious wounding caused by original sin, but also defending man's natural potential for good.

In the early sixteenth century, Martin Luther, through his reading of Paul and reacting against the sale of indulgences, concluded that faith, God's unilateral gift to chosen individuals, is the true source of grace and, therefore, of justification before God. Luther thus (perhaps unintentionally) broke the medieval church's control over grace, thereby unleashing the political force of the PROTESTANT REFORMATION. For Luther, man's individual effort can in no way "earn" or otherwise be part in the righteousness infused by grace. Even the good works demonstrated in a life of obedience to God are but the visible effects of grace. This idea later influenced the development of the Puritan ethic in America. John Calvin, Luther's contemporary, developed a complete doctrine of PREDESTINATION based on Luther's idea that God unilaterally chooses those on whom he bestows the gifts of faith and grace.

The Catholic response to Luther's challenge rejected predestination and reaffirmed both that grace is mediated by church sacraments and that grace cannot totally displace human AGENCY. At the same time, Catholic thought underscored the primacy of God's initiative. "Prevenient grace" operates upon the human will before one turns to God; yet, once touched by grace, one is still free to cooperate or not. The interaction between divine grace and human freedom is not totally clear; however, grace is increased as one obeys God's commandments, and grace raises one's natural good works to actions of supernatural value in a process of spiritual regeneration.

In recent years, some Protestant theologians have questioned the way an exclusive emphasis on unmerited grace negates a sense of personal responsibility. Dietrich Bonhoeffer, for example, condemned the idea of "cheap grace," which falsely supposes that because "the account has been paid in advance . . . everything can be had for nothing" (The Cost of Discipleship, 1963, p. 45). John MacArthur was concerned that contemporary evangelism promises sinners that they "can have eternal life yet continue to live in rebellion against God" (The Gospel According to Jesus, 1988, pp. 15–16). And Paul Holmer wrote that stressing the dangers of works is "inappropriate if the listeners are not even trying! Most Church listeners are not in much danger of working their way into heaven" ("Law and Gospel Re-examined," Theology Today 10 [1953–54]:474).

Some Latter-day Saints have shared similar concerns about the limitations of a one-sided view of the grace-works controversy, just as they have shared the Catholic concern about a doctrine of grace that undercuts the fundamental nature of free will. Latter-day Saints see Paul's writing about the inadequacy of works and "the deeds of the law" (Rom. 3:27–28) as referring mainly to the inadequacy of the ritual works of the law of Moses, "which had been superseded by the higher requirements of the Gospel [of Jesus Christ]"; thus, Paul correctly regarded many of "the outward forms and ceremonies" of the law of Moses as "unessential works" (AF, p. 480). As the prophet ABINADI declared in the Book of Mormon (c. 150 B.C.), "Salvation doth not come by the law alone; and were it not for the atonement, which God himself shall make for the sins and iniquities of his people, . . . they must unavoidably perish, notwithstanding the law of Moses" (Mosiah 13:28).

In a broader sense, LDS devotion to the primary role of grace while concurrently emphasizing self-reliance stems from a unique doctrinal view of man's nature and destiny. As noted by Reformation scholar John Dillenberger, "In stressing human possibilities, Mormonism brought things into line, not by abandoning the centrality of grace but by insisting that the [real] powers of humanity . . . reflected the actual state of humanity as such. . . . Mormonism brought understanding to what had become an untenable problem within evangelicalism: how to reconcile the new power of humanity with the negative inherited views of humanity, without abandoning the necessity of grace." In this way, Dillenberger concluded, "perhaps Mormonism . . . is the authentic American theology, for the self-reliance of revivalist fundamentalist groups stood in marked contrast to their inherited conception of the misery of humanity" (p. 179).

In LDS teachings, the fall of Adam made Christ's redemption necessary, but not because the Fall by itself made man evil. Because of transgression, Adam and Eve were expelled from Eden into a world that was subject to death and evil influences. However, the Lord revealed to Adam upon his entry into mortality that “the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt”; therefore, Adam’s children were not evil, but were “whole from the foundation of the world” (Moses 6:54). Thus, “every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning; and God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again, in their infant state, innocent before God” (D&C 93:38).

As the descendants of Adam and Eve then become accountable for their own sins at age eight, all of them taste sin as the result of their own free choice. “All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God” (Rom. 3:23). One whose cumulative experience leads her or him to love “Satan more than God” (Moses 5:28) will eventually become “carnal, sensual, and devilish” (Moses 5:13; 6:49) by nature. On the other hand, one who consciously accepts Christ’s grace through the Atonement by faith, repentance, and baptism yields to “the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord” (Mosiah 3:19). In this way, the individual takes the initiative to accept the grace made available by the Atonement, exercising faith through a willing “desire to believe” (Alma 32:27). That desire is often kindled by hearing others bear testimony of Christ. When this word of Christ is planted and then nourished through obedience interacting with grace, as summarized below, the individual may “become a saint” by nature, thereby enjoying eternal (meaning godlike) life.

Grace is thus the source of three categories of blessings related to mankind’s salvation. First, many blessings of grace are unconditional—free and unmerited gifts requiring no individual action. God’s grace in this sense is a factor in the Creation, the Fall, the Atonement, and the plan of salvation. Specifically regarding the Fall, and despite death and other conditions resulting from Adam’s transgression, Christ’s grace has atoned for original sin and has assured the resurrection of all humankind: “We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam’s transgression” (A of F 2).

Second, the Savior has also atoned conditionally for personal sins. The application of grace to personal sins is conditional because it is available only when an individual repents, which can be a demanding form of works. Because of this condition, mercy is able to satisfy the demands of justice with neither mercy nor justice robbing the other. Personal repentance is therefore a necessary condition of salvation, but it is not by itself sufficient to assure salvation (see JUSTICE AND MERCY). In addition, one must accept the ordinances of BAPTISM and the LAYING ON OF HANDS to receive the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, by which one is born again as the spirit child of Christ and may eventually become sanctified (cf. D&C 76:51–52; see also GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST).

Third, after one has received Christ’s gospel of faith, repentance, and baptism unto forgiveness of sin, relying “wholly upon the merits of him who is mighty to save,” one has only “entered in by the gate” to the “strait and narrow path which leads to eternal life” (2 Ne. 31:17–20). In this postbaptism stage of spiritual development, one’s best efforts—further works—are required to “endure to the end” (2 Ne. 31:20). These efforts include obeying the Lord’s commandments and receiving the higher ordinances performed in the temples, and continuing a repentance process as needed “to retain a remission of your sins” (Mosiah 4:12).

In the teachings of Martin Luther, such works of righteousness are not the result of personal initiative but are the spontaneous effects of the internal grace one has received, wholly the fruits of the gracious tree. In LDS doctrine by contrast, “men should . . . do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness. For the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves” (D&C 58:27–28). At the same time, individuals lack the capacity to develop a Christlike nature by their own effort. The perfecting attributes such as hope and charity are ultimately “bestowed upon all who are true followers . . . of Jesus Christ” (Moro. 7:48) by grace through his atonement. This interactive relationship between human and divine powers in LDS theology derives both from the significance it attaches to free will and from its optimism about the “fruits of the spirit” (Gal. 5:22–25) among the truly converted, “those who love me and keep all my commandments, and him that seeketh so to do” (D&C 46:9).

God bestows these additional, perfecting expressions of grace conditionally, as he does the grace that allows forgiveness of sin. They are given “after all we can do” (2 Ne. 25:23)—that is, in addition to our best efforts. In general, this condition is related less to obeying particular commandments than it is to one’s fundamental spiritual character, such as “meekness and lowliness of heart” (Moro.

8:26) and possessing "a broken heart and a contrite spirit" (Ps. 51:17; 3 Ne. 9:20; Hafen, chap. 9). Or, as Moroni wrote at the end of the Book of Mormon, "If ye shall deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and love God with all your might, mind, and strength, then is his grace sufficient for you, that by his grace ye may be perfect in Christ; . . . then are ye sanctified in Christ by the grace of God, through the shedding of the blood of Christ" (Moro. 10:32-33).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dillenberger, John. "Grace and Works in Martin Luther and Joseph Smith." In Reflections on Mormonism: Judaean-Christian Parallels, ed. Truman G. Madsen. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Hafen, Bruce C. The Broken Heart: Applying the Atonement to Life's Experiences. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Holmer, Paul L. "Law and Gospel Re-examined." Theology Today 10 (1953-1954):474.
- Keller, Roger R. Reformed Christians and Mormon Christians: Let's Talk! Urbana, Ill., 1986.
- Lewis, C. S. Mere Christianity. New York, 1943.
- Madsen, Truman G. Reflections on Mormonism, p. 175. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- McDonald, William, ed. "Grace." In New Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 6. New York, 1967.
- Millet, Robert L. By Grace Are We Saved. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Rahner, Karl, ed. The Teaching of the Catholic Church. Regensburg, Germany, 1965.

BRUCE C. HAFEN

GRANITE MOUNTAIN RECORD VAULT

Since 1938, the GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH has been collecting genealogical and historical information on rolls of microfilm. The Granite Mountain Record Vault is the permanent repository for these microfilms. It is located about one mile from the mouth of Little Cottonwood Canyon in Utah's Wasatch Range, twenty miles southeast of downtown Salt Lake City.

The Vault, as it is commonly known, is a massive excavation reaching 600 feet into the north side of the canyon. Constructed between 1958 and 1963 at a cost of $2 million, it consists of two main areas. The office and laboratory section sits beneath an overhang of about 300 feet of granite and houses shipping and receiving docks, microfilm processing and evaluation stations, and administrative offices. Under 700 feet of stone, the Vault proper is situated farther back in the mountain behind the laboratory section and consists of six chambers (each 190 feet long, 25 feet wide, and 25 feet high), which are accessed by one main entrance and two smaller passageways. Specially constructed Mosler doors weighing fourteen tons (at the main entrance) and nine tons (guarding the two smaller entrances) are designed to withstand a nuclear blast. In the six chambers, nature maintains constant humidity and temperature readings optimum for microfilm storage.

The Granite Mountain Record Vault, carved from solid rock in the Wasatch Mountains near Salt Lake City, Utah, is the repository of millions of feet of microfilmed genealogical records from around the world (c. 1980).

Each chamber contains banks of steel cabinets ten feet high. As of February 1991, approximately 1.7 million rolls of microfilm, in 16mm and 35mm formats, were housed in two of the six chambers. The collection increases by 40,000 rolls per year. Alternate media, such as optical disks with greater capacity for storage than microfilm, are being considered for use and may make further expansion of the Vault unnecessary.

The genealogical information contained on these microfilms is collected from churches, libraries, and governmental agencies and consists primarily of birth, marriage, and death registers; wills and probates; census reports; and other documents that can be used to establish individual identities. Latter-day Saints use such information to assemble family group charts and pedigrees for the purpose of binding together ancestral lines of kinship through sealing ordinances performed by proxy in

8:26) and possessing "a broken heart and a contrite spirit" (Ps. 51:17; 3 Ne. 9:20; Hafen, chap. 9). Or, as Moroni wrote at the end of the Book of Mormon, "If ye shall deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and love God with all your might, mind, and strength, then is his grace sufficient for you, that by his grace ye may be perfect in Christ; . . . then are ye sanctified in Christ by the grace of God, through the shedding of the blood of Christ" (Moro. 10:32-33).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dillenberger, John. "Grace and Works in Martin Luther and Joseph Smith." In Reflections on Mormonism: Judaean-Christian Parallels, ed. Truman G. Madsen. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Hafen, Bruce C. The Broken Heart: Applying the Atonement to Life's Experiences. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Holmer, Paul L. "Law and Gospel Re-examined." Theology Today 10 (1953-1954):474.
- Keller, Roger R. Reformed Christians and Mormon Christians: Let's Talk! Urbana, Ill., 1986.
- Lewis, C. S. Mere Christianity. New York, 1943.
- Madsen, Truman G. Reflections on Mormonism, p. 175. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- McDonald, William, ed. "Grace." In New Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 6. New York, 1967.
- Millet, Robert L. By Grace Are We Saved. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Rahner, Karl, ed. The Teaching of the Catholic Church. Regensburg, Germany, 1965.

BRUCE C. HAFEN

GRANITE MOUNTAIN RECORD VAULT

Since 1938, the GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH has been collecting genealogical and historical information on rolls of microfilm. The Granite Mountain Record Vault is the permanent repository for these microfilms. It is located about one mile from the mouth of Little Cottonwood Canyon in Utah's Wasatch Range, twenty miles southeast of downtown Salt Lake City.

The Vault, as it is commonly known, is a massive excavation reaching 600 feet into the north side of the canyon. Constructed between 1958 and 1963 at a cost of $2 million, it consists of two main areas. The office and laboratory section sits beneath an overhang of about 300 feet of granite and houses shipping and receiving docks, microfilm processing and evaluation stations, and administrative offices. Under 700 feet of stone, the Vault proper is situated farther back in the mountain behind the laboratory section and consists of six chambers (each 190 feet long, 25 feet wide, and 25 feet high), which are accessed by one main entrance and two smaller passageways. Specially constructed Mosler doors weighing fourteen tons (at the main entrance) and nine tons (guarding the two smaller entrances) are designed to withstand a nuclear blast. In the six chambers, nature maintains constant humidity and temperature readings optimum for microfilm storage.

The Granite Mountain Record Vault, carved from solid rock in the Wasatch Mountains near Salt Lake City, Utah, is the repository of millions of feet of microfilmed genealogical records from around the world (c. 1980).

Each chamber contains banks of steel cabinets ten feet high. As of February 1991, approximately 1.7 million rolls of microfilm, in 16mm and 35mm formats, were housed in two of the six chambers. The collection increases by 40,000 rolls per year. Alternate media, such as optical disks with greater capacity for storage than microfilm, are being considered for use and may make further expansion of the Vault unnecessary.

The genealogical information contained on these microfilms is collected from churches, libraries, and governmental agencies and consists primarily of birth, marriage, and death registers; wills and probates; census reports; and other documents that can be used to establish individual identities. Latter-day Saints use such information to assemble family group charts and pedigrees for the purpose of binding together ancestral lines of kinship through sealing ordinances performed by proxy in temples. Such ordinances are considered essential for the SALVATION OF THE DEAD—that is, those who died without hearing the full message of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Schueler, Donald G. "Our Family Trees Have Roots in Utah's Mountain Vaults." Smithsonian 12 (Dec. 1981):86–95.
- Shoumatoff, Alex. The Mountain of Names: A History of the Human Family. New York, 1985.

STEVEN W. BALDRIDGE

GRANT, HEBER J.

Heber J. Grant (1856–1945), seventh President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, was a business leader and a devoted follower of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST who used his talents in the service of his Church. As an APOSTLE, he was instrumental in preserving Mormonism's credit and reputation after the economic devastation of the Panic of 1893. As President, he was a model of strong character and an ambassador of goodwill to a world often hostile to the Latter-day Saints.

Born November 22, 1856, in Salt Lake City to Jedediah M. and Rachel Ridgeway Ivins Grant, Heber associated from a young age with Church and territorial leaders. His father served as Brigham YOUNG's counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY and as mayor of the city, and his mother enjoyed the society of the leading women of the LDS community.

Heber did not benefit from the association of his father directly. Jedediah Grant died nine days after Heber was born, the victim of "lung disease," and Rachel became the paramount influence in Heber's life. Prim and reserved, she came from a New Jersey family of merchants and devoted practitioners of religion. She joined the Church just prior to her twentieth birthday, in part because of the labors of the fiery missionary who later became her husband. In 1855, Rachel became one of Jedediah's plural wives.

After Jedediah's death, diminished means eventually forced Rachel and her son to move from the substantial Grant home on Main Street to a "widow's cabin" several blocks away. The change was wrenching. Declining the proffer of Church aid, Rachel supported the family by sewing and taking in boarders. Young Heber sat on the floor many an evening and pumped the sewing machine treadle to relieve his weary mother.

The location of the Grants' new home placed them within the Salt Lake Thirteenth Ward, one of the largest and most culturally diverse LDS congregations in the territory, and so Heber enjoyed the best of frontier Mormonism. He was one of the few youths of the city to serve as a "block teacher," and at the unusually young age of fifteen he was ordained to the office of seventy in the priesthood.

In the absence of public schools, Rachel found the means to enroll her son in good private schools, beginning with Brigham Young's school at State and South Temple streets. Grant remembered himself as being good at mathematics, memorization, and recitation, but less gifted in gramtemples. Such ordinances are considered essential for the SALVATION OF THE DEAD—that is, those who died without hearing the full message of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Heber J. Grant (1856–1945), self-educated entrepreneur, was called as president of the Tooele Stake (west of Salt Lake City) when he was twenty-three years old and as an apostle at age twenty-five. Courtesy the Utah State Historical Society.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Schueler, Donald G. "Our Family Trees Have Roots in Utah's Mountain Vaults." Smithsonian 12 (Dec. 1981):86–95.
- Shoumatoff, Alex. The Mountain of Names: A History of the Human Family. New York, 1985.

STEVEN W. BALDRIDGE

GRANT, HEBER J.

Heber J. Grant (1856–1945), seventh President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, was a business leader and a devoted follower of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST who used his talents in the service of his Church. As an APOSTLE, he was instrumental in preserving Mormonism's credit and reputation after the economic devastation of the Panic of 1893. As President, he was a model of strong character and an ambassador of goodwill to a world often hostile to the Latter-day Saints.

Born November 22, 1856, in Salt Lake City to Jedediah M. and Rachel Ridgeway Ivins Grant, Heber associated from a young age with Church and territorial leaders. His father served as Brigham YOUNG's counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY and as mayor of the city, and his mother enjoyed the society of the leading women of the LDS community.

Heber did not benefit from the association of his father directly. Jedediah Grant died nine days after Heber was born, the victim of "lung disease," and Rachel became the paramount influence in Heber's life. Prim and reserved, she came from a New Jersey family of merchants and devoted practitioners of religion. She joined the Church just prior to her twentieth birthday, in part because of the labors of the fiery missionary who later became her husband. In 1855, Rachel became one of Jedediah's plural wives.

After Jedediah's death, diminished means eventually forced Rachel and her son to move from the substantial Grant home on Main Street to a "widow's cabin" several blocks away. The change was wrenching. Declining the proffer of Church aid, Rachel supported the family by sewing and taking in boarders. Young Heber sat on the floor many an evening and pumped the sewing machine treadle to relieve his weary mother.

The location of the Grants' new home placed them within the Salt Lake Thirteenth Ward, one of the largest and most culturally diverse LDS congregations in the territory, and so Heber enjoyed the best of frontier Mormonism. He was one of the few youths of the city to serve as a "block teacher," and at the unusually young age of fifteen he was ordained to the office of seventy in the priesthood.

In the absence of public schools, Rachel found the means to enroll her son in good private schools, beginning with Brigham Young's school at State and South Temple streets. Grant remembered himself as being good at mathematics, memorization, and recitation, but less gifted in grammar, spelling, and especially foreign languages. Following frontier practice, his class experience was limited; he left school at the age of sixteen.

Heber J. Grant (1856–1945), self-educated entrepreneur, was called as president of the Tooele Stake (west of Salt Lake City) when he was twenty-three years old and as an apostle at age twenty-five. Courtesy the Utah State Historical Society.

When the Thirteenth Ward organized the first Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association (YMMIA) in 1875, Grant was called as a counselor to its president at age nineteen. The YMMIA's weekly sessions gave him a chance for study, self-improvement, and speech-making. On his own he read LDS and Protestant devotional literature, Samuel Smiles' chatbooks idealizing the self-made man, and books of readings filled with firm and traditional values. As a young man, he was an active member of the "Wasatch Literary Association," a high-spirited local group that met each Wednesday evening for cultural exercises. These might include declamations, lectures, debates, readings, musical renditions, and even small-scale theatrical productions. In later years he often acknowledged his debt to the "Wasatchers" for much of his cultural and intellectual training.

For several years business became Grant's preoccupation. In addition to selling insurance, he peddled books, found Utah retailers for a Chicago grocery house, performed tasks for the Deseret National Bank, and taught penmanship. With Brigham Young's support, he was appointed assistant cashier of the Church-owned Zion's Savings and Trust Company. Hard work began to pay dividends. A typical Utah wage earner might make $500 annually; in his early twenties, Grant earned ten times that amount. Soon he opened another insurance agency in Ogden and began to fulfill his hope of developing "home industry." With a partner, he purchased the Ogden Vinegar Works.

On October 30, 1880, Grant was called as president of the Tooele Stake, about twenty-five miles west of Salt Lake City. Not yet twenty-four years old, he presided over more than a half-dozen congregations, dispensing spiritual and temporal counsel to frontier-hardened and not always pliant settlers. Moreover, the area presented one special difficulty: with the opening of western Utah mines, non-Mormons had settled in the county and for a time wrested local political control from the Church.

To Grant's new challenges were added personal difficulties. He had married a longtime acquaintance from the Thirteenth Ward, Lucy Stringham, on November 1, 1877, three weeks before his twenty-first birthday. Shortly after the couple moved to Tooele, she developed a lingering stomach illness and related problems that twelve years later claimed her life. Not long after, his Salt Lake City businesses began to suffer from lack of attention. His Ogden vinegar factory burned, and he was underinsured.

Heber J. Grant and his first wife, Lucy Stringham Grant, on their tenth wedding anniversary in 1887, together with their five daughters, Rachel, Lucy, Florence, Edith, and Anna. Photographer: Charles R. Savage.

Although he enjoyed ministering to his Tooele flock, his personal difficulties weighed heavily on him. He later admitted that during these years he felt so "blue" that he did not know what to "do or where to turn" (Grant to B. F. Grant, July 21, 1896, Grant Papers, LDS Archives). Under this burden, his six-foot, 140-pound frame almost gave way. The attending doctor pronounced a diagnosis of "nervous convulsions" and warned the young man that if he did not slow his pace he would certainly experience a "softening of the brain" (Grant typed diary, Nov. 1, 1887; Francis M. Lyman diary, Jan. 7, 15, 16, 23, 1882, Church Archives).

In 1882, less than two years after his arrival in Tooele and ten months after his nervous collapse, Grant was asked to attend a council meeting in Church President John Taylor's office, where President Taylor announced a revelation filling two vacancies in the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. As the document was read, Grant learned of his appointment to the quorum. He felt unprepared to serve in what he believed was such a high and important calling. He also wondered whether his relish for commerce properly mixed with religion. Grant's troubled "long night of the soul" was resolved during one of his first preaching tours. While traveling in Arizona, he had a spiritual manifestation that confirmed his call and put an end to his self-doubts. The epiphany also affirmed several blessings that Grant had received while a youth. On several occasions, Church leaders had prophesied his eventual high Church service.

During Grant's early service as an apostle, he concluded that wealth and money-making were honorable when dedicated to the common good, by which he meant two things: almsgiving and the founding of businesses to aid the Church and community. During his years as a young apostle, he did both. His gifts to friends and worthy purposes often took a third of his income. At a time when apostles commonly engaged in private activities, he was tireless in founding and developing "home institutions" to benefit the community. The enterprises included a Utah retail and wholesale business, a livery stable, two "home" insurance companies, a bank, a Salt Lake newspaper, the famed Salt Lake Theatre, the Utah Sugar Company, and a series of less prominent enterprises.

He was equally busy with Church assignments as a member of the Church Salary Committee, the Sunday School Board, and the Mutual Improvement superintendency. Twice he proselytized among the dangerous Yaqui Indians in Mexico, and his many tours to the Southwest earned him the title "the Arizona Apostle."

Grant eventually married three wives, who bore him twelve children. In addition to Lucy Stringham, he entered into plural marriage with Huldah Augusta Winters and Emily Wells. The three Grant wives were similar in many ways. Well educated for the times, all had taught school, and each descended from old pioneer families. "One's wealth consists in those whom he loves and serves and who love and serve him in return," he often said. Incessant travel took him away from the family, an absence he bridged by his long and sensitive personal letters. More than 50,000 letters are preserved in the Church archives, many of them to his children and grandchildren.

The Panic of 1893 caught both Grant and the Church overextended and eventually caused him to go to New York City to negotiate credit for himself and the Church. His loan brokering allowed him and the Church to remain solvent during the hard times of the 1890s, but the effects of the panic were severe for him personally; he lost his fortune and never fully recovered it.

As Utah and the Church entered the twentieth century, Grant's ministry changed. The growing Church required more and more of his time. He filled two foreign assignments, opening the Japanese Mission (1901–1903) and later presiding over the European Mission (1903–1905). On returning to the United States, he was assigned to supervise Church education, the Genealogical Society, and the Church magazine, the Improvement Era. He also still found time for community service, including assisting the cause of prohibition and directing World War I Liberty Bond drives.

In 1916 his seniority brought him to the presidency of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles. Two years later, Church President Joseph F. SMITH, on his deathbed, took Grant's hand and said, "The Lord bless you, my boy, the Lord bless you. You have got a great responsibility. Always remember that this is the Lord's work and not man's. The Lord is greater than any man. He knows whom he wants to lead his Church and never makes any mistake. The Lord bless you" (CR, Apr. 1941). On November 23, 1918, Heber J. Grant was sustained as President of the Church.

During his twenty-six-and-a-half-year administration—the Church's second longest—Church members grew familiar with the hardy, pioneer themes of President Grant's leadership. He repeatedly spoke of the need for charity, duty, honor, service, and work, and admonished the Saints to live modestly and to observe the prohibitions of the Church's health code, the Word of Wisdom. For Saints disoriented by the century's rapid social and cultural changes, President Grant's firm voice, ramrod-straight posture, and forceful—and sometimes sharp-tongued—delivery conveyed strength and resolution. He personified time-tested values.

After years of adverse Church publicity and misunderstanding, President Grant gladly accepted invitations to speak to non-Mormon groups throughout the United States, often traveling with his sole surviving wife, Augusta, in the hope of improving the image of the Church. He usually mixed personal reminiscence, business homilies, and a message about the Church. His influence was not limited to formal addresses. He cultivated personal contacts with business, cinema, media, and political leaders in the hope of presenting the Church in a more sympathetic light to the public at large. The production of such pro-LDS Hollywood films as Union Pacific and Brigham Young was partly due to his quiet influence. He promoted national tours by the Mormon Tabernacle Choir and supported the political activity of Utah senator and LDS apostle Reed Smoot, whose growing national influence brought favorable comment to Utah and the Church.

Faced with regional and then national economic depression during the late 1920s and the 1930s, the Grant administration had to cope with hard times. In keeping with the lessons learned during the depressed 1890s, President Grant trimmed Church expenses wherever he could; also his business experience, and particularly his eastern contacts, repeatedly helped to stabilize the Church financially. He advised a number of local businesses—both Mormon and non-Mormon concerns—without compensation, helping to pull them through the difficult times. Moreover, in 1936 the Church under his leadership sought to assist impoverished Latter-day Saints by establishing the Church Security Program, later renamed the Church Welfare Program, one of the major accomplishments of his administration (see WELFARE; WELFARE SERVICES). To help get it established, President Grant gave the program his large dry farm in western Utah, in which he had invested more than $80,000.

During his time as president, he dedicated three new temples: Laie, Hawaii (1919), Cardston, Canada (1923), and Mesa, Arizona (1927). Several hundred chapels were constructed, many in areas outside the Utah heartland. The Washington, D.C., chapel, dedicated in 1933, symbolized Church growth nationally.

Many of the characteristics of the Church in the twentieth century came into focus during President Grant's administration. Religious education received new emphasis with the establishment of an extensive seminary and institute program to provide a spiritual dimension in the education of the youth. Under his direction, Church leaders stressed sacrament meeting attendance, temple activity, observance of the Word of Wisdom, family-history research, and monthly visits to Church members in their homes. To cope with the expansion of the Church, he called a new group of General Authorities, Assistants to the Twelve Apostles.

On November 23, 1918, Heber J. Grant was sustained as the seventh President of the Church. His twenty-six year administration was noted for placing the Church on a sound financial basis, expanding the role of education in the Church, and establishing the modern Church welfare program. Photographer: Charles R. Savage.

Near the end of his life and under his direction, the First Presidency addressed the moral perplexities of war. A statement issued at the beginning of World War II said, "The Church . . . cannot regard war as a righteous means of settling international disputes." Yet the statement urged allegiance to "constitutional law" and acceptance of national military service, whatever the nationality of Church members (IE 45 [May 1942]:348–49). The scrupulously neutral statement reflected President Grant's own reservations about American entrance into the conflict and his growing personal pacifism.

Members came to love President Grant's expansive ways. Until mounting burdens and declining health intervened, his office door was open to General Authorities, stake and local leaders, and even to members troubled with problems. He traveled widely throughout America and in 1937 heralded the Church's European centennial by touring the missions of Great Britain and western Europe, the second LDS President to venture across the Atlantic Ocean while in office. Seeking to personalize his presidency, he distributed thousands of homiletic books, personally autographing each and sometimes marking passages for emphasis. Recalling his mother's struggles, he freely gave of his personal means, particularly to widows, and established a missionary fund for his increasing progeny.

In 1940, while visiting Southern California, he suffered a series of strokes that slowed his pace and forced him to delegate active administration of the Church, relying primarily on J. Reuben Clark, Jr., his first counselor. President Grant died on May 14, 1945, at Salt Lake City.

During President Grant's administration Church membership doubled. He traveled more than 400,000 miles, filled 1,500 appointments, gave 1,250 sermons, and made 28 major addresses to state, national, civic, and professional groups. His greatest achievements, however, cannot be measured statistically. During almost sixty-five years of Church service, he helped transform the Church from a sequestered, misunderstood, pioneer faith to an accepted, vibrant religion of twentieth-century America.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

No modern, full-scale biography of Heber J. Grant exists. For admiring surveys, see Bryant S. Hinckley, Heber J. Grant: Highlights in the Life of a Great Leader (Salt Lake City, 1951); Francis M. Gibbons, Heber J. Grant: Man of Steel, Prophet of God (Salt Lake City, 1979); and Ronald W. Walker, "Heber J. Grant," in The Presidents of the Church, ed. Leonard J. Arrington (Salt Lake City, 1986).

For accounts of various events of Grant's life, see Ronald W. Walker, "Crisis in Zion: Heber J. Grant and the Panic of 1893," Arizona and the West 21 (Autumn 1979):257-78, reprinted in Sunstone 5 (Jan.-Feb. 1980):26-34; "Heber J. Grant and the Utah Loan and Trust Company," Journal of Mormon History 8 (1981):21-36; "Young Heber J. Grant: Entrepreneur Extraordinary," The Twentieth Century American

West, Charles Redd Monographs in Western History, (1983):85-119; and "Young Heber J. Grant's Years of Passage," BYU Studies 24 (Spring 1984):131-49.

For his role in stabilizing Church finances in the early twentieth century, see Thomas G. Alexander, Mormonism in Transition (Urbana, Ill., 1986).

RONALD W. WALKER

---

GREAT AND ABOMINABLE CHURCH

The phrase "great and abominable church," which appears in an apocalyptic vision received by the Book of Mormon prophet NEPHI in the sixth century B.C. (1 Ne. 13:6), refers to the church of the DEVIL and is understood by Latter-day Saints to be equivalent to the "great whore that sitteth upon many waters" described in Revelation 17:1. This "whore of all the earth" is identified by Nephi's brother JACOB as all those who are against God and who fight against ZION, in all periods of time (2 Ne. 10:16). Nephi did not write a detailed account of everything he saw in the VISION, as this responsibility was reserved for JOHN the apostle, who was to receive the same vision; however, Nephi repeatedly refers to its content and teachings, using various images and phrases (1 Ne. 13:4-9, 26-27, 34; 14:1-4, 9-17).

Like John, Nephi and Jacob describe persecutions that evil people will inflict on God's people, particularly in the LAST DAYS. The angel who explained the vision to Nephi emphasized that this great and abominable church would take away from the Bible and "the gospel of the Lamb many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord" (1 Ne. 13:26), causing men to "stumble" and giving Satan "great power" over them (1 Ne. 13:29; D&C 86:3; Robinson, "Early Christianity," p. 188). Though many Protestants, following the lead of Martin Luther, have linked this evil force described in Revelation 17 with the Roman Catholic church, the particular focus of these LDS and New Testament scriptures seems rather to be on earlier agents of APOSTASY in the Jewish and Christian traditions (see A. Clarke, Clarke's Commentary, Vol. 6, pp. 1036-38, Nashville, Tenn., 1977).

When Nephi speaks typologically rather than historically, he identifies all the enemies of the Saints with the church of the devil (1 Ne. 14:9-10; 2 Ne. 10:16). They are those from all nations and

ident Grant's own reservations about American entrance into the conflict and his growing personal pacifism.

Members came to love President Grant's expansive ways. Until mounting burdens and declining health intervened, his office door was open to General Authorities, stake and local leaders, and even to members troubled with problems. He traveled widely throughout America and in 1937 heralded the Church's European centennial by touring the missions of Great Britain and western Europe, the second LDS President to venture across the Atlantic Ocean while in office. Seeking to personalize his presidency, he distributed thousands of homiletic books, personally autographing each and sometimes marking passages for emphasis. Recalling his mother's struggles, he freely gave of his personal means, particularly to widows, and established a missionary fund for his increasing progeny.

In 1940, while visiting Southern California, he suffered a series of strokes that slowed his pace and forced him to delegate active administration of the Church, relying primarily on J. Reuben Clark, Jr., his first counselor. President Grant died on May 14, 1945, at Salt Lake City.

During President Grant's administration Church membership doubled. He traveled more than 400,000 miles, filled 1,500 appointments, gave 1,250 sermons, and made 28 major addresses to state, national, civic, and professional groups. His greatest achievements, however, cannot be measured statistically. During almost sixty-five years of Church service, he helped transform the Church from a sequestered, misunderstood, pioneer faith to an accepted, vibrant religion of twentieth-century America.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

No modern, full-scale biography of Heber J. Grant exists. For admiring surveys, see Bryant S. Hinckley, Heber J. Grant: Highlights in the Life of a Great Leader (Salt Lake City, 1951); Francis M. Gibbons, Heber J. Grant: Man of Steel, Prophet of God (Salt Lake City, 1979); and Ronald W. Walker, "Heber J. Grant," in The Presidents of the Church, ed. Leonard J. Arrington (Salt Lake City, 1986).

For accounts of various events of Grant's life, see Ronald W. Walker, "Crisis in Zion: Heber J. Grant and the Panic of 1893," Arizona and the West 21 (Autumn 1979):257-78, reprinted in Sunstone 5 (Jan.-Feb. 1980):26-34; "Heber J. Grant and the Utah Loan and Trust Company," Journal of Mormon History 8 (1981):21-36; "Young Heber J. Grant: Entrepreneur Extraordinary," The Twentieth Century American

West, Charles Redd Monographs in Western History, (1983):85-119; and "Young Heber J. Grant's Years of Passage," BYU Studies 24 (Spring 1984):131-49.

For his role in stabilizing Church finances in the early twentieth century, see Thomas G. Alexander, Mormonism in Transition (Urbana, Ill., 1986).

RONALD W. WALKER

---

GREAT AND ABOMINABLE CHURCH

The phrase "great and abominable church," which appears in an apocalyptic vision received by the Book of Mormon prophet NEPHI in the sixth century B.C. (1 Ne. 13:6), refers to the church of the DEVIL and is understood by Latter-day Saints to be equivalent to the "great whore that sitteth upon many waters" described in Revelation 17:1. This "whore of all the earth" is identified by Nephi's brother JACOB as all those who are against God and who fight against ZION, in all periods of time (2 Ne. 10:16). Nephi did not write a detailed account of everything he saw in the VISION, as this responsibility was reserved for JOHN the apostle, who was to receive the same vision; however, Nephi repeatedly refers to its content and teachings, using various images and phrases (1 Ne. 13:4-9, 26-27, 34; 14:1-4, 9-17).

Like John, Nephi and Jacob describe persecutions that evil people will inflict on God's people, particularly in the LAST DAYS. The angel who explained the vision to Nephi emphasized that this great and abominable church would take away from the Bible and "the gospel of the Lamb many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord" (1 Ne. 13:26), causing men to "stumble" and giving Satan "great power" over them (1 Ne. 13:29; D&C 86:3; Robinson, "Early Christianity," p. 188). Though many Protestants, following the lead of Martin Luther, have linked this evil force described in Revelation 17 with the Roman Catholic church, the particular focus of these LDS and New Testament scriptures seems rather to be on earlier agents of APOSTASY in the Jewish and Christian traditions (see A. Clarke, Clarke's Commentary, Vol. 6, pp. 1036-38, Nashville, Tenn., 1977).

When Nephi speaks typologically rather than historically, he identifies all the enemies of the Saints with the church of the devil (1 Ne. 14:9-10; 2 Ne. 10:16). They are those from all nations and all time periods who desire “to get gain, and . . . power over the flesh, and . . . to become popular in the eyes of the world, . . . who seek the lusts of the flesh and the things of the world, and to do all manner of iniquity” (1 Ne. 22:23). Other scriptural terms related to the great and abominable church include “Babylon” and the “great harlot” (Rev. 17:5; 1 Ne. 22:13; D&C 1:16). Images of pride, greed, and covenant abandonment are associated with these terms, in sharp contrast to the church of God. The scriptures are consistent in warning people to flee from the church of evil and find refuge in the church of God (Jer. 51:6; Rev. 18:4; 1 Ne. 20:20; D&C 133:14; see also P. Minear, “Babylon,” in Interpreter’s Dictionary of the Bible, 1:338, Nashville, Tenn., 1962). The Book of Mormon image of a great and abominable church complements the biblical images of Babylon and the harlot.

The fate of the great and abominable church is described in both ancient and modern scriptures (Jer. 51:37; Rev. 18:21; 1 Ne. 14:15–16; 22:14; D&C 1:16): Though the nations of the earth will gather together against them, “the covenant people of the Lord, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth” are promised redemption even if it requires power sent down from heaven, as if by fire (1 Ne. 14:14; 22:17). When Jesus Christ returns, he will claim his own and reject those who have opposed him (Mal. 4:1–3; 2 Thes. 2:6–10; 1 Ne. 22:23–26; see JESUS CHRIST: SECOND COMING OF JESUS CHRIST). As the Savior institutes his millennial reign, great will be the fall of Babylon, the harlot, and the great and abominable church (Rev. 18; 2 Ne. 28:18), for every knee will bow and every tongue confess, with thankfulness, that Jesus is the Christ (Isa. 45:23; Mosiah 27:31).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Nibley, Hugh W. “The Passing of the Primitive Church: Forty Variations on an Unpopular Theme.” In CWHN 4:168–208.
- . “Prophecy in the Book of Mormon: The Three Periods.” In CWHN 7:410–35.
- Robinson, Stephen E. “Warring Against the Saints of God.” Ensign 18 (Jan. 1988):34–39.
- . “Early Christianity and 1 Nephi 13–14.” In The Book of Mormon: First Nephi, The Doctrinal Foundation, ed. M. Nymann and C. Tate, pp. 177–91. Provo, Utah, 1988.

DENNIS A. WRIGHT

---

H

---

---

HANDCART COMPANIES

The large backlog of needy LDS converts awaiting passage from Europe and reduced TITHING receipts at home persuaded Brigham YOUNG in 1855 to instruct that the “poor saints” sailing from Liverpool to New York and taking the train to Iowa City should thence “walk and draw their luggage” overland to Utah. In 1856 five such handcart companies were organized to make the 1,300-mile trip on foot from the western railroad terminus at Iowa City to Salt Lake City (see IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION; MORMON TRAIL).

Success seemed assured when the first two companies, totaling 486 immigrants pulling 96 handcarts, arrived safely in Salt Lake City on September 26, 1856. They accomplished the trek in under sixteen weeks. The third company, and presumably the last of the season, made up of 320 persons pulling 64 handcarts, arrived on October 2. But at that point the two remaining companies, totaling 980 people and 233 handcarts, were still on the way, having started dangerously late. One of these companies, under James G. Willie, left Iowa City on July 15, crossed Iowa to Florence (Omaha), Nebraska, then, after a week in Florence, headed out onto the plains. The last company, under Edward Martin, departed Florence on August 25. Three independent wagon companies, carrying 390 more immigrants, also started late.

A week after the departure of the Martin Company, Franklin D. Richards, an apostle who had organized the handcart effort as president of the European Mission, also departed Florence with sixteen other returning missionaries. This party, on horseback and in fast carriages, passed the Martin Company on September 7, the Willie Company on September 12, and arrived in Salt Lake City on October 4.

Richards’s report that many more immigrants were coming was a shock: the late-starting immigrants would not be adequately clothed for the cold weather they would surely experience; they, like those in all previous lightly supplied handcart companies, would be perilously short of food; and, as they were unexpected, the last resupply wagons, which were routinely dispatched into the mountains to meet immigrant companies, had already returned.

Anticipating the worst, President Young mobilized men and women gathered for general conference and immediately ordered a massive rescue effort. A party of twenty-seven men, led by George D. Grant, left on October 7 with the first sixteen of what ultimately amounted to 200 wagons and teams. Several of the rescue party, including Grant, had been among the missionaries who had ridden in from the East five days before.

The Handcart Family, by Torlief Knaphus (1926, life-sized bronze), Temple Square, Salt Lake City. This statue on Temple Square commemorates the faith and sacrifice of 2,962 pioneers who walked from Iowa and Nebraska to Utah, pushing and pulling handcarts loaded with their provisions and belongings. Courtesy Utah State University.

Two weeks later, one of the earliest blizzards on record struck just as both the handcart companies and the independent wagon companies were entering the Rocky Mountains in central Wyoming. After several days of being lashed by the fierce blizzard, people in the exposed handcart companies began to die.

Grant's rescue party found the Willie Company on October 21—in a blinding snowstorm one day after they had run out of food. But the worst still lay ahead, when, after a day of rest and replenishment, the company had to struggle over the long and steep eastern approach to South Pass in the teeth of a northerly gale. Beyond the pass, the company, now amply fed and free to climb aboard empty supply wagons as they became available, moved quickly, arriving in Salt Lake City on November 9. Of the 404 still with the company, 68 died and many others suffered from severe frostbite and near starvation.

Those of the Martin Company, three-fourths of them women, children, and the elderly, suffered even more. When the storm hit on October 19, they made camp and spent nine days on reduced rations waiting out the storm. Grant's party, after leaving men and supplies with the Willie Company, plunged farther east through the snow with eight wagons in search of the Martin Company. A scouting party sent out ahead of the wagons found them 150 miles east of South Pass.

The company, already in a desperate condition, was ordered to break camp immediately. The supply wagons met them on the trail, but the provisions were not nearly enough and, after struggling 55 miles farther, the company once again went into camp near Devil's Gate to await the arrival of supplies.

In the meantime, the rescue effort began to disintegrate. Rescue teams held up several days by the raging storm turned back, fearing to go on and rationalizing that the immigrant trains and Grant's advance party had either decided to winter over or had perished in the storm.

The Martin Company remained in camp for five days. When no supplies came, the company, now deplorably weakened, was again forced out on the trail. It had suffered fifty-six dead before being found, and it was now losing people at an appalling rate.

Relief came barely in time. A messenger ordered back west by Grant reached and turned around some of the teams that had abandoned the rescue. At least thirty wagons reached the Martin Company just as it was about to attempt the same climb to South Pass that had so sorely tested the Willie Company. Starved, frozen, spent, their spirits crushed, and many unable to walk, the people had reached the breaking point.

But now warmed and fed, with those unable to walk riding in the wagons, the company moved rapidly on. The Martin Company, in a train of 104 wagons, finally arrived in Salt Lake City on November 30. Out of 576, at least 145 had died and, like the Willie Company, many were severely afflicted by frostbite and starvation.

Elements of the three independent wagon companies and the rescue effort straggled into Salt Lake City until mid-December—except for twenty men, under Daniel W. Jones, who remained for the winter at Devil's Gate to guard freight unloaded there by the independent wagon companies, in part to make room for exhausted members of the Martin Company. The Jones party suffered misery and starvation at Devil's Gate. At one point they were reduced to eating rawhide until friendly Indians gave them some buffalo meat.

The decision to send out the Willie and Martin companies so late in the season was extremely reckless. In mid-November President Brigham Young angrily reproved those who had authorized the late start or who had not ordered the several parties back to Florence when they still had the opportunity, charging "ignorance," "mismanagement," and "misconduct." Though terrible, the suffering could have been far worse. Had the rescue effort not been launched immediately—well before the storm struck—the handcart companies would probably have been totally destroyed.

Six more handcart companies crossed the plains after 1856. To demonstrate that the idea was still viable, seventy missionaries made the trip in the opposite direction in the spring of 1857. Five companies, totaling 1,076 immigrants with 223 handcarts, crossed west with little difficulty: two in 1857, one in 1859, and two in 1860. In all, 2,962 immigrants walked to Utah with handcarts. About 250 died along the way—all but about 30 of those in the Willie and Martin companies.

For Latter-day Saints, the handcart story, particularly the account of the Willie and Martin companies, has darkened the collective memory of the westering saga. But that episode is also remembered for the unparalleled gallantry exhibited by so many, immigrants and rescuers alike. Of particular note is the superb performance of the women; their courage and mettle contributed enormously to the eventual survival of both companies. It was at once the most ill-advised and tragic, the most heroic, and arguably the proudest single event in the Mormon pioneer experience.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cornwall, Rebecca, and Leonard J. Arrington. Rescue of the 1856 Handcart Companies. Vol. 11 of the Charles Redd Monographs in Western History. Provo, Utah 1981.
- Hafen, LeRoy R., and Ann W. Hafen. Handcarts to Zion: The Story of a Unique Western Migration, 1856–1860. Vol. 14 of the Far West and the Rockies Historical Series. Glendale, Calif., 1960.
- Stegner, Wallace. The Gathering of Zion: The Story of the Mormon Trail. New York, 1964.

HOWARD A. CHRISTY

HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA

Harmony, Pennsylvania, is an important HISTORICAL SITE of The Church of Jesus Christ of

Handcart Company, by C. C. A. Christensen (1900, oil on canvas, 25" × 38"). Two of the handcart pioneers, C. C. A. Christensen and his wife, sailed to the United States in 1857, made their way to Iowa City, purchased hickory handcarts, and set out on their walk to the Great Salt Lake Valley. Over thirty years later he painted this scene from the more than 1,300 mile journey. Church Museum of History and Art.

Latter-day Saints on the Susquehanna River in northeastern Pennsylvania. Significant events occurred there during the periodic residence of the Prophet Joseph SMITH from 1825 to 1830. Harmony was the home of Isaac Hale, father of Joseph Smith's wife, Emma Hale. Joseph Smith and his father boarded with Isaac Hale in 1825 while working on Josiah Stowell's mining project. In December 1827, Joseph and Emma moved to Harmony from Manchester, New York, to work on the translation of the PLATES of the BOOK OF MORMON. Eventually they bought a small farm and house, where most of the Book of Mormon was translated between April 7 and early June 1829. Nearby, on May 15, 1829, Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY received the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD from JOHN THE BAPTIST and were authorized to baptize each other. The first convert BAPTISM, that of Samuel H. Smith, took place there ten days later. Somewhere between Harmony and COLESVILLE, NEW YORK, PETER, JAMES, and JOHN restored the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. After the Church was organized in 1830, Joseph and Emma returned to Harmony and lived there through that summer. Fifteen REVELATIONS now found in the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS were received in Harmony.

The Harmony in Church history refers to a township rather than the village of Harmony. The

The decision to send out the Willie and Martin companies so late in the season was extremely reckless. In mid-November President Brigham Young angrily reproved those who had authorized the late start or who had not ordered the several parties back to Florence when they still had the opportunity, charging "ignorance," "mismanagement," and "misconduct." Though terrible, the suffering could have been far worse. Had the rescue effort not been launched immediately—well before the storm struck—the handcart companies would probably have been totally destroyed.

Six more handcart companies crossed the plains after 1856. To demonstrate that the idea was still viable, seventy missionaries made the trip in the opposite direction in the spring of 1857. Five companies, totaling 1,076 immigrants with 223 handcarts, crossed west with little difficulty: two in 1857, one in 1859, and two in 1860. In all, 2,962 immigrants walked to Utah with handcarts. About 250 died along the way—all but about 30 of those in the Willie and Martin companies.

For Latter-day Saints, the handcart story, particularly the account of the Willie and Martin companies, has darkened the collective memory of the westering saga. But that episode is also remembered for the unparalleled gallantry exhibited by so many, immigrants and rescuers alike. Of particular note is the superb performance of the women; their courage and mettle contributed enormously to the eventual survival of both companies. It was at once the most ill-advised and tragic, the most heroic, and arguably the proudest single event in the Mormon pioneer experience.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cornwall, Rebecca, and Leonard J. Arrington. Rescue of the 1856 Handcart Companies. Vol. 11 of the Charles Redd Monographs in Western History. Provo, Utah 1981.
- Hafen, LeRoy R., and Ann W. Hafen. Handcarts to Zion: The Story of a Unique Western Migration, 1856–1860. Vol. 14 of the Far West and the Rockies Historical Series. Glendale, Calif., 1960.
- Stegner, Wallace. The Gathering of Zion: The Story of the Mormon Trail. New York, 1964.

HOWARD A. CHRISTY

HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA

Harmony, Pennsylvania, is an important HISTORICAL SITE of The Church of Jesus Christ of

Handcart Company, by C. C. A. Christensen (1900, oil on canvas, 25" × 38"). Two of the handcart pioneers, C. C. A. Christensen and his wife, sailed to the United States in 1857, made their way to Iowa City, purchased hickory handcarts, and set out on their walk to the Great Salt Lake Valley. Over thirty years later he painted this scene from the more than 1,300 mile journey. Church Museum of History and Art.

Latter-day Saints on the Susquehanna River in northeastern Pennsylvania. Significant events occurred there during the periodic residence of the Prophet Joseph SMITH from 1825 to 1830. Harmony was the home of Isaac Hale, father of Joseph Smith's wife, Emma Hale. Joseph Smith and his father boarded with Isaac Hale in 1825 while working on Josiah Stowell's mining project. In December 1827, Joseph and Emma moved to Harmony from Manchester, New York, to work on the translation of the PLATES of the BOOK OF MORMON. Eventually they bought a small farm and house, where most of the Book of Mormon was translated between April 7 and early June 1829. Nearby, on May 15, 1829, Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY received the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD from JOHN THE BAPTIST and were authorized to baptize each other. The first convert BAPTISM, that of Samuel H. Smith, took place there ten days later. Somewhere between Harmony and COLESVILLE, NEW YORK, PETER, JAMES, and JOHN restored the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. After the Church was organized in 1830, Joseph and Emma returned to Harmony and lived there through that summer. Fifteen REVELATIONS now found in the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS were received in Harmony.

The Harmony in Church history refers to a township rather than the village of Harmony. The township boundary was changed in 1853, placing the Church site in present-day Oakland Township. The site of the Hale residence lies about a mile and a half west of present-day Oakland, Pennsylvania, in Susquehanna County, along the north side of Route 171.

The home of Joseph and Emma Hale Smith in Harmony, Pennsylvania, from 1827 to 1830. The lower center portion is the original home, where Emma gave birth to their first child, Alvin, who died the same day, June 15, 1828. Here Joseph received at least fifteen revelations (D&C 3–13, 24–27) and translated the lost 116 pages and a large portion of the Book of Mormon.

Today the Church owns about 288 acres at the Harmony location. On a small landscaped triangular plot located between the highway and a railroad right-of-way, a granite and bronze monument dedicated in 1960 commemorates the restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood. The exact location of the restoration is not known (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION).

The house owned by Joseph and Emma Smith burned in 1919. The buried foundation is just west of the monument. The graves of Isaac and Elizabeth Hale and of an infant son born to Joseph and Emma are close to Route 171, in a public cemetery located east of the Church property.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Porter, Larry C. "A Study of the Origins of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the States of New York and Pennsylvania, 1816–1831." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1971.

HORACE H. CHRISTENSEN

HARRIS, MARTIN

Martin Harris (1783–1875), a New York farmer, was one of the Three Witnesses to the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. He also financed the first publication of the Book of Mormon in 1830 at a cost of $3,000 and later helped finance publication of the Book of Commandments.

Martin Harris was born May 18, 1783, in Easton (now Saratoga), Washington County, New York, and died July 10, 1875, in Clarkston, Cache County, Utah. On March 27, 1808, he married his first cousin, Lucy Harris. At least six children were born to the couple. In the War of 1812, Private Harris was a teamster in the Battle of Buffalo. By May 1814, at the Battle of Puttneyville, he was first sergeant in the Thirty-ninth New York Militia. He returned home an honored war veteran. He inherited 150 acres and by 1828 owned a total of 320 acres. His wife characterized him as industrious, attentive to domestic concerns, and an excellent provider and father.

Harris stood about five feet, eight inches tall; had a light complexion, blue eyes, and brown hair; and wore a Greek-style beard off the edge of his jaw and chin. When formally dressed, he wore a favorite gray suit and a large, stiff hat. Non-Mormon contemporaries extolled Harris's sincerity, honesty, memory, generosity, neighborliness, shrewd business practices, and civic spirit.

Harris promoted construction of the Erie Canal through Palmyra along a route that passed not far from his house. Palmyra's citizens elected him road overseer for seven years, and he was a member of Palmyra's vigilance committee. A Jeffersonian-Jacksonian Democrat, he was a believer in the value of homespun common sense. He favored gold and silver money and rejected paper currency. He distrusted banks, Federalists, and authoritarians. A Christian democratic activist, he admired ancient Greek culture and raised money for Greek Christians to fight the Turks.

Looking on himself as an unchurched Christian, Harris chose to follow God on his own. As a "restorationist," he looked for the return of biblical Christianity. He stated that "in the year 1818 . . . I was inspired of the Lord and taught of the Spirit that I should not join any church" (interview by Edward Stevenson, Sept. 4, 1870, Stevenson Microfilm Collection, Vol. 32, HDC).

Martin Harris met Joseph SMITH some time after 1816, when the Smith family moved to Pal-

The home of Joseph and Emma Hale Smith in Harmony, Pennsylvania, from 1827 to 1830. The lower center portion is the original home, where Emma gave birth to their first child, Alvin, who died the same day, June 15, 1828. Here Joseph received at least fifteen revelations (D&C 3–13, 24–27) and translated the lost 116 pages and a large portion of the Book of Mormon.

township boundary was changed in 1853, placing the Church site in present-day Oakland Township. The site of the Hale residence lies about a mile and a half west of present-day Oakland, Pennsylvania, in Susquehanna County, along the north side of Route 171.

Today the Church owns about 288 acres at the Harmony location. On a small landscaped triangular plot located between the highway and a railroad right-of-way, a granite and bronze monument dedicated in 1960 commemorates the restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood. The exact location of the restoration is not known (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION).

The house owned by Joseph and Emma Smith burned in 1919. The buried foundation is just west of the monument. The graves of Isaac and Elizabeth Hale and of an infant son born to Joseph and Emma are close to Route 171, in a public cemetery located east of the Church property.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Porter, Larry C. "A Study of the Origins of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the States of New York and Pennsylvania, 1816–1831." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1971.

HORACE H. CHRISTENSEN

HARRIS, MARTIN

Martin Harris (1783–1875), a New York farmer, was one of the Three Witnesses to the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. He also financed the first publication of the Book of Mormon in 1830 at a cost of $3,000 and later helped finance publication of the Book of Commandments.

Martin Harris was born May 18, 1783, in Easton (now Saratoga), Washington County, New York, and died July 10, 1875, in Clarkston, Cache County, Utah. On March 27, 1808, he married his first cousin, Lucy Harris. At least six children were born to the couple. In the War of 1812, Private Harris was a teamster in the Battle of Buffalo. By May 1814, at the Battle of Puttneyville, he was first sergeant in the Thirty-ninth New York Militia. He returned home an honored war veteran. He inherited 150 acres and by 1828 owned a total of 320 acres. His wife characterized him as industrious, attentive to domestic concerns, and an excellent provider and father.

Harris stood about five feet, eight inches tall; had a light complexion, blue eyes, and brown hair; and wore a Greek-style beard off the edge of his jaw and chin. When formally dressed, he wore a favorite gray suit and a large, stiff hat. Non-Mormon contemporaries extolled Harris's sincerity, honesty, memory, generosity, neighborliness, shrewd business practices, and civic spirit.

Harris promoted construction of the Erie Canal through Palmyra along a route that passed not far from his house. Palmyra's citizens elected him road overseer for seven years, and he was a member of Palmyra's vigilance committee. A Jeffersonian-Jacksonian Democrat, he was a believer in the value of homespun common sense. He favored gold and silver money and rejected paper currency. He distrusted banks, Federalists, and authoritarians. A Christian democratic activist, he admired ancient Greek culture and raised money for Greek Christians to fight the Turks.

Looking on himself as an unchurched Christian, Harris chose to follow God on his own. As a "restorationist," he looked for the return of biblical Christianity. He stated that "in the year 1818 . . . I was inspired of the Lord and taught of the Spirit that I should not join any church" (interview by Edward Stevenson, Sept. 4, 1870, Stevenson Microfilm Collection, Vol. 32, HDC).

Martin Harris met Joseph SMITH some time after 1816, when the Smith family moved to Pal-

Martin Harris (1783–1875) at about age eighty-seven. Harris gave financial support to Joseph Smith and for the publication of the Book of Mormon. He served as one of Joseph's scribes, became one of the Three Witnesses of the Book of Mormon, and testified of its truthfulness throughout his life. Charles W. Carter collection.

myra. By 1824, Joseph Smith, Sr., had told him about the angel Moroni's appearances and the golden plates, and in the fall of 1827, Martin consented to help publish the translation. He helped Joseph Smith protect the plates from thieves and financed the Prophet's move from Manchester to Harmony, Pennsylvania, when persecution intensified.

In February 1828, Harris visited Joseph Smith in Harmony and obtained a transcription and translation of characters from the plates. He took the two documents to "learned men" in Utica, Albany, and New York City, where Samuel Latham Mitchill and Charles Anthon examined the texts. Harris and Smith believed that these visits fulfilled a prophecy in Isaiah 29:11–14 concerning a book to be translated by an unlearned man. Harris hoped that the scholars' comments would help win financial and religious support for the Book of Mormon in the community (see ANTHON TRANSCRIPT).

From April 12 to June 14, 1828, Martin Harris served as Joseph Smith's scribe, producing 116 manuscript pages. To gain family support, he persuaded Joseph to let him take the pages to Palmyra to show his family, and during a three-week period when he visited relatives, attended to business, and served jury duty, the 116 pages were stolen. It is reported that Lucy Harris said that she burned them. Ill and suffering the insecurity of progressive deafness, she reportedly feared that Palmyra's boycott of the Book of Mormon would lead to her and her husband's financial ruin. After the loss of the manuscript, Harris ceased his work as scribe.

In June 1829, Martin Harris, along with Joseph Smith, Oliver COWDERY, and David Whitmer, prayed and received no answer. Harris blamed himself for the failure and withdrew. The Prophet, Cowdery, and Whitmer prayed again and were shown the gold plates of the Book of Mormon by the angel Moroni. Subsequently, the angel appeared to Harris and Joseph Smith. In this vision, Harris heard the voice of God say that Joseph's translation was correct, and Jesus Christ commanded Harris to testify of what he had seen and heard. The testimony of the Three Witnesses is printed in the Book of Mormon (see BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES).

When translation of the book was completed, Joseph Smith had trouble finding a printer who would undertake publication. The printers feared that local opposition would hurt sales. A Palmyra printer, Egbert B. Grandin, finally agreed to print the Book of Mormon after Harris agreed to mortgage some of his farm for $3,000 as security. On April 7, 1831, Harris sold part of his farm to pay the printing bill, though he may have had other reasons to part with this acreage than just to satisfy Grandin.

Martin Harris was present at the organization of the Church on April 6, 1830, and was baptized that day by Oliver Cowdery. In May 1831 he led fifty converts from Palmyra to Kirtland, Ohio. Lucy and their children remained in Palmyra, resulting in two households and periodic trips for Harris between the two locations.

In the summer of 1831, Harris accompanied Joseph Smith and others to Missouri to purchase property and designate the site for Zion, where the Saints were to gather. He was one of the first to be asked to live the "law of consecration," a divinely revealed plan for equalizing the distribution of property and providing for the poor. That year, he also helped supervise and finance Church publications.

Returning east in 1832, Harris and his brother Emer served a mission together, baptizing one hundred persons at Chenango Point (now Binghamton), New York. In January 1833, Martin Harris was imprisoned briefly in Springville, Pennsylvania, in an attempt to stop him from preaching.

Returning to Kirtland in January 1834, Harris became a member of the first high council of the Church. Later that year, he volunteered to go to Jackson County, Missouri, with ZION'S CAMP to assist persecuted Mormons. On February 14, 1835, in accord with an earlier revelation (D&C 18:37–38), "the three witnesses" selected the first QUORUM OF TWELVE APOSTLES.

In 1836, Harris attended the dedication of the Kirtland Temple. Later that summer Lucy Harris died. Harris married Caroline Young, Brigham YOUNG's niece, on November 1, 1836. The couple had seven children.

During 1837, a time of intense conflict within the Church, Harris clashed with Sidney Rigdon and refused to join the Church-sponsored Kirtland Safety Society, which was issuing paper money. Harris was released from the high council on September 3, 1837, and was excommunicated during the last week of December 1837. Although evidence exists that Harris's excommunication was never official, he accepted the action and subsequently applied for and was baptized on November 7, 1842.

When Brigham Young led the body of Latter-day Saints west, Harris went to England to bear witness of the Book of Mormon. The Strangites, a splinter group formed after Joseph Smith's death (see SCHISMATIC GROUPS), paid his expenses, though he did not believe or preach Strangite doctrine. In 1829, Harris had prophesied that the Book of Mormon would be preached in England, and he was eager to preach there himself. Returning to Kirtland, he prospered and acted as a self-appointed guide-caretaker of the deserted Kirtland Temple, listing himself in the 1860 census as "Mormon preacher."

Prior to 1856, LDS missionaries, some of whom had already gone to Utah, the Harris family, and Brigham Young invited Martin and Caroline Harris to join the Saints in Utah. In the spring of 1856, Caroline and the children journeyed to Utah, but Harris remained in Kirtland until 1870. In 1860 he lived with George Harris, his son by Lucy. From 1865 to 1870, he supported himself by leasing ninety acres of land in Kirtland.

In 1869, efforts were renewed to bring Martin Harris to Utah. William H. Homer, Edward Stevenson, Brigham Young, and many other Latter-day Saints helped him financially to make the journey. Still active and vigorous at age eighty-seven, Martin Harris, accompanied by Edward Stevenson, arrived by train in Salt Lake City on August 30, 1870. He accepted rebaptism as evidence of his reaffirmation of faith on September 17, 1870, and, at Brigham Young's invitation, publicly testified of the Book of Mormon. He moved to Harrisville, then to Smithfield, Utah (where he saw Caroline and their son Martin Harris, Jr.), and in 1874 to Clarkston, Utah, where he died on July 10, 1875, after once more bearing testimony of the Book of Mormon.

Martin Harris inspired a folk-hero tradition that has lasted down to the present. In 1983 the Church's musical play Martin Harris: The Man Who Knew was produced in Clarkston. The play marked a fourth generation's rehearsal of Martin Harris's witness: "Yes, I did see the plates on which the Book of Mormon was written. I did see the angel, I did hear the voice of God, and I do know that Joseph Smith is a true Prophet of God, holding the keys of the Holy Priesthood" ("The Last Testimony of Martin Harris," recorded by William H. Homer in a statement sworn before J. W. Robinson, Apr. 9, 1927, HDC).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard Lloyd. Investigating the Book of Mormon Witnesses. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Gunnell, Wayne Cutler. "Martin Harris—Witness and Benefactor to the Book of Mormon." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1955.
- James, Rhett Stephens. The Man Who Knew: The Early Years—A Play About Martin Harris, 1824–1830, and Annotated History of Martin Harris. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Shelton, Scott R. "Martin Harris in Cache Valley—Events and Influences." Master's thesis, Utah State University, 1986.
- Tuckett, Madge Harris, and Belle Harris Wilson. The Martin Harris Story. Provo, Utah, 1983.

RHETT STEPHENS JAMES

HAUN'S MILL MASSACRE

On October 30, 1838, segments of the Missouri militia attacked a settlement of Latter-day Saints at Jacob Haun's mill, located on Shoal Creek in eastern Caldwell County, Missouri. Because the attack was unprovoked in a time of truce, had no specific authorization, and was made by a vastly superior force with unusual brutality, it has come to be known as "The Haun's Mill Massacre." It was one incident in the conflict between the Missourians and the Latter-day Saints that resulted in the LDS expulsion from the state in 1839 (see MISSOURI CONFLICT).

Tensions had been building up ever since the Latter-day Saints began moving into Caldwell and Daviess counties in central Missouri in 1836. From August to October 1838, incidents of overt conflict had grown dramatically. Rumors abounded that the Mormons planned to "despoil" the Missourians and take their land. Specifically, some believed that the Haun's Mill's population threatened to spill over into non-Mormon Livingston County. Outbursts of violence led Governor Lilburn W. Boggs on October 27 to issue an "Extermination Order," demanding that the Latter-day Saints leave the state or be exterminated. It is uncertain whether this order was a catalyst for the attack, but it is clear that both the Latter-day Saints and the Missourians believed that their rights had been violated and their existence threatened.

Thirty to forty LDS families were at Haun's Mill when some 200 to 250 militia from Livingston, Daviess, and Carroll counties, acting under Colonel Thomas Jennings, marched against the village. Assuming that an earlier truce still held, the residents were surprised by the late afternoon attack. Church leader David Evans' call for "quarter" was ignored, and the villagers were forced to flee for safety. The Mormon women and children fled south across a stream into the woods, while the men gathered in the blacksmith shop, but found it a poor place for defense because the Missourians were able to fire through the widely spaced logs directly into the group huddled inside.

Seventeen Latter-day Saints and one friendly non-Mormon were killed. Another thirteen were wounded, including one woman and a seven-year-old boy. No Missouri militiamen were killed, though three were wounded. Certain deaths were particularly offensive to the Saints. Seventy-eight-year-old Thomas McBride surrendered his musket to militiaman Jacob Rogers, who shot him, then hacked his body with a corn knife. William Reynolds discovered ten-year-old Sardius Smith hiding under the bellows and blew the top of the child's head off.

Millstone at the site of the Haun's Mill Massacre on October 30, 1838. Seventeen Mormon civilians were killed in the raid. Photographer: George E. Anderson (1907).

While women cared for the wounded, the men remained in hiding during the night. The dead were thrown into an unfinished well and lightly covered with dirt and straw. A few Missourians returned the next day, took plunder, and warned the remaining Saints to leave Missouri.

The 1838–39 Missouri judicial proceedings investigating the "Mormon War" largely ignored the events at Haun's Mill, but Latter-day Saints wrote numerous, bitter accounts. The Haun's Mill Massacre became embedded in the LDS psyche as an epitome of the cruel persecutions that they had endured.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Blair, Alma R. "The Haun's Mill Massacre." BYU Studies 13 (Autumn 1972):62–67.
- History of Caldwell and Livingston Counties, Missouri*. St. Louis, 1886.
- Johnson, Clark V. "Missouri Persecutions: The Petition of Isaac Leary." BYU Studies 23 (Winter 1983):94–103.
- LeSueur, Stephen C. The 1838 Mormon War in Missouri. Columbia, Mo., 1987.
- Times and Seasons* 1 (1840):145–50.

HAWAII, THE CHURCH IN

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has been in Hawaii since 1850, when Elder Charles C. Rich, an apostle, called ten LDS men from the gold mines of northern California to open missionary work in the Sandwich Islands, now Hawaii. Within several months five of the elders left the mission, but George Quayle Cannon, Henry William Bigler, James Keeler, William Farrer, and James Hawkins remained. Initial conversions came on the island of Maui, where the first branch was organized in the Kula District, near Pulehu, on August 6, 1851. The Church made remarkable headway, with more than 4,000 Hawaiian convert members in fifty-three branches by late 1854. By this time, several small schools were under way, meetinghouses were constructed, and the BOOK OF MORMON had been translated into the Hawaiian language by Elders Cannon and Farrer and Jonatana H. Napela, a local member. It was printed in 1855. In 1990, the 49,000 members of the Church in Hawaii, both native Hawaiian and others were found in thirteen stakes, constituting more than a hundred WARDS and BRANCHES. A TEMPLE has served members in Hawaii since November 1919.

Following the pattern established elsewhere, an attempt was made to gather the Hawaiian Saints to a local ZION. A village, called the City of Joseph, was established on the island of Lanai in 1854. However, the project failed, at least partly because of environmental conditions. In addition, with the most devoted Hawaiian members having moved to Lanai, the branches on other islands were weakened, and the Church fell into decline. This trend became severe when the Mainland missionary leaders were called back to Utah in 1858 because of the UTAH EXPEDITION.

This leadership vacuum opened the way for the adventurer Walter Murray Gibson to run the Church on Lanai and elsewhere as his personal political kingdom from September 1861 until 1864. He was excommunicated from the Church in April 1864 for introducing many false doctrines, including selling offices in the priesthood.

Shortly thereafter, President Brigham YOUNG sent Francis Asbury Hammond and George Nebeker to Hawaii to buy property for a new gathering place. On January 26, 1865, the Church purchased for $14,000, a 6,000-acre plantation at Laie on Oahu island for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the members. Laie remains the focal point of LDS activities in Hawaii though strong stakes have also developed in Honolulu and in other areas.

Since 1865, there have been five major developments in the history of the Church in Hawaii:

The Oahu Stake Samoan choir posed in the 1960s in front of the Hawaii Temple. This choir was one of several patterned after the Tabernacle Choir. The temple, dedicated November 27, 1919, is located at Laie, on the northeast shore of Oahu.

First, on June 1, 1915, President Joseph F. SMITH dedicated a site at Laie for the Hawaii Temple. Four and a half years later, on November 27, 1919, his successor, President Heber J. GRANT, dedicated the completed structure, the first LDS temple outside the North American continent.

Second, President Grant organized the Oahu Stake on June 30, 1935, with Ralph E. Woolley as president.

Third, for the benefit of the Japanese people in Hawaii, President Grant formed the Japanese Mission in Hawaii in 1937, with Hilton A. Robertson as president. Its name was changed to the Central Pacific Mission in 1942. By 1949 missionaries of the Japanese/Central Pacific Mission had baptized 671 Americans of Japanese ancestry into the Church, and thousands of others have joined the Church since then. Many of these converts and their children have held important positions in the Church. Adney Yoshio Komatsu was the first of that group to be called as a GENERAL AUTHORITY.

Fourth, in September 1955 the Church College of Hawaii was founded under the direction of President David O. MCKAY. Initially a junior college, it was made a four-year school in 1959 and was renamed Brigham Young University—Hawaii Campus in 1974. Two thousand students, mostly from the Pacific and the Asian Rim, attend.

Finally, the Church founded the POLYNESIAN CULTURAL CENTER at Laie in November 1963 to preserve and present the cultures of Polynesia and to provide employment for the college students. The center has grown to become Hawaii's number-one paid attraction, drawing nearly a million visitors a year.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Britsch, R. Lanier. Unto the Islands of the Sea: A History of the Latter-day Saint in the Pacific. Salt Lake City, 1986.

———. Mormons: The Mormons in Hawaii. Laie, Hawaii, 1989.

R. LANIER BRITSCH

HEAD OF THE CHURCH

Members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints believe that Jesus Christ is personally the Head of the Church, leading and guiding it by REVELATION (D&C 10:69; 3 Ne. 21:22).

According to the New Testament, God gave Jesus authority to be "the head over all things to the church" (Eph. 1:22; cf. 2:20; Col. 1:18). For Latter-day Saints, the restoration of the Church was similarly initiated in 1820 when God the Father, following an ancient pattern, appeared in vision with his Son Jesus Christ, who instructed Joseph SMITH (JS—H 1:17; see Matt. 3:17; 2 Pet. 1:17–18; 3 Ne. 11:7). The Savior gave information and counsel to Joseph on that and later occasions.

Latter-day Saints affirm that subsequent revelations to his prophets have verified that Christ was and is both the Head of the Church and the author of its restoration and development (JS—H 1:30–42; D&C 1:1; 20:1, 37). No mortal, including the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH, considers himself to be the head. In fact, the President and all Church leaders consider themselves servants called by Christ or his authorized agents to represent him by teaching, training, and edifying members of the Church and by taking the gospel message to those not in the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Faust, James E. "Continuous Revelation." Ensign 19 (Nov. 1989):8–10.

BURNS R. SABEY

LDS congregation and meetinghouse in Hawaii, 1915. Mormon missionaries arrived in the Sandwich Islands in 1850.

First, on June 1, 1915, President Joseph F. SMITH dedicated a site at Laie for the Hawaii Temple. Four and a half years later, on November 27, 1919, his successor, President Heber J. GRANT, dedicated the completed structure, the first LDS temple outside the North American continent.

Second, President Grant organized the Oahu Stake on June 30, 1935, with Ralph E. Woolley as president.

Third, for the benefit of the Japanese people in Hawaii, President Grant formed the Japanese Mission in Hawaii in 1937, with Hilton A. Robertson as president. Its name was changed to the Central Pacific Mission in 1942. By 1949 missionaries of the Japanese/Central Pacific Mission had baptized 671 Americans of Japanese ancestry into the Church, and thousands of others have joined the Church since then. Many of these converts and their children have held important positions in the Church. Adney Yoshio Komatsu was the first of that group to be called as a GENERAL AUTHORITY.

Fourth, in September 1955 the Church College of Hawaii was founded under the direction of President David O. MCKAY. Initially a junior college, it was made a four-year school in 1959 and was renamed Brigham Young University—Hawaii Campus in 1974. Two thousand students, mostly from the Pacific and the Asian Rim, attend.

Finally, the Church founded the POLYNESIAN CULTURAL CENTER at Laie in November 1963 to preserve and present the cultures of Polynesia and to provide employment for the college students. The center has grown to become Hawaii's number-one paid attraction, drawing nearly a million visitors a year.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Britsch, R. Lanier. Unto the Islands of the Sea: A History of the Latter-day Saint in the Pacific. Salt Lake City, 1986.

———. Mormons: The Mormons in Hawaii. Laie, Hawaii, 1989.

R. LANIER BRITSCH

HEAD OF THE CHURCH

Members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints believe that Jesus Christ is personally the Head of the Church, leading and guiding it by REVELATION (D&C 10:69; 3 Ne. 21:22).

According to the New Testament, God gave Jesus authority to be "the head over all things to the church" (Eph. 1:22; cf. 2:20; Col. 1:18). For Latter-day Saints, the restoration of the Church was similarly initiated in 1820 when God the Father, following an ancient pattern, appeared in vision with his Son Jesus Christ, who instructed Joseph SMITH (JS—H 1:17; see Matt. 3:17; 2 Pet. 1:17–18; 3 Ne. 11:7). The Savior gave information and counsel to Joseph on that and later occasions.

Latter-day Saints affirm that subsequent revelations to his prophets have verified that Christ was and is both the Head of the Church and the author of its restoration and development (JS—H 1:30–42; D&C 1:1; 20:1, 37). No mortal, including the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH, considers himself to be the head. In fact, the President and all Church leaders consider themselves servants called by Christ or his authorized agents to represent him by teaching, training, and edifying members of the Church and by taking the gospel message to those not in the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Faust, James E. "Continuous Revelation." Ensign 19 (Nov. 1989):8–10.

BURNS R. SABEY

LDS congregation and meetinghouse in Hawaii, 1915. Mormon missionaries arrived in the Sandwich Islands in 1850.

HEALTH, ATTITUDES TOWARD

In light of modern revelation, Latter-day Saints believe that the PHYSICAL BODY and its health and well-being are an essential part of the gospel of Jesus Christ. One purpose of mortality is to acquire and care for a physical body that is united with a SPIRIT in a temporary union. The body is the house or tabernacle of each person's unique eternal spirit. At death, the body and the spirit are temporarily separated. One cannot fulfill his or her eternal potential, however, when the spirit and body are apart. In the RESURRECTION the spirit and the then-immortal body will become eternally reunited and inseparable.

The physical body is a gift from God. No mortal body is perfect; some persons are born with handicaps or serious disabilities. Nevertheless, in premortal life spirits looked forward with great anticipation to receiving a physical body. Latter-day Saints look upon the body as an essential component in the progress to become perfect, even as the Heavenly Father is perfect.

The health laws or commandments given in the scriptures are to teach mankind how to care for their bodies. Such laws have spiritual consequence. Obedience to health laws can enhance physical, mental, and spiritual well-being.

Latter-day Saints are counseled not to take harmful and habit-forming things into their bodies. Tobacco, alcoholic beverages, coffee, tea, and drugs are to be avoided. Fruits, vegetables, herbs, grains, and fish are good for the body; meats, however, should be used sparingly (see WORD OF WISDOM).

In addition, the Lord counseled, "Cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; . . . retire to thy bed early, . . . arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated" (D&C 88:124). Modern prophets have stressed that people should keep their bodies healthy.

Other principles, such as love, kindness, compassion, forgiveness, and charity, foster a healthy and positive mental perspective. A God-given moral code promotes good health and enduring family life by requiring CHASTITY before marriage and total fidelity within marriage.

Without a solid foundation of ethical values, including integrity, responsibility, self-esteem, and self-discipline, children and adults are in danger of being drawn to high-risk behaviors that impair both the body and the spirit. Mortality is a time for the spirit to constrain and discipline the body's appetites. The choices made on a day-to-day basis determine whether one is incapacitated by addictive substances, suffers from sexually transmitted diseases (including AIDS), dies prematurely from degenerative diseases, or suffers traumatic injury.

Thus, Latter-day Saints believe that God has mandated striving to achieve and maintain optimal health. A central purpose of mankind's creation is negated when one trivializes, through wrong choices, the sacredness of one's own body or the body of another. The apostle Paul declared, "What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" (1 Cor. 6:19).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McKay, David O. "The 'Whole' Man." IE 55 (Apr. 1953):221–22.
 Smith, Barbara B. "Good Health—A Key to Joyous Living." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):77–78.

JAMES O. MASON

HEAVEN

Significant meanings of the word "heaven" are (1) the place where God resides (Matt. 6:9; Alma 18:30); (2) the eternal dwelling place of the righteous in the hereafter (Matt. 6:20; 1 Pet. 1:4); and (3) the type of life enjoyed by heavenly beings. A desire for heaven—to eventually live in a better world than the present one—is the basis of a hope that motivates Latter-day Saints (cf. Ether 12:4; D&C 25:10).

Although the specific word "heaven" is regularly used in the day-to-day literature of the Church, it is not as frequently used as it no doubt would be if there were not substitute terms. The revealed nomenclature involving the hereafter in latter-day scripture is precise in detailing the varied conditions that exist in the afterlife. Hence in LDS literature there are many words that refer to life beyond mortality, such as PARADISE, the CELESTIAL KINGDOM, the TERRESTRIAL KINGDOM, the TELESTIAL KINGDOM, or the DEGREES OF GLORY.

In the future, this earth will be renewed and receive a paradisiacal glory (A of F 10; Isa. 65:17–25; D&C 88:25–26). This change of the earth will

HEALTH, ATTITUDES TOWARD

In light of modern revelation, Latter-day Saints believe that the PHYSICAL BODY and its health and well-being are an essential part of the gospel of Jesus Christ. One purpose of mortality is to acquire and care for a physical body that is united with a SPIRIT in a temporary union. The body is the house or tabernacle of each person's unique eternal spirit. At death, the body and the spirit are temporarily separated. One cannot fulfill his or her eternal potential, however, when the spirit and body are apart. In the RESURRECTION the spirit and the then-immortal body will become eternally reunited and inseparable.

The physical body is a gift from God. No mortal body is perfect; some persons are born with handicaps or serious disabilities. Nevertheless, in premortal life spirits looked forward with great anticipation to receiving a physical body. Latter-day Saints look upon the body as an essential component in the progress to become perfect, even as the Heavenly Father is perfect.

The health laws or commandments given in the scriptures are to teach mankind how to care for their bodies. Such laws have spiritual consequence. Obedience to health laws can enhance physical, mental, and spiritual well-being.

Latter-day Saints are counseled not to take harmful and habit-forming things into their bodies. Tobacco, alcoholic beverages, coffee, tea, and drugs are to be avoided. Fruits, vegetables, herbs, grains, and fish are good for the body; meats, however, should be used sparingly (see WORD OF WISDOM).

In addition, the Lord counseled, "Cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; . . . retire to thy bed early, . . . arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated" (D&C 88:124). Modern prophets have stressed that people should keep their bodies healthy.

Other principles, such as love, kindness, compassion, forgiveness, and charity, foster a healthy and positive mental perspective. A God-given moral code promotes good health and enduring family life by requiring CHASTITY before marriage and total fidelity within marriage.

Without a solid foundation of ethical values, including integrity, responsibility, self-esteem, and self-discipline, children and adults are in danger of being drawn to high-risk behaviors that impair both the body and the spirit. Mortality is a time for the spirit to constrain and discipline the body's appetites. The choices made on a day-to-day basis determine whether one is incapacitated by addictive substances, suffers from sexually transmitted diseases (including AIDS), dies prematurely from degenerative diseases, or suffers traumatic injury.

Thus, Latter-day Saints believe that God has mandated striving to achieve and maintain optimal health. A central purpose of mankind's creation is negated when one trivializes, through wrong choices, the sacredness of one's own body or the body of another. The apostle Paul declared, "What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" (1 Cor. 6:19).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McKay, David O. "The 'Whole' Man." IE 55 (Apr. 1953):221–22.

Smith, Barbara B. "Good Health—A Key to Joyous Living." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):77–78.

JAMES O. MASON

HEAVEN

Significant meanings of the word "heaven" are (1) the place where God resides (Matt. 6:9; Alma 18:30); (2) the eternal dwelling place of the righteous in the hereafter (Matt. 6:20; 1 Pet. 1:4); and (3) the type of life enjoyed by heavenly beings. A desire for heaven—to eventually live in a better world than the present one—is the basis of a hope that motivates Latter-day Saints (cf. Ether 12:4; D&C 25:10).

Although the specific word "heaven" is regularly used in the day-to-day literature of the Church, it is not as frequently used as it no doubt would be if there were not substitute terms. The revealed nomenclature involving the hereafter in latter-day scripture is precise in detailing the varied conditions that exist in the afterlife. Hence in LDS literature there are many words that refer to life beyond mortality, such as PARADISE, the CELESTIAL KINGDOM, the TERRESTRIAL KINGDOM, the TELESTIAL KINGDOM, or the DEGREES OF GLORY.

In the future, this earth will be renewed and receive a paradisiacal glory (A of F 10; Isa. 65:17–25; D&C 88:25–26). This change of the earth will be associated with the millennial reign of the Savior, and the earth will eventually become a “new heaven and a new earth” (D&C 29:23). The earth will ultimately be “like unto crystal and will be a Urim and Thummim to the inhabitants who dwell thereon” (D&C 130:9). When this occurs, both the Father and the Son will rule over this planet and those who dwell upon it. This earth will be a heaven to its celestial inhabitants. Speaking of conditions of the future life, the Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, “That same sociality which exists among us here will exist among us there, only it will be coupled with eternal glory, which glory we do not now enjoy” (D&C 130:2).

The doctrinal emphasis on the eternal nature of the family and the implementation of gospel principles into home and family relationships have frequently led leaders of the Church to characterize the faithful family as a foretaste of “heaven here on earth” (Monson, p. 69).

[See also Afterlife; Kingdom of God: In Heaven.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McDannell, Colleen, and Bernhard Lang. Heaven: A History. New Haven and London, 1988.

Monson, Thomas S. “Hallmarks of a Happy Home.” Ensign 18 (Nov. 1988):69–72.

ARTHUR WALLACE

---

HEAVENLY FATHER

See: God the Father

---

HEAVENLY MOTHER

See: Mother in Heaven

---

HEBREWS, EPISTLE TO THE

Many passages in this New Testament letter have particular significance for Latter-day Saints. In general conferences of the Church, the most frequently cited scriptures from the book of Hebrews are those concerning the GODHEAD (Heb. 1:1–3; 12:9; 13:8); the obedient suffering of Jesus (Heb. 2:14–18; 4:15–16; 5:8–9; see also ATONEMENT); the eternal PRIESTHOOD of Jesus Christ (Heb. 7–8);

how one must be called by God in order to hold the priesthood (Heb. 5:1–4); the nature of true faith, which motivates people to righteous action (Heb. 11); going on “unto perfection” (Heb. 6:1); and enduring to the end (Heb. 12:4–11). These themes are essential pillars of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The main point at the center of the epistle is that Jesus Christ is the eternal “high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle” of God (Heb. 8:1–2). This theme is developed throughout the epistle, showing how eternal salvation comes through the greatness, sufficiency, and supremacy of Jesus Christ. The letter was written to devoted converts from Judaism to the early Christian church, who already understood the first principles of the gospel and had received its basic ordinances (Heb. 6:1–4). Step by step, it systematically strives to persuade them “to hold fast to their faith” (Buchanan, p. 266), to keep the covenant, and to realize the incomparable hope and irrevocable promises given to them by God through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. With its explication of the Atonement in terms of priesthood, oaths, covenants, and temple imagery, this entire epistle resonates and harmonizes with LDS concepts and practices.

Chapter 1 begins by boldly declaring that Jesus is the sole mediator between God and all human beings; he is superior to, and supersedes, both prophets and angels. As a separate and distinct personage in the Godhead, he is the God of creation and the perfect revelation of GODHOOD for all time. He is the express image of his Father, both spiritually and physically; he alone purged the sins of mankind and sits on the right hand of God the Father (Heb. 1:1–3). The Father brought the Savior (who was his “firstbegotten” in the pre-mortal existence) “into the world” (Heb. 1:6; cf. D&C 93:21; 1 Ne. 11:18). As the firstborn, Jesus is the heir of all things (Heb. 1:2), and those who are faithful become joint-heirs with him (see HEIRS).

Chapter 2 holds a strong warning to heed the word of God given through Jesus Christ (Heb. 2:1–4). The next world is in subjugation to Christ alone (Heb. 2:5–10). God made him a little lower than “the gods” (taking the marginal reading of Ps. 8:4–6). Because God is the Father of all, even Christ is subject to him. Christ is second only to the Father, yet he is the spirit brother of mankind (Heb. 2:17). Like his brothers and sisters in mortality, he suf-

be associated with the millennial reign of the Savior, and the earth will eventually become a “new heaven and a new earth” (D&C 29:23). The earth will ultimately be “like unto crystal and will be a Urim and Thummim to the inhabitants who dwell thereon” (D&C 130:9). When this occurs, both the Father and the Son will rule over this planet and those who dwell upon it. This earth will be a heaven to its celestial inhabitants. Speaking of conditions of the future life, the Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, “That same sociality which exists among us here will exist among us there, only it will be coupled with eternal glory, which glory we do not now enjoy” (D&C 130:2).

The doctrinal emphasis on the eternal nature of the family and the implementation of gospel principles into home and family relationships have frequently led leaders of the Church to characterize the faithful family as a foretaste of “heaven here on earth” (Monson, p. 69).

[See also Afterlife; Kingdom of God: In Heaven.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McDannell, Colleen, and Bernhard Lang. Heaven: A History. New Haven and London, 1988.

Monson, Thomas S. “Hallmarks of a Happy Home.” Ensign 18 (Nov. 1988):69–72.

ARTHUR WALLACE

---

HEAVENLY FATHER

See: God the Father

---

HEAVENLY MOTHER

See: Mother in Heaven

---

HEBREWS, EPISTLE TO THE

Many passages in this New Testament letter have particular significance for Latter-day Saints. In general conferences of the Church, the most frequently cited scriptures from the book of Hebrews are those concerning the GODHEAD (Heb. 1:1–3; 12:9; 13:8); the obedient suffering of Jesus (Heb. 2:14–18; 4:15–16; 5:8–9; see also ATONEMENT); the eternal PRIESTHOOD of Jesus Christ (Heb. 7–8);

how one must be called by God in order to hold the priesthood (Heb. 5:1–4); the nature of true faith, which motivates people to righteous action (Heb. 11); going on “unto perfection” (Heb. 6:1); and enduring to the end (Heb. 12:4–11). These themes are essential pillars of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The main point at the center of the epistle is that Jesus Christ is the eternal “high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle” of God (Heb. 8:1–2). This theme is developed throughout the epistle, showing how eternal salvation comes through the greatness, sufficiency, and supremacy of Jesus Christ. The letter was written to devoted converts from Judaism to the early Christian church, who already understood the first principles of the gospel and had received its basic ordinances (Heb. 6:1–4). Step by step, it systematically strives to persuade them “to hold fast to their faith” (Buchanan, p. 266), to keep the covenant, and to realize the incomparable hope and irrevocable promises given to them by God through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. With its explication of the Atonement in terms of priesthood, oaths, covenants, and temple imagery, this entire epistle resonates and harmonizes with LDS concepts and practices.

Chapter 1 begins by boldly declaring that Jesus is the sole mediator between God and all human beings; he is superior to, and supersedes, both prophets and angels. As a separate and distinct personage in the Godhead, he is the God of creation and the perfect revelation of GODHOOD for all time. He is the express image of his Father, both spiritually and physically; he alone purged the sins of mankind and sits on the right hand of God the Father (Heb. 1:1–3). The Father brought the Savior (who was his “firstbegotten” in the pre-mortal existence) “into the world” (Heb. 1:6; cf. D&C 93:21; 1 Ne. 11:18). As the firstborn, Jesus is the heir of all things (Heb. 1:2), and those who are faithful become joint-heirs with him (see HEIRS).

Chapter 2 holds a strong warning to heed the word of God given through Jesus Christ (Heb. 2:1–4). The next world is in subjugation to Christ alone (Heb. 2:5–10). God made him a little lower than “the gods” (taking the marginal reading of Ps. 8:4–6). Because God is the Father of all, even Christ is subject to him. Christ is second only to the Father, yet he is the spirit brother of mankind (Heb. 2:17). Like his brothers and sisters in mortality, he sufferred temptation, but unlike them, he never sinned (Heb. 2:18; 4:15–16). Through this suffering, he learned obedience and gained compassion for all God’s children.

The admonition of chapter 3 counsels people to contemplate the greatness of the Lord and to commit themselves to him. The total obedience shown by the Savior to his Father marks the way. The time for commitment is “today.” The gospel is not always available to mankind, and so it is necessary to respond covenantally “this day,” lest individuals be left like the rebellious Israelites to die in the deserts of their own lives (Heb. 3:7–17; cf. Josh. 24:14–25; Jacob 6:5–7; D&C 64:23–25).

Chapter 4, drawing in part upon Israelite temple symbolism, admonishes the Saints to enter into the rest of the Lord (Heb. 4:1, 11). This comes by believing, softening the heart, laboring, standing openly before God, relying on the compassion of Jesus the High Priest, and coming boldly to the mercy seat of God to find grace in time of need (Heb. 4:7, 11, 13, 15, 16).

Chapter 5 explains how Jesus obtained his authority to act as Israel’s great High Priest. He did not presume to take this honor upon himself. As with Aaron, God chose him and bestowed authority upon him as “a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec” (Heb. 5:6; Ps. 110:4).

Chapter 6 calls upon all members of the church to “lay hold upon the hope” of PERFECTION and ETERNAL LIFE, which has been extended to them by an immutable oath and covenant (Heb. 6:1, 13–20; see also OATH AND COVENANT OF THE PRIESTHOOD). Diligence in serving Christ will bring a full assurance of extraordinary promises, as God covenanted with ABRAHAM and promised him eternal increase (Heb. 6:13–14; cf. D&C 132:30). This hope, made possible in Christ, is an anchor for the soul, since God cannot lie. However, those who once have tasted the good word of God and have partaken of the Holy Ghost and then fall away and “crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh,” the sin is so grievous that they cannot be renewed again unto repentance (Heb. 6:6–10).

God’s promises to Abraham are extended to all who come unto Christ: Jesus was a priest after the order of MELCHIZEDEK, who was the priest who blessed Abraham, in whose loins was Levi. The superiority of Christ’s Melchizedek priesthood over the Levitical priesthood and the LAW OF MOSES is developed in chapter 7. Melchizedek was a type of Christ. His priesthood was more enduring than the Levitical priesthood, which was limited to blood lines and was not given with an oath and whose priests did not continue because of death and needed daily renewal (Heb. 7:3, 21, 23, 27). The Melchizedek order of priesthood, however, was directed by Jesus Christ, who, unlike the high priest under the law of Moses on the annual Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:4), did not need to “offer sacrifice for his own sins, for he knew no sins” (JST Heb. 7:26). His priesthood was aparatatos, meaning “permanent, unchangeable, and incomparable” (Heb. 7:24). No other priesthood will succeed it. It will be the permanent power of salvation and ETERNAL LIVES within Christ’s church forever more (TPJS, pp. 166, 322).

As the great High Priest, Jesus offered himself as the eternal atoning sacrifice and became the mediator of this new and better covenant (Heb. 8:6), putting the law of God into the hearts of his people (Heb. 8:10; 10:16). The old law (of Moses), with its performances and sacrifices, had been fulfilled. Through the new covenant, God promised to remember the sins of the repentant no more (Heb. 10:17), and each Saint was challenged to enter into “a new and living way” through the blood of Christ (Heb. 10:15–20). Those who were willing to do so in patience and faith would be justified and receive the promise (Heb. 10:35–38).

Chapter 11 then concentrates on faith and its outward effects in the lives of Israel’s spiritual heroes. Faith is the actual substance or substantiation or assurance (hypostasis) and the evidence or evincing (elenchos) of things not seen that are true (Heb. 11:1; Alma 32:21). True faith necessarily manifests itself in works of righteousness. Chapter 12 thus exhorts the faithful to endure the CHASTENING and correction of God, who is the Father of their spirits. By inheriting the blessings of eternity as sons of the living God, his Saints are able to come to the new Mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, being made perfect, an assembly of “firstborns” (prototokōn), having inherited all with the Firstborn.

Chapter 13 concludes by noting that “marriage is honourable in all,” and by counseling all to “let brotherly love continue,” to “be without covetousness,” and to be loyal to Jesus alone, “bearing his reproach, for here [on earth] have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come” (Heb. 13:1, 4–5, 13–14). Those who enter into this holy order and keep its covenants prepare themselves for eternal life, and fulfillment of the invocation that

“the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will” (Heb. 13:20–21).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. Understanding Paul. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Buchanan, George W. To the Hebrews. Garden City, N.Y., 1972.
- Gentry, Leland H. “Let Us Go On unto Perfection: Paul’s Message in the Book of Hebrews.” In Sidney B. Sperry Symposium, pp. 135–44. Provo, Utah, 1983.

RICHARD D. DRAPER

HEIRS

[This entry consists of two parts: Heirs of God and Joint-Heirs with Christ. The first part explains that by obedience to the commandments of God a person can become an heir of God. The second part emphasizes that the gospel of Jesus Christ also provides the way for one to become a joint-heir with Jesus Christ, and obtain the special inheritance of the Church of the Firstborn.]

HEIRS OF GOD

The doctrine of becoming an heir of God through the gospel of Jesus Christ was noted by Paul (Rom. 8:14–17; Gal. 3:26–29; 4:1–7; see also CALLING AND ELECTION; CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN). In this connection, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that all humans are spirit sons and daughters of God, with the potential of inheriting all that the Father has (D&C 84:33–38). Every member of the human family is a child of God. However, through obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ, including having faith, love, charity, and participating in TEMPLE ORDINANCES and SEALINGS, men and women can become heirs of God in a special way. Such persons are called the “children of Christ, his sons and his daughters,” being “spiritually begotten” by him (Mosiah 5:7). They will be exalted in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM. Members of the Church make several COVENANTS with God, beginning with baptism and continuing through the temple ENDOWMENT and MARRIAGE, by which they promise to obey God’s commandments and to consecrate to him all that they possess in order to become heirs through Christ in the Father’s kingdom. Such may eventually be exalted by God and be given many divine powers, including ETERNAL INCREASE.

Promises of inheritance are extended also to those who die without a knowledge of the gospel, for they shall have opportunity in the SPIRIT WORLD to hear the message of redemption, and have the essential ordinances of the gospel performed in their behalf in the temples of the Church.

[See also Salvation of the Dead.]

JOSEPH GRANT STEVENSON

JOINT-HEIRS WITH CHRIST

Joint-heirs with Christ identifies those persons who attain the highest degree of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM. Latter-day Saints regard Jesus Christ as the firstborn spirit child of God the Father and the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh. Because of this priority, he is the natural heir of the Father. Through strict obedience to the Father’s will, progressing from grace to grace by obeying the gospel and its ORDINANCES and making the infinite ATONEMENT, Jesus became the Savior of all mankind and also heir to all that the Father has. Those who accept Jesus Christ as their redeemer, repent of their sins, obey the ordinances of the gospel, and live in willing obedience with the Holy Spirit as their guide, can also become heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ. In the eternities, they can inherit the same truth, power, wisdom, glory, and EXALTATION possessed by God the Father and by the Son (see D&C 84:38).

The scriptures set forth the Father’s plan of salvation for becoming joint-heirs with Christ. This includes taking the name of Christ upon oneself and living a Christlike life. Obeying the gospel means keeping the ordinances and ceremonies as well as living the moral law. Having started on the course of salvation, each individual is expected to continue to serve the Lord with a pure heart to the end of the mortal life. Through the GRACE of Jesus Christ and the blood that he shed, the willing and obedient are redeemed and sanctified.

All people are spirit children of God and recipients of his love, but only through accepting and living the gospel of Jesus Christ are individuals born again, spiritually begotten, and adopted into the family of God in a special relationship as the “sons and daughters” of Christ (Mosiah 5:7; Gal. 4:5–7; Rom. 8:14–17; see also BORN OF GOD; LAW

“the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will” (Heb. 13:20–21).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. Understanding Paul. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Buchanan, George W. To the Hebrews. Garden City, N.Y., 1972.
- Gentry, Leland H. “Let Us Go On unto Perfection: Paul’s Message in the Book of Hebrews.” In Sidney B. Sperry Symposium, pp. 135–44. Provo, Utah, 1983.

RICHARD D. DRAPER

HEIRS

[This entry consists of two parts: Heirs of God and Joint-Heirs with Christ. The first part explains that by obedience to the commandments of God a person can become an heir of God. The second part emphasizes that the gospel of Jesus Christ also provides the way for one to become a joint-heir with Jesus Christ, and obtain the special inheritance of the Church of the Firstborn.]

HEIRS OF GOD

The doctrine of becoming an heir of God through the gospel of Jesus Christ was noted by Paul (Rom. 8:14–17; Gal. 3:26–29; 4:1–7; see also CALLING AND ELECTION; CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN). In this connection, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that all humans are spirit sons and daughters of God, with the potential of inheriting all that the Father has (D&C 84:33–38). Every member of the human family is a child of God. However, through obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ, including having faith, love, charity, and participating in TEMPLE ORDINANCES and SEALINGS, men and women can become heirs of God in a special way. Such persons are called the “children of Christ, his sons and his daughters,” being “spiritually begotten” by him (Mosiah 5:7). They will be exalted in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM. Members of the Church make several COVENANTS with God, beginning with baptism and continuing through the temple ENDOWMENT and MARRIAGE, by which they promise to obey God’s commandments and to consecrate to him all that they possess in order to become heirs through Christ in the Father’s kingdom. Such may eventually be exalted by God and be given many divine powers, including ETERNAL INCREASE.

Promises of inheritance are extended also to those who die without a knowledge of the gospel, for they shall have opportunity in the SPIRIT WORLD to hear the message of redemption, and have the essential ordinances of the gospel performed in their behalf in the temples of the Church.

[See also Salvation of the Dead.]

JOSEPH GRANT STEVENSON

JOINT-HEIRS WITH CHRIST

Joint-heirs with Christ identifies those persons who attain the highest degree of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM. Latter-day Saints regard Jesus Christ as the firstborn spirit child of God the Father and the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh. Because of this priority, he is the natural heir of the Father. Through strict obedience to the Father’s will, progressing from grace to grace by obeying the gospel and its ORDINANCES and making the infinite ATONEMENT, Jesus became the Savior of all mankind and also heir to all that the Father has. Those who accept Jesus Christ as their redeemer, repent of their sins, obey the ordinances of the gospel, and live in willing obedience with the Holy Spirit as their guide, can also become heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ. In the eternities, they can inherit the same truth, power, wisdom, glory, and EXALTATION possessed by God the Father and by the Son (see D&C 84:38).

The scriptures set forth the Father’s plan of salvation for becoming joint-heirs with Christ. This includes taking the name of Christ upon oneself and living a Christlike life. Obeying the gospel means keeping the ordinances and ceremonies as well as living the moral law. Having started on the course of salvation, each individual is expected to continue to serve the Lord with a pure heart to the end of the mortal life. Through the GRACE of Jesus Christ and the blood that he shed, the willing and obedient are redeemed and sanctified.

All people are spirit children of God and recipients of his love, but only through accepting and living the gospel of Jesus Christ are individuals born again, spiritually begotten, and adopted into the family of God in a special relationship as the “sons and daughters” of Christ (Mosiah 5:7; Gal. 4:5–7; Rom. 8:14–17; see also BORN OF GOD; LAW

OF ADOPTION). Through the gospel, one becomes a joint-heir with Christ, a member of the CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN, and a partaker of the fulness of God's glory.

N. GAYLON HOPKINS

HELANAN<sub>1</sub>

The first Helaman noted in the Book of Mormon (c. 130 B.C.) was one of the three sons of BENJAMIN, king of the NEPHITES and the people of Zarahemla. He is mentioned only once in connection with his father's efforts to educate him and his brothers, MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> and Helorum. Benjamin taught them both the language of their fathers and the prophecies spoken by their fathers, "that thereby they might become men of understanding" (Mosiah 1:2).

MELVIN J. THORNE

HELANAN<sub>2</sub>

Helaman<sub>2</sub> (c. 100–57 B.C.) was a noted BOOK OF MORMON military commander and PROPHET. The eldest son of ALMA<sub>2</sub>, he was brother to Shiblon and Corianton (Alma 31:7) and father to HELAMAN<sub>3</sub>. He became a HIGH PRIEST (Alma 46:38) and was known for teaching REPENTANCE to his people.

While a young man, he remained behind during the mission of his father and brothers to the Zoramites (Alma 31:7), apparently to manage domestic and ecclesiastic affairs in Alma's absence. Later, his father gave him a special blessing, which is often quoted among Latter-day Saints, admonishing him to keep the commandments of God and promising that, if he did so, he would prosper in the land (Alma 36:30; 37:13). Helaman's father also instructed him to continue the record of his people and charged him with the sacred custody of the NEPHITE records, the plates of brass, the twenty-four plates of the JAREDITES, the interpreters, and the LIAHONA, that is, the divine compass that led LEHI's family to the new promised land in the western hemisphere (Alma 37:1–47). Before his father's death, Helaman recorded his father's prophecy concerning the final destruction of the Nephite people (45:9–14).

Although Helaman was known simply as one of "the high priests over the church" (Alma 46:6), apparently he was the chief priest because "Helaman and his brethren" (45:22–23; 46:1, 6; 62:45) or "Helaman and the high priests" (46:38) always performed the ecclesiastical functions; no other presiding high priest is named. When Helaman and his brothers attempted "to establish the church again in all the land" (45:22) after a protracted war with the LAMANITES (43–44), their action triggered civil unrest led by Amalickiah, which in turn embroiled the Nephites in one of their most devastating wars.

During Helaman's youth, a large number of Lamanite converts, called Ammonites (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES), moved to the Nephite territory of Jershon (Alma 27). They swore an oath that they would never again take anyone's life (Alma 24:17–18). Later, when other Lamanites attacked their Nephite protectors, the Ammonites offered to break their oath in order to help the Nephite army defend their families and land. It was "Helaman and his brethren" who persuaded them not to break their covenant. They did welcome 2,060 Ammonite young men, who were not under their parents' oath, who volunteered to fight in the Nephite cause and chose Helaman to lead them (53:10–22). Accepting their invitation, he became both military leader and spiritual father, an observation found in Helaman's long letter to his commander MORONI<sub>1</sub> (Alma 56–58). While Helaman led these "stripling soldiers" (53:22) into many battles, none was killed, although all received wounds (56:56; 57:25; 58:39). These young men credited God with their protection and paid solemn tribute to their mothers who had trained them in faith (56:47). During Helaman's military campaign as leader of these young men, he won victory after victory, often capturing enemies without shedding blood. Exhibiting extraordinary ingenuity and character, he always acknowledged God's blessings in his successes (56:19; 57:35; 58:33).

After the war, Helaman returned home and spent his remaining years regulating the affairs of the Church, convincing "many people of their wickedness, which did cause them to repent of their sins and to be baptized unto the Lord their God" (Alma 62:45). An era of peace resulted from his final efforts. He died in 57 B.C.

PAUL R. CHEESMAN

OF ADOPTION). Through the gospel, one becomes a joint-heir with Christ, a member of the CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN, and a partaker of the fulness of God's glory.

N. GAYLON HOPKINS

HELANAN<sub>1</sub>

The first Helaman noted in the Book of Mormon (c. 130 B.C.) was one of the three sons of BENJAMIN, king of the NEPHITES and the people of Zarahemla. He is mentioned only once in connection with his father's efforts to educate him and his brothers, MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> and Helorum. Benjamin taught them both the language of their fathers and the prophecies spoken by their fathers, "that thereby they might become men of understanding" (Mosiah 1:2).

MELVIN J. THORNE

HELANAN<sub>2</sub>

Helaman<sub>2</sub> (c. 100–57 B.C.) was a noted BOOK OF MORMON military commander and PROPHET. The eldest son of ALMA<sub>2</sub>, he was brother to Shiblon and Corianton (Alma 31:7) and father to HELAMAN<sub>3</sub>. He became a HIGH PRIEST (Alma 46:38) and was known for teaching REPENTANCE to his people.

While a young man, he remained behind during the mission of his father and brothers to the Zoramites (Alma 31:7), apparently to manage domestic and ecclesiastic affairs in Alma's absence. Later, his father gave him a special blessing, which is often quoted among Latter-day Saints, admonishing him to keep the commandments of God and promising that, if he did so, he would prosper in the land (Alma 36:30; 37:13). Helaman's father also instructed him to continue the record of his people and charged him with the sacred custody of the NEPHITE records, the plates of brass, the twenty-four plates of the JAREDITES, the interpreters, and the LIAHONA, that is, the divine compass that led LEHI's family to the new promised land in the western hemisphere (Alma 37:1–47). Before his father's death, Helaman recorded his father's prophecy concerning the final destruction of the Nephite people (45:9–14).

Although Helaman was known simply as one of "the high priests over the church" (Alma 46:6), apparently he was the chief priest because "Helaman and his brethren" (45:22–23; 46:1, 6; 62:45) or "Helaman and the high priests" (46:38) always performed the ecclesiastical functions; no other presiding high priest is named. When Helaman and his brothers attempted "to establish the church again in all the land" (45:22) after a protracted war with the LAMANITES (43–44), their action triggered civil unrest led by Amalickiah, which in turn embroiled the Nephites in one of their most devastating wars.

During Helaman's youth, a large number of Lamanite converts, called Ammonites (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES), moved to the Nephite territory of Jershon (Alma 27). They swore an oath that they would never again take anyone's life (Alma 24:17–18). Later, when other Lamanites attacked their Nephite protectors, the Ammonites offered to break their oath in order to help the Nephite army defend their families and land. It was "Helaman and his brethren" who persuaded them not to break their covenant. They did welcome 2,060 Ammonite young men, who were not under their parents' oath, who volunteered to fight in the Nephite cause and chose Helaman to lead them (53:10–22). Accepting their invitation, he became both military leader and spiritual father, an observation found in Helaman's long letter to his commander MORONI<sub>1</sub> (Alma 56–58). While Helaman led these "stripling soldiers" (53:22) into many battles, none was killed, although all received wounds (56:56; 57:25; 58:39). These young men credited God with their protection and paid solemn tribute to their mothers who had trained them in faith (56:47). During Helaman's military campaign as leader of these young men, he won victory after victory, often capturing enemies without shedding blood. Exhibiting extraordinary ingenuity and character, he always acknowledged God's blessings in his successes (56:19; 57:35; 58:33).

After the war, Helaman returned home and spent his remaining years regulating the affairs of the Church, convincing "many people of their wickedness, which did cause them to repent of their sins and to be baptized unto the Lord their God" (Alma 62:45). An era of peace resulted from his final efforts. He died in 57 B.C.

PAUL R. CHEESMAN

OF ADOPTION). Through the gospel, one becomes a joint-heir with Christ, a member of the CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN, and a partaker of the fulness of God's glory.

N. GAYLON HOPKINS

HELANAN<sub>1</sub>

The first Helaman noted in the Book of Mormon (c. 130 B.C.) was one of the three sons of BENJAMIN, king of the NEPHITES and the people of Zarahemla. He is mentioned only once in connection with his father's efforts to educate him and his brothers, MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> and Helorum. Benjamin taught them both the language of their fathers and the prophecies spoken by their fathers, "that thereby they might become men of understanding" (Mosiah 1:2).

MELVIN J. THORNE

HELANAN<sub>2</sub>

Helaman<sub>2</sub> (c. 100–57 B.C.) was a noted BOOK OF MORMON military commander and PROPHET. The eldest son of ALMA<sub>2</sub>, he was brother to Shiblon and Corianton (Alma 31:7) and father to HELAMAN<sub>3</sub>. He became a HIGH PRIEST (Alma 46:38) and was known for teaching REPENTANCE to his people.

While a young man, he remained behind during the mission of his father and brothers to the Zoramites (Alma 31:7), apparently to manage domestic and ecclesiastic affairs in Alma's absence. Later, his father gave him a special blessing, which is often quoted among Latter-day Saints, admonishing him to keep the commandments of God and promising that, if he did so, he would prosper in the land (Alma 36:30; 37:13). Helaman's father also instructed him to continue the record of his people and charged him with the sacred custody of the NEPHITE records, the plates of brass, the twenty-four plates of the JAREDITES, the interpreters, and the LIAHONA, that is, the divine compass that led LEHI's family to the new promised land in the western hemisphere (Alma 37:1–47). Before his father's death, Helaman recorded his father's prophecy concerning the final destruction of the Nephite people (45:9–14).

Although Helaman was known simply as one of "the high priests over the church" (Alma 46:6), apparently he was the chief priest because "Helaman and his brethren" (45:22–23; 46:1, 6; 62:45) or "Helaman and the high priests" (46:38) always performed the ecclesiastical functions; no other presiding high priest is named. When Helaman and his brothers attempted "to establish the church again in all the land" (45:22) after a protracted war with the LAMANITES (43–44), their action triggered civil unrest led by Amalickiah, which in turn embroiled the Nephites in one of their most devastating wars.

During Helaman's youth, a large number of Lamanite converts, called Ammonites (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES), moved to the Nephite territory of Jershon (Alma 27). They swore an oath that they would never again take anyone's life (Alma 24:17–18). Later, when other Lamanites attacked their Nephite protectors, the Ammonites offered to break their oath in order to help the Nephite army defend their families and land. It was "Helaman and his brethren" who persuaded them not to break their covenant. They did welcome 2,060 Ammonite young men, who were not under their parents' oath, who volunteered to fight in the Nephite cause and chose Helaman to lead them (53:10–22). Accepting their invitation, he became both military leader and spiritual father, an observation found in Helaman's long letter to his commander MORONI<sub>1</sub> (Alma 56–58). While Helaman led these "stripling soldiers" (53:22) into many battles, none was killed, although all received wounds (56:56; 57:25; 58:39). These young men credited God with their protection and paid solemn tribute to their mothers who had trained them in faith (56:47). During Helaman's military campaign as leader of these young men, he won victory after victory, often capturing enemies without shedding blood. Exhibiting extraordinary ingenuity and character, he always acknowledged God's blessings in his successes (56:19; 57:35; 58:33).

After the war, Helaman returned home and spent his remaining years regulating the affairs of the Church, convincing "many people of their wickedness, which did cause them to repent of their sins and to be baptized unto the Lord their God" (Alma 62:45). An era of peace resulted from his final efforts. He died in 57 B.C.

PAUL R. CHEESMAN

HELAMAN<sub>3</sub>

Helaman<sub>3</sub>, son of HELAMAN<sub>2</sub>, was the record keeper and chief judge in the land of Zarahemla for the fourteen years prior to his death in 39 B.C. Little is known of his personal affairs. He was given charge of NEPHITE historical records by his uncle, Shiblon, in 53 B.C. (Alma 63:11–13), and the book of Helaman in the BOOK OF MORMON takes its name from him.

After the assassination of the chief judge Paenmeni in 50 B.C., Helaman was elected by the people to this highest national office. A murder plot against him was subsequently uncovered, and the would-be assassin, Kishkumen, was mortally wounded. The murderous band, led by Gadianton, escaped into the wilderness. Of Gadianton, MORMON wrote “In the end of this book [Book of Mormon] ye shall see that this Gadianton did prove the overthrow . . . of the people of Nephi” (Hel. 2:13; see also SECRET COMBINATIONS).

During the three-year period 48–46 B.C., a substantial number of people left Zarahemla—because of unspecified dissensions—and “went forth unto the land northward” (Hel. 3:3). So extensive was the migration that only a fraction of its impact could be discussed in Mormon’s record (Hel. 3:14). Despite dissension, emigration, and war, “Helaman did fill the judgment-seat with justice and equity; yea, he did observe to keep the statutes, and the judgments, and the commandments of God; and he did do that which was right in the sight of God continually; and he did walk after the ways of his father, insomuch that he did prosper in the land” (3:20). During his tenure, tens of thousands of people were baptized into the church, even to the astonishment of the high priests and teachers (3:24–25). Through the force of his personality, Helaman maintained peace throughout two-thirds of his political career.

When Helaman died, he left the spiritual responsibilities and the sacred records in the hands of his son, NEPHI<sub>2</sub> (Hel. 3:37; 5:5–14; 16:25).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Moss, James R. “Six Nephite Judges.” Ensign 7 (Sept. 1977): 61–65.

CHRISTINE PURVES BAKER

HELL

The term “hell” as used in the King James Version of the Bible is the English translation of four words in the original biblical languages: Hebrew sheol and Greek hades, geenna (Heb. gehenna), and a noun implied in the verb tartar. These terms generally signify the abode of all the dead, whether righteous or disobedient, although geenna and tartarōō are associated with a place of punishment. The derivation and literal meaning of sheol are unknown, but words in Hebrew derived from it bear the idea of “hollowness.”

Latter-day scriptures describe at least three senses of hell: (1) that condition of misery which may attend a person in mortality due to disobedience to divine law; (2) the miserable, but temporary, state of disobedient spirits in the SPIRIT WORLD awaiting the resurrection; (3) the permanent habitation of the SONS OF PERDITION, who suffer the second SPIRITUAL DEATH and remain in hell even after the resurrection.

Persons experiencing the first type of hell can be rescued from suffering through repentance and obedience to the laws and ORDINANCES of the gospel of Jesus Christ because of the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ. The Savior suffered so that he could deliver everyone from hell (Alma 7:11–13; 33:23). Those who do not repent, however, may experience the pains of hell in this life as well as in the next (D&C 76:104; 1 Ne. 16:2; Alma 40:14). The Prophet Joseph SMITH described the true nature of hell: “A man is his own tormenter and his own condemner. Hence the saying, They shall go into the lake that burns with fire and brimstone. The torment of disappointment in the mind of man is as exquisite as a lake burning with fire and brimstone” (TPJS, p. 357). Thus, hell is both a place, a part of the world of spirits where suffering and sorrow occur, and a state of mind associated with remorseful realization of one’s own sins (Mosiah 2:38; Alma 36:12–16).

A second type, a temporary hell of the post-mortal spirit world, is also spoken of as a SPIRIT PRISON. Here, in preparation for the Resurrection, unrepentant spirits are cleansed through suffering that would have been obviated by the atonement of Christ had they repented during mortality (D&C 19:15–20; Alma 40:13–14). At the last resurrection this hell will give up its captive spirits. Many of these spirits will enter into the TELESTIAL KINGDOM in their resurrected state (2 Ne. 9:10–12;

HELAN<sub>3</sub>

Helaman<sub>3</sub>, son of HELAMAN<sub>2</sub>, was the record keeper and chief judge in the land of Zarahemla for the fourteen years prior to his death in 39 B.C. Little is known of his personal affairs. He was given charge of NEPHITE historical records by his uncle, Shiblon, in 53 B.C. (Alma 63:11–13), and the book of Helaman in the BOOK OF MORMON takes its name from him.

After the assassination of the chief judge Paenmeni in 50 B.C., Helaman was elected by the people to this highest national office. A murder plot against him was subsequently uncovered, and the would-be assassin, Kishkumen, was mortally wounded. The murderous band, led by Gadianton, escaped into the wilderness. Of Gadianton, MORMON wrote “In the end of this book [Book of Mormon] ye shall see that this Gadianton did prove the overthrow . . . of the people of Nephi” (Hel. 2:13; see also SECRET COMBINATIONS).

During the three-year period 48–46 B.C., a substantial number of people left Zarahemla—because of unspecified dissensions—and “went forth unto the land northward” (Hel. 3:3). So extensive was the migration that only a fraction of its impact could be discussed in Mormon’s record (Hel. 3:14). Despite dissension, emigration, and war, “Helaman did fill the judgment-seat with justice and equity; yea, he did observe to keep the statutes, and the judgments, and the commandments of God; and he did do that which was right in the sight of God continually; and he did walk after the ways of his father, insomuch that he did prosper in the land” (3:20). During his tenure, tens of thousands of people were baptized into the church, even to the astonishment of the high priests and teachers (3:24–25). Through the force of his personality, Helaman maintained peace throughout two-thirds of his political career.

When Helaman died, he left the spiritual responsibilities and the sacred records in the hands of his son, NEPHI<sub>2</sub> (Hel. 3:37; 5:5–14; 16:25).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Moss, James R. “Six Nephite Judges.” Ensign 7 (Sept. 1977): 61–65.

CHRISTINE PURVES BAKER

HELL

The term “hell” as used in the King James Version of the Bible is the English translation of four words in the original biblical languages: Hebrew sheol and Greek hades, geenna (Heb. gehenna), and a noun implied in the verb tartar. These terms generally signify the abode of all the dead, whether righteous or disobedient, although geenna and tartarōō are associated with a place of punishment. The derivation and literal meaning of sheol are unknown, but words in Hebrew derived from it bear the idea of “hollowness.”

Latter-day scriptures describe at least three senses of hell: (1) that condition of misery which may attend a person in mortality due to disobedience to divine law; (2) the miserable, but temporary, state of disobedient spirits in the SPIRIT WORLD awaiting the resurrection; (3) the permanent habitation of the SONS OF PERDITION, who suffer the second SPIRITUAL DEATH and remain in hell even after the resurrection.

Persons experiencing the first type of hell can be rescued from suffering through repentance and obedience to the laws and ORDINANCES of the gospel of Jesus Christ because of the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ. The Savior suffered so that he could deliver everyone from hell (Alma 7:11–13; 33:23). Those who do not repent, however, may experience the pains of hell in this life as well as in the next (D&C 76:104; 1 Ne. 16:2; Alma 40:14). The Prophet Joseph SMITH described the true nature of hell: “A man is his own tormenter and his own condemner. Hence the saying, They shall go into the lake that burns with fire and brimstone. The torment of disappointment in the mind of man is as exquisite as a lake burning with fire and brimstone” (TPJS, p. 357). Thus, hell is both a place, a part of the world of spirits where suffering and sorrow occur, and a state of mind associated with remorseful realization of one’s own sins (Mosiah 2:38; Alma 36:12–16).

A second type, a temporary hell of the post-mortal spirit world, is also spoken of as a SPIRIT PRISON. Here, in preparation for the Resurrection, unrepentant spirits are cleansed through suffering that would have been obviated by the atonement of Christ had they repented during mortality (D&C 19:15–20; Alma 40:13–14). At the last resurrection this hell will give up its captive spirits. Many of these spirits will enter into the TELESTIAL KINGDOM in their resurrected state (2 Ne. 9:10–12;

D&C 76:84–89, 106; Rev. 20:13). References to an everlasting hell for these spirits are interpreted in light of the Doctrine and Covenants, which defines ENDLESS AND ETERNAL as referring not to the length of punishment, but rather referring to God's punishment because he is "endless" and "eternal" (19:4–13). Individual spirits will be cleansed, will cease to experience the fiery torment of mind, and will be resurrected with their physical bodies.

The Savior's reference to the "gates of hell" (Hades, or the spirit world; Matt. 16:18) indicates, among other things, that God's priesthood power will penetrate hell and redeem the repentant spirits there. Many have been, and many more will yet be, delivered from hell through hearing, repenting, and obeying the gospel of Jesus Christ in the spirit world after the death of the body. LDS doctrine emphasizes that after his mortal death Jesus Christ went to the spirit world and organized the teaching of the gospel there (D&C 138; cf. Luke 23:43; 1 Pet. 3:18–20). The Athanasian Creed and some forms of the "Apostles'" Creed state that Christ "descended into hell." LDS teaching is that Jesus entered the spirit world to extend his redemptive mission to those in hell, upon conditions of their repentance (see SALVATION OF THE DEAD).

A third meaning of "hell" (second spiritual death) refers to the realm of the devil and his angels, including those known as sons of perdition (2 Pet. 2:4; D&C 29:38; 88:113; Rev. 20:14). It is a place for those who cannot be cleansed by the Atonement because they committed the unforgivable and UNPARDONABLE SIN (1 Ne. 15:35; D&C 76:30–49). Only this hell continues to operate after the Resurrection and Judgment.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "Descent of Christ into Hell." In Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, p. 395. New York, 1983.
- Nibley, Hugh W. "Christ Among the Ruins." Ensign 13 (July 1983):14–19.

M. CATHERINE THOMAS

---

HIGH COUNCIL

A high council is a body of twelve HIGH PRIESTS who are called and set apart in each STAKE to assist and advise the STAKE PRESIDENCY under whom they serve.

Following the organization of the Church, in 1830, the Prophet Joseph SMITH served as the spiritual leader for the growing body of members. However, with the rapid growth in membership and a commitment to LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP, it soon became evident that a more extensive governing structure would be required. The FIRST PRESIDENCY was organized in 1832.

At a conference held in KIRTLAND, OHIO, on February 17, 1834, Joseph Smith established a standing stake high council composed of twelve high priests, with himself, Sidney RIGDON, and Frederick G. Williams comprising the First Presidency and also as the presidency of the Kirtland Stake. Later that year, a separate stake presidency and high council were organized in MISSOURI. They operated independent of the Kirtland council, except for cases that went from Missouri to Kirtland on appeal. These initial standing high councils became the prototype for future stake organizations as the Church continued to grow and expand. Following the organization in 1835 of the "traveling high council," or QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES (D&C 107:33–36), stake high councils concerned themselves only with stake matters.

With continued Church growth, additional areas were organized into stakes under the direction of the First Presidency to provide a means of coordinating the spiritual activities of the local WARDS and BRANCHES. In each case, a three-member stake presidency, assisted by a twelve-member high council, was called to preside over the stake. Their authority was limited to the stake in which they functioned.

As in the Quorum (or Council) of the Twelve Apostles, a seniority system exists within a stake high council; as vacancies occur in the council, the stake presidency calls new members, and the oldest in term of service is recognized as the senior member.

Under the direction of the stake presidency, the high council has important executive, legislative, and judicial powers (see D&C 102). Members of the stake high council serve as advisers to the stake presidency on any matter about which the presidency might seek counsel, and they carry out specific assignments. For example, a high councilor may have an assignment to represent the stake presidency, to assist in the training of a new ward BISHOPRIC, to attend a ward's priesthood executive committee meetings and ward council

D&C 76:84–89, 106; Rev. 20:13). References to an everlasting hell for these spirits are interpreted in light of the Doctrine and Covenants, which defines ENDLESS AND ETERNAL as referring not to the length of punishment, but rather referring to God's punishment because he is "endless" and "eternal" (19:4–13). Individual spirits will be cleansed, will cease to experience the fiery torment of mind, and will be resurrected with their physical bodies.

The Savior's reference to the "gates of hell" (Hades, or the spirit world; Matt. 16:18) indicates, among other things, that God's priesthood power will penetrate hell and redeem the repentant spirits there. Many have been, and many more will yet be, delivered from hell through hearing, repenting, and obeying the gospel of Jesus Christ in the spirit world after the death of the body. LDS doctrine emphasizes that after his mortal death Jesus Christ went to the spirit world and organized the teaching of the gospel there (D&C 138; cf. Luke 23:43; 1 Pet. 3:18–20). The Athanasian Creed and some forms of the "Apostles'" Creed state that Christ "descended into hell." LDS teaching is that Jesus entered the spirit world to extend his redemptive mission to those in hell, upon conditions of their repentance (see SALVATION OF THE DEAD).

A third meaning of "hell" (second spiritual death) refers to the realm of the devil and his angels, including those known as sons of perdition (2 Pet. 2:4; D&C 29:38; 88:113; Rev. 20:14). It is a place for those who cannot be cleansed by the Atonement because they committed the unforgivable and UNPARDONABLE SIN (1 Ne. 15:35; D&C 76:30–49). Only this hell continues to operate after the Resurrection and Judgment.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "Descent of Christ into Hell." In Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, p. 395. New York, 1983.
- Nibley, Hugh W. "Christ Among the Ruins." Ensign 13 (July 1983):14–19.

M. CATHERINE THOMAS

---

HIGH COUNCIL

A high council is a body of twelve HIGH PRIESTS who are called and set apart in each STAKE to assist and advise the STAKE PRESIDENCY under whom they serve.

Following the organization of the Church, in 1830, the Prophet Joseph SMITH served as the spiritual leader for the growing body of members. However, with the rapid growth in membership and a commitment to LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP, it soon became evident that a more extensive governing structure would be required. The FIRST PRESIDENCY was organized in 1832.

At a conference held in KIRTLAND, OHIO, on February 17, 1834, Joseph Smith established a standing stake high council composed of twelve high priests, with himself, Sidney RIGDON, and Frederick G. Williams comprising the First Presidency and also as the presidency of the Kirtland Stake. Later that year, a separate stake presidency and high council were organized in MISSOURI. They operated independent of the Kirtland council, except for cases that went from Missouri to Kirtland on appeal. These initial standing high councils became the prototype for future stake organizations as the Church continued to grow and expand. Following the organization in 1835 of the "traveling high council," or QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES (D&C 107:33–36), stake high councils concerned themselves only with stake matters.

With continued Church growth, additional areas were organized into stakes under the direction of the First Presidency to provide a means of coordinating the spiritual activities of the local WARDS and BRANCHES. In each case, a three-member stake presidency, assisted by a twelve-member high council, was called to preside over the stake. Their authority was limited to the stake in which they functioned.

As in the Quorum (or Council) of the Twelve Apostles, a seniority system exists within a stake high council; as vacancies occur in the council, the stake presidency calls new members, and the oldest in term of service is recognized as the senior member.

Under the direction of the stake presidency, the high council has important executive, legislative, and judicial powers (see D&C 102). Members of the stake high council serve as advisers to the stake presidency on any matter about which the presidency might seek counsel, and they carry out specific assignments. For example, a high councilor may have an assignment to represent the stake presidency, to assist in the training of a new ward BISHOPRIC, to attend a ward's priesthood executive committee meetings and ward council meetings, or to train and advise ward MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD quorum leaders. He may be asked to report regularly to the stake presidency concerning the status of a particular ward. In addition, he may serve as a member of the stake Melchizedek Priesthood committee, which assists the stake presidency in installing, training, and advising Melchizedek Priesthood leaders. Other assignments that are generally given to a member of a high council include membership on the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD/Boy Scouting Committee; adviser to the stake YOUNG WOMEN organization; stake mission president; coordinator of stake WELFARE programs; coordinator for temple service and FAMILY HISTORY programs; stake EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS director, or other such administrative roles. A high councilor will usually also be assigned to speak periodically in ward SACRAMENT MEETINGS under the direction of the stake presidency.

At regular meetings of the stake high council, the presidency presents matters of business to the council for its approval. Such matters may include endorsing an individual's name for an assignment in the stake organization, recommending a person as a potential ward bishop or counselor in a bishopric, or considering an individual for ordination to an office in the Melchizedek Priesthood. The stake president may also ask for discussion of particular issues, and high councilors may be asked to report on the status of their assignments.

As part of its judicial function, the high council serves as a disciplinary council when convened by the stake president to consider cases of serious transgression that affect the standing or fellowship of a Church member. Following the presentation of the facts of the case and due deliberation and prayer, a decision is rendered by the stake president and ratified by the stake high council (see DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES).

DONOVAN E. FLEMING

HIGH PRIEST

The term "high priest" refers to an office in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. Men must be ordained high priests to serve as BISHOPS, on high councils, or in STAKE PRESIDENCIES, or as GENERAL AUTHORITIES (see HIGH COUNCIL; PRIESTHOOD). Stake presidents may ordain high priests for other reasons as well. When released from any of these callings, a high priest continues to be a member of the high priests quorum in his resident stake and to participate in the activities of his ward's high priests group (see PRIESTHOOD QUORUM).

The PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH is the PRESIDING HIGH PRIEST in the Church (D&C 107:65–66), the president of the stake is the presiding high priest in the stake, and the bishop is the presiding high priest in the ward. Since 1956, stake presidencies have been serving as the presidencies of their respective stake high priests quorums. Each ward in a stake has a high priests group with a group leader and one or more assistants, as needed. Ward groups of high priests meet weekly to be instructed in their duties and in the principles of the gospel (D&C 124:134; J. Taylor in JD 23:219). During group meetings they also receive and report on assignments such as HOME TEACHING and volunteer service projects.

To be ordained a high priest, an ELDER must be recommended by the ward bishopric to the stake presidency. After approval by the stake presidency and high council, his name is presented to the general body of stake priesthood bearers for a sustaining vote after which he is ordained by or under the direction of the stake president.

The first ordinations to the office of high priest in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints were done at the fourth conference of the Church, held in June 1831 in Kirtland, Ohio. Twenty-three men were ordained at that time, including the Prophet Joseph Smith, who was ordained a high priest under the hands of Lyman Wight, who had been ordained to that office by the Prophet. Joseph Smith had received this authority earlier at the hands of Peter, James, and John (see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). Current records do not specify when high priests were first organized as a quorum, but it apparently was before January 1836. For a period of time, high priests quorums were organized in each ward with their own presidencies, but in 1877 Brigham Young indicated that stake presidents had responsibility over these quorums. In December 1975 the First Presidency clarified details of the current arrangement under which ward high priests groups function as units of the stake high priests quorum, with the stake president as the president of the quorum and ward high priest group leaders functioning under his direction. As of 1989, there meetings, or to train and advise ward MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD quorum leaders. He may be asked to report regularly to the stake presidency concerning the status of a particular ward. In addition, he may serve as a member of the stake Melchizedek Priesthood committee, which assists the stake presidency in installing, training, and advising Melchizedek Priesthood leaders. Other assignments that are generally given to a member of a high council include membership on the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD/Boy Scouting Committee; adviser to the stake YOUNG WOMEN organization; stake mission president; coordinator of stake WELFARE programs; coordinator for temple service and FAMILY HISTORY programs; stake EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS director, or other such administrative roles. A high councilor will usually also be assigned to speak periodically in ward SACRAMENT MEETINGS under the direction of the stake presidency.

At regular meetings of the stake high council, the presidency presents matters of business to the council for its approval. Such matters may include endorsing an individual's name for an assignment in the stake organization, recommending a person as a potential ward bishop or counselor in a bishopric, or considering an individual for ordination to an office in the Melchizedek Priesthood. The stake president may also ask for discussion of particular issues, and high councilors may be asked to report on the status of their assignments.

As part of its judicial function, the high council serves as a disciplinary council when convened by the stake president to consider cases of serious transgression that affect the standing or fellowship of a Church member. Following the presentation of the facts of the case and due deliberation and prayer, a decision is rendered by the stake president and ratified by the stake high council (see DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES).

DONOVAN E. FLEMING

HIGH PRIEST

The term "high priest" refers to an office in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. Men must be ordained high priests to serve as BISHOPS, on high councils, or in STAKE PRESIDENCIES, or as GENERAL AUTHORITIES (see HIGH COUNCIL; PRIESTHOOD). Stake presidents may ordain high priests for other reasons as well. When released from any of these callings, a high priest continues to be a member of the high priests quorum in his resident stake and to participate in the activities of his ward's high priests group (see PRIESTHOOD QUORUM).

The PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH is the PRESIDING HIGH PRIEST in the Church (D&C 107:65–66), the president of the stake is the presiding high priest in the stake, and the bishop is the presiding high priest in the ward. Since 1956, stake presidencies have been serving as the presidencies of their respective stake high priests quorums. Each ward in a stake has a high priests group with a group leader and one or more assistants, as needed. Ward groups of high priests meet weekly to be instructed in their duties and in the principles of the gospel (D&C 124:134; J. Taylor in JD 23:219). During group meetings they also receive and report on assignments such as HOME TEACHING and volunteer service projects.

To be ordained a high priest, an ELDER must be recommended by the ward bishopric to the stake presidency. After approval by the stake presidency and high council, his name is presented to the general body of stake priesthood bearers for a sustaining vote after which he is ordained by or under the direction of the stake president.

The first ordinations to the office of high priest in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints were done at the fourth conference of the Church, held in June 1831 in Kirtland, Ohio. Twenty-three men were ordained at that time, including the Prophet Joseph Smith, who was ordained a high priest under the hands of Lyman Wight, who had been ordained to that office by the Prophet. Joseph Smith had received this authority earlier at the hands of Peter, James, and John (see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). Current records do not specify when high priests were first organized as a quorum, but it apparently was before January 1836. For a period of time, high priests quorums were organized in each ward with their own presidencies, but in 1877 Brigham Young indicated that stake presidents had responsibility over these quorums. In December 1975 the First Presidency clarified details of the current arrangement under which ward high priests groups function as units of the stake high priests quorum, with the stake president as the president of the quorum and ward high priest group leaders functioning under his direction. As of 1989, there were approximately 246,000 high priests in the Church.

From Adam to Moses, righteous men holding the holy priesthood were ordained high priests. Adam, Enoch, Noah, Melchizedek, Abraham, Moses, and many others were all ordained high priests (D&C 107:53; Alma 13). After the time of Moses the Melchizedek Priesthood was generally withdrawn from the earth, except among the prophets, and the law functioned under the Aaronic Priesthood. Thus, under the LAW OF MOSES a high priest was the chief priest in the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD. He presided over all other priests in their functions and ordinances, particularly those of the temple. Only a direct descendant of the first-born son of AARON anointed to be the spiritual head of the people could become the high priest.

In the Book of Mormon, there were apparently no Levites or descendants of Aaron among the people. High priests were the presiding spiritual authorities and held the Melchizedek Priesthood (e.g., Alma 8:23; 30:20, 23).

In the epistle to the Hebrews, Paul declares Christ to be the promised high priest “after the order of Melchisedec,” an order higher in authority than the Aaronic Priesthood and not dependent upon the Aaronic lineage (Heb. 5:4–6, 10; 7:3, 11, 14–15; Ps. 110:4). As the great high priest, Christ made an eternal sacrifice, once for all time and all people (Heb. 9:11–12), and he continues to preside over all the ordinances and the organization of the Church, which bears his name (see HEAD OF THE CHURCH).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cotton, J. Harry, and Alexander C. Purdy. The Interpreter's Bible, Vol. 11, pp. 637–708. New York, 1955.
- Schrenk, Gottlob. “Priest, High Priest.” Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, ed. G. Kittel, Vol. 3, pp. 257–83. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1965.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1951.

A. LEGRAND RICHARDS

HIRAM, OHIO

Hiram, Ohio, a small town twenty-five miles south and slightly east of KIRTLAND, OHIO, was the site of a large branch of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the 1830s and served for one year as home to the Prophet Joseph SMITH. John and Elsa Johnson, a prosperous farmer and his wife, residents in Hiram Township, welcomed Joseph, Emma, and their adopted twins to live with them in September 1831. Joseph had healed Elsa's arthritic arm several months earlier.

During the Smiths' stay, Joseph received an outpouring of fifteen of the revelations now published in the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS. Section 1, known as the Preface, was given at one of many Church conferences held there. On February 16, 1832, Joseph and his scribe at this time, Sidney RIGDON, beheld a divine vision of the eternal worlds that forms the basis of Latter-day Saint understanding of life after death. In this vision (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTION 76) they reported seeing both God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ and bore witness of Jesus Christ: “He lives! For we saw him, even on the right hand of God” (verses 22–23). A Hiram conference in November 1831 voted to print all revelations received up to that date as the BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS.

On the cold night of March 24, 1832, a mob dragged Joseph and Sidney from their beds into a nearby meadow, beat them, and poured tar and feathers on their bodies (HC 1:261–65). Joseph and Sidney bore the marks of that night for the rest of their lives. Another consequence was the death of Joseph and Emma's adopted eleven-month-old son. Ill with the measles at the time, he was exposed to the cold and died five days later.

While living in Hiram, Joseph accomplished a significant portion of his translation of the Bible (see JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE

The John Johnson home in Hiram, Ohio. Joseph Smith received several revelations here, including D&C 76, known as the Vision, about the degrees of glory in heaven. Courtesy LaMar C. Berrett.

were approximately 246,000 high priests in the Church.

From Adam to Moses, righteous men holding the holy priesthood were ordained high priests. Adam, Enoch, Noah, Melchizedek, Abraham, Moses, and many others were all ordained high priests (D&C 107:53; Alma 13). After the time of Moses the Melchizedek Priesthood was generally withdrawn from the earth, except among the prophets, and the law functioned under the Aaronic Priesthood. Thus, under the LAW OF MOSES a high priest was the chief priest in the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD. He presided over all other priests in their functions and ordinances, particularly those of the temple. Only a direct descendant of the first-born son of AARON anointed to be the spiritual head of the people could become the high priest.

In the Book of Mormon, there were apparently no Levites or descendants of Aaron among the people. High priests were the presiding spiritual authorities and held the Melchizedek Priesthood (e.g., Alma 8:23; 30:20, 23).

In the epistle to the Hebrews, Paul declares Christ to be the promised high priest “after the order of Melchisedec,” an order higher in authority than the Aaronic Priesthood and not dependent upon the Aaronic lineage (Heb. 5:4–6, 10; 7:3, 11, 14–15; Ps. 110:4). As the great high priest, Christ made an eternal sacrifice, once for all time and all people (Heb. 9:11–12), and he continues to preside over all the ordinances and the organization of the Church, which bears his name (see HEAD OF THE CHURCH).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cotton, J. Harry, and Alexander C. Purdy. The Interpreter's Bible, Vol. 11, pp. 637–708. New York, 1955.
- Schrenk, Gottlob. “Priest, High Priest.” Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, ed. G. Kittel, Vol. 3, pp. 257–83. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1965.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1951.

A. LEGRAND RICHARDS

HIRAM, OHIO

Hiram, Ohio, a small town twenty-five miles south and slightly east of KIRTLAND, OHIO, was the site of a large branch of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the 1830s and served for one year as home to the Prophet Joseph SMITH. John and Elsa Johnson, a prosperous farmer and his wife, residents in Hiram Township, welcomed Joseph, Emma, and their adopted twins to live with them in September 1831. Joseph had healed Elsa's arthritic arm several months earlier.

During the Smiths' stay, Joseph received an outpouring of fifteen of the revelations now published in the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS. Section 1, known as the Preface, was given at one of many Church conferences held there. On February 16, 1832, Joseph and his scribe at this time, Sidney RIGDON, beheld a divine vision of the eternal worlds that forms the basis of Latter-day Saint understanding of life after death. In this vision (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTION 76) they reported seeing both God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ and bore witness of Jesus Christ: “He lives! For we saw him, even on the right hand of God” (verses 22–23). A Hiram conference in November 1831 voted to print all revelations received up to that date as the BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS.

On the cold night of March 24, 1832, a mob dragged Joseph and Sidney from their beds into a nearby meadow, beat them, and poured tar and feathers on their bodies (HC 1:261–65). Joseph and Sidney bore the marks of that night for the rest of their lives. Another consequence was the death of Joseph and Emma's adopted eleven-month-old son. Ill with the measles at the time, he was exposed to the cold and died five days later.

While living in Hiram, Joseph accomplished a significant portion of his translation of the Bible (see JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE

The John Johnson home in Hiram, Ohio. Joseph Smith received several revelations here, including D&C 76, known as the Vision, about the degrees of glory in heaven. Courtesy LaMar C. Berrett.

[JST]). He left the area only once for a trip to Missouri and for several nearby preaching missions.

The Johnson home is now owned by the Church and is open as a VISITORS CENTER. The Hiram Ward meetinghouse stands nearby.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Backman, Milton V., Jr. The Heavens Resound. Salt Lake City, 1983.

KARL RICKS ANDERSON

HISTORIANS, CHURCH

From its beginnings, the Church has considered RECORD KEEPING and history writing an imperative duty (D&C 123:1–7). The Book of Mormon, published in 1830, is a product of ancient records kept by command of God (1 Ne. 9:3, 5; Jacob 1:2; 3 Ne. 23:4, 11–13). Record keeping is also commanded by modern revelation (D&C 21:1; 47:3; 69:3; 72:5–6). Latter-day Saints write history not only to obey divine injunctions but also to combat false reports and to convert and edify future generations (HIC 1:1; 2:199; 6:409).

Although most of the early commandments pertained to the keeping of “official” Church records, Latter-day Saints also apply them to individuals. Joseph SMITH and other prominent leaders set the example by keeping journals. Clerks and scribes recorded revelations, minutes of meetings, speeches, correspondence, blessings, and ordinances.

EARLY CHURCH HISTORIANS, 1830–1842. Record keeping and history writing were institutionalized with the appointment of Oliver COWDERY as the first Church Recorder when the Church was organized on April 6, 1830 (D&C 21:1). That the Prophet’s closest associate and most capable scribe, who also served as second elder in the Church, should be called as Church Recorder is an indication of the importance attached to the position. According to his successor, Cowdery wrote the history of the Church up to mid-1831, when he was released; that early history has never been located. During his second term in office (1835–1837), Cowdery completed a series of eight historical letters that he had started publishing in the MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE in October 1834.

John Whitmer, one of the eight BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES, served officially as Church recorder between 1831 and 1834 and, after his release, wrote unofficially until his excommunication in 1838. His history for 1831–1838 was published in 1908.

George W. Robinson, a son-in-law of Sidney RIGDON, became general recorder in 1837 (HIC 2:513). He accompanied Joseph Smith in visiting Church settlements in northern Missouri and kept a brief record captioned “The Scriptorial Book of Joseph Smith, Jr.” Robinson was released in 1840 when he moved across the river from Nauvoo.

From 1838 to 1843 there was considerable overlapping in the service of Church recorders and historians. Little progress had been made on the Church annals, which, in part, were being written to help combat highly visible ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS. In a flurry of activity to correct the situation, Joseph Smith had earlier minutes copied into the Far West Record, renewed efforts on his

Willard Richards (1804–54), ordained an apostle in 1840, was one of Joseph Smith’s secretaries. He was appointed a Church historian in 1842 and general Church recorder in 1845. Engraving, c. 1853.

[JST]). He left the area only once for a trip to Missouri and for several nearby preaching missions.

The Johnson home is now owned by the Church and is open as a VISITORS CENTER. The Hiram Ward meetinghouse stands nearby.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Backman, Milton V., Jr. The Heavens Resound. Salt Lake City, 1983.

KARL RICKS ANDERSON

HISTORIANS, CHURCH

From its beginnings, the Church has considered RECORD KEEPING and history writing an imperative duty (D&C 123:1–7). The Book of Mormon, published in 1830, is a product of ancient records kept by command of God (1 Ne. 9:3, 5; Jacob 1:2; 3 Ne. 23:4, 11–13). Record keeping is also commanded by modern revelation (D&C 21:1; 47:3; 69:3; 72:5–6). Latter-day Saints write history not only to obey divine injunctions but also to combat false reports and to convert and edify future generations (HIC 1:1; 2:199; 6:409).

Although most of the early commandments pertained to the keeping of “official” Church records, Latter-day Saints also apply them to individuals. Joseph SMITH and other prominent leaders set the example by keeping journals. Clerks and scribes recorded revelations, minutes of meetings, speeches, correspondence, blessings, and ordinances.

EARLY CHURCH HISTORIANS, 1830–1842. Record keeping and history writing were institutionalized with the appointment of Oliver COWDERY as the first Church Recorder when the Church was organized on April 6, 1830 (D&C 21:1). That the Prophet’s closest associate and most capable scribe, who also served as second elder in the Church, should be called as Church Recorder is an indication of the importance attached to the position. According to his successor, Cowdery wrote the history of the Church up to mid-1831, when he was released; that early history has never been located. During his second term in office (1835–1837), Cowdery completed a series of eight historical letters that he had started publishing in the MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE in October 1834.

John Whitmer, one of the eight BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES, served officially as Church recorder between 1831 and 1834 and, after his release, wrote unofficially until his excommunication in 1838. His history for 1831–1838 was published in 1908.

George W. Robinson, a son-in-law of Sidney RIGDON, became general recorder in 1837 (HIC 2:513). He accompanied Joseph Smith in visiting Church settlements in northern Missouri and kept a brief record captioned “The Scriptorium Book of Joseph Smith, Jr.” Robinson was released in 1840 when he moved across the river from Nauvoo.

From 1838 to 1843 there was considerable overlapping in the service of Church recorders and historians. Little progress had been made on the Church annals, which, in part, were being written to help combat highly visible ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS. In a flurry of activity to correct the situation, Joseph Smith had earlier minutes copied into the Far West Record, renewed efforts on his own history with the assistance of Sidney Rigdon, and called John Correll and Elias Higbee as Church historians to work with Robinson.

Willard Richards (1804–54), ordained an apostle in 1840, was one of Joseph Smith’s secretaries. He was appointed a Church historian in 1842 and general Church recorder in 1845. Engraving, c. 1853.

Soon after his appointment, John Correll chafed at criticism by the Prophet and chose to testify against his former associates in several legal proceedings, leading to his excommunication. To justify his break with the Church, he quickly wrote and published in 1839 the history that he never wrote as Church historian.

As a Church historian, Elias Higbee helped collect affidavits regarding the Saints' losses in Missouri, and in October 1839 he accompanied Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon to Washington, D.C., to present them to U.S. officials. After President Van Buren rebuffed them in February 1840, Higbee stayed on, trying unsuccessfully for a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. His documents relating to this Washington mission, later incorporated in the "History of Joseph Smith," were his main contribution to Church history.

In 1840, twenty-eight-year-old Robert B. Thompson replaced Robinson as Church historian, but he had little time for history. He wrote in Joseph Smith's letter book, recorded patriarchal blessings, and served as city treasurer, clerk of the high council, and associate editor of the TIMES AND SEASONS. After Thompson died in 1841, James Sloan, an experienced clerk, served as historian, but within a year he was called on a mission to his native Ireland.

PIONEER CHURCH HISTORIANS, 1842–1900. After fluctuating changes in titles and personnel, the offices of Church recorder and Church historian merged and became stable with the appointment of Willard Richards in late 1842. He came to his literary duties singularly qualified and immediately brought new impetus and dignity to the position. Richards kept the Prophet's diary for him, wrote correspondence, compiled most of the "History of Joseph Smith" (see HISTORY OF THE CHURCH), and either recorded or supervised the recording of the Prophet's sermons, minutes of meetings, and ordinances performed in the Nauvoo Temple.

Richards's efforts provided continuity during the unsettled years of pioneer travel. With the help of his assistant, Thomas Bullock, he packed Church records in sturdy boxes for removal to the West. At Winter Quarters he set up a temporary Church Historian's Office in an octagonal cabin that also served as Church headquarters. In Utah he maintained the Historian's Office in his own home in Salt Lake City until his death on March 11, 1854.

No one seemed more qualified to complete the "History of Joseph Smith" than Joseph Smith's cousin George A. Smith, who was appointed as Church historian and general Church recorder on April 7, 1854. He had a modest building constructed across the street from Brigham YOUNG's office that served as the Historian's Office from 1856 to 1917. His main contributions were completing the "History of Joseph Smith" and directing the compilation of the "History of Brigham Young."

Albert Carrington, a graduate of Dartmouth College, Brigham Young's secretary, and editor of the Deseret News, was ordained an apostle and appointed historian in 1870. During Carrington's four-year term, work continued on the Manuscript History of Brigham Young. Orson PRATT, an apostle, was sixty-three years old when he was appointed Church historian in 1874 and never involved himself personally in writing Church history. He died in 1881.

Although Wilford WOODRUFF (1833–1898) served as Church historian from 1883 to 1889, he made his greatest contributions to Church history as assistant Church historian from 1856 to 1883. He was the prime motivator behind a project to publish a biography of each man who had served in the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and was instrumental in preparing the sermons of Joseph Smith for publication in the History of the Church. Woodruff's journals, which he kept with diligence from the time he joined the Church until a few weeks before his death, proved invaluable in compiling the histories of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young.

Franklin D. Richards, an apostle, served as an assistant Church historian for five years before becoming Church historian in 1889. He traveled to San Francisco to provide information for Hubert H. Bancroft, who was then preparing his histories of western states and territories. The resulting History of Utah (1890) was considered the most balanced and scholarly account of Church pioneer history to that time. Elder Richards energetically collected historical sources and authorized his assistant, Andrew Jenson, to travel extensively to gather materials. On his own initiative, Jenson had already undertaken historical projects beneficial to the Church before he was sustained as an assistant Church historian in 1897.

EARLY-TWENTIETH-CENTURY CHURCH HISTORIANS. Anthon H. Lund served from 1900 to 1921. An able and considerate administrator, he supervised significant projects, including moving the office and records in 1917 to the new Church Office Building. Andrew Jenson continued traveling to stakes and missions, gathering materials to compile a “manuscript history” of each; he also published thousands of biographical sketches. In 1906, when he was assigned responsibility for the “Journal History,” Jenson began a retroactive compilation of sources in the form of annals extending back to 1830, a history that by 1932 had grown to 518 volumes. He also continued work on several private historical projects until his death in 1941.

Elder B. H. Roberts of the Seventy established himself as a historian with the publication of The Life of John Taylor (1892), Outlines of Ecclesiastical History (1893), The Missouri Persecutions (1900), and The Rise and Fall of Nauvoo (1900). In 1902 he was appointed assistant Church historian and assigned to edit and republish the History of the Church. He had completed six volumes by 1912, and a seventh in 1932, about a year before his death. While editing the History of the Church, Roberts also wrote “A History of the Mormon Church,” which first appeared in monthly installments in the Americana magazine, 1909–1915. Later revised, these were published in 1930 as Roberts’ COMPREHENSIVE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH.

Joseph Fielding SMITH began a sixty-nine-year association with the Historian’s Office in 1901, when he was employed as an assistant to Andrew Jenson. As an assistant Church historian (1906–1921), he wrote several historical pamphlets and booklets, and as Church historian (1921–1970), he continued writing. His Essentials in Church History (1922) remained a standard until the 1980s. His two-volume Church History and Modern Revelation (1953) provided explanations about the antecedents and historical setting of many revelations published in the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS. An apologist in the classical tradition, Elder Smith’s philosophy of history has been widely influential within the Church.

RECENT CHURCH HISTORIANS. Joseph Fielding Smith worked to modernize operations of the His-

torian’s Office. He improved standards for preserving, classifying, and managing archival materials; hired professional librarians and archivists; and helped plan a new four-story facility. As President of the Church, he appointed Elder Howard W. Hunter, an apostle, as Church historian (1970–1972). After consulting with professional historians and archivists, in 1972 Elder Hunter recommended a reorganization of the Historian’s Office into a Historical Department with three divisions: a library for published materials, archives for manuscripts, and a division for research and writing.

Since Willard Richards, each Church historian and general Church recorder had been a member of the Quorum of the Twelve or First Presidency. That long-standing tradition was changed in 1972 when Leonard J. Arrington, a nationally prominent professional historian, was sustained in general conference as Church historian (1972–1977). His duties were also different from those of his predecessors: His main task was to produce scholarly works for publication. Earl E. Olson, Church archivist, was charged with gathering and preserving the materials of history; Donald T. Schmidt became librarian; and later Florence Jacobson headed an Arts and Sites Division. They all served under Managing Director Alvin R. Dyer, an Assistant to the Twelve. The Historical Department moved to enlarged quarters in November 1972. On May 17, 1976, Joseph Anderson, an Assistant to the Twelve, succeeded Elder Dyer as managing director.

With a corps of professional historians, Arrington promoted and directed the writing and publication of LDS history at an unprecedented rate. The division also assisted with acquisitions and conducted a dynamic oral history program.

The appointment of G. Homer Durham of the First Quorum of the Seventy as Managing Director in 1977 signaled a retrenchment in the Church’s direct sponsorship of professional history writing. Several history writing projects were curtailed or abandoned. On June 26, 1980, the Church announced the establishment of the Joseph Fielding Smith Institute for Church History, which would be affiliated with BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY. Arrington directed the new institute, and most of the professional historians associated with him transferred to the university. This placed the writing of history in a university setting, leaving the Historical Department to manage materials in its archives in support of scholarship without the responsibility of monitoring a genre of "official" Church history.

Elder G. Homer Durham was appointed as Church historian on February 8, 1982. During his administration Florence Jacobsen became a prime motivator in the establishment of a new MUSEUM of Church History and Art, which opened its doors in April 1984. The three divisions in the Historical Department were now the Archives, Library, and Museum. Following Durham, Elder Dean L. Larsen, of the Presidency of the Seventy, was sustained as Church historian and recorder (1985–1989). In 1989 John K. Carmack of the First Quorum of the Seventy, who had been serving under Elder Larsen since 1986, became the department's executive director.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bitton, Davis, and Leonard Arrington. Mormons and Their Historians. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Jenson, Andrew. L.D.S. Biographical Encyclopedia, 4 vols. Salt Lake City, 1901–1936.
- Searle, Howard C. "Early Mormon Historiography." Ph.D. diss., University of California at Los Angeles, 1979.

HOWARD C. SEARLE

HISTORICAL SITES

The sites of historical importance to Latter-day Saints include those associated with Christianity in general (the Holy Land, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Jordan River, Mount of Olives, etc.), as well as those directly related to LDS beliefs. The latter mainly include places in the United States associated with the founding and organization of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its subsequent migrations west. LDS historical sites are important to individual members because of the Church's emphasis on its history and cultural roots rather than as formal pilgrimage destinations (see HISTORY, SIGNIFICANCE TO LATTER-DAY SAINTS). Church members commonly visit these sites as tourists and, in the process, gain greater personal understanding of the history of the Church and its beliefs.

Many historical sites in the United States were obtained through the efforts of such individuals or entities as Joseph F. SMITH, Heber J. CRANT, Willard W. Bean, Wilford C. Wood, and the Corporation of the Presiding Bishopric of the LDS Church. Most of these sites have been restored to the time of the historical events and are staffed by local unpaid volunteers or missionaries.

VISITORS CENTERS are located at several sites, and are free and open to the public. Each location includes displays and literature explaining the site and its significance in Church history. One such site is the Joseph Smith Memorial in Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont. Joseph SMITH was born here on December 23, 1805. In 1905 the Church erected a 38.5-foot-high granite monument to commemorate the 38.5 years of his life. A full-time missionary couple live at the home.

Near the village of Palmyra, New York, in the township of Palmyra, is located the site of the log house in which the Smiths resided from 1817 to the early or mid-1820s, and again intermittently until late 1830. In the adjacent township of Manchester is the Smith family farm, existing frame home, SACRED GROVE, and also the hill CUMORAH only a few miles southeast of the home. The Sacred Grove is where the boy Joseph received his FIRST VISION, the initial event in the restoration of the Church. Latter-day Saints believe that the young Joseph Smith was directed by the angel Moroni to retrieve from the hill Cumorah the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. The first edition of the Book of Mormon was printed in the Grandin Press Building in Palmyra. A mile and one-half north of Palmyra is the farm of Martin Harris, a portion of which was sold to fi-sponsibility of monitoring a genre of "official" Church history.

A stonemason prepares the base of the obelisk erected in 1905 at Joseph Smith's birthplace in the township of Sharon, Vermont. The inscription is taken from the Title Page of the Book of Mormon and emphasizes the Prophet's role as translator of the book.

Elder G. Homer Durham was appointed as Church historian on February 8, 1982. During his administration Florence Jacobsen became a prime motivator in the establishment of a new MUSEUM of Church History and Art, which opened its doors in April 1984. The three divisions in the Historical Department were now the Archives, Library, and Museum. Following Durham, Elder Dean L. Larsen, of the Presidency of the Seventy, was sustained as Church historian and recorder (1985–1989). In 1989 John K. Carmack of the First Quorum of the Seventy, who had been serving under Elder Larsen since 1986, became the department's executive director.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bitton, Davis, and Leonard Arrington. Mormons and Their Historians. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Jenson, Andrew. L.D.S. Biographical Encyclopedia, 4 vols. Salt Lake City, 1901–1936.
- Searle, Howard C. "Early Mormon Historiography." Ph.D. diss., University of California at Los Angeles, 1979.

HOWARD C. SEARLE

HISTORICAL SITES

The sites of historical importance to Latter-day Saints include those associated with Christianity in general (the Holy Land, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Jordan River, Mount of Olives, etc.), as well as those directly related to LDS beliefs. The latter mainly include places in the United States associated with the founding and organization of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its subsequent migrations west. LDS historical sites are important to individual members because of the Church's emphasis on its history and cultural roots rather than as formal pilgrimage destinations (see HISTORY, SIGNIFICANCE TO LATTER-DAY SAINTS). Church members commonly visit these sites as tourists and, in the process, gain greater personal understanding of the history of the Church and its beliefs.

Many historical sites in the United States were obtained through the efforts of such individuals or entities as Joseph F. SMITH, Heber J. CRANT, Willard W. Bean, Wilford C. Wood, and the Corporation of the Presiding Bishopric of the LDS Church. Most of these sites have been restored to the time of the historical events and are staffed by local unpaid volunteers or missionaries.

VISITORS CENTERS are located at several sites, and are free and open to the public. Each location includes displays and literature explaining the site and its significance in Church history. One such site is the Joseph Smith Memorial in Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont. Joseph SMITH was born here on December 23, 1805. In 1905 the Church erected a 38.5-foot-high granite monument to commemorate the 38.5 years of his life. A full-time missionary couple live at the home.

Near the village of Palmyra, New York, in the township of Palmyra, is located the site of the log house in which the Smiths resided from 1817 to the early or mid-1820s, and again intermittently until late 1830. In the adjacent township of Manchester is the Smith family farm, existing frame home, SACRED GROVE, and also the hill CUMORAH only a few miles southeast of the home. The Sacred Grove is where the boy Joseph received his FIRST VISION, the initial event in the restoration of the Church. Latter-day Saints believe that the young Joseph Smith was directed by the angel Moroni to retrieve from the hill Cumorah the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. The first edition of the Book of Mormon was printed in the Grandin Press Building in Palmyra. A mile and one-half north of Palmyra is the farm of Martin Harris, a portion of which was sold to fi-

A stonemason prepares the base of the obelisk erected in 1905 at Joseph Smith's birthplace in the township of Sharon, Vermont. The inscription is taken from the Title Page of the Book of Mormon and emphasizes the Prophet's role as translator of the book.

LDS HISTORICAL SITES WITH FULL-TIME STAFF

Main Historic Dates	Place	Location
1805	Joseph Smith Memorial	Sharon, Vt.
1817–1818	Joseph Smith Farm	Manchester, N.Y.
1820	Saered Grove	Manchester, N.Y.
1823–1827	Hill Cumorah	Manchester, N.Y.
1827–1831	Martin Harris Farm	Palmyra, N.Y.
1829–1830	Grandin Press Building	Palmyra, N.Y.
1829–1831	Peter Whitmer, Sr., Farm	Fayette, N.Y.
1831–1833	John Johnson Home	Hiram, Ohio
1831–1833	Independence Temple Site	Independence, Mo.
1831–1838	Newel K. Whitney Store	Kirtland, Ohio
1831–1838	Newel K. Whitney Home	Kirtland, Ohio
1836–1838	Kirtland Temple (RLDS owned and staffed)	Kirtland, Ohio
1838–1839	Liberty Jail	Liberty, Mo.
1839–1846	Nauvoo (LDS and RLDS sites)	Nauvoo, Ill.
1844	Carthage Jail	Carthage, Ill.
1846–1848	Winter Quarters	Omaha (Florence), Nebr.
1847	Temple Square	Salt Lake City, Utah
1847–1848	Mormon Battalion Duty Station	San Diego, Calif.
1854	Beehive House	Salt Lake City, Utah
1863–1869	Jacob Hamblin Home	Santa Clara, Utah
1867	Cove Fort	Cove Fort, Utah
1869–1877	Brigham Young Winter Home	St. George, Utah
1875 (Ded.)	St. George Tabernacle	St. George, Utah
1878 (Est.)	Thomas L. Kane Memorial Chapel	Kane, Pa.

nance the publication of the Book of Mormon. Thirty miles to the southeast is the Peter Whitmer farm in FAYETTE, NEW YORK, where the Church was formally organized in 1830. Yet another hundred miles southeast from Fayette is HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, where the majority of the Book of Mormon was translated by Joseph Smith and written down by Oliver Cowdery.

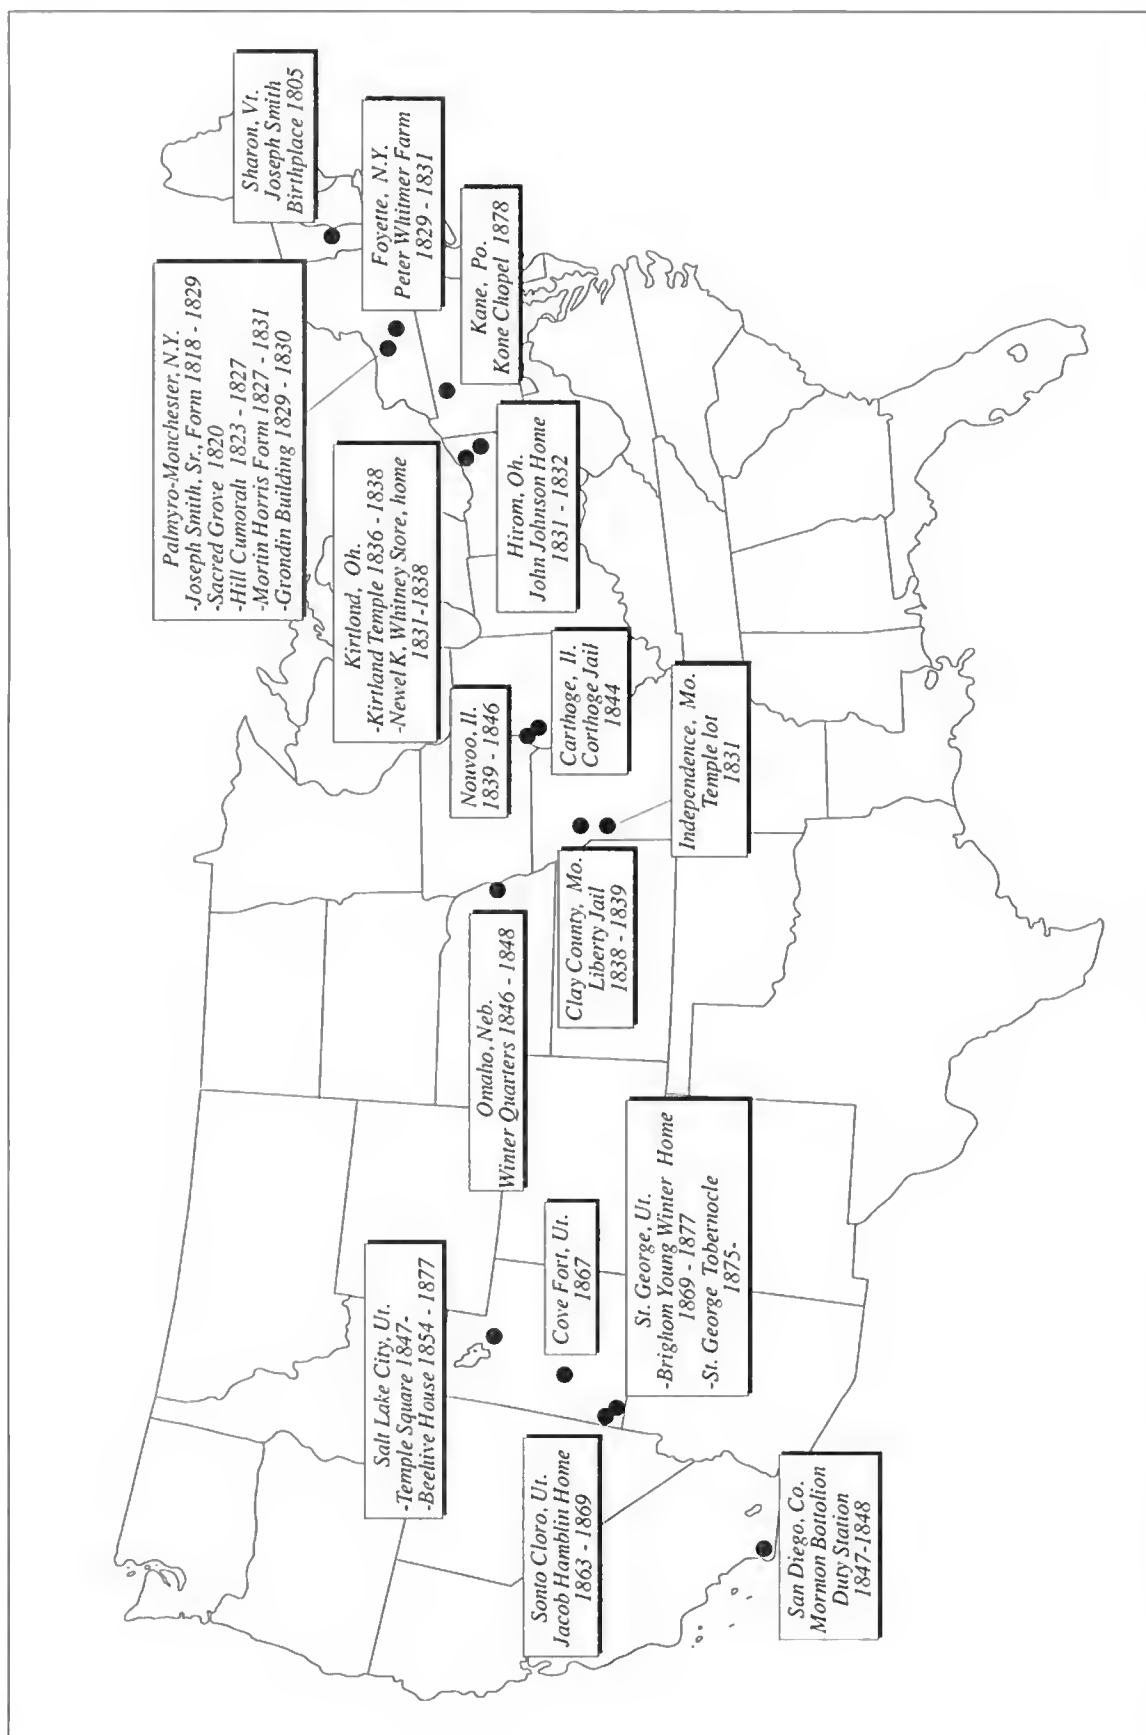

Joseph Smith moved his family to KIRTLAND, OHIO, in early 1831. They remained there until January 1838, when they fled to MISSOURI to escape mob violence. Events of importance in the life of Joseph Smith that occurred in Kirtland include receiving many revelations now found in the Doctrine and Covenants and the construction of the first Latter-day Saint temple. The WHITNEY STORE was the location of many of these events and has been restored. The KIRTLAND TEMPLE was dedicated on March 27, 1836. It is owned today by the REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS (RLDS).

At Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, an LDS visitors center is situated on a portion of the temple lot dedicated by Joseph Smith in 1831. Twelve miles to the north is LIBERTY JAIL in Clay County, Missouri, where Joseph was imprisoned from December 1, 1838, to April 6, 1839. Here he received sections 121–123 of the Doctrine and Covenants. The reconstructed remnant of the jail stands today as a reminder of the trials experienced by the Prophet for his beliefs, of the faithfulness of his followers (some of whom shared the jail with him), and of the suffering of his wife, Emma SMITH, and his children during the harsh winter while he was imprisoned. Northeast of Liberty are the historic sites of FAR WEST, in Caldwell County, Missouri, and ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN, in Daviess County, Missouri.

After TEMPLE SQUARE in Salt Lake City, NAUVOO is the second most visited historic location in the Church. Joseph Smith moved to the village of Commerce in Hancock County, Illinois, on May 10, 1839. Purchased by the Church, Commerce was renamed Nauvoo and became a major destination for converts to the Church, reaching a population in excess of 11,000 in 1845, and some 20,000 in the greater area. The Church has obtained a number of the buildings and sites owned by early members in Nauvoo and has restored or reconstructed them to show what life was like for the Saints in Nauvoo.

Near Nauvoo is the town of Carthage, the county seat for Hancock County. Here Joseph Smith was imprisoned on June 25, 1844, and murdered by a mob on June 27. Nauvoo and CARTHAGE JAIL are supervised by the Illinois Peoria Mission and full-time missionaries staff them.

Following the martyrdom, the Saints, under the direction of Brigham YOUNG, left Nauvoo in the winter of 1846, founding a number of temporary settlements en route to the West. WINTER QUARTERS, Nebraska (now Florence, a suburb of Omaha), on the west bank of the Missouri River, and Kanessville, Iowa (now COUNCIL BLUFFS), on the east bank, were the locations of a large settlement in the fall and winter of 1846–1847, remaining there until 1852. The Winter Quarters cemetery is all that remains of this historical site today.

The MORMON TRAIL to Utah has a number of monuments and historic sites. Salt Lake City has numerous historical sites. Temple Square with the temple, tabernacle, assembly hall, and visitors center is the most visited site in the Church. Other sites include “THIS IS THE PLACE” MONUMENT, the Beehive and Lion houses built and occupied by Brigham Young, and the nearby cemetery with his grave.

The Church also maintains three historic sites in St. George, Utah: the Brigham Young winter home, representing the LDS expansion southward along the valleys of the Intermountain West; the St. George Tabernacle, an epitome of the construction of large assembly halls in the major communities settled by Latter-day Saints; and the St. George Temple, the first temple completed in Utah. The temple’s dedication in 1877 demonstrated the commitment of the Latter-day Saints to temple work and to establishing permanent communities in the Intermountain West. It is an important example of LDS architecture of the period. And in nearby Santa Clara stands the home of Jacob Hamblin, one of the earliest missionaries to the Indians in southern Utah.

These and other historic sites serve as reminders of the humble yet extraordinary beginnings of the Church and of the sacrifices made by those individuals who committed their lives to follow its teachings.

Visitors center and monument near Sharon, Vermont, at the birthplace of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The obelisk rises 38.5 feet—one foot for each year of Joseph Smith’s life. This cottage and monument were dedicated on December 23, 1905, the centennial anniversary of the Prophet’s birth. Courtesy University of Utah.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Burton, Alma P. Mormon Trail from Vermont to Utah: A Guide to Historical Places of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Kimball, Stanley B. Historic Sites and Markers Along the Mormon and Other Great Western Trails. Urbana, Ill., 1988.
- Oscarson, R. Don, and Stanley B. Kimball. The Travellers’ Guide to Historic Mormon America. Salt Lake City, 1990, revised.

RICHARD H. JACKSON

HISTORY, SIGNIFICANCE TO LATTER-DAY SAINTS

History plays a vital role in LDS thought, where it joins with theology and practical religion to answer many of life’s questions and to make daily life meaningful, intelligible, and worthwhile. God is seen as actively achieving his ultimate purposes in the greater area. The Church has obtained a number of the buildings and sites owned by early members in Nauvoo and has restored or reconstructed them to show what life was like for the Saints in Nauvoo.

Near Nauvoo is the town of Carthage, the county seat for Hancock County. Here Joseph Smith was imprisoned on June 25, 1844, and murdered by a mob on June 27. Nauvoo and CARTHAGE JAIL are supervised by the Illinois Peoria Mission and full-time missionaries staff them.

Following the martyrdom, the Saints, under the direction of Brigham YOUNG, left Nauvoo in the winter of 1846, founding a number of temporary settlements en route to the West. WINTER QUARTERS, Nebraska (now Florence, a suburb of Omaha), on the west bank of the Missouri River, and Kanessville, Iowa (now COUNCIL BLUFFS), on the east bank, were the locations of a large settlement in the fall and winter of 1846–1847, remaining there until 1852. The Winter Quarters cemetery is all that remains of this historical site today.

The MORMON TRAIL to Utah has a number of monuments and historic sites. Salt Lake City has numerous historical sites. Temple Square with the temple, tabernacle, assembly hall, and visitors center is the most visited site in the Church. Other sites include “THIS IS THE PLACE” MONUMENT, the Beehive and Lion houses built and occupied by Brigham Young, and the nearby cemetery with his grave.

The Church also maintains three historic sites in St. George, Utah: the Brigham Young winter home, representing the LDS expansion southward along the valleys of the Intermountain West; the St. George Tabernacle, an epitome of the construction of large assembly halls in the major communities settled by Latter-day Saints; and the St. George Temple, the first temple completed in Utah. The temple’s dedication in 1877 demonstrated the commitment of the Latter-day Saints to temple work and to establishing permanent communities in the Intermountain West. It is an important example of LDS architecture of the period. And in nearby Santa Clara stands the home of Jacob Hamblin, one of the earliest missionaries to the Indians in southern Utah.

These and other historic sites serve as reminders of the humble yet extraordinary beginnings of the Church and of the sacrifices made by those individuals who committed their lives to follow its teachings.

Visitors center and monument near Sharon, Vermont, at the birthplace of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The obelisk rises 38.5 feet—one foot for each year of Joseph Smith’s life. This cottage and monument were dedicated on December 23, 1905, the centennial anniversary of the Prophet’s birth. Courtesy University of Utah.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Burton, Alma P. Mormon Trail from Vermont to Utah: A Guide to Historical Places of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Kimball, Stanley B. Historic Sites and Markers Along the Mormon and Other Great Western Trails. Urbana, Ill., 1988.
- Oscarson, R. Don, and Stanley B. Kimball. The Travellers’ Guide to Historic Mormon America. Salt Lake City, 1990, revised.

RICHARD H. JACKSON

HISTORY, SIGNIFICANCE TO LATTER-DAY SAINTS

History plays a vital role in LDS thought, where it joins with theology and practical religion to answer many of life’s questions and to make daily life meaningful, intelligible, and worthwhile. God is seen as actively achieving his ultimate purposes through events that make up history, while simultaneously allowing individuals the choice of working for or against his purposes.

Although Latter-day Saints do not have an officially stated philosophy of history, several basic ideas in LDS theology establish the significance of history.

1. First is the nature of mankind. As God's literal spirit offspring, humans partake of divine attributes and destiny; they have the potential to attain GODHOOD. On the other hand, humanity is fallen and has become "carnal, sensual, and devilish" (Moses 5:13), with capacities for evil and degradation comparable with those of the devil himself. Hence, there is dramatic interest among Latter-day Saints in the broadest spectrum of human thoughts, words, and deeds.

2. Second is an unequivocally positive commitment to life in this world (see PURPOSE OF EARTH LIFE). In LDS thought, a seamless web of individual being extends back in time to a self-conscious pre-earth life, and forward to the possibility and hope of eternal life in the presence of God. Prior choices and God's purposes have determined one's presence and place in this life; and, to a large extent, present choices will determine one's eternal future. In axioms such as "Men are, that they might have joy" (2 Ne. 2:25), LDS doctrine emphasizes the significance and goodness of the historical experience.

3. Human freedom is required. In order to preserve human AGENCY, God does not break "across the line of history through the instrumentality of unmerited love," but he participates "in the historical process by inspiring men and co-operating with them in their efforts to improve the world's conditions" (Boyd, pp. 450, 453). Thus, God "directs and influences" the historical process, but he also respects the "centrality of freedom" for his children, something to which he is committed "partly by his nature and partly by his will" (Poll, pp. 33, 35).

4. History itself is part of eternal truth. "Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come" (D&C 93:24; cf. 88:79). Thus, written records (including sacred histories) can encompass only a small portion of eternal reality, and even under optimum circumstances are incomplete and imperfect.

The LDS idea of history has much in common with that of Jews and Christians who believe in the living God-who-aets-in-history. Latter-day Saints view human history as the unfolding of God's plan of salvation for mankind (Heilsgeschichte), a view that dominated Western civilization until the eighteenth century. They generally agree with the traditional linear concept of history laid down in Augustine's City of God, although they place the eventual divine society on this earth (in a glorified and eternal physical state), not in an otherworldly dimension.

LDS faith is intertwined with historical events. Latter-day Saints essentially believe the literal biblical account of God's direct role in the Creation and of the fall of Adam and Eve—the proof of human freedom. A series of gospel DISPENSATIONS then unfolded. In each dispensation God's plan for mankind was revealed, only to be rejected eventually by chosen, but backsliding, human beings. The supreme set of events in history is the birth, ministry, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. This quintessentially Christian philosophy reaches its culmination in a hope, confidence, and preparation for Jesus' literal second coming, marking the end of this phase of the world's history. Latter-day Saints believe in a Christ-centered history and find power and reassurance in the fact that Jesus Christ became a real, historic person who endured mortality and its trials (Heb. 4:15–16). They add other elements to the Savior's historical reality. They believe that the resurrected Jesus appeared among the people of the Book of Mormon, and that God the Father and Jesus Christ appeared to Joseph SMITH in 1820 to open the last dispensation when the fulness of the gospel will be taught to all of the nations and people.

The foundations of the Church are grounded in a series of historic events, without which the Restoration would be incomprehensible and impotent. Joseph Smith recorded many visions and he received the gold plates from the angel Moroni, from which he translated the Book of Mormon. There followed many revelations to Joseph Smith and to the prophets who have succeeded him, revealing doctrines and applying eternal principles to existing historical and individual situations. That living prophets receive revelation from God, who is vitally interested in human needs in changing conditions, underscores the LDS view of God's continuing place in history.

That view is that God has played a role throughout ancient and modern history by foreordaining religious, political, scientific, and other leaders (e.g., Cyrus; see Isa. 44:28; Jer. 1:5). The great reformers (Luther, Calvin, Knox), discoverers such as COLUMBUS, and the authors of the CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA were foreordained to prepare the way for the Restoration and to establish a new nation “conceived in liberty” that, like ancient Israel, was not chosen for special privilege but was to be a blessing to all mankind (Petersen, pp. 69–72; Backman, p. 724). This view was summarized by President Ezra Taft BENSON: “God, the Father of us all, uses the men of the earth, especially good men, to accomplish his purposes” (Ensign 2 [July 1972]:59).

God’s role in the mundane details of history may be less obvious but more frequent than thought. Elder Bruce R. McConkie declared that the real history of the world “will show God’s dealings with men, [and] the place the gospel has played in the rise and fall of nations” (MD, 1958, p. 327). Still, the record is incomplete; many important issues about historical injustices and catastrophes are yet to be explained by the God who acts in history, and what is not yet fully known in the macrocosmic realm is often explained in the meaningful experiences of individual people. God knows and cares about each human being. As with the larger world, God intervenes in individual lives at decisive moments, but also recognizes human autonomy and leaves the majority of life’s decisions to individual choice.

God’s role in human history should not, however, be taken to the extreme. His foreknowledge does not require predestination. Foreordination means that in his wisdom and foreknowledge God has called an individual to a role in the human drama if that person chooses to fill it. To Latter-day Saints, history is a combination of God’s direction (which is neither “coercive [n]or continuous” [Poll, p. 33]) and divine intervention when that is indispensable to his purposes, with broad freedom of choice for humans within God’s expansive framework. In this large realm of human freedom, the panorama of history has taken place. Here, political, social, economic, psychological, and other such forces largely hold sway, and thus are essential in explaining human choices and actions.

This historical view became an integral part of early LDS theology, of Joseph Smith’s personal mission, of his vision of the Church’s mission throughout the world, and of the anticipated second coming of Jesus Christ. All of this may also account in part for the meticulous attention given to RECORD KEEPING in the Church and by the prophets (see HISTORY OF THE CHURCH; HISTORIANS). All members of the Church are encouraged to write personal JOURNALS and FAMILY HISTORIES, and to make them a part of their extended families’ sacred possessions.

In recent years the recognition of the Church by historians and sociologists as a distinctive new religion has generated broader interest in the writing and understanding of its history. But the writing of general history, especially religious history, has always had its difficulties. Surviving documents are limited and often inconsistent. Spiritual experiences are often kept private, and primarily lend themselves only to spiritual verification. Memories and lore are selective and fallible. Purposes, needs, audiences, historical fashions, and professional methods change from one decade to the next.

Traditional LDS historians, following their Jewish and early Christian predecessors, have tended to focus heavily on the hand of God in writing about Church and world history. Their histories are generally descriptive and declarative, sympathetic to the historical figures, and written mainly to inspire and build faith. According to William Mulder, “No where in Mormon record-keeping can [one] escape the teleological, the didactic, the eschatological” (p. 17).

This view is countered by other historians, such as Fawn M. Brodie, who explicitly rejected the prophetic truth claims of the LDS faith and interpreted Joseph Smith and the Restoration wholly on the basis of modern naturalistic, historicist, and psychoanalytic methods. Their objective is typically to provide causal explanations by emphasizing the human aspects while rejecting divine involvement.

Most recent LDS historical scholarship represents a wide and changing spectrum. There is, as Henry Bawden advised, room for a number of perspectives and purposes. On the one hand, there is “faithful history,” as expressed by Richard L. Bushman and others, in which the historian has a responsibility not only to consider the divine role but also to lead the kind of life that will permit the discernment of God’s influence. For others, strictly empirical social-scientific and historicist methods suffice. Most historians of “Mormonism,” however, LDS and non-LDS alike, recognize that both secular factors and spiritual claims can be taken seriously, while at the same time adhering to traditional canons of historical scholarship and addressing historical questions raised by contemporary issues.

[See also Biography and Autobiography.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Backman, Milton V., Jr. "Preliminaries to the Restoration." IE 61 (Oct.-Nov. 1958):722–24, 769–71, 773, 846–54.
- Boyd, George T. "God in History." IE 64 (June 1961):380–81, 449–57.
- Bushman, Richard L. "Faithful History." Dialogue 4 (Winter 1969):11–25.
- Mulder, William. "Mormon Angles of Historical Vision: Some Maverick Reflections." Journal of Mormon History 3 (1976):13–22.
- Petersen, Mark E. The Great Prologue. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- Poll, Richard D. History and Faith. Salt Lake City, 1989.

DOUGLAS F. TOBLER
S. GEORGE ELLSWORTH

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

[This entry discusses the history of the Church in the following six periods:

- c. 1820–1831, Background, Founding, New York Period
- c. 1831–1844, Ohio, Missouri, and Nauvoo Periods
- c. 1844–1877, Exodus and Early Utah Periods
- c. 1878–1898, Late Pioneer Utah Period
- c. 1898–1945, Transitions: Early-Twentieth-Century Period
- e. 1945–1990, Post-World War II International Era Period

In addition, several other articles cover the history of the Church in the light of specific historical disciplines or approaches: see Doctrine: Meaning, Source, and History; Economic History; Intellectual History; Legal and Judicial History; Politics: Political History; Social and Cultural History; and Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, The.

Bibliographic sources relevant to all of these periods are: James B. Allen and Glen M. Leonard, The Story of the Latter-day Saints, Salt Lake City, 1976; Leonard J. Arrington and Davis Bitton, The Mormon Experience, New York, 1979; Church Education System, His-

tory in the Fulness of Times, Salt Lake City, 1989; and Joseph Fielding Smith, Essentials in Church History, Salt Lake City, 1950.]

C. 1820–1831, BACKGROUND, FOUNDING, NEW YORK PERIOD

[For other articles pertaining to the main events in the first period of Church History, see also First Vision; Moroni, Visitations of; various entries listed under Book of Mormon; articles on the restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood, of the Melchizedek Priesthood, and Organization of the Church, 1830.

Early biographical information can be found in articles on the Smith Family Ancestors, Joseph Smith, Emma Smith, and several other members of the Smith Family, in addition to Martin Harris, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Sidney Rigdon. For a listing of Mormon sites and communities of this period, see New York, Early LDS Sites in.]

The establishment of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints began in the 1820s with events that occurred primarily in New York State. The Prophet Joseph SMITH received his FIRST VISION in 1820, obtained the GOLD PLATES of the Book of Mormon from the hill Cumorah in 1827, received priesthood authority in 1829, and officially organized the Church on April 6, 1830. By the time the Church left New York for Ohio early in 1831, it was organized and its basic direction was clearly established.

In its formative years, the infant Church learned above all to depend on revelation for direction. Joseph Smith, young and relatively unschooled, did not pretend to work out the doctrines of the new Church by himself. Direct revelations from God led him step by step. Perhaps the most revolutionary idea in the Church is its belief in Christian revelation beyond the Bible. Latter-day Saints have never doubted the inspiration of the Bible; it has been an essential standard from the beginning (see BIBLE: LDS BELIEF IN). Their experience led them to realize, however, that God also spoke to prophets who were not included in that conventional canon of scripture: the Book of Mormon showed them this (2 Ne. 29:10–14), and they heard Joseph Smith speak with the same authority as biblical apostles and prophets. Consequently, Latter-day Saints began to think of revelation in a new way, and the principle of continuing revelation greatly disturbed their fellow Christians, but from the beginning nothing was more basic to the Church.

however, LDS and non-LDS alike, recognize that both secular factors and spiritual claims can be taken seriously, while at the same time adhering to traditional canons of historical scholarship and addressing historical questions raised by contemporary issues.

[See also Biography and Autobiography.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Backman, Milton V., Jr. "Preliminaries to the Restoration." IE 61 (Oct.-Nov. 1958):722–24, 769–71, 773, 846–54.
- Boyd, George T. "God in History." IE 64 (June 1961):380–81, 449–57.
- Bushman, Richard L. "Faithful History." Dialogue 4 (Winter 1969):11–25.
- Mulder, William. "Mormon Angles of Historical Vision: Some Maverick Reflections." Journal of Mormon History 3 (1976):13–22.
- Petersen, Mark E. The Great Prologue. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- Poll, Richard D. History and Faith. Salt Lake City, 1989.

DOUGLAS F. TOBLER
S. GEORGE ELLSWORTH

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

[This entry discusses the history of the Church in the following six periods:

- c. 1820–1831, Background, Founding, New York Period
- c. 1831–1844, Ohio, Missouri, and Nauvoo Periods
- c. 1844–1877, Exodus and Early Utah Periods
- c. 1878–1898, Late Pioneer Utah Period
- c. 1898–1945, Transitions: Early-Twentieth-Century Period
- e. 1945–1990, Post-World War II International Era Period

In addition, several other articles cover the history of the Church in the light of specific historical disciplines or approaches: see Doctrine: Meaning, Source, and History; Economic History; Intellectual History; Legal and Judicial History; Politics: Political History; Social and Cultural History; and Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, The.

Bibliographic sources relevant to all of these periods are: James B. Allen and Glen M. Leonard, The Story of the Latter-day Saints, Salt Lake City, 1976; Leonard J. Arrington and Davis Bitton, The Mormon Experience, New York, 1979; Church Education System, His-

tory in the Fulness of Times, Salt Lake City, 1989; and Joseph Fielding Smith, Essentials in Church History, Salt Lake City, 1950.]

C. 1820–1831, BACKGROUND, FOUNDING, NEW YORK PERIOD

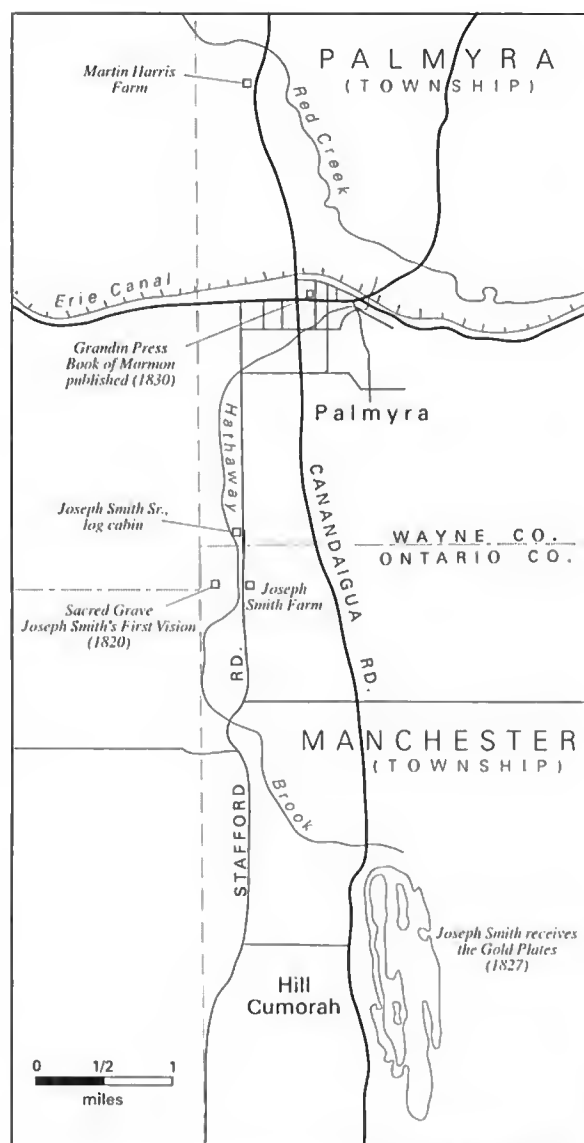

[For other articles pertaining to the main events in the first period of Church History, see also First Vision; Moroni, Visitations of; various entries listed under Book of Mormon; articles on the restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood, of the Melchizedek Priesthood, and Organization of the Church, 1830.

Early biographical information can be found in articles on the Smith Family Ancestors, Joseph Smith, Emma Smith, and several other members of the Smith Family, in addition to Martin Harris, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Sidney Rigdon. For a listing of Mormon sites and communities of this period, see New York, Early LDS Sites in.]

The establishment of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints began in the 1820s with events that occurred primarily in New York State. The Prophet Joseph SMITH received his FIRST VISION in 1820, obtained the GOLD PLATES of the Book of Mormon from the hill Cumorah in 1827, received priesthood authority in 1829, and officially organized the Church on April 6, 1830. By the time the Church left New York for Ohio early in 1831, it was organized and its basic direction was clearly established.

In its formative years, the infant Church learned above all to depend on revelation for direction. Joseph Smith, young and relatively unschooled, did not pretend to work out the doctrines of the new Church by himself. Direct revelations from God led him step by step. Perhaps the most revolutionary idea in the Church is its belief in Christian revelation beyond the Bible. Latter-day Saints have never doubted the inspiration of the Bible; it has been an essential standard from the beginning (see BIBLE: LDS BELIEF IN). Their experience led them to realize, however, that God also spoke to prophets who were not included in that conventional canon of scripture: the Book of Mormon showed them this (2 Ne. 29:10–14), and they heard Joseph Smith speak with the same authority as biblical apostles and prophets. Consequently, Latter-day Saints began to think of revelation in a new way, and the principle of continuing revelation greatly disturbed their fellow Christians, but from the beginning nothing was more basic to the Church.

BYU Geography Department

Church history sites near Palmyra, N.Y., 1820–1831.

The history of the Church begins with the family of Joseph SMITH, Sr., and Lucy Mack SMITH, the Prophet's parents (see SMITH FAMILY), who, with thousands of other New Englanders, flooded into New York in the early nineteenth century looking for better land. They brought with them their Calvinist religious intensity, but with a zeal modified by the new conditions of life in republican and pluralistic America. They had long searched without success for a faith on which they could rely. The increasing number of Christian denominations and a host of new intellectual influences from the Enlightenment made it more difficult to embrace religious faith than when Congregationalism had predominated in New England. Joseph Smith's quest for salvation began with the question of which Church is true. This question was possibly thrust upon him by his parents' uncertainties and by the plurality of churches—Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Quaker—in his own village.

Moved by evangelical revivals, Joseph Smith asked for direction from God about the true religion in the early spring of 1820. Although only fourteen, he had confidence in the biblical promise that he could get an answer (James 1:5). He went into the woods near his home, kneeled down, and prayed. In his accounts of the event, he testifies that the answer he received astonished him. Both God the Father and Jesus Christ appeared and told him to join none of the existing churches. He was assured that he was in good standing with God, told many things he could not write about, and then the vision closed, leaving him overcome. This revelation of the Father and the Son is considered by Latter-day Saints to be the opening event in the RESTORATION of the gospel.

For three and a half years Joseph received no further communication from the heavens. Wondering if he had disqualified himself through unworthiness, Joseph was praying on the evening of

Path leading from the Smith home to an area known as the Sacred Grove, south of Palmyra, New York. Photographed c. 1907. Photographer: George E. Anderson. Courtesy Nelson Wadsworth.

BYU Geography Department

Church history sites in western New York, 1820–1831.

September 21, 1823, when to his astonishment, an angel appeared in the room and announced that he was MORONI and had come with instructions from God. He told Joseph about a record written on gold plates giving a history of the former inhabitants of the western continents. The resurrected Savior, Jesus Christ, had appeared to these people and had given them the fulness of the gospel. The angel said the plates were buried in a hill near Joseph's home. In the course of the night, the angel came three times, delivering the same basic message and adding a little more information each time. Although exhausted, Joseph went to the hill the next day and found the plates encased in a stone box just below the surface of the earth; but he was not allowed to remove them. The angel appeared again and told him he must come back again the following year on the same day, September 22. For the next four years, Joseph faithfully returned to that place in the same manner. Finally, on September 22, 1827, he was allowed to take the plates into his possession (see MORONI, VISITATIONS OF).

E. B. Grandin Press, on which pages of the first edition of the Book of Mormon were printed, August 1829 to March 1830, in Palmyra, New York.

The events of the four-year interval between 1823 and 1827 doubtless helped Joseph Smith to mature in preparation for the responsibilities and challenges that subsequently came to him. There is some evidence that his father was involved in treasure hunting, a common activity among poor New England farmers who hoped through the use of magic to discover buried money, and it was necessary for Joseph to extricate himself from the mistaken notions of that superstition. The angel told Joseph that one of the reasons for the delay in giving him the gold plates was that he had dwelt on their monetary worth (PWJS, p. 7). In November 1825, Joseph and his father worked briefly with a man named Josiah Stowell of SOUTH BAINBRIDGE (AFTON), NEW YORK, who believed a Spanish treasure was located in HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, near the Susquehannah River. The project failed, and the Smiths gradually separated themselves from the money-digging activities of their neighbors to concentrate on the religious mission described by the angel. As a happy outgrowth of the Harmony project, while working there Joseph met Emma Hale (see SMITH, EMMA HALE), whom he married on January 18, 1827. In the meantime, his older brother Alvin died; Joseph was arrested in 1826 as a “glass looker” under a New York law that made it a crime “to tell fortunes, or where lost or stolen goods may be found” (see the legal definition of “Disorderly Persons,” The Justice’s Manual, Albany, New York, 1829, p. 144; see also SMITH JOSEPH: LEGAL TRIALS OF); and his parents lost their farm through their inability to make the last mortgage payment. These misfortunes, along with other experiences, deepened and strengthened the young man as he learned to discern between good and evil and to endure opposition.

After Joseph obtained the plates in 1827, curious and sometimes malicious neighbors in Manchester and Palmyra, New York, made it impossible to begin work on the translation. They ransacked the Smith house and barn, and only by constantly moving and concealing the plates could he keep them safe. He had been strictly warned not to show them to anyone, but that did not satisfy the curiosity seekers. Emma's brother, Alva, offered to help; he transported the pair with their belongings and the plates—hidden in a barrel of beans—125 miles to Harmony, Pennsylvania, where Emma's father lived. Joseph procured some acreage from his father-in-law, Isaac Hale, and a small house was provided. It was here that the translation began (see BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION BY JOSEPH SMITH).

An early oil painting of the Prophet Joseph Smith (1805–1844). People who knew Joseph Smith personally commented that no picture could do him justice, for when he spoke compassion and power were evident, sometimes to the point that his countenance became visibly radiant. Artist unknown. Courtesy Library-Archives, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

A sympathetic neighbor from Palmyra, Martin HARRIS, took enough interest in the plates to visit Joseph in Harmony. With the plates, Joseph had received an instrument called interpreters, or a URIM AND THUMMIM, that enabled him to translate the characters engraved on the metal tablets. Joseph made copies of a few characters for Martin to take to language experts in Albany and New York City to verify Joseph's work. There is some confusion about what happened in these interviews, but Martin Harris was unequivocally satisfied (see ANTHON TRANSCRIPT). When he returned to Harmony, he offered to take the dictation as Joseph translated. Between April 12 and June 14, 1828, the two of them completed 116 pages of manuscript. At this point, Harris, who suffered from his wife's doubts about the existence of the plates, asked permission to show the manuscript to her and four other family members. With great reluctance Joseph Smith agreed. After hearing nothing from Martin for a number of weeks, Joseph went to his parents home in Manchester, New York, to confront him. Martin despairingly confessed that he could not find the manuscript. He had succumbed to pressure, shown the manuscript to neighbors beyond his agreement, and someone had stolen it (see MANUSCRIPT, LOST 116 PAGES).

On the occasion of the crisis, Joseph received a revelation through the Urim and Thummim in which the Lord severely rebuked him. He more than Martin was held responsible for the loss of the manuscript. "Behold, you should not have feared man more than God," he was told (D&C 3:7). Martin did no more transcribing for Joseph, and from that time until the spring of 1829, Joseph accomplished little on the translation. In April, Oliver COWDERY, a young schoolteacher who had boarded with the Smith family in Manchester, came to learn more about the Book of Mormon. Having himself received a vision of the Lord and the plates, he was persuaded that the work was divine and offered to serve as scribe (PWJS, p. 8).

Beginning on April 7, 1829, the two, Joseph and Oliver, worked together almost constantly until the translation was completed in June, a little more than two months later.

In the course of translating a portion of 3 Nephi that described the manner of baptism, Joseph and Oliver wondered about their own need for baptism. As had become customary with Joseph, he sought instruction from God. On May 15, 1829, while he and Oliver prayed, a heavenly messenger appeared to them. Identifying himself as John the Baptist, he conferred on them the Aaronic Priesthood, which gave them the authority to baptize (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION). With that newly received authority and under the direction of the angel, the two men baptized each other in the Susquehanna River. This revelation established an important principle in the Church: that divine ORDINANCES such as baptism can be performed only by persons who have received priesthood authority by ordination. John the Baptist told Joseph and Oliver they would later receive a second and higher priesthood called the Melchizedek Priesthood. Subsequently Peter, James, and John appeared to them on the banks of the Susquehanna River some place between Harmony and Colesville, New York, and ordained them APOSTLES (see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION).

By late May 1829, religious opposition against Joseph was growing in Harmony, and he and Oliver needed a calmer place to work. Oliver wrote to a friend, David WHITMER, who agreed to move them to his family's farm in FAYETTE, NEW YORK. Emma joined them in Fayette shortly afterward. A copyright was obtained for the Book of Mormon on June 11, 1829, and the translation soon was completed. As they completed the book, Joseph Smith learned through revelation that others would be allowed to see the golden plates. Witnesses were promised in the Book of Mormon itself, and Joseph's associates were eager to know who would have the privilege. Martin Harris, David Whitmer, and Oliver Cowdery were chosen, shown the plates by the angel Moroni, and heard the voice of God declaring to them that the work had been translated by the power of God. A few days later at Manchester, Joseph Smith was permitted to show the plates to eight other men. They examined the plates closely and lifted them with their hands. The statements of these two sets of witnesses were printed in the back pages of the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon and appear in the front pages of all recent editions (see BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES).

Finding a printer to publish the Book of Mormon proved to be difficult. Palmyra people who were suspicious of Joseph Smith banded together to intimidate the local printer, Egbert B. Grandin, by threatening not to purchase copies. Others, like Martin's wife, Lucy Harris, challenged Joseph's financial motives. After contacting printers as far away as Rochester, Joseph persuaded Grandin to accept the job. Martin Harris's guarantee made the difference in Grandin's decision. On August 25, 1829, Harris mortgaged his farm, pledging to pay $3,000 for 5,000 copies. Joseph and Martin hoped to sell enough copies to raise at least $3,000, but in the end Martin had to sell 151 acres to fulfill his agreement. Typesetting began in August 1829, and finished copies were available March 26, 1830.

Publication of the Book of Mormon brought to a close the endeavor that had occupied Joseph Smith since receiving the plates in 1827. Meanwhile, the revelations he was receiving made clear that translating the Book of Mormon was not the end of his divine mission. He was also to organize a church. Samuel Smith had been baptized in Harmony in late May 1829; Hyrum SMITH, David and Peter Whitmer, Jr., and others were baptized in June in Seneca Lake. They had begun meeting together, and they had taught and tried to persuade all who requested information. On April 6, 1830, in the house of Peter Whitmer, Sr., in Fayette, New York, Joseph Smith organized the Church of Jesus Christ (see ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH, 1830; NAME OF THE CHURCH). Six men subscribed as members, and over fifty people were present. The group sustained two officers as leaders of the Church, Joseph Smith as first elder and Oliver Cowdery as second elder. Joseph was also given the titles of SEER, translator, and PROPHET. In addition, a revelation made provision for ordaining ELDERS, PRIESTS, TEACHERS, and DEACONS as a lay priesthood (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTIONS 20–22). Some of the lay persons present at the organization were ordained that day, and from the start, the Church made no provision for a special clerical order (see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP).

Three clusters of believers were organized into branches of the fledgling Church soon after its organization—one in Fayette; another in Manchester at the old Smith home; and a third in COLESVILLE in southern New York, which was near the farm of Josiah Stowell (in Bainbridge Township, Chenango County), Joseph's onetime employer and a loyal supporter. Members of the Joseph Knight family, who had provided Joseph and his assistants food and clothing during the translation, lived in Colesville and were the nucleus of the branch there. Joseph and Emma moved back to their house in Harmony, but met with all three branches at prescribed quarterly conferences held at the Peter Whitmer farm in June and September 1830.

In the summer of 1830, troubles began to arise. Twice Joseph was put on trial as a "disorderly person." Both times he was acquitted. More disturbing to Joseph, some of his own followers questioned his authority and claimed revelations and prerogatives of their own. Hiram Page, ordained a teacher in June 1830 and a husband of Catherine Whitmer, wrote out a sheaf of revelations he claimed came from God. Although still young and inexperienced, Joseph sensed the confusion and danger of many voices trying to speak authoritatively. At the September conference in Fayette, Joseph received a revelation that established that only one person approved by COMMON CONSENT was to receive commandments and revelations for the entire Church (D&C 20:65; 28:1–3, 11–13). Hiram Page lacked that authorization. After hearing Joseph, the conference confirmed him as sole revelator for the Church (D&C 28:2; D. Cannon and L. Cook, eds., Far West Record, Salt Lake City, 1983, p. 3). This principle of revelation for the whole Church coming through the man sustained as the Prophet remains a practice of the Church to this day.

In the six months after the organization of the Church, converts were added in small numbers. Joseph Smith's brother Samuel went out with copies of the Book of Mormon to share with anyone interested. Joseph Smith, Sr., visited his brothers, sisters, and parents in St. Lawrence County, New York, where most of them lived, to tell them what had happened. Later conversions resulted from these expeditions, but very few at the time. Parley P. Pratt, a farmer from Ohio, believed that God led him to the house of Hyrum Smith, Joseph's brother, to find out about the Book of Mormon.

The most successful early missionary venture was launched in September and October 1830, when Oliver Cowdery, Peter Whitmer, Jr., Parley PRATT, and Ziba Peterson were called to teach the Indians (see LAMANITE MISSION). The Book of Mormon had special relevance for NATIVE AMERICANS because it was a religious record from ancient America, and the four were charged to take this message to the Indians who were assembling in the territory west of Missouri. The mission was notable as much for what was accomplished en route, however, as for the preaching to the Indians. After leaving New York, the missionaries stopped in the Mentor-Kirtland area of northeast Ohio near Pratt's former farm. Before joining the Church, Pratt had been associated with the Campbellite movement, which was forming into the Disciples of Christ church. This group believed in rigorously adhering to the teachings and practices of the New Testament church, sloughing off all later additions. The teachings of Joseph Smith appealed to many of them because his doctrines embodied for them a pure restoration of true Christianity. About 130 persons were converted, including the leading Campbellite preacher in the area, Sidney RIGDON. In a few weeks, the four missionaries nearly doubled the membership of the Church. They continued on to Indian country that winter, enduring severe hardships on their long trek on foot from St. Louis across Missouri. They found a land in western Missouri into which the Church would soon begin settling. They also taught among the Delaware and Shawnee Indians until government officials told them to stop because of a prohibition against proselytizing among the tribes.

Soon after the missionaries left Ohio for the West in December 1830, Sidney Rigdon left for New York, accompanied by Edward Partridge. They brought news of the conversions in Ohio and urged Joseph Smith and the membership to move there. Joseph was prepared to take the suggestion seriously because of revelations he received concerning the gathering of the Church (D&C 37:1–4; 38:31–33). Indeed, for the remainder of the century, converts to the Church would assemble at a central gathering place, first in Ohio, then in Missouri, in Illinois, and finally in Utah. Another revelation focused on the second coming of Jesus Christ and on the destructions to be visited upon the world before that event occurred. It said that before those tribulations, the people of God were to “be gathered in unto one place upon the face of this land” (D&C 29:8). A further revelation spoke of a city of ZION to be built somewhere in the West (D&C 28:9). These hints led Church members to realize that they would not remain long in New York.

When a revelation came in December 1830 (D&C 37) telling them to move to Ohio, it was accepted by most. At a conference on January 2, 1831, directions and an additional revelation (D&C 38) were given for the move. The Prophet, Emma, and a few others went ahead and arrived in KIRTLAND on February 1, 1831, to prepare for the arrival of others. The Colesville Branch, under Newel Knight; the Fayette Branch, under the Prophet's mother and Thomas Marsh; and the Manchester Branch, under Martin Harris, traveled to Ohio in separate companies during April and May 1831. By mid-May virtually all of the New York Mormons from the named branches were in Kirtland.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Backman, Milton V., Jr. Eyewitness Accounts of the Restoration, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1986.
- Bushman, Richard L. Joseph Smith and the Beginnings of Mormonism. Urbana, Ill., 1984.
- Madsen, Truman, G., guest ed. BYU Studies 9 (Spring 1969):235–404 (entire issue devoted to LDS origins in New York).
- Porter, Larry C. “A Study of the Origins of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the States of New York and Pennsylvania, 1816–1831.” Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1971.
- Smith, Lucy Mack. History of Joseph Smith, ed. Preston Nibley. Salt Lake City, 1958.
- Whittaker, David J. “Sources on Mormon Origins in New York and Pennsylvania.” Mormon History Association Newsletter no. 43 (Mar. 1980):8–12.

RICHARD L. BUSHMAN
LARRY C. PORTER

C. 1831–1844, OHIO, MISSOURI, AND NAUVOO PERIODS

[This article focuses first on the Church in northeastern Ohio, where Kirtland served as Church headquarters, and in western Missouri. By 1839 the focus shifts to western Illinois, with Nauvoo the new headquarters city. For discussion of the difficulties that led to violence and finally expulsion from Missouri, see Missouri Conflict.]

This article outlines organizational and doctrinal developments and examines tensions and conflicts between the Saints and their neighbors, and within the Church itself. Many of these resulted from the attempt to build a tightly unified, sacred community that responded to continuing revelation within a larger society often hostile to these goals. The Prophet Joseph Smith, whose martyrdom ends this period, was a dominant figure; see articles under Smith, Joseph, and Visions of Joseph Smith. The Gathering and Temples were central concerns; see Kirtland Temple and Nauvoo Temple.]

In October 1830 four LDS missionaries on their way to preach to the Indians west of Missouri (see LAMANITE MISSION) introduced the restored gospel to the communities of northeastern Ohio. Before they resumed their journey, the missionaries baptized approximately 130 converts, organized the new members into small “branches,” and appointed leaders over each group. Approximately thirty-five of these members lived in Kirtland, Ohio, a community directly east of what is today metropolitan Cleveland.

Sidney RIGDON, a restorationist preacher in that vicinity, joined the Church in November 1830 and notified Joseph Smith of the missionaries’ success. As a result, the Prophet inquired of the Lord and recorded revelations (D&C 37:3; 38:32) calling the converts of the recently organized Church in New York to “assemble together at the Ohio.” He and his family moved to Kirtland by early February 1831, and about two hundred New York Saints followed by summer, making northeastern Ohio the first LDS gathering place.

Most of the New York Saints and many of the earliest Ohio converts did not remain in Ohio. In the summer of 1831, Joseph Smith traveled to the Missouri frontier and identified Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, as a second gathering place. Latter-day Saints anticipated that a holy city, a NEW JERUSALEM, would be established in a new North American ZION, a city of refuge from tribulations that would afflict the wicked in the last days (D&C 29:7–9; 45:65–71; 57:1–3). Sidney Rigdon dedicated the land for gathering, and Joseph Smith designated the specific site where a temple would be built, and, after appointing others to supervise the gathering to Zion, returned to Ohio.

In HIRAM, OHIO, a rural farming community about thirty miles south of Kirtland, Joseph Smith worked on his inspired translation of the Bible (see JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE [JST]), a project that served him as a school. Prayerfully seeking enlightenment about particular passages and doctrines frequently brought new revelation and understanding. After the Prophet and Sidney Rigdon, who was serving as his scribe, were beaten and tarred and feathered by a mob in March 1832, they and their families moved to Kirtland.

The two gathering places of the early 1830s each had a different purpose. Although Latter-day Saints migrated to the Missouri frontier to lay the foundations of a new Zion, the administrative headquarters of the Church, responsible for directing the missionary program and building the first temple, remained in Ohio. There was some competition between the two centers, with both needing resources and members and both wanting the presence of the Prophet Joseph Smith. But, as revelation made clear, the goals of the two were complementary: the promised “endowment from on high” associated with the KIRTLAND TEMPLE was a prerequisite for success in Zion (D&C 105:9–13, 33). Joseph Smith resided in Kirtland until 1838, keeping in touch with Missouri members by mail and messenger, and traveling there five times to instruct Church members on policies, programs, and beliefs.

In Jackson County, Latter-day Saints published two periodicals, the EVENING AND THE MORNING STAR and the Upper Missouri Advertiser, and attempted to establish a unique economic order based on CONSECRATION with assigned stewardship of property and other assets, as directed by revelations to Joseph Smith (see MISSOURI: LDS COMMUNITIES IN JACKSON AND CLAY COUNTIES). Disagreements about legal requirements and individual selfishness hampered implementation, but the basic impediment was that the Saints had too little capital and very little to consecrate. Still, some participants were inspired by the concepts involved, and the ideals behind the effort left a significant legacy (see UNITED ORDERS).

Although the Latter-day Saints migrated to western Missouri to build a city of peace and refuge, they encountered major hostility. Older settlers considered these newcomers a threat to their own patterns of living. Missourians complained that Mormons sought to influence slaves, that their “eastern” lifestyle was incompatible with the Missouri frontier, that they were an economic and political threat, that their friendship for the Indians threatened the region’s security, and that they held unusual religious beliefs. These charges indicate a significant cultural clash between the LDS immigrants and older settlers. Rapid immigration of Latter-day Saints into Jackson County intensified the tensions, resulting in confrontation.

After violence erupted in the summer of 1833, Governor Daniel Dunklin sent a local militia into the area to establish peace. Assuming that the militia would protect all settlers, Latter-day Saints surrendered their arms to this military force. But other Missourians were not disarmed, leaving Church members defenseless. In early November 1833, mobs drove more than a thousand Latter-day Saints from Jackson County, forcing them to abandon their homes and farms. Most of them escaped across the Missouri River to Clay County.

Western New York and eastern Ohio. Towns and routes, 1831.

Kirtland Temple, dedicated 1836. Building the Kirtland Temple was of central importance to the Saints in the mid-1830s, so that they could receive there the promised blessings from on high before taking the gospel to the ends of the earth. Photographed c. 1900. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

Between November 1833 and the summer of 1836, Clay County was the major gathering place for Latter-day Saints in Missouri. During these years, Church members tried but failed to secure redress for the loss of property in Jackson County. They also sought government protection for an attempt to return to their lands. In 1834, believing that Governor Dunklin had agreed to extend the assistance of state militia to reinforce their own efforts, Church members assembled a small paramilitary force from Ohio and elsewhere to accompany the Missouri refugees back to Jackson County. ZION'S CAMP, as the expedition was called, failed to obtain gubernatorial support and disbanded in June rather than initiate armed conflict.

Though it failed in its primary aim, Zion's Camp profoundly affected many participants and had lasting significance. For most, the hurried march from Ohio to Missouri, more than 800 miles in humid heat, was the most difficult physical challenge of their lives. Some had even greater difficulty with the realization that in spite of that ordeal, they had not assisted the Missouri Saints to return to their lands. They found fault with Joseph Smith's leadership, and the experience contributed to their later dissent. But for many participants, Zion's Camp was an unparalleled opportunity to live day and night with the Lord's prophet—reminiscent of ancient Israel under Moses. The experience bonded them to Joseph and to each other, and out of the crucible of Zion's Camp came many future LDS leaders. The two reactions reflected differing views about prophetic leadership and about how a society based on revelation and priesthood should be organized—differences that became more pronounced in later Kirtland.

The revelation disbanding Zion's Camp refocused attention on Ohio and on the necessity of completing the Kirtland Temple without delay (D&C 105). Before returning to Ohio, Joseph Smith organized a Missouri STAKE and appointed a presidency and HIGH COUNCIL, matching what he had done in Kirtland the February before. Soon, several Missouri Church leaders left for Kirtland to assist with temple construction.

All parties concerned had viewed the Saints' stay in Clay County, Missouri, as temporary. With a return to Jackson County now unlikely, pressures mounted for them to find another location. Urged by community leaders to leave before violence erupted, most Latter-day Saints migrated northward, establishing a new western headquarters at Far West, Missouri. Responding to this movement of thousands of Latter-day Saints into unsettled northwestern Missouri, the state legislature in late 1836 created two new counties, Caldwell and Daviess (see MISSOURI: LDS COMMUNITIES IN CALDWELL AND DAVIESS COUNTIES). Since most Latter-day Saints settled in Caldwell, it became known as the Mormon County.

Joseph Smith's red brick store (1885; built, 1841; restored, 1978–1979) was an important building during the Nauvoo period. It was a center of social, economic, political, and religious activity. Joseph Smith's office and meeting room on the second floor became the headquarters of the Church, and the first endowments were given there. In 1842, the Relief Society was organized there. B. H. Roberts collection.

Joseph Smith later taught that a primary purpose for the gathering of the faithful in any age was to build a house of the Lord wherein could be revealed the ordinances of his temple. As temple construction progressed, the LDS population in Kirtland multiplied from about 100 in 1832 to over 1,500 in 1836. Latter-day Saints migrated there from New England, New York, and elsewhere to assist in building the Lord's house, in which, they had been promised as early as January 1831, they would be "endowed with power from on high" (D&C 38:32).

In March 1836 the Kirtland Temple was completed and dedicated, and during the months before and after the dedication, the Saints enjoyed an unusual pentecostal season. In the temple, a week after its dedication, KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD were conferred on Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY in visitations by MOSES, ELIAS, and ELIJAH. Blessings and instructions received in the temple were particularly significant for missionaries (see MISSION), whose proselytizing travels from Kirtland during the 1830s ranged from Canada to the American South and, in 1837, to the British Isles, with extensive missionary work within Ohio.

While its headquarters remained in Kirtland, the Church experienced major doctrinal and administrative development. A number of the most significant revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants were received in the Kirtland and Hiram areas, including the vision of the Resurrection and the three DEGREES OF GLORY (D&C 76); the law of consecration and stewardship (D&C 42); the WORD OF WISDOM, sometimes called the Lord's law of health (D&C 89); revelations on the PRIESTHOOD and its organization (D&C 84, 107); and the coming of the MILLENNIUM (D&C 1, 29, 88, 133). Many of these revelations came in response to questions raised by Joseph Smith's translation of the Bible. Joseph Smith also received a revelation relating to PLURAL MARRIAGE (D&C 132), but it was not recorded until 1843. The BOOK OF ABRAHAM, not published until 1842, resulted from the Prophet's acquisition in 1835 of a collection of mummies and PAPYRI from Egypt.

As growth required organizational development, a series of revelations directed the establishment of both local and general Church officers. These included the office of BISHOP in 1831, the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church in 1832, and a permanent HIGH COUNCIL in 1834. In February 1835 the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES and the Quorum of the SEVENTY were organized, selected principally from Zion's Camp veterans. Both quorums had responsibility for proselytizing. Though the Twelve were spoken of as second to the Presidency, their immediate assignments were to supervise the labors of the Seventy and to oversee the Church outside its organized stakes.

Revelation also directed officers of the Church to study widely in many fields of knowledge in preparation for their ministries and directed that a SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS be organized for that purpose (D&C 88:77–80, 118–41). The attitudes and imperatives expressed in the revelation became influential not only in instituting that first Church-sponsored school but also in the Church's approach to learning and education throughout its subsequent history.

Publication of the Evening and the Morning Star, disrupted in Missouri by the expulsion from Jackson County, was resumed for nearly a year in Kirtland. The Latter Day Saints' MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE, successor to the Star, was the first Church periodical to publish some of Oliver Cowdery's letters dealing with the history of Joseph Smith. The Doctrine and Covenants, containing many of the revelations given to Joseph Smith, was published in Kirtland in 1835.

The promulgation of new doctrine and the establishment of a church hierarchy offended some Latter-day Saints who preferred the less complicated faith they had embraced in the Church's infancy. Those who did not share the Prophet Joseph Smith's vision of a new society organized under priesthood were also disturbed by the increased direction Church leaders gave members in temporal matters and by the Prophet's extensive involvement in economic affairs. The collapse of an unchartered Kirtland Safety Society that had been sponsored by Church leaders helped bring discontent to a head (see KIRTLAND ECONOMY). Lawsuits were filed against Joseph Smith, threats were made against his life, and against the lives of his most vigorous supporters, and a number of prominent Church members apostatized. In the midst of this turmoil, the Prophet sent some of his staunchest supporters as missionaries to the British Isles. There, in less than a year, they gained more than 1,500 converts and laid the groundwork for thousands more to follow (see MISSIONS OF THE TWELVE TO BRITISH ISLES).

Joseph Smith Directing the Nauvoo Legion, by John Hafen (1887, oil on canvas, 19" × 25"). Joseph Smith in Nauvoo, with the Nauvoo Temple in the background (completed after his death). Joseph Smith was the central religious and political leader of the LDS community in Nauvoo, Illinois, and commander of the Nauvoo Legion. Courtesy Utah State Historical Society.

By 1837, Latter-day Saints outnumbered other residents of Kirtland Township. That year, LDS candidates were elected to all major town offices except that of constable. Many Church members in Kirtland were relatively poor and lived in clusters of small temporary homes. Some non-Mormons became resentful of this influx of the poor and of Church leadership that seemed undemocratic and thus un-American. Economic and political rivalries developed, accompanied by threats and some mob violence. Outside pressure mounted for the removal of the Mormons from Kirtland at the same time as bitter internal dissension plagued the Church. In January 1838, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and other Church leaders whose lives had been threatened fled to western Missouri, followed gradually by most of the Latter-day Saint residents of Kirtland and vicinity.

In 1837–1838, LDS migration into western Missouri increased rapidly. This growth sparked increased agitation among neighbors who feared Mormon economic and political domination and who saw the influx as a threat to their way of life. Grievances that had been expressed by Jackson County citizens in 1833 were repeated and enlarged. Rumors and accusations became the basis for intolerant actions. Some insisted that since Caldwell County had been created for Mormons, Latter-day Saints were not to settle outside the borders of that county.

A daguerreotype of the Nauvoo Temple (c. 1846). The Latter-day Saints worked to complete this building and receive the ordinances of the temple before they left Nauvoo for the West. The temple was completed in 1846, burned by an arsonist in 1848, largely demolished by a tornado in 1850, and completely leveled in 1856 for safety reasons.

The decisive confrontation was sparked by a fight that erupted when ruffians attempted to prevent LDS voting at Gallatin, Daviess County. Exaggerated reports of this melee unloosed agitation that had been mounting and led to the formation of mobs determined to drive all Mormons from Daviess County. Mobs also threatened Latter-day Saints living in DeWitt, Carroll County, until, on October 11, 1838, they were forced to leave their homes and farms. As the refugees traveled to the LDS stronghold at Far West, they were continually harassed and several died.

After Governor Lilburn Boggs refused pleas to protect the DeWitt Saints, Church leaders mobilized the Caldwell County militia and prepared to protect themselves. Some members of the DANITES, originally organized to assist with Latter-day Saint community development, engaged in paramilitary activity, including burning the headquarters of mobbers at Gallatin and Millport who had threatened their destruction. Meanwhile, a local militia forced Latter-day Saints to leave their farms in Ray County and threatened to shoot Church members accused of being spies. Trying to prevent the threatened executions, a unit of the LDS Caldwell County militia engaged the Ray militia on October 25 at Crooked River. Men were killed on both sides, and wildly exaggerated rumors of marauding Mormons enflamed the countryside. On October 27, without investigating the charges and countercharges, Governor Boggs accused Church members of initiating hostilities and ordered the state militia to exterminate the Mormons or drive them from the state (see EXTERMINATION ORDER). Three days later, the HAUN'S MILL MASSACRE, in which more than two hundred militiamen attacked a tiny LDS settlement and brutally killed seventeen, underscored the likelihood that Boggs's order would be carried out literally.

Confronted by overwhelming militia forces, the Latter-day Saints surrendered at Far West and agreed to leave the state. Approximately 10,000 Church members were forced to leave Missouri, most in winter and amid intense hostility. Traveling eastward, they crossed the Mississippi River into Illinois. After suffering immense losses of property and some loss of life, in early 1839 most reached Quincy and other western Illinois communities whose residents offered aid and refuge.

Meanwhile, Church leaders in Missouri were arrested and charged with treason. Most were promptly released, but ten were imprisoned without trial during the winter of 1838–1839, some in RICHMOND JAIL and others in LIBERTY JAIL. During the Prophet Joseph's half-year stay in Liberty Jail, he wrote some of the most insightful and eloquent inspired writings of his career (D&C 121–23), and he emerged in April 1839 with a clear understanding of what must be done to complete his mission satisfactorily and a firm determination to do so.

The Saints arranged to purchase land for a new gathering place on both sides of a bend in the Mississippi River north of Quincy. Nauvoo, Illinois, superseded the fledgling community of Commerce and became Church headquarters. Many members also settled across the river in Lee County, Iowa.

Plagued by malaria, Nauvoo-area Saints sought to confront larger issues while still struggling to establish a viable community after the Missouri disaster. Attempting to obtain redress for Missouri losses, President Joseph Smith visited national political leaders in Washington, D.C., but the prevailing emphasis on states' rights precluded federal assistance. Despite illness and poverty, nine members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles fulfilled an assignment to proselytize in the British Isles. They arrived in England in early 1840 and during the next fifteen months saw nearly 5,000 converts join the approximately 1,500 they found on arrival. The following year, Orson Hyde, an apostle, visited Jerusalem and dedicated Palestine for the gathering of the Jews (see ISRAEL: GATHERING OF ISRAEL).

In England the Twelve launched the Latter Day Saints' Millennial Star and published a hymnal and a second edition of the Book of Mormon, founding in the process what became a major LDS publication center for the next half century. The Twelve initiated the emigration of LDS British converts to America in 1840, and during the next six years nearly 5,000 migrated to Nauvoo (see IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION). Under the leadership of Brigham Young, the Quorum of the Twelve became an effective administrative force during this mission. When they returned to Nauvoo, they were given new responsibilities. In August 1841, Joseph Smith announced that the Twelve now stood "next to the First Presidency," and their jurisdiction was expanded to include supervision of the Church's stakes as well as mission areas.

Draining the swamps and welcoming a growing number of settlers, the Saints in Nauvoo created a thriving community that eventually numbered nearly 12,000, rivaling Chicago as the largest city in Illinois. Construction and growth fueled the economy, cultural life thrived, and the Saints developed the most important religious community of their short history. Having learned from experience that they could not rely on the goodwill of others for protection, they sought institutional guarantees. In the NAUVOO CHARTERS the Illinois state legislature provided the protections of home rule, a municipal judiciary, and a city militia. Determined never again to be defenseless as they had been in Missouri, they built their chartered NAUVOO LEGION into the largest militia in Illinois.

To an unusual degree, Joseph Smith occupied a position of political as well as ecclesiastical power, serving at various times as city councilman, mayor, commanding general of the Nauvoo Legion, and editor of the leading local newspaper, the Times and Seasons. These positions gave him wide latitude to build a sacred society and to accomplish the things he felt most central to his mission.

After receiving additional priesthood keys in the Kirtland Temple in 1836, Joseph Smith looked to the day when he could complete his temple-related responsibilities and convey additional teachings and ordinances to the Saints. He emerged from Liberty Jail convinced that his time to do so was short and that Nauvoo would be his last opportunity. As soon as the Saints had regrouped and were secure in their new home, he began unfolding a set of additional teachings, ordinances, and organizational patterns—many of them temple-related—that further distanced the Saints from their own earlier notions and from the beliefs of their neighbors. This process began with an important revelation of January 1841 (D&C 124) that, among other things, launched the construction of the NAUVOO TEMPLE, and continued for more than three years. By April 1844, just three months before his death, the process was complete.

In Nauvoo Joseph Smith expounded on the nature of the GODHEAD and the origin and destiny of the human race, stressing the concept of ETERNAL PROGRESSION in conjunction with the PLAN OF SALVATION (see KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE). Teaching the universal availability of salvation, he introduced vicarious ordinances for deceased individuals, including BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD. Experiencing resistance to new doctrines and practices, yet driven by personal forebodings to avoid delay, the Prophet began in 1841–1842 to introduce PLURAL MARRIAGE and sacred temple ordinances (see ENDOWMENT) privately to a limited number of trusted associates, including members of the Quorum of the Twelve, who were later to deliver them to worthy members of the Church once the temple was complete.

Among the most important Nauvoo organizational developments was the March 1842 founding of the RELIEF SOCIETY, a benevolent, social, and religious organization for women (see RELIEF SOCIETY ORGANIZATION IN NAUVOO). The Relief Society provided women a structure to facilitate charitable work and sisterhood. More important, it brought women into close contact with priesthood organization and helped to prepare them for temple experiences to come. The Church's first WARDS, or basic congregational units, were founded in Nauvoo, and additional responsibilities for BISHOPS were defined. The COUNCIL OF FIFTY was the last organizational element set up by Joseph Smith. Though it played a useful practical role for several years after its March 1844 organization, its greatest importance was in providing a governmental model for the future kingdom of God on earth.

From the temple to the Council of Fifty, members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles stood by the Prophet as his closest advisers and assistants. Foreseeing the day when the Saints might need a more secure haven in the isolated West, in February 1844 Joseph Smith assigned the Twelve to lead an expedition to find such a location (see WESTWARD MIGRATION), but shortly put the project on hold. First, he wanted them to travel to the East on a more political mission. When inquiries to the presidential candidates in the approaching national election produced no one willing to defend Mormon rights, the Prophet Joseph Smith launched his own presidential campaign, providing a platform for making his views known and speaking out on behalf of his people. During their usual summer proselytizing, the Twelve and other supporters would travel in the East, combining preaching with electioneering. Before they left, about March 26, 1844, Joseph Smith made his "last charge" to the Twelve. He declared that he had now given them every priesthood key that he possessed and that it was their responsibility to shoulder the burden of the kingdom while he rested.

Before they returned from the East, he was murdered.

Although Nauvoo grew rapidly, progress on its most ambitious construction projects, the NAUVOO TEMPLE and the NAUVOO HOUSE hotel, lagged, in part because of a shortage of capital. Hopes to make Nauvoo a manufacturing center failed to materialize for the same reason (see NAUVOO ECONOMY). But the continued success of LDS proselytizing and the influx of immigrants, combined with LDS solidarity and industriousness, transformed Nauvoo into a formidable economic and political competitor to the other towns in Hancock County.

Neighbors unsympathetic to Nauvoo also had other complaints. The theocratic organization of the LDS community, with its apparent unity of purpose and its local autonomy, aroused resentment. The tendency for Latter-day Saints to vote as a bloc for local and state candidates who were most likely to benefit them alienated both Whigs and Democrats (see NAUVOO POLITICS). Nauvoo's strong militia aroused envy and distrust. The fact that the city's judicial system shielded Joseph Smith from prosecution provoked charges that he had placed himself beyond the law.

As these things increased the hostility of adversaries of the Church, Thomas Sharp, editor of a newspaper in nearby Warsaw, made his Warsaw Signal a voice for these concerns and took up a sustained crusade against Joseph Smith and Nauvoo. In the spring of 1844 several disgruntled former associates combined forces with anti-Mormons to mount an offensive against the Prophet from within Nauvoo itself. They published the Nauvoo Expositor newspaper, which attacked the Church and made inflammatory charges against Joseph Smith. The Nauvoo City Council declared the paper a public nuisance and ordered the sheriff to destroy it, an action that aroused the Prophet's enemies and provided the basis for his arrest. On June 27, 1844, Joseph and his brother Hyrum were murdered in the jail at the county seat, Carthage, while awaiting trial (see CARTHAGE JAIL; MARTYRDOM OF JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH).

The Prophet Joseph Smith established the doctrinal and organizational foundation of the modern Church and prepared Brigham Young and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles to build on the foundation he had laid (see SUCCESSION IN THE PRESIDENCY). His ministry and his mission were complete.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Glen M. Leonard. The Story of the Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Backman, Milton V., Jr. The Heavens Resound. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Flanders, Robert Bruce. Nauvoo: Kingdom on the Mississippi. Urbana, Ill., 1965.
- Gentry, Leland H. "A History of the Latter-day Saints in Northern Missouri from 1836 to 1839." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1965.
- Hill, Marvin S. Quest for Refuge. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- LeSueur, Stephen C. The 1838 Mormon War in Missouri. Columbia, Mo., 1987.
- Pratt, Parley P. Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Underwood, Grant. "Millenarianism and the Early Mormon Mind." Journal of Mormon History 9 (1982):41–51.

MILTON V. BACKMAN, JR.

RONALD K. ESPLIN

C. 1844–1877, EXODUS AND EARLY UTAH PERIODS

[After outlining developments in Nauvoo, Illinois, following the martyrdom of Joseph Smith, this article traces the exodus from Nauvoo to the West. It then focuses primarily on the political and economic developments associated with establishing a new commonwealth in the Great Basin under Brigham Young's direction. It also reviews Church organization, plural marriage, and the building of temples.

To understand daily life and what it meant to be a Latter-day Saint during this period, see Pioneer Life and Worship and Social and Cultural History. For more on Church leadership and organization, see: Organizational and Administrative History, Auxiliary Organizations, Sunday School, Retrenchment Association, Young Men. For the Exodus: Westward Migration; Mormon Trail; Historical Sites; Council Bluffs; Iowa, LDS Communities in; "This is the Place" Monument. For the development of the Mormon commonwealth consult: Agriculture; Economic History; Pioneer Economy; Immigration and Emigration; Handcart Companies; City Planning; Deseret Alphabet; Deseret University; Native Americans; and articles on pioneer settlements in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Nevada, New Mexico, and Wyoming. See also Politics: Political History and Woman Suffrage.]

The MARTYRDOM OF JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH on June 27, 1844, precipitated a major crisis. In the immediate aftermath and emotional shock of losing their founding prophet, many Latter-day Saints suffered a crisis of faith: Could anyone take his place? Would the Lord still be with the Church? Nor was it immediately clear to everyone who should lead: Would it be Sidney RIGDON, Joseph Smith's counselor in the First Presidency? The QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, led by Brigham YOUNG? Someone else? Whoever succeeded to leadership would face the challenge of resolving tensions within the Church and facing powerful adversaries without.

At the time of the assassination, most members of the Quorum of the Twelve were in the East on missions. Sidney Rigdon, who had left Nauvoo for Pittsburgh just before the martyrdom, returned August 3 and asserted a claim to lead as "Guardian." Three days later several of the Twelve, including Brigham Young, arrived just in time for an August 8 meeting already called to decide guardianship. Rigdon spoke first for his claims. He was followed by Brigham Young, who asserted the responsibility of the Twelve to lead the Church in Joseph's absence and to build on the foundation he had laid. The great majority voted to sustain the Twelve. Many claimed that Brigham Young was transfigured before them, speaking with the voice of the deceased prophet and appearing like him in person and manner.

The August 8 vote effectively settled the question of succession: no one else could make a persuasive claim of having either the authority or the full confidence of the Prophet. The vote sustained the Quorum of the Twelve, with Brigham Young at their head, as the leaders of the Church, but it did not immediately result in a new First Presidency; that would come later, after the Twelve had completed the Nauvoo Temple and located a new home for the Church in the West, responsibilities they felt an obligation to accomplish as a quorum. Nor did the vote satisfy those who longed for a way to be Latter-day Saints but without the Nauvoo innovations that they viewed as problematic and that the Twelve would continue—such things as the emphasis on TEMPLE, new doctrines including PLURAL MARRIAGE, and the unity of temporal and ecclesiastical concerns under the priesthood. Some of these briefly followed others who set themselves up as leaders, but many simply drifted away. Years later, some banded together as the REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS with emphasis and direction quite different from Joseph Smith in Nauvoo or the Twelve in the Great Basin (see SCHISMATIC GROUPS).

The first priorities of the Twelve were to complete the NAUVOO TEMPLE while privately preparing for the exodus to the West (see WESTWARD MIGRATION, PLANNING AND PROPHECY)—which they were committed to delay until the Saints received temple ORDINANCES. The Saints so rallied behind the temple that the capstone was in place by May 1845, and the edifice was ready for ordinance work by December. Eventually nearly 6,000 men and women received temple ordinances before leaving for the West. In the spring of 1845, with the temple nearing completion, Church leaders began preparations for the move West. In September, shortly after mob violence erupted against the outlying settlements around Nauvoo, the Twelve publicly announced that the Saints would all depart.

Brigham Young was supported in these endeavors by eight of the Twelve—the same who had served abroad under his direction in 1840–1841—and by members of the COUNCIL OF FIFTY. Organized in March 1844 by Joseph Smith, the Council of Fifty had been involved in two major activities prior to his death: secretly negotiating with the Republic of Texas for possible settlements there, and publicly campaigning to support Joseph Smith's candidacy for the U.S. presidency. More than seventy-five percent of the surviving members of the original Council of Fifty supported Brigham Young, but William Smith, John E. Page, Lyman Wight, all apostles, and Nauvoo Stake

Crossing the Mississippi on the Ice, by C. C. A. Christensen (late nineteenth century, tempera on canvas, 6'6" × 9'9"). Forced by persecution from Nauvoo in early 1846, some Latter-day Saints crossed the Mississippi into Iowa during weather so bitterly cold that wagon trains could cross safely on the ice. Courtesy Museum of Fine Arts, Brigham Young University.

Mormon pioneers pose in front of their wagons crossing the plains (c. 1866). Photographer: C. R. Savage. Courtesy Utah State Historical Society.

President William Marks dissented and were never reconciled either to the temple or to the Great Basin exodus and its implications. The Council of Fifty helped organize the exodus from Nauvoo and, in early Utah, helped establish an economic and political theocracy.

The exodus began in February 1846, before renewed hostilities erupted. All during the spring and summer, a flow of wagons moved out across the Iowa prairies. The Latter-day Saints were still unsettled in Iowa when a U.S. military officer arrived on June 26 with a requisition for 500 volunteers to serve in the campaign against Mexico. Though sometimes regarded as an oppressive trial imposed upon the refugee Mormons by the U.S. government, the call actually resulted from secret negotiations with U.S. President James Polk (see MORMON BATTALION). Though the battalion took 500 able-bodied men from their midst, it brought a much-needed $70,000, which was used to aid the families of the men and fund the general program of the exodus.

Because the evacuation of Nauvoo and the trek across Iowa had largely exhausted the travel season, the Saints prepared to winter on the Missouri River. They built temporary settlements at WINTER QUARTERS on the river's west bank, now Florence, Nebraska, a suburb of Omaha, and on the east bank at Kaneshville, later COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA. There preparations continued for the great migration to the interior basins of North America. On January 14, 1847, Brigham Young announced a revelation that the Saints should be "organized into companies [of hundreds, fifties, and tens], with a covenant and promise to keep all the commandments . . . of the Lord our God" (D&C 136:2–3). On April 5, 1847, he led the first pioneer company, departing from Winter Quarters.

After a three-month journey, advance scouts entered the valley of the Great Salt Lake. Three days later, on July 24, 1847 (see PIONEER DAY), Brigham Young entered the valley. On July 28 he designated a temple site and announced to the 157 pioneers that “this is the right spot,” making it clear that he and the Saints intended a long stay in the vicinity of the Great Salt Lake.

Wagons circled at Independence Rock. Artist W. H. Jackson (1929). Independence Rock marked the beginning of the 96-mile route along Wyoming's Sweetwater River. Today, the graffiti of pioneers can still be seen carved in the rock. Courtesy Nelson Wadsworth.

After his return from Utah to Winter Quarters in October 1847, Brigham Young presented to the apostles the question of reorganizing the First Presidency. Although no written revelation explicitly authorized the Twelve to reorganize the presidency, many considered that right implicit in the 1835 revelation concerning the authority of that quorum in relation to the First Presidency (D&C 107:21–24). The Twelve sustained Brigham Young as President of the Church, with Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards as his counselors, an action ratified by Church members later that month at a special conference at Kaneshville, Iowa, and the following year in Salt Lake City.

Brigham Young, second President of the Church, led the Saints from Joseph Smith's death in 1844 until 1877. Known as “an American Moses,” his life was dedicated to establishing Zion as revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith and in meeting the changing needs of the Church for over thirty years. Brigham's dying words were “Joseph! Joseph! Joseph!”

In Utah, Brigham Young set out to fulfill Joseph Smith's dream of establishing a permanent refuge for the Saints. This included creating a political state in which the Church would play a dominant role. The theocratic nature of this government was indicated by the fact that a Church HIGH COUNCIL, presided over by Joseph Smith's uncle John Smith, conducted both religious and civil affairs in the SALT LAKE VALLEY from the fall of 1847 until the return of Brigham Young to the valley in September 1848, when the Twelve and the Council of Fifty assumed direction.

In the closing months of 1848, the Council of Fifty began deliberations toward establishing a more permanent government. Anticipating that the Great Basin would become United States territory, the Council debated the relative merits of petitioning Congress for territorial or statehood status. It opted first for a territory but soon after, in July 1849, following precedents in Texas and California, petitioned for statehood and began to organize the provisional State of Deseret (see DESERET, STATE OF). Brigham Young was elected Governor and other Church authorities comprised its executive and judicial branches and much of its legislative branch. The legislature convened in December 1849, and the State of Deseret functioned as an autonomous state within the national domain until March 28, 1851, when it was formally dissolved and superseded by UTAH TERRITORY, which had already been created as part of the national Compromise of 1850 (see also UTAH STATEHOOD).

The boundaries of the State of Deseret were vast, encompassing all of present Utah, most of Nevada and Arizona, more than one-third of California, and parts of Oregon, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, and New Mexico. To establish control of this domain, Brigham Young began a vigorous COLONIZATION program, which, before his death in 1877, founded nearly 400 settlements. An energetic system of proselytizing, particularly in the BRITISH ISLES and SCANDINAVIA, with thousands converted, of whom nearly 90,000 immigrated to Utah by the end of the century. The Church promoted, organized, and conducted this immigration. For the benefit of those who could not otherwise afford travel costs, the Church organized the PERPETUAL EMIGRATING FUND. Chartered in 1850 by the State of Deseret, for the next thirty-seven years the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company raised funds and utilized Church resources to assist approximately 26,000 emigrants from Europe to the mountain West.

Engines from the Union Pacific Railroad (right) and the Central Pacific Railroad (left) met at Promontory Summit, Utah, on May 10, 1869, to commemorate the completion of the transcontinental railroad. The coming of the railroad made access to Utah easier, beginning an era of economic development but increased tension with non-Mormons. Courtesy Union Pacific Railroad Museum.

The State of Deseret was the closest the Church ever came to realizing the theocratic model previously outlined by Joseph Smith. Church authorities served in important civil positions. After federally appointed judges left the territory in 1851, probate courts, with BISHOPS as judges, were given jurisdiction over both civil and criminal cases. The intention was that LDS influence over the political life of the territory would eliminate the PERSECUTION that had repeatedly occurred. In later years the very success of this theocratic society would create less violent but ultimately more dangerous conflicts with American society (see POLITICS: POLITICAL HISTORY).

Inseparable from the prolonged conflict with the federal government was the LDS practice of PLURAL MARRIAGE. Although polygamy had been practiced privately prior to the exodus, Church leaders delayed public acknowledgment of its practice until 1852. In August of that year, at a special conference of the Church at Salt Lake City, Elder Orson Pratt, an apostle, officially announced plural marriage as a doctrine and practice of the Church. A lengthy revelation on MARRIAGE for eternity and on the plurality of wives, dictated by Joseph Smith on July 12, 1843, was published following this announcement (D&C 132). Viewing it as a religious obligation for faithful brethren to marry more wives than one, Latter-day Saints believed that polygamy was protected by constitutional guarantees of religious freedom. There were no federal laws against polygamy, and the territorial incorporation of the Church allowed it “to solemnize marriages compatible with the revelations of Jesus Christ” (Arrington and Quinn, p. 261). In some communities as much as twenty to twenty-five percent of the LDS population eventually lived in polygamous households, with most men who practiced polygamy having one to four plural wives.

For the first several years, life in their new western refuge seemed tenuous. A mild winter in 1847–1848 was followed by spring frosts and a discouraging summer. Then drought damaged and plagues of crickets devoured a good portion of the crops. Many believed that they saved a remnant of their crops only because of the miraculous intervention of great numbers of gulls that descended on the fields and devoured the crickets (see SEAGULLS, MIRACLE OF). After the lean winter of 1848–1849, however, the pioneers were able to raise enough in most years to see them through the winter. An unexpected bonanza came in 1849 when hundreds of travelers bound for the California gold fields came through Utah, eagerly trading scarce manufactured goods, exhausted animals, and even flour for local produce. The initial settlements by this time were well-enough established to begin colonization throughout the Rocky Mountain area.

The Saints founded dozens of colonies, at first primarily within the confines of present Utah. First settled was a core area extending north and south from the headquarters at Salt Lake City along the western edge of the mountains. The next colonies were in the higher mountain valleys of the region, such as the Cache and Heber valleys. Almost at the same time, other colonies were established in more distant areas, in response to particular needs, such as the founding of an iron industry (Parowan, Jan. 1851; Cedar City, Nov. 1851); establishing stations along immigration routes (San Bernardino, 1851; purchase of Fort Bridger, 1855); undertaking missions to the Indians (Fort Lemhi in present Idaho; Las Vegas, Nevada; Fort Supply in 1853 in present Wyoming; and the Elk Mountain Mission in east-central Utah, all in 1855); producing warm-climate crops, such as cotton and sugar (St. George, 1861); or, later, searching for a refuge for polygamous families.

The most common motive for colonization was the need to find land for a growing population of farmers, a need leading to settlement of most suitable sites in Utah by 1880 as well as others in northern Arizona, southwestern Colorado, northwestern New Mexico, western Wyoming, and southeastern Idaho. Often new areas were opened with a “mission” call (see CALLINGS), wherein established settlers were asked to undertake a Church-sponsored mission to found a colony. Once the mother colony was established, nearby areas were settled spontaneously as young people coming of age sought land to farm.

Ute Indians in Salt Lake City in 1869 on the road to a Grand Pow-wow, with the Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution (ZCMI) in the background. Photographer: Charles W. Carter.

The founding of a commonwealth in the West was not accomplished without conflicts and difficulties. A prolonged drought in 1855 was followed by a severe grasshopper infestation. The insecurities thus created may have helped feed the fire of the REFORMATION OF 1856–1857, a period of intense soul-searching and recommitment. The fiery and at times intemperate sermons of the Reformation had heightened pioneer anxieties when, early in 1857, believing exaggerated reports that the Mormons were in a state of rebellion, U.S. President James Buchanan secretly ordered 2,500 federal troops to Utah. Acting without the benefit of an investigation, Buchanan relieved Brigham Young as governor, a position to which Young had been reappointed even after the 1852 announcement of polygamy. Unfortunately, Buchanan did everything in secrecy, even stopping the mails to Utah to give the troops the advantage of surprise.

After receiving private confirmation of the government action, Brigham Young instructed all missionaries to return to Utah and ordered missions closed and the more isolated colonies abandoned. Accustomed to persecutions involving state militia, Latter-day Saints saw the advance of armed forces toward Utah as a prelude to plunder, rape, and slaughter. As they prepared for armed resistance, war hysteria swept the territory.

As advanced units of the UTAH EXPEDITION approached Fort Bridger, they encountered the Saints implementing a “scorched earth” policy of resistance. Mormon raiders seized and burned federal supply trains and destroyed the forage in front of the advancing troops. The timely arrival of heavy snows mired the army for the winter, allowing mediators, especially Thomas L. KANE, time to seek reconciliation. Meanwhile, President Young ordered northern Utah settlements abandoned and organized the “Move South.” If the Latter-day Saints had to leave their refuge, they would leave the Great Basin as much a wilderness as they had found it. Negotiations succeeded by spring, just as the army started to move. Alfred Cumming was installed as governor, and on June 12, 1858, Brigham Young accepted a pardon for his supposed rebellion. Two weeks later, General Albert Sidney Johnston led his troops through a deserted Salt Lake City and established an isolated Camp Floyd forty miles to the southwest. The Utah War became fittingly known as Buchanan’s Blunder.

A disastrous consequence of the war hysteria was the MOUNTAIN MEADOWS MASSACRE of September 1857, in which local officials in southern Utah joined with Indians to massacre a company of settlers en route to California. It is well documented that Brigham Young’s command was to let the travelers pass through in peace, but his advice arrived too late to prevent the killing, and a locally orchestrated cover-up portrayed the crime as solely an Indian depredation. Responding to charges that whites were involved, President Young urged the new governor to investigate, but Governor Cumming maintained that if whites were involved they would be pardoned under the general amnesty granted in 1858. Eventually, as more information came to light, some of the principal participants were excommunicated from the Church and one, John D. Lee, was convicted in federal court and executed.

Though preoccupied by the Civil War, the federal government nonetheless demonstrated interest in Utah Territory. In 1862 Fort Douglas was established on the eastern edge of Salt Lake City, under the leadership of a dedicated anti-Mormon, Patrick Edward Connor. Connor and his troops were charged with guarding transportation routes, but they also published the aggressively anti-Mormon Union Vedette, encouraged mining, and promoted non-Mormon immigration to the territory. In 1863 Connor’s troops attacked a group of Northern Shoshone Indians on the Bear River in the northern Cache Valley, killing some 250 men, women, and children.

The decade following the Utah War was one of general expansion for the Church. In 1862 Congress enacted a law prohibiting polygamy in the territories and disincorporating the Church, but the law went unenforced until after REYNOLDS V. UNITED STATES in 1879. Church immigrants continued to arrive by the thousands, and Brigham Young continued planting colonies to house them. The steady influx of non-Mormons to Utah and the construction of a transcontinental railroad, however, pointed toward future challenges to LDS domination of their Great Basin commonwealth.

The completion of the transcontinental railroad brought opportunities as well as challenges. Brigham Young had long anticipated the end of physical isolation and in some ways encouraged it. In 1852 and in 1854, the Saints petitioned Congress for a transcontinental railroad to pass through Utah. Such a railroad would simplify immigration and permit Church leaders to establish rail links connecting many distant colonies with Salt Lake

The First Presidency of the Church (1876–1877), at the time of Brigham Young's death in 1877. Left to right: John W. Young, President Brigham Young, Daniel H. Wells.

City. When the Pacific Railroad Act was passed on July 1, 1862, President Young subscribed for $10,000 worth of stock in the newly organized Union Pacific Railroad Company, of which he became a director in 1865.

Though the railroad made it easier for Church immigrants to reach Utah, it also encouraged non-Mormon immigration. The end of isolation likewise threatened Utah's economic and political independence. In order to build the local economy and postpone the establishment of a powerful non-Mormon business community, Church officials had long struggled to discourage the importation of eastern manufactured goods. They now launched a determined campaign to discourage the purchase of imported luxuries, including tea, coffee, alcohol, and tobacco, and Joseph Smith's 1833 revelation discouraging the use of these products was given added emphasis (see WORD OF WISDOM).

Despite Brigham Young's long opposition to the development of precious metal-mining in Utah, the approach of the railroad revived enthusiasm for harvesting Utah's mineral wealth. Under the direction of several prominent Church businessmen and intellectuals such as William Godbe, Edward W. Tullidge, and Eli B. Kelsey, a "New Movement" developed within the Church against what they referred to as "Priesthood Autocracy." These men wrote persuasive articles in the Utah Magazine urging the exploitation of Utah's mineral resources in order to keep the industry in local (and therefore LDS) control. Envisioning a different result, Brigham Young denounced the "Godbeites" for inviting "Gentile" domination of Utah. Eventually, Godbe, whose doctrinal unorthodoxy posed an additional challenge, was excommunicated. Although Brigham Young rejected the Godbeite solution, he recognized the realities of the new economic situation and inaugurated a series of programs to reinforce spiritual solidarity and economic independence.

One part of Brigham Young's program involved the organization of the SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS in 1867. The original School of the Prophets had been established by Joseph Smith in 1833 to provide adult education and prepare for the temple. In the Utah organization, adoption of an economic program accompanied discussions of theology. The Schools of the Prophets instructed landowners in methods of securing property titles, solicited contributions of labor and funds to finance branch railroads, established locally owned cooperative merchandising and manufacturing enterprises, urged the reduction of wages to allow greater exportation of Utah goods, organized boycotts of hostile Gentile establishments, and required that members pledge to observe the Word of Wisdom. The Schools also contracted with the Union Pacific and Central Pacific railroads to grade the transcontinental line in Utah, thus limiting the influx of non-Mormon laborers and providing cash revenue to Latter-day Saints. Within a few years, as economic conditions changed, these organizations gradually disappeared.

More permanent than the Schools of the Prophets were the organizations that Brigham Young established for the women and youth of the Church. Between the rebirth of the RELIEF SOCIETY in 1867 and Brigham Young's death a decade later, with General President Eliza R. SNOW assisting bishops in forming local organizations, the society spread to every Church settlement in the Great Basin. In addition to its charitable purposes, the Relief Society worked with the Schools of the Prophets in encouraging HOME INDUSTRY and discouraging the purchase of imports. Major achievements of the Relief Society included the beginning of a grain storage program, launching SILK CULTURE, founding the WOMAN'S EXPONENT, building Relief Society halls in most settlements, starting a commission store for home industries, and impressive support of women's medical training (see MATERNITY AND CHILD HEALTH CARE). Relief Society leaders were also active in WOMAN SUFFRAGE, and in 1870 Utah women were second to Wyoming women to receive the franchise.

In 1869 Brigham Young established an organization for young women with the unwieldy name "Young Ladies' Department of the Cooperative Retrenchment Association." He urged the girls to avoid all extravagances, and to "cease to build up the merchant who sends your money out of the Territory for fine clothes made in the East" (Susa Young Gates, History of the Young Ladies Mutual Improvement Association of the Church, p. 9 [Salt Lake City, 1911]). The Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association, as it was later named, became an organization primarily concerned with cultural, social, and religious activity (see YOUNG WOMEN; RETRENCHMENT ASSOCIATION).

After the completion of the transcontinental railroad in 1869, both Union Pacific and Central Pacific defaulted on their grading contracts. The losses to the Mormon economy were staggering: $500,000 in cash, and even greater aggregate losses to subcontractors, merchants, and laborers. In an effort to compensate for these losses, Church leaders sponsored railroads within the territory, using the half million dollars' worth of iron, construction equipment, and rolling stock that the bankrupt Union Pacific had used as a substitute payment on its obligations. Although these railroads brought benefits to Utah, their success did not completely assuage the bitterness the Saints felt toward the initial setbacks with the transcontinental railroad.

In addition to intensifying his call for home manufacture and boycotts of non-Mormon merchants as the rails approached Utah, Brigham Young established a cooperative system of merchandising. In October 1868 he organized Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution (ZCMI) to "bring goods here and sell them as low as they can possibly be sold and let the profits be divided with the people at large" (Arden Olsen, History of the Mormon Mercantile Cooperation in Utah, p. 80 [Ph.D. diss., University of California, Berkeley, 1935]). With widespread support, the new department store became a profitable enterprise that continues as Salt Lake City's largest retailer. Branch stores were established in many communities, as were cooperative tanneries, gristmills, dairies, butcher shops, banks, iron works, sawmills, woolen mills, and cotton factories. These helped the Saints forestall for another decade the "outside" control that the arrival of the railroad presaged.

The remarkable success of the Cooperative Movement suggested to Brigham Young that a revival of "The United Order of Enoch," long his goal, might now be feasible. Inaugurated by Brigham Young during the winter of 1873–1874, the Order Movement had been inspired by a desire to emulate attempts to live the law of CONSECRATION in the 1830s and by the success of the Brigham City Cooperative. Under the direction of Elder Lorenzo SNOW, Brigham City had become eighty-five percent self-sufficient, conducting virtually all agriculture, construction, manufacturing, and trade in the surrounding area. Almost the entire population was employed in the various departments of the cooperative, and received their remuneration in products rather than cash. So successful was the Brigham City Cooperative that it was hardly affected by the financial Panic of 1873.

After Brigham Young launched the UNITED ORDER movement, more than 200 orders were established throughout Utah, southern Idaho, northern Arizona, and Nevada. Because he left the operation of these orders in local hands, several different types emerged. Some, like Orderville in southern Utah, were almost totally communal. In the larger cities, where tightly organized communal orders were impossible, separate ward congregations financed individual cooperative enterprises, such as farms or factories, and then exchanged products. The manifestations of the United Order of Enoch varied, but they represented a genuine effort of the people to become “one,” as the early revelations had commanded. As with nearly all voluntary enterprises of this nature, these orders eventually disbanded due to internal strains and external pressures. The movement itself ended by 1877, although some orders, such as that at Orderville, continued for another decade.

Prior to his death in 1877, Brigham Young was able to see the fulfillment of one of his most sacred aspirations—the completion of a temple in Utah. The full significance of TEMPLES and their ordinances dated back to the Nauvoo period, when Joseph Smith introduced baptism for the dead, marriage for eternity, and a set of religious instructions and covenants called the ENDOWMENT. Since abandoning the Nauvoo Temple in 1846, Brigham Young dreamed of a temple in the West. Upon arriving in the valley he dedicated ground in Salt Lake City for such a temple, but the imposing structure took forty years to complete. In the meantime, a temporary ENDOWMENT HOUSE, constructed in 1855, provided a place for sacred ordinances. After deciding to build a less imposing structure in the south, Brigham Young dedicated the completed St. George Temple on April 6, 1877. In the decade following his death, two additional temples were built in Utah (Logan and Manti) before the Salt Lake Temple was finally dedicated in 1893.

After the St. George temple dedication, Brigham Young initiated a massive reorganization of the Church, primarily at the local level, clarifying and redefining priesthood responsibilities in the process. Every ward and stake was affected and most received new leadership.

By the time of his death on August 29, 1877, Brigham Young had brought the Latter-day Saints to an apex of growth in their mountain retreat and kingdom. His dying words, “Joseph! Joseph! Joseph!” were appropriate for one who had lived his life, as he frequently said, as an apostle of Jesus Christ and of Joseph Smith. In his sometimes unbending manner, Brigham Young had worked for more than forty years to attain the goals of Joseph Smith. The Saints had achieved a unified economic and political power, though they would soon be forced to bend in the face of unrelenting federal pressure. More important, by courageously facing their challenges and pursuing their dreams in the desert, they had become a strong and cohesive people of faith. Committed to gospel ideals regardless of the costs, they left a heritage that continues to inspire Latter-day Saints throughout the world.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

General works focusing on this period include Leonard J. Arrington, Brigham Young, American Moses, New York, 1985; and Great Basin Kingdom, Cambridge, Mass., 1958; Eugene E. Campbell, Establishing Zion: The Mormon Church in the American West, 1847–1869, Salt Lake City, 1988; Dean L. May, Utah: A People's History, Salt Lake City, 1987; and a brief account in Leonard J. Arrington and D. Michael Quinn, “The Latter-day Saints in the Far West, 1847–1900,” in F. Mark McKiernan, Alma R. Blair, and Paul M. Edwards, eds., The Restoration Movement: Essays in Mormon History, Lawrence, Kans., 1973, pp. 257–70.

In addition to numerous relevant articles in the Journal of Mormon History, BYU Studies, Dialogue, Sunstone, and the Utah Historical Quarterly, see: Richard E. Bennett, Mormons at the Missouri 1846–1852, Norman, Okla., 1987, for the period leading to Utah settlement; Wallace Stegner's The Gathering of Zion, New York, 1964, a classic account of migration to Utah; Leonard J. Arrington, Feramorz Y. Fox, and Dean L. May, Building the City of God: Community and Cooperation Among the Mormons, Salt Lake City, 1976, which focuses on communitarianism; and Norman F. Furniss's The Mormon Conflict, 1850–59, New Haven, Conn., 1960, the best book-length study of the Utah War.

LEONARD J. ARRINGTON

DEAN L. MAY

C. 1878–1898, LATE PIONEER UTAH PERIOD

[This article discusses a period of stress and adaptation following the death of Brigham Young as the Church confronted great pressures to conform to contemporary American mores. After presenting an overview of the period, the article considers organizational changes, economic programs, establishment of new LDS settlements, and missionary work, then focuses on the struggle over Polygamy, culminating in the Manifesto of 1890 announcing the official end of Plural Marriage. In the wake of the Manifesto came home rule for Utah (see Utah Statehood), expanded proselytizing, attempts to shore up religious education (see Academics), and more limited Church economic involvement (see Pioneer Economy).

To understand daily life and what it meant to be a Latter-day Saint during this period, see Pioneer Life and Worship and Social and Cultural History. For additional information on continued Church Colonization into new areas, see entries on pioneer settlements in Mexico and

Canada, and in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Nevada, New Mexico, and Wyoming. On developments related to plural marriage, see: Legal and Judicial History; Antipolygamy Legislation; Reynolds v. United States; and Manifesto of 1890.]

During the 1878–1898 period of growth, severe problems, and pronounced changes, the Church met many challenges under Church Presidents John TAYLOR and Wilford WOODRUFF. The 1879 Supreme Court ruling upholding ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION introduced a decade of ever harsher enforcement of ever harsher laws. Facing governmental persecution and seeking “home rule” through statehood, the Church moved to end the practice of plural marriage and surrender its once firm control of Utah Territory’s politics and economics. In the 1890s UTAH TERRITORY and its LDS residents embarked on the road to “Americanization.”

Though this period was noted for its prolonged confrontation with the federal government, growth was also a striking characteristic. Church membership doubled (from 115,065 to 229,428), as did the number of stakes (20 to 40) and wards (252 to 516). LDS settlements extended into Mexico and Canada. As proselytizing efforts expanded, the number of missions increased (from 8 to 20).

Priesthood quorum work became more orderly and standardized. GENERAL AUTHORITIES regularly visited quarterly stake conferences and ward conferences. AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS became widely established in stakes and wards, and general-level auxiliary presidencies and boards were appointed. The Church also finished three new temples, bringing the total in Utah to four.

After President Young’s death in August 1877, the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES did not immediately organize a new FIRST PRESIDENCY. John Taylor presided over the Church as president of the Twelve until October 1880. Under his leadership the Twelve completed the reorganization of wards and stakes that President Young had begun.

They also expanded auxiliary organizations. By 1880 the Twelve selected three of their own (Elders Wilford Woodruff, Joseph F. SMITH, and Moses Thatcher) to form a general superintendency of the Young Men’s Mutual Improvement Association (YMMIA; see YOUNG MEN) and to supervise new central YMMIA boards or committees created first for counties and later for stakes. The Young Ladies’ RETRENCHMENT ASSOCIATION became the Young Ladies’ Mutual Improvement Association (YLMIA) in 1878, with boards established in the stakes beginning that year and a Eagle Gate in Salt Lake City with the Beehive House in the background, c. 1900. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

Churchwide organization beginning in 1880 with Elmina S. TAYLOR as president (see YOUNG WOMEN). The Primary Association, a new organization to benefit children, was started in 1878 in Farmington, Utah. After other wards copied the program, a Churchwide PRIMARY organization was created in 1880, headed by Louie B. Felt. RELIEF SOCIETY President Eliza R. SNOW continued to supervise all women's work in the Church, which now included YLMIA and Primary. Elder George Q. Cannon of the First Presidency continued as general superintendent of the SUNDAY SCHOOLS throughout this period. The Sunday Schools, Relief Society, and MIA were organized in the British Isles and Scandinavia beginning in the late 1870s and early 1880s.

Legal tangles surrounding the settlement of Brigham Young's estate became a bothersome problem for the Twelve. After federal legislation severely limited Church holdings, President Young had controlled a complicated mix of personal and Church property. His heirs and the Church finally settled the matter by compromise out of court in 1879.

In 1880, its fiftieth birthday, the Church proclaimed a Year of Jubilee, modeled on an ancient Hebrew custom, to give relief to the poor. It erased from the books an indebtedness of $802,000 to the PERPETUAL EMIGRATING FUND—half of the outstanding total. In addition to distributing cattle and sheep to the needy, authorities forgave the worthy poor half their unpaid tithing. The Relief Society also lent nearly 35,000 bushels of wheat from its storage bins to help drought-stricken farmers.

After directing the Church for three years, in October 1880 John Taylor and the Twelve again organized a First Presidency: John Taylor, President of the Church, and George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, who had previously served in the First Presidency under Brigham Young, as counselors.

Revelations to President Taylor in 1882 and 1883 prompted a reorganization of the SEVENTY. For the first time the seventy-six local quorums were organized on a geographic basis, enrolling all seventies within their respective boundaries. In addition, between 1884 and 1888, twenty-five new quorums were created. This reorganization revitalized the Seventy, and the number of seventies filling full-time missions increased as soon as the change was implemented.

This period also saw a growth in Church-related publications. Two new magazines served the youth: the CONTRIBUTOR (1879–1896) for young men and the YOUNG WOMAN'S JOURNAL (1889–1929) for young ladies. The Morgenstjernen (1882–1885), a historical publication in Danish, continued in English as The Historical Record (1886–1890). The Sunday School published its first music book (1884), and the Book of Mormon first appeared in a Swedish translation (1878). In 1880 the Church accepted by vote the Pearl of Great Price as scripture, giving the Church the fourth of its STANDARD WORKS. It also published, in 1879, editions of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, with Elder Orson Pratt's chapter and verse divisions, cross-references, and notes.

President Taylor also implemented a new economic program. Less rigidly structured than the earlier UNITED ORDERS, it struck a balance between private enterprise and group economic planning. Zion's Central Board of Trade fostered cooperative economic activity by promoting business, seeking new markets, providing information to farmers and manufacturers, preventing competition harmful to home industry, and sometimes regulating wages and prices. Stake boards of trade coordinated with the central agency. Unfortunately, by 1885 anti-Mormon crusades forced these boards of trade to disband. Pioneer and PRESIDING BISHOP Edward Hunter, who had served since the 1850s, died in 1883 and was replaced in 1884 by William B. Preston.

During the 1880s the Relief Society further developed programs that had begun in the 1870s: storing grain, maintaining ward Relief Society halls and commission stores, sponsoring nursing and midwifery education programs, overseeing the organizations for children and young women, watching over the spiritual well-being of LDS women, and improving the ongoing care of the poor. New developments included the 1882 opening of the DESERET HOSPITAL, Utah's second hospital and the first operated by the Church. The death of Eliza R. Snow in 1887 marked the end of an era for the Relief Society; in 1888 Zina Diantha H. YOUNG replaced her as president.

Despite severe problems, Church leaders remained committed to providing the blessings of temples to more of the Saints. To supplement the one functioning temple in St. George, President John Taylor dedicated Utah's second temple, at Logan, on May 17, 1884. Built primarily with donated money, materials, and labor, it cost an estimated $800,000. A third temple, in Manti, Utah, built at a cost close to $1 million, was dedicated in 1888 by Elder Lorenzo SNOW, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve. Work also continued on the larger Salt Lake Temple, begun in 1853, but not completed until 1893.

Colonization continued. Between 1876 and 1879, no fewer than 100 new LDS settlements were established outside Utah and more than 20 within the territory. LDS settlements in Arizona expanded rapidly. Stakes, formed in the vicinity of the Little Colorado River in 1878 and 1879, were absorbed into the newly created St. Johns and Snowflake stakes in 1887. Meanwhile, along the Gila and Salt rivers, the St. Joseph and Maricopa stakes were formed in 1883. New LDS settlements appeared in Nevada; in eastern Utah, where the Emery Stake was created in 1882; and in southeastern Utah and nearby parts of Colorado and New Mexico, where the San Juan Stake was formed in 1883. Many LDS converts from the southern states settled in the San Luis Valley in south-central Colorado, and in 1883 their settlements became the San Luis Stake.

Antipolygamy prosecution caused Church leaders to found colonies in Mexico and Canada, beyond the reach of U.S. laws. After President Taylor's 1885 visit to Mexico, hundreds of Saints poured into Chihuahua and established villages in a region that is still identified as Mexico's "Mormon Colonies" (see MEXICO, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN). These settlements at first were part of the Mexican Mission. Within a decade more than 3,000 Saints had moved in, more settlements were established, and in December 1895 the Juárez Stake was created to direct Saints in the Mexican colonies.

Under instructions from President Taylor, Cache Stake President Charles Ora Card located a place of refuge in southern Alberta in 1886 for Latter-day Saint colonists (see CANADA, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN). The next spring, arrivals from Utah founded Cardston, fourteen miles north of the United States border. Settlements sprang up nearby in Aetna (1888) and Mountain View (1893). In June 1895 the Alberta Stake became the first stake organized outside the United States (the Salt Lake Stake excepted, then in Mexican territory).

Missionary work produced impressive successes and brought frustrating problems. Between 1879 and 1889 the Church operated a small mission in Mexico that had about 242 converts. In New Zealand a branch was organized among the Maoris in 1883. In 1884 Jacob Spori opened the Turkish Mission, which included Palestine. Numbers of missionaries bound for Europe increased. The gathering to Utah of European converts continued, despite anti-Mormon publicity that prompted U.S. officials to ask European governments to stop Mormons from emigrating. That request was not granted.

After a Southern States Mission was organized in 1875, conversions occasionally provoked violence. Missionaries were driven from some communities, and in 1879 a Georgia mob shot and killed Elder Joseph Standing. At Cane Creek, Tennessee, in 1884, a mob murdered two missionaries and two residents who had shown an interest in the Church.

Wanting to see their history told fairly, Church leaders provided extensive information to California-based historian Hubert Howe Bancroft. Bancroft's History of Utah (1889) was one of the first non-LDS scholarly histories to treat the Church in a fair light.

In 1879 the Supreme Court upheld as constitutional the Anti-Bigamy Act of 1862, affirming the illegality of plural marriage (see REYNOLDS v. UNITED STATES). As new legislation was passed and prosecutions became more severe, polygamous husbands and fathers had four choices—give up their families, hide from the law, face prosecution, or leave the United States. Despite this crisis, President Taylor, declaring that when the laws of man and God conflict he would obey God, refused to desert his own plural families or to tell the other brethren to abandon theirs. Attacks on polygamy, often led by religious organizations, came from every direction. When national women's groups urged President Rutherford B. Hayes to prosecute Utah polygamists, 2,000 LDS women signed a resolution affirming that plural marriage was a religious practice protected under the Constitution.

Bitterness between the Saints and the GENTILES brewed nationally and within Utah. Public pressure led Congress to pass the Edmunds Act in 1882, which mandated up to five years' imprisonment and $500 fines for polygamy, and up to six months and $300 fines for unlawful cohabitation (see ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION). Persons practicing polygamy or unlawful cohabitation lost their civil rights to serve on juries, hold public office, and vote. The law created a board of five commissioners to handle voter registration and elections. It declared children born of polygamists before January 1, 1883, legitimate, and it gave the president power to grant amnesties at his discretion.

The Utah Commission began its work in 1882 by declaring that anyone who had ever practiced plural marriage, even before the 1862 anti-bigamy law, could not vote. Since the commission required voters to take a "test oath," swearing that they were not in violation of the law, within one year the law disfranchised more than 12,000 Latter-day Saints. In 1885, however, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that this test oath was unconstitutional.

The judicial crusade against polygamists severely disrupted Church society in Utah, Idaho, and Arizona. Polygamous men and their families suffered greatly, as did the Church as an organization. Otherwise law-abiding husbands and fathers—and some wives and children—became fugitives in a Mormon "underground," frequently moving from place to place to escape federal marshals hunting "cohabers." Saints developed secret hiding places in homes, barns, and fields, codes to warn one another, and spotters to watch for the marshals. Federal "deps" (deputy marshals) adopted disguises as peddlers or census takers and hired their own spotters to question children and neighbors and to invade the privacy of homes. Bounties were offered for every cohab captured. Families suffered, particularly wives left to tend farms while their husbands were in hiding. Wives who refused to testify against their husbands were sent to prison. Men, women, and children suffered long periods of deprivation and fear.

In Utah between 1884 and 1893, 939 Saints went to prison for polygamy-related charges. In Idaho and Arizona the Saints suffered from similarly harsh prosecution. When Arizona prisons became crowded, cohabers were sent to a Detroit penitentiary. One Utahan, Edward M. Dalton, was killed by a pursuing deputy, which embittered the Saints against the government. So did a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that a man who stopped living with his wife but who provided her food and shelter was guilty of cohabitation.

The crusade disrupted normal Church activities significantly. President Taylor avoided arrest by traveling. In the last public sermon he preached, he criticized what he called a judicial outrage, then went into hiding. Several apostles went into exile, taking special missions to remote areas in the West, Mexico, Canada, and Hawaii. Several others filled European missions and missions to Native Americans. Many stake presidents and bishops likewise tried to avoid arrest.

Between 1884 and 1887 general conferences were held in Provo, Logan, and Coalville, rather than in Salt Lake City, to help attenders avoid arrest. Few General Authorities attended. Elder Franklin D. Richards, an apostle who was immune from arrest because his plural wife had died, presided over some of the conferences. General epistles from President Taylor and President Cannon gave guidance to the conferences.

President Taylor directed the Church by letters. For more than two years President Taylor remained "underground," separated from most of his family and friends. He died in hiding in Kaysville, Utah, on July 25, 1887, after serving as a General Authority nearly forty-nine years. By the time of his death, nearly every settlement in Utah had been raided by federal marshals, hundreds of Saints had become refugees in Mexico or Canada, and nearly all the leaders were in hiding. At his funeral in Salt Lake City, he was honored for being a double martyr whose blood was shed in Carthage Jail with Joseph and Hyrum Smith and who then died in exile because of government persecution.

Once again the Council of the Twelve, led by senior apostle Wilford Woodruff, took the helm of the Church and steered the course, largely from the "underground," until they again established a First Presidency at general conference in April 1889. Elder Woodruff became Church President, and George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith were his counselors. This would be the last time that the Twelve delayed reorganizing the First Presidency upon the death of the President. In December 1892, President Woodruff, indicating that prolonged delay was not pleasing to the Lord, instructed senior apostle Lorenzo Snow to reorganize immediately upon his death.

By 1887 national political leaders saw that the Church was not bending to the law, so Congress framed a tougher measure, the Edmunds-Tucker Act, designed to destroy the Church as a political and economic entity in order to force the Saints to abandon plural marriage. The law dissolved the Church as a legal corporation, required the forfeiture of all property in excess of $50,000, dissolved the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company and claimed its property, and disbanded the NAUVOO LEGION (territorial militia). To aid prosecutions, the law required compulsory attendance of witnesses at trials and confirmed the legality of forcing wives to testify against husbands. County probate judges, who helped impanel juries, had to be appointed by the President of the United States. Federally appointed officers took control of schools. Probate courts certified all marriages. The act disinherited all children born of plural marriages one year or more after the act was passed. WOMAN SUFFRAGE was abolished and a new test oath was designed. No one could vote, serve on a jury, or hold public office without signing an oath pledging support of antipolygamy laws.

Federal lawmen zealously tried to arrest and imprison Church leaders. President Woodruff stayed in the underground, near St. George, Utah, directing the Church by letter and private meetings. George Q. Cannon, President Woodruff's first counselor, was arrested in February 1886, posted bail, and then escaped into hiding until 1888 when, with a more lenient judge on the bench, he gave himself up. He served 175 days in prison and paid a $450 fine. Allowed visitors in prison, he was able to conduct much Church and personal business. He supervised the Sunday Schools and finished writing a biography of Joseph Smith. His presence buoyed up the spirits of his fellow cohorts in the prison. Latter-day Saints regarded these prisoners as martyrs and gave them gala receptions when they were released.

Arrests were a problem, but most damaging to the Church were its inability to acquire and use funds to further its work and the loss of political rights. To protect $3 million worth of real and personal property from confiscation, the Church asked prominent members to assume ownership of certain properties as trustees. Nonprofit associations were created to hold property, including the three Utah temples. Ward and stake associations took over local meetinghouses, tithing houses, and Church livestock. Many stakes established ACADEMIES with the use of tithing that was returned to them by the Church.

Federal receivers confiscated about $800,000 worth of property not turned over to private parties or associations, then rented back certain properties to the Church, such as the Temple Block in Salt Lake City. Church leaders tested the constitutionality of the confiscations, but in 1890 the Supreme Court upheld the new law by a 5–4 vote. The economic destruction of the Church seemed certain.

Matching this economic crusade was a political assault. With all women, thousands of LDS men, and all convert-immigrants disfranchised, anti-Mormon politicians won control of the Ogden and Salt Lake City governments. In Idaho practically all Church members were disfranchised by a test oath requiring them to state under oath that they did not believe in or belong to a church that believed in plural marriage. When the Supreme Court in 1890 upheld the Idaho test oath, anti-Mormons pushed the Cullom-Struble Bill in Congress that would disfranchise all Latter-day Saints everywhere (see LEGAL AND JUDICIAL HISTORY).

Economically crippled and with its members denied political rights, the Church faced a ruinous future unless its practice of plural marriage was stopped. President Woodruff consulted with leaders and prayed earnestly to know what to do. After receiving divine revelation, he issued the MANIFESTO on September 24, 1890, announcing an official end to plural marriage. "The Lord showed me by vision and revelation exactly what would take place if we did not stop this practice," President Woodruff later said. "He has told me exactly what to do, and what the result would be if we did not do it" (Deseret Evening News, Nov. 14, 1891). The Manifesto said that the Church had halted the teaching of plural marriage and was not allowing new plural marriages. President Woodruff said he would submit himself to the laws of the land and urged Church members to do the same. At general conference on October 6, 1890, the Church accepted the Manifesto. It was incorporated into the Doctrine and Covenants in 1908.

Speaking for the First Presidency, George Q. Cannon explained that a revelation from 1841 applied in 1890; it had instructed the Church that when "enemies come upon them and hinder them from performing that work, behold, it behooveth me to require that work no more at the hands of those . . . men, but to accept of their offerings" (D&C 124:49). Most Saints accepted the new direction, but not easily and not all. Indeed, a limited number of new plural marriages occurred in the next decade before Church leaders made it clear that all who persisted in the practice faced excommunication.

With the issuance of the Manifesto, hostilities ebbed and the Church entered a new era of cooperation. It was generally understood that husbands would not be required to reject their plural wives and their children, and local prosecutors became very lenient in punishing those charged with polygamy. U.S. President Benjamin Harrison, who in 1891 had visited Utah and shaken hands with President Woodruff, granted a limited amnesty to the Saints in 1893, followed by a general amnesty granted by U.S. President Grover Cleveland in 1894. After the Manifesto and the amnesties, General Authorities resumed their normal administrative duties.

Seeking statehood for Utah, Church leaders instructed Utah Saints to join the national political parties and become Democrats or Republicans. A Republican Congress passed an enabling act in 1894 that Democratic President Grover Cleveland signed. Utah wrote a new constitution that prohibited plural marriage and ensured the separation of church and state. On January 4, 1896, Utah became a state, nearly fifty years after President Brigham Young first sought that status (see UTAH STATEHOOD).

In 1896 General Authorities accepted a “political manifesto” stipulating that none of them would run for elected office without prior approval of their presiding Church authorities. When Elder Moses Thatcher, an apostle, refused to sign the document, he was dropped from the Quorum of the Twelve.

During the 1890s the Church missionary force nearly tripled. In the Pacific region, missionary work penetrated into Samoa in 1888 and Tonga in 1891. In 1898 the Australasian Mission was split into the Australian and the New Zealand missions. Some Hawaiian Saints immigrated to Utah and created a settlement at Iosepa in western Utah. Missionary work was resumed in California in 1892 and in the eastern United States in 1893. Proselytizing continued in Europe, though emigration from there declined by 50 percent in the 1890s compared with the 1880s. By the 1890s the Church, with its base in America secured and most good land in the West occupied, discouraged immigration and asked overseas converts to build up stakes in their homelands rather than gather to Zion.

The Edmunds-Tucker Act strengthened public schools, which excluded religious education. In response, the Church began holding afterschool religion classes in meetinghouses and established ACADEMIES or high schools in larger settlements. Between 1888 and 1891 thirty-one LDS academies were opened in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, Canada, and Mexico.

The 1890s saw Church women extending their reach and demonstrating their political rights. Continuing their affiliation with eastern women’s movements, they became charter members of the National Council of Women and found their eastern associates to be important allies in their fight against disfranchisement. Relief Society–sponsored suffrage activities led to the inclusion of guaranteed woman suffrage in the 1895 Utah State Constitution.

After forty years, construction of the Salt Lake Temple was completed and dedicated in April 1893. Following a brief open house on April 5, the first opportunity for nonmembers to tour a temple, the sacred edifice was dedicated on April 6, forty years after the laying of the cornerstone. The dedicatory services were repeated between April 6 and May 18, and included five sessions reserved for children under the age for baptism; about 75,000 Latter-day Saints attended. Thereafter members of the Church entered the temple only to perform ORDINANCES for the living and the dead. The following year President Woodruff announced by revelation that LDS family groups no longer needed to be sealed to prominent priesthood leaders by adoption (see LAW OF ADOPTION), but that they should be sealed by lineage as far back in time as possible. As a result, members began pursuing GENEALOGY and performed sealing ordinances for ancestors several generations back. The Church created the GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH to assist researchers.

In 1893 the Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir, while on a major tour, sang at the Chicago World’s Fair, winning second prize in an important contest. The entire First Presidency traveled with the choir, marking the first time a Church President had traveled east since the migration to the West nearly fifty years before. This performance was indicative of a new public image for the Church, though that same year the Church was denied representation in the World’s Parliament of Religions, which also met in Chicago.

There were other significant developments under Wilford Woodruff’s direction: in November 1896, the Church’s monthly Fast Day was changed from the first Thursday to the first Sunday of each month, a practice that continues; in 1897, the custom of REBAPTISM was ended. In the same year, Wilford Woodruff, himself a pioneer of 1847, presided over a Churchwide commemoration of the first entrance into the Salt Lake Valley fifty years before. Salt Lake City celebrated with parades, programs, and the unveiling of a Brigham Young Monument.

Laying the capstone of the Salt Lake Temple, April 6, 1892. The temple was dedicated one year later. Photographers: Sainsbury and Johnson.

During the 1890s the Church and Utah joined the American mainstream economically as well as politically. Many cooperative ventures became private, and most Church-controlled businesses were sold or started to compete as income-producing enterprises. But integration into the national economy was not painless. The earlier confiscation of properties and decrease in the payment of tithing caused by the antipolygamy crusade hurt the Church severely, as did the national depression of 1893. Leaders were forced to borrow heavily from eastern financiers to pay debts and meet obligations, and by 1898 the Church's debts exceeded $1,250,000. However, despite debt and a national depression, the Church promoted and invested in such basic industries as beet sugar manufacturing, hydroelectric power, and selected mining and transportation ventures to help expand the economic base of the Great Basin and benefit Latter-day Saint communities (see ECONOMIC HISTORY).

With the ending of plural marriages, the achievement of statehood for Utah, and entrance into the American mainstream in terms of politics and finances, Latter-day Saints moved firmly into a new era. One measure of the change was Church response to the Spanish-American War in 1898:

the First Presidency encouraged LDS young men to support the national effort, thereby demonstrating LDS patriotism and loyalty.

President Wilford Woodruff died on September 2, 1898, in San Francisco, California, at the age of ninety-one. In accordance with his instructions, a new First Presidency was immediately named, with Elder Lorenzo Snow becoming the Church's fifth President.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Alexander, Thomas C. Mormonism in Transition: A History of the Latter-day Saints, 1890–1930. Urbana and Chicago, 1986.
- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom: An Economic History of the Latter-day Saints 1830–1900. Lincoln, Neb., 1966.
- Larson, Gustive O. The "Americanization" of Utah for Statehood. San Marino, Calif., 1971.
- Lyman, Edward Leo. Political Deliverance: The Mormon Quest for Utah Statehood. Urbana and Chicago, 1986.
- Roberts, B. H. A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Century I, Vol. 6. Provo, Utah, 1965 (reprint).

WILLIAM G. HARTLEY
GENE A. SESSIONS

C. 1898–1945, TRANSITIONS: EARLY-TWENTIETH-CENTURY PERIOD

[At the turn of the century the Church's finances suffered from the lingering effects of the federal crusade against Polygamy and the public doubted that its recently declared cessation of Plural Marriage had indeed taken effect. After discussing developments in these two areas, this article looks at the Latter-day Saints' integration into the larger American society, including examining the Church's position on war and peace. It also reviews the efforts to systematize that accompanied the steady growth throughout this period.]

In addition to cross-references found in the text, relevant general articles include Organizational and Administrative History and Economic History. Centennial Observances accompanied the Church's one-hundredth anniversary in 1930. Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith, and Heber J. Grant were Presidents of the Church during this period.]

The Church entered the twentieth century beleaguered and isolated. The LDS experience hitherto had involved founding, exodus to the isolated American West, building there a spiritual and temporal KINGDOM OF GOD, and grappling with an unsympathetic and often hostile larger American community. The year 1898, however, was a watershed. Following the death of President Wilford

WOODRUFF in September, Lorenzo SNOW (1898–1901) succeeded to office and began a series of changes aimed at renewal and redefinition. He, along with his successors President Joseph F. SMITH (1901–1918) and President Heber J. GRANT (1918–1945), reacted to the sweeping changes of the first half of the twentieth century and reached back to preserve old values in a rapidly changing world. The result by the middle of the century was a Church accepted by and integrated into American society, more vigorous and vital than anyone but its most stalwart defenders might have foreseen a half century earlier.

An immediate problem was finances. The antipolygamy crusade (see ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION) had severely impaired revenue and assets, first by incarcerating leaders who normally managed donations and second by seizing and mismanaging Church property. The Panic of 1893 and the resulting depression made the situation worse. In an effort to provide employment and stimulate the local economy, leaders had borrowed money to fund public works and business projects. President Snow quickly ended this practice. His administration slashed expenditures, sold nonessential property, and urged followers to increase their financial contributions.

He dramatically announced this new policy in a southern Utah preaching tour. In May 1899, speaking to assembled members in St. George, he promised that faithful compliance to the Church's longstanding TITHING code would bless members and at the same time free the Church from its debts. A year after President Snow's tithing emphasis, Church income doubled. Leaders also encouraged cash donations instead of in-kind commodities and instituted systematic spending and auditing procedures. Because of these reforms, by 1907 President Smith was able to announce that the Church at last had retired its debt. Annual tithing receipts stood at $1.8 million, in contrast to the Church's 1898 debt of $1.25 million. Moreover, the Church had property worth more than $10 million. The Church never again resorted to deficit spending, not even during the Great Depression.

President Snow's reforms did not preclude the holding of investment property or controlling of businesses by Church officers and directors (see ECONOMIC HISTORY). While some enterprises were divested, such as the Deseret Telegraph, the Utah Light and Railway Company, and the Saltair Resort at the Great Salt Lake, the Church particularly invested in concerns that advanced its social or institutional purposes. It retained the DESERET NEWS, and in the early 1920s leaders established one of the country's first radio stations, later known as KSL RADIO. The SALT LAKE THEATRE, the pioneer playhouse, was returned to the Church to provide sanctioned recreation—only to close at the onset of the Depression because of reduced box office revenues and what Church leaders thought were declining theatrical values.

Drawing on the precedent of the NAUVOO HOUSE, Salt Lake City's Hotel Utah was built to draw tourists from hostile non-Mormon hoteliers and enhance the Church's image. The Beneficial Life Insurance Company provided low-cost insurance. The Utah Sugar Company, transformed into the Utah-Idaho Sugar Company, continued to provide local farmers a market for their most important cash crop, while Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution (ZCMI) and Zion's Savings Bank & Trust attended the public with competitive retailing and banking services. This altruistic investment policy was also pursued on a broader level. Church leaders sat on the board of other corporations important to the region.

These investments and the social concerns they expressed harked back to the pioneer ideals of community concern and uplift. They were not the only remnant of the past. PLURAL MARRIAGE continued to be a troublesome issue for Latter-day Saints and focused national attention on the Church, particularly during the Snow and Smith administrations. Although many members believed that the 1890 MANIFESTO ended plural marriage, others interpreted the pronouncement as simply shifting the responsibility for practicing it from the Church to the individual. As a result, from 1890 to 1904 some plural marriages continued, though on a greatly reduced level. Moreover, while some husbands stopped living with plural wives, most felt a moral and spiritual obligation to continue caring for their families.

This confusion and ambiguity spilled over visibly into politics. In 1898 Elder B. H. Roberts, a member of the FIRST COUNCIL OF SEVENTY and the husband of three wives, was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives. The Salt Lake Ministerial Association and similar organizations elsewhere used Roberts's election to focus on continuing plural marriages, charging the Church with failure to abide by the agreements that had brought UTAH STATEHOOD. Anti-Roberts petitions

In 1898 the Church found itself saddled with large debts earlier incurred to finance water and irrigation projects, sugar beet and salt factories, power plants, railroads and the completion of the Salt Lake Temple. Lorenzo Snow became president of the Church on September 13, 1898, and took immediate steps to remove this financial burden. He emphasized payment of tithing and on December 1, 1898, issued these eleven-year six-percent bonds. Half of the bonds were redeemed within five years and the entire debt was retired in 1907.

containing seven million signatures flooded Congress and the House eventually refused Roberts his seat.

Still more serious was the case of Reed Smoot. The 1903 election of Smoot, a monogamous member of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, to the U.S. Senate once more stirred national uproar. The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections commenced hearings on Smoot in 1904 (see SMOOT HEARINGS), but Congress focused more often on the Church itself. Were church and state truly separate in Utah? Did the Church control the conduct of its members? Did it encourage polygamy and polygamous cohabitation? During the two-year investigation, President Joseph F. Smith and other leaders testified before the committee. Others, such as Matthias F. Cowley and John W. Taylor, suspected of performing plural marriages since the Manifesto, refused. To close the controversy and demonstrate the Church's willingness to make the question a matter of discipline, President Smith announced a "Second Manifesto" that expressly forbade future plural marriages. He also required the resignations of both Cowley and Taylor from the Council of the Twelve. In 1907 the Senate narrowly voted to allow Smoot to retain his seat.

Plural marriage still failed to recede entirely, even in the face of the now resolute policy of President Smith and later President Grant. Elders Cowley and Taylor, for instance, each received further discipline for additional plural marriage activity, the former being "disfellowshipped," while Taylor, after taking an additional plural wife, was excommunicated. Their conduct was similar to that of a growing number of former Mormons in the twentieth century. Styled FUNDAMENTALISTS, they accepted automatic excommunication rather than yield on plural marriage or discard other nineteenth-century practices. Unlike Latter-day Saints generally, who were strengthened by their belief in current prophetic revelation and therefore approached new times in new ways, the Fundamentalists faced the modern world by looking backward.

Nor did the plural marriage issue go away in the popular press. During the first decade of the twentieth century and even beyond, the Church came under severe public scrutiny by muckrakers and political opponents in Utah. Newspapers, magazines, and cinema in both the United States and Europe focused on sensationalized (and often fictionalized) aspects of polygamy, depicted Church leaders as autocrats, and denounced the Church as un-American and un-Christian (see ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS; STEREOTYPING OF MORMONS). Old charges of DANITE atrocities and BLOOD ATONEMENT resurfaced. In Utah the assault was led by two former U.S. Senators, Frank J. Cannon and Thomas Kearns, who used the Salt Lake Tribune to launch bitter attacks on Smoot and the Church and to support the American Party. This short-lived, anti-Mormon political party controlled Salt Lake City government from 1905 to 1911.

The laying of the cornerstone of the Church Offices (now called the Church Administration Building) at 47 East South Temple, Salt Lake City. The building was completed in 1917. Photographer: Albert Wilkes. Courtesy the Utah State Historical Society.

The Church attempted to meet the barrage of abuse even though the tide flowed strongly against it. Early efforts included promoting Saltair Resort and Salt Lake City's TEMPLE SQUARE as visitors centers. With the TABERNACLE ORGAN and MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR as attractions, the latter site by 1905 annually drew 200,000 visitors. Attendance climbed steeply thereafter. When possible, leaders placed refutations in the muckraker publications. Moreover, a point-by-point rebuttal was read during the Church 1911 general conference. Perhaps the ablest and most enduring rejoinder came from B. H. Roberts. From 1909 to 1915, he issued a series of articles on Mormon history in the magazine Americana. These were later updated as Roberts's fair-minded, six-volume COMPREHENSIVE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH.

Increasingly men and women outside the Church also defended the Latter-day Saints. By 1900 C. C. Goodwin, a former editor of the anti-Mormon Salt Lake Tribune and longstanding critic, frankly labeled Mormons as successful, prosperous, and generally likable. Leading sociologist Richard T. Ely praised LDS group life. Morris R. Werner produced a Brigham YOUNG biography devoid of previous stereotypes and hostility. These path-breaking ventures were followed by others. By the late 1920s President Grant conceded that virtually anything the Church might request could be placed in the media. Indeed Time Magazine gave President Grant cover treatment, while Hollywood studios completed such favorable motion pictures as Union Pacific and Brigham Young.

In part the change in public attitude came from the integration of Church members into the larger American society. Nineteenth-century Latter-day Saints expanded their agricultural settlements throughout the mountain West and even into Canada and Mexico (see COLONIZATION), although their agrarian communities were often tightly knit, provincial enclaves. In contrast, as LDS outmigration continued in the twentieth century, Church members now rubbed shoulders with fellow Americans in urban settings. During the 1920s, for instance, the percentage of Latter-day Saints living in the intermountain West declined while those living on the American West Coast rose. In 1923 the Los Angeles Stake, the first modern stake outside the traditional Mormon cultural area, was created. Between 1919 and 1927 the number of Latter-day Saints in California increased from fewer than 2,000 to more than 20,000. The twentieth-century Church dispersion had begun, first with the migration of large numbers to the West Coast, then also with increasing volume to the East and Midwest.

The First Presidency (1934–1945) on the steps of the Church Administration Building (c. 1942). President Heber J. Grant (center), first counselor J. Reuben Clark, Jr. (left), second counselor David O. McKay (right). Courtesy Edward L. Kimball.

Direct contact with neighbors lessened cultural, religious, and even emotional barriers, bringing Mormons and non-Mormons an increased appreciation for each other. The growing number of successful Americans who were also Latter-day Saints or Utah-born accelerated the process. Maud Adams was lionized for her widely popular stage portrayal of Peter Pan. Philo T. Farnsworth's inventions brought about television. Cyrus Dallin and Mahonri Young achieved distinction in the arts.

Latter-day Saints were particularly drawn to public affairs. Edgar B. Brossard became a member and then chairman of the United States Tariff Commission. J. Reuben Clark, Jr., rose in the higher levels of the State Department bureaucracy, finishing his government career as ambassador to Mexico. During the New Deal, Marriner S. Eeclcs was chairman of the Federal Reserve System. James H. Moyle served as assistant secretary of the treasury from 1917 to 1921, while William Spry was commissioner of public lands from 1921 to 1929. Heber M. Wells was the treasurer of the U.S. Shipping Board. Richard W. Young became a U.S. commissioner of the Philippines and returned from the First World War as Utah's first regular army general. For members of a once persecuted religious minority, each such personal success betokened the Church's growing acceptance and prestige. "Outsiders" were becoming "insiders."

Two Church members had disproportionate influence in shaping the Church's new image. One was Reed Smoot. Aloof, but honest and utterly tireless in his devotion to government duty and Church interests, Smoot remained in the Senate for thirty years. As chairman of the powerful Senate Finance Committee, he wielded major influence over American economic policy. More than any other Latter-day Saint in public service, he personified the Church, assuaging questions about its patriotism and integrity by his personality and presence.

The other was President Heber J. Grant. A businessman by inclination and early profession, President Grant's homespun ways and business-mindedness charmed an age given to commercial enterprise. Non-Mormons delighted particularly in his speeches. Concluding an address before the San Francisco Commonwealth Club, he was greeted with cries of "Go on! Go on!" When he addressed the Second Dearborn Conference of Agriculture, Industry, and Science, the "Chemurgicians" twice gave him standing ovations. His public relations ministry included more than delivering speeches. He promoted tours of the Tabernacle Choir. He personally guided nationally prominent business and political leaders through Salt Lake City and cultivated their friendship. He visited U.S. Presidents Warren G. Harding, Calvin Coolidge, Herbert Hoover, and Franklin D. Roosevelt at the White House. While President Grant was respected by his own people, non-Mormons also liked and idealized him.

The Church's sturdy growth during the period reflected its more positive image. Membership more than tripled during the half century; from the years 1900 to 1945 totals grew from 268,331 to 979,454. Prior to 1898 the Church had organized 37 stakes (16 were discontinued); by 1945 another 116 had been added. The Church's missionary force changed and increased accordingly, growing younger, attracting more unmarried individuals, and after 1898, including an increasing number of young women. At the turn of the century, fewer than 900 missionaries were called annually; by 1940 there were 2,117.

Missionary work continued to be a major preoccupation. The most ambitious new mission was Japan, opened in 1901 by missionaries led by Elder Heber J. Grant, then an apostle. Three years later the Mexican mission was reopened. The 1920s saw more than 11,000 German-speaking converts, though most converts came from English-speaking areas: Great Britain, Canada, and the United States, with the Southern States Mission being the most successful. Unfortunately, there as elsewhere, missionaries were subject to acts of physical violence. At the beginning of the century, annual convert baptisms were 3,786; a half century later the total had reached 7,877.

The Church sought to make its proselytizing more effective. Instead of dispatching missionaries without "purse and scrip," most now were financially supported by their families or local congregations. Missionary training classes were organized at Church ACADEMIES and colleges. In the mid-1920s a Salt Lake City "Mission Home" for departing sisters and elders was inaugurated, where missionaries typically received lessons on proper diet, hygiene, etiquette, and especially missionary techniques and Church doctrine for two weeks. The era also produced new proselytizing tracts. Charles W. Penrose wrote a series entitled Rays of Living Light, James Talmage completed the Great Apostasy, and Ben E. Rich authored A Friendly Discussion. To preserve a sense of its heritage and to help tell its story, the Church purchased sites of significance to its early history (see HISTORICAL SITES): the CARTHAGE JAIL in Illinois (1903), where Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum had been killed; a part of the Independence, Missouri, temple site (1904); Joseph Smith's birthplace in Sharon, Vermont (1905–1907); and the Smith homestead in Manchester, New York (1907). At each of these locations, the Church eventually constructed VISITORS CENTERS.

Perhaps more than by expansion, the era was characterized by internal consolidation. Lorenzo Snow's succession to office was symptomatic. For the first time the accession of the senior-tenured apostle to the office of Church president was completed within days instead of the past interregnums of about three years (see SUCCESSION IN THE PRESIDENCY). Recognizing the Church's increasing complexity, President Snow urged General Authorities to devote their full time to their ministry. By 1941 the question no longer was simply leadership efficiency but expansion. "The rapid growth of the Church in recent times, the constantly increasing establishment of new Wards and Stakes . . . [and] the steadily pressing necessity for increasing our missions in numbers and efficiency," the First Presidency noted in 1941, "have built up an apostolic service of the greatest magnitude" (CR [Apr. 1941]:94–95). In response to these new requirements, five men were appointed ASSISTANTS TO THE TWELVE. In contrast to the short-term laity that continued to occupy most Church positions, "general" Church officers—about thirty in number—now received compensation and served full-time, lifelong ministries.

Priesthood governance was also altered. The first half of the century saw a steady decentralizing of decision making as stake and local leaders received enlarged authority. The Church reduced the size of stakes to make them more functional and placed new emphasis on "ward teaching" (see HOME TEACHING). With smaller districts and more boys and men assigned to teaching, the percentage of families receiving monthly visits grew from 20 percent in 1911 to 70 percent a decade later. Finally, in a major departure from pioneer practice, members were urged to take secular disputes to civil and criminal courts rather than to Church tribunals. Once a means of regulating social and economic issues, Church courts now concerned themselves exclusively with Church discipline.

PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS were strengthened. Priesthood meetings were now held weekly, with meeting quality improved by centrally generated lesson materials. President Joseph F. Smith in 1906 outlined a program of progressive priesthood advancement for male youth. Contingent on worthiness, young men received ordination to the office of DEACON at the age of twelve, TEACHER at fifteen, and PRIEST three years later. In turn, worthy men typically received the offices of ELDER and HIGH PRIEST, altering the nineteenth century dominance of the SEVENTY among adult men. In 1910 quorums of high priest and seventy were realigned to coincide with stake boundaries, allowing closer direction by local authorities.

The tendency toward consolidation was also manifest in the Church's AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS. Youth programs, once informal, diverse, and locally administered, increasingly yielded to centrally directed age group programs and unified curricula. The children's PRIMARY Association no longer served older youth, while the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association (YMMIA) and its young women counterpart (YWMIA) included adolescents as young as twelve (see YOUNG MEN; YOUNG WOMEN). At first both the national Boy Scout and Campfire Girl programs were used for younger MIA members (see SCOUTING), but soon the latter was dropped in favor of an indigenous program. Activity programs received increasingly strong emphasis. With SUNDAY SCHOOL and now priesthood quorums providing doctrinal instruction, the MIA increasingly turned to DANCE, DRAMA, MUSIC, and SPORTS. Church headquarters produced a magazine for each auxiliary: The Primary had the CHILDREN'S FRIEND (1902) and the Sunday School the JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR (1900), later known as the INSTRUCTOR (1929). YMMIA had the IMPROVEMENT ERA (1897), YWMIA the YOUNG WOMAN'S JOURNAL (1889); in 1929 the two joined forces and the IMPROVEMENT ERA became the publication for both. Articles, curricula, and programs were periodically reviewed and correlated. For instance, a general Church Correlation Committee and the Social Advisory Committee combined to issue a pivotal and far-reaching report in 1921 (see CORRELATION).

The RELIEF SOCIETY experienced these same trends. Its first three twentieth-century presidents, Zina D. H. YOUNG (1888–1901), Bathsheba W. SMITH (1901–1910), and Emmeline B. WELLS (1910–1921), all remembered the Nauvoo organization. For them women's meetings were to be spontaneous, spiritually active, and locally determined. The new century, however, redefined their vision. In 1901 a few lesson outlines were provisionally provided. Twelve years later, with the recommendation of a Church correlation committee, Relief Society leaders adopted a uniform, prescribed curriculum. They also implemented uniform meeting days (Tuesday), record books, and a monthly message for the VISITING TEACHING women who made monthly home visits. In 1915 an official RELIEF SOCIETY MAGAZINE replaced the semi-independent WOMAN'S EXPONENT, a voice for Relief Society since 1872. While the First Presidency at first endorsed the continuation of female prayer healing—often undertaken in meetings on an impromptu basis—the practice dwindled and by mid-century was abolished. As a further sign of centralization under priesthood leadership, the Relief Society was housed in the Bishop's Building and increasingly received its direction from the PRESIDING BISHOPRIC rather than the FIRST PRESIDENCY. Though Relief Society had once played a role in developing and supervising the Primary and YWMA, their supervision of the children's and youth auxiliaries ended.

The Relief Society's later presidents, Clarissa S. WILLIAMS (1921–1928), Louise Y. ROBISON (1928–1939), and Amy Brown LYMAN (1940–1945), cooperated in these changes. Speaking for modernism and efficiency, they and their advisory boards set aside such past tasks as HOME INDUSTRY, SILK CULTURE, and commission retailing in favor of community outreach; "scientific" or professionally trained social work; campaigns against alcohol, tobacco, and delinquency; and, during the Great Depression, public relief. The latter effort was crucial. "To the extent that Relief Society Organizations in Wards are operating in cooperation with Priesthood Quorums and Bishoprics," declared Elder Harold B. Lee, who led the Church's relief efforts, "just to that extent is there a security [welfare] program in that ward" (Relief Society Magazine 24 [Mar. 1937]:143). These efforts reflected the early-twentieth-century Mormon feminine ideal. Women were to uplift, soften, and assist. While women leaders continued to play an active role in the National and International Council of Women, the rank and file were less active in political, social, and professional roles than in homemaking.

Several doctrinal issues were clarified, another indication of systematization at work. From the early years of the Snow administration, Church authorities discussed how strictly the 1833 health revelation, the WORD OF WISDOM, should be obeyed. In 1921 the question was answered by making abstinence from alcohol, tobacco, tea, and coffee one of the standards for admission to TEMPLES. During the century's first three decades, the health code led most Latter-day Saints to support local, state, and national PROHIBITION.

In 1909 the First Presidency issued a statement designed to clarify the Church position on EVOLUTION. While the method of CREATION was not discussed, the declaration held that "Adam was the first man and that he was created in the image of God." The issue remained troublesome, however. Along with the question of higher biblical criticism, it led to the resignation of three Brigham Young University professors in 1911 and to extended private discussion among Church leaders two decades later.

In 1916 the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve issued a second important doctrinal exposition entitled "The Father and the Son." Apparently occasioned by anti-Mormon pamphleteering charging the Church leaders with conferring divinity on ADAM, the statement delineated the respective roles of the first two members of the GODHEAD. Shortly before his death, Joseph F. Smith received a vision of missionary work and spiritual existence in the afterlife, which was eventually included as Section 138 in the Doctrine and Covenants. In addition to specific matters, general LDS doctrine and history received systematic treatment, often for the first time, by such works as President Smith's Gospel Doctrine, Elder James E. Talmage's Articles of Faith and Jesus the Christ, and Elder B. H. Roberts's three-volume New Witnesses for God.

With its membership still predominantly American, the Church was especially affected by the events occurring in the United States during this period. Almost from the outset, President Grant's administration was beset with hard times. Farming and mining, two of Utah's main industries, slumped badly in the 1920s and especially in the 1930s during the Great Depression. President Grant carefully conserved Church finances, trimming expenditures and construction projects.

Using his contacts with national business and political leaders, he kept key Utah and Church-owned enterprises afloat. He was also concerned for the individual Saint. After careful preparation, he announced in 1936 the Church Welfare Program (see WELFARE SERVICES), which sought self-sufficiency and sustenance for the needy by simultaneously providing both work and needed commodities.

Despite difficult times, the Church maintained its primary functions. Just prior to the economic downturn, it completed an imposing five-story building in Salt Lake City. Temples were completed in Hawaii (1919); Cardston, Alberta, Canada (1923); and Mesa, Arizona (1927). Education also received attention. Between 1875 and 1911, the Church established thirty-four all-purpose ACADEMIES. However, as the century progressed, financial distress and the rising acceptance of public education brought changes, and many of the academies were closed or transferred to state control (see also EDUCATION). The Church, however, did not entirely surrender its educative role. A released-time seminary program for high school students began in 1912 (see SEMINARIES), and during the 1920s, INSTITUTES OF RELIGION for college students were established, the first at the University of Idaho.

Twentieth-century wars and warfare demonstrated the distance the Church had traveled from nineteenth-century alienation and isolation. Latter-day Saints supported the Spanish-American War effort and U.S. involvement in the two twentieth-century world wars. In the former the First Presidency issued a statement affirming the loyalty of the Latter-day Saints and telegraphed local leaders to encourage enlistment. Utah became one of the first states to fill its initial quota. Involvement in World War I was even more substantial. At first uncertain of its proper role, the Church eventually helped Utahans oversubscribe the government's financial quota for the state. By September 1918 Utah had more than 18,000 men under arms, almost half of them volunteers. Participation in the Second World War was more dutiful, perhaps because of the private misgivings of President Grant and his Counselor J. Reuben Clark over New Deal policymaking. Nevertheless, by April 1942, 6 percent of the total Church population served in the American forces or in defense-related industries; others served for Canada, Britain, and Germany.

The Quorum of the Twelve Apostles (1941–1943) on the steps of the Church Administration Building. Right to left: Rudger Clawson, [George Albert Smith—not present], George F. Richards, Joseph Fielding Smith, Stephen L. Richards, Richard R. Lyman, John A. Widtsoe, Joseph F. Merrill, Charles A. Callis, Albert E. Bowen, Sylvester Q. Cannon, Harold B. Lee.

While each conflict saw some pacifist currents and even opposition, the general tendency was supportive of the need to yield loyalty to constituted government. "The Church is and must be against war," the First Presidency declared in April 1942. Yet when "constitutional law . . . calls the manhood of the Church into the armed service of any country to which they owe allegiance, their highest civic duty requires that they heed that call" (CR, pp. 88–97; see WAR AND PEACE).

While documenting religiosity is difficult, statistics suggest the impact of the Church on the everyday life of its people. Meeting attendance showed sturdy growth throughout the era. In 1920 weekly average attendance at sacrament meeting was 16 percent; in 1930, 19 percent; in 1940, 23 percent; and 1950, 25 percent. Suggestive of Church family ideals, LDS birthrates exceeded the national average, as did marriage rates. No doubt the Church health code is reflected in the fact that in 1945 the LDS death rate was about half the national average.

A closer view of statistics reveals that in the decades of the early twentieth century the number of children born per LDS family declined, the age at time of marriage increased, and divorce ratios often mirrored national trends—lingering behind but moving in the same direction as national trends, as if assimilation were simply incomplete (see VITAL STATISTICS).

The half-century brought social, cultural, and political integration; growth and consolidation; and programs that redefined and reapplied earlier Church ideals. But the era also produced indications that Church members were not immune to such broad currents as secularism and even materialism. For observers, at mid-century basic questions remained: Could the Church preserve its traditional values and energy? Or would its journey into the modern world cost the movement its identity and mission?

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For general surveys of the period:

Alexander, Thomas G. Mormonism in Transition: A History of the Latter-day Saints, 1890–1930. Urbana, Ill., 1986.

Allen, James B., and Glen M. Leonard. The Story of the Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1976.

Arrington, Leonard J., and Davis Bitton. The Mormon Experience. New York, 1979.

Church Education System. Church History in the Fulness of Times. Salt Lake City, 1989.

Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.

Roberts, B. H. A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1930.

For LDS programs, policies, and teachings during the period:

Alexander, Thomas G. "Between Revivalism and the Social Gospel: The Latter-day Saints Social Advisory Committee, 1916–1922." BYU Studies 23 (Winter 1983):19–39.

—. "The Reconstruction of Mormon Doctrine: From Joseph Smith to Progressive Theology." Sunstone 5 (July–Aug. 1980):24–33.

—. "'To Maintain Harmony': Adjusting to External and Internal Stress, 1890–1930." Dialogue 15 (Winter 1982):44–58.

Hartley, William C. "The Priesthood Reform Movement, 1908–1922." BYU Studies 13 (Winter 1973):137–56.

Hefner, Loretta L. "This Decade Was Different: Relief Society's Social Services Department, 1919–1929." Dialogue 15 (Autumn 1982):64–73.

RONALD W. WALKER

RICHARD W. SADLER

C. 1945–1990, POST–WORLD WAR II INTERNATIONAL ERA PERIOD

[Since World War II, the Church has enjoyed—and had to cope with—rapid international growth. After summarizing postwar revitalization and the attendant increases in membership, the article focuses on the adaptations that accompanied growth and internationalization. In surveying recent developments, it provides an introduction to the contemporary Church.

For additional information about Church growth during this period, see Vital Statistics and articles about the Church in Africa; Asia, East; Asia, South and Southeast; Australia; British Isles; Canada; Europe; Hawaii; Mexico and Central America; Middle East; New Zealand; Oceania; Scandinavia; South America: Brazil; South America: North; South America: South; and West Indies. For developments in organization and procedure, see Organization: Organizational and Administrative History; Organization: Contemporary. Consult also the biographies of those who served as Church President in this period: George Albert Smith (1945–1951); David O. McKay (1951–1970); Joseph Fielding Smith (1970–1972); Harold B. Lee (1972–1973); Spencer W. Kimball (1973–1985); and Ezra Taft Benson (1985–).]

Throughout his life and ministry, President George Albert Smith's prevailing message was one of love. It was fitting, therefore, that it was during his administration that goods were sent from America to Europe to help relieve the suffering of the Saints following World War II, especially those in Germany who had been devastated by war. In 1946 Ezra Taft BENSON, of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, directed the reopening of the European Mission and the Church's relief efforts there. He found branches disorganized, meeting-houses destroyed, and many members without homes. Most had lost possessions and everywhere there was pressing need for food and clothing. The Church's welfare services became a significant factor in the recovery of many Saints as well as some nonmembers.

Since the war had postponed everything from missionary work to building construction, it was necessary to reestablish and revitalize Church programs everywhere. The missionary force was rapidly rebuilt and hundreds of meetinghouses were constructed. Half of all the chapels in use in the mid-1950s were erected in the years following World War II, a period when more than half of all Church expenditures went for building projects.

BECOMING AN INTERNATIONAL CHURCH. The close of World War II marked the dawn of a new era in Church history in which a dominant theme was international growth. In 1947 Church membership reached one million, and by 1990 the total was over seven million. Growth was especially strong along America's West Coast, in Latin America, and, after 1978, in Africa. In 1950 the Church had 180 organized stakes, nearly half of them in Utah; in 1990 there were 1,700 stakes, with less than one-fourth in Utah. In 1950 the Church was organized in fewer than 50 nations or territories, but by 1990 it had expanded to 128. Less than 8 percent of the Church lived outside the United States and Canada in 1950, but forty years later this was approximately 35 percent. During the same period the number of missionaries grew from 6,000 to 40,000 and the number of TEMPLES increased from eight, only one of which was outside the United States, to forty-four, with twenty-three outside the United States.

This remarkable growth resulted from renewed efforts to fulfill the revelation given to Joseph Smith "that the kingdom . . . may become a great mountain and fill the whole earth" (D&C 109:72). Early in his administration President David O. MCKAY, the first to travel so extensively as Church President, toured missions in Europe, Latin America, Africa, and the South Pacific, dedicating two temple sites in Europe and announcing that a temple would be built in New Zealand. In 1955 he declared that the Church must "put forth every effort within reason and practicability to place within reach of Church members in these distant missions every educational and spiritual privilege that the Church has to offer" (CR [Apr. 1955]:25). Building temples, increasing the number of missions, organizing stakes worldwide, persuading the Saints to build up Zion in their homelands rather than emigrate to America, and eventually putting Church leadership into the hands of each country's native people were all significant steps toward fulfilling that goal. In addition, increasing emphasis was placed on calling local missionaries who, in some areas, later essentially replaced American missionaries.

Growth did not come without its problems, however, not the least of which was sorting out which practices, teachings, and programs really constituted the essence of the gospel and which were reflections of the American culture in which the Church had grown. To open the eyes of members—particularly Americans—to the need for defining the gospel in terms of universal principles, Church leaders spoke out with increasing frequency. In 1971, for example, Elder Bruce R. McConkie reminded some American Saints that in New Testament times even the apostles were so indoctrinated with the idea that the plan of salvation was limited to a particular people that they found it difficult to take it to gentile nations, and he applied the lesson to the modern Church. He called upon American Saints to rise above their biases, though there would be "some struggles and some difficulties, some prejudices, and some uncertainties along the way." Other peoples, he noted, "have a different background than we have, which is of no moment to the Lord. . . . It is no different to have different social customs than it is to have different languages. . . . And the Lord knows all languages" (Palmer, pp. 143, 147). In 1987 Elder Boyd K. Packer reminded a group of Church leaders that "We can't move [into various countries] with a 1947 Utah Church! Could it be that we are not prepared to take the gospel because we are not prepared to take (and they are not prepared to receive) all of the things we have wrapped up with it as extra baggage?" (as quoted in Dialogue 21 [Fall 1988]:97). The goal was to ennoble

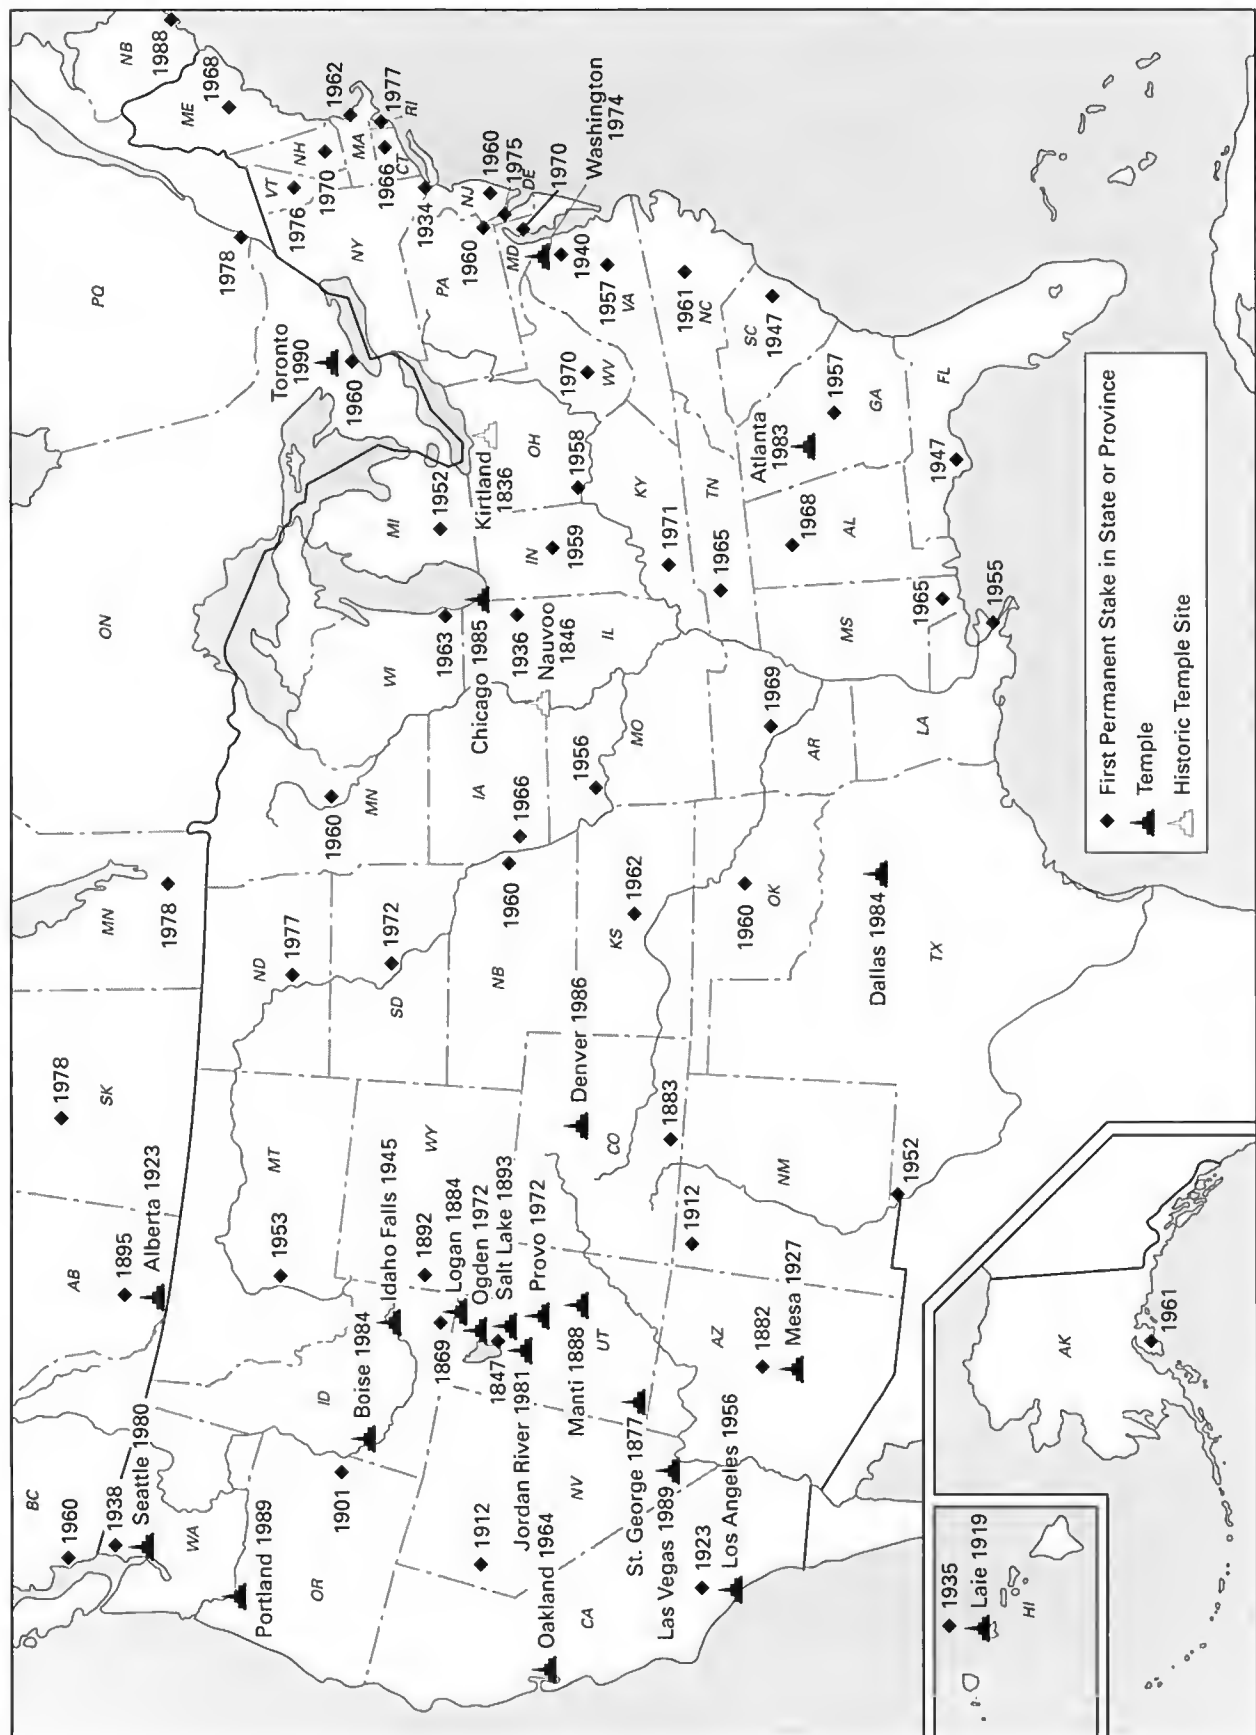

BYU Geography Department

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the United States and Canada. Areas and membership as of January 1, 1991.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the United States and Canada. First stake in each state or province, and temples with dedication date as of January 1, 1991.

Elder Spencer W. Kimball puts his arms around President Harold B. Lee during a break at the Munich Area Conference, August 1973, four months before Lee died and Kimball became President. Courtesy Edward L. Kimball.

people of diverse cultures and perspectives to more fully find true brotherhood and sisterhood within the common spiritual bounds of the Church.

In 1974 President Spencer W. KIMBALL challenged members to “lengthen our stride” in carrying the gospel to all the earth, and urged them to pray that barriers might be removed. He appointed David M. Kennedy, former U.S. secretary of the treasury and ambassador-at-large, as the Church’s international representative to work with governments in resolving problems that had hindered the Church’s activities. In 1977 the Church was legally recognized in Poland, and in 1985 a temple was dedicated in the German Democratic Republic. The dramatic political revolutions of 1989–1990 opened other eastern bloc countries and led to the beginnings of LDS missionary work in the Soviet Union.

One of the far-reaching changes in the twentieth century was the revelation received by President Spencer W. Kimball in June 1978 extending priesthood blessings to all worthy male members. The result of long and earnest prayer, the revelation meant that “the long-promised day has come when every faithful, worthy man in the Church may receive the holy priesthood . . . without regard for race or color” (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: DECLARATION—2). Without delay, worthy BLACKS were sealed in temples and many received assignments as missionaries and leaders. In Ghana and Nigeria, where blacks had been pleading for the establishment of the Church for years, the Church grew rapidly, but it also expanded in other areas with large black populations. The first black General Authority, Elder Helvéio Martins of Brazil, was sustained at the general conference of the Church in April 1990.

ADMINISTRATIVE CHANGES. Numerous administrative changes also reflected the demands of Church growth. In 1967 stakes were organized into REGIONS. Beginning in 1975, several regions were organized into AREAS, and by 1984 area presidencies, each consisting of three General Authorities, were assigned responsibility for stakes throughout the world.

In 1975 President Kimball announced the organization of the First Quorum of the SEVENTY, members of which were General Authorities of the Church and included the former ASSISTANTS TO THE TWELVE. In 1989 the Second Quorum of the Seventy was organized; these General Authorities serve for terms of three or five years. In 1978 the practice was begun of placing members of the Seventy on emeritus status for reasons of health or age, and the following year the PATRIARCH TO THE CHURCH also became an emeritus.

General Authorities also took steps to more effectively coordinate Church programs and, beginning in 1961, placed greater emphasis on “priesthood correlation” (see PRIESTHOOD; CORRELATION OF THE CHURCH). Under the chairmanship of Elder Harold B. Lee, committees at Church headquarters planned, prepared, and reviewed curricula and activities for all organizations or age groups. They defined more carefully the unique roles of each organization and eliminated unnecessary duplication. Leaders focused on the home as the most effective place for teaching and applying gospel principles. FAMILY HOME

The Salt Lake Temple, the twenty-eight-story Church Office Building, and former Hotel Utah Building (being renovated into Church offices, a chapel, and other facilities), c. 1989.

EVENING received renewed emphasis, and beginning in 1965 attractive manuals providing lesson helps were issued.

In the early 1970s there was also a consolidation of administrative responsibilities at Church headquarters. Agencies were grouped into several large departments, each under the jurisdiction of one or more General Authorities, with full-time professionals generally managing day-to-day operations. For example, the welfare, social services, and health programs were consolidated into a WELFARE SERVICES Department. A tangible symbol of this consolidation was the new twenty-eight-story Church office building in Salt Lake City, bringing most Church administrative units together. In 1970, functions of Aaronic Priesthood and the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association were combined (see YOUNG MEN). In 1971 the publishing program was consolidated (see MAGAZINES). Magazines in other languages than English were unified in 1967, with standardized content except for local matters (see INTERNATIONAL MAGAZINES).

Other changes came as rapid international growth increased the travel and administrative load of Church leaders. In the 1970s STAKE PRESIDENTS were authorized to "set apart" full-time missionaries (see SETTING APART), ordain BISHOPS and PATRIARCHS, and dedicate chapels. General Authorities met in conference with individual stakes less frequently but, beginning in 1971, the Church began holding "area conferences," where a delegation of General Authorities met with the Saints gathered from geographic regions. In 1979 the number of stake conferences each year was reduced from four to two, and in the 1980s regional or multiregional conferences replaced area conferences (see CONFERENCES).

CHURCH EDUCATION. Between 1950 and 1990 total enrollment in the Church's educational programs increased from 38,400 to 442,500 (see CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM). Full-time enrollment at BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY soared from 5,400 in 1950 to nearly 25,000 by 1975, leading to an enrollment ceiling. Rather than devoting ever larger amounts to higher education, funds increasingly went to meet more basic needs associated with worldwide growth. The major expansion in enrollment came in the area of religious education. Since the early twentieth century, students in predominantly LDS communities had attended “released time” SEMINARY classes adjacent to their secondary schools. Beginning in California in the 1950s, “early morning” seminaries convened in church buildings near public secondary schools. After 1968, in areas where members were even more scattered, young people received “home study” seminary materials. The Church also increased the number of INSTITUTES of religion placed adjacent to college and university campuses. By 1990 seminary or institute programs were conducted in seventy-four nations or territories.

The Church also gave special attention to the religious life of college students. In 1956 the first student stake, with twelve wards, was organized on the Brigham Young University campus. This provided Church services that ministered directly to student needs and offered expanded opportunities for leadership. The plan spread to other areas where there were enough students to justify it. Subjective evidence suggested greater spiritual growth; and in such statistically measurable matters as temple marriage and attendance at meetings, student wards led the Church.

In some areas of the Pacific and Latin America, areas of particularly rapid Church growth where public education was not widely available, the Church returned to its earlier practice of establishing schools for religious instruction and to teach educational basics. It established forty elementary and secondary schools in Mexico, and established a junior college on the outskirts of Mexico City. As better public educational facilities developed, the Church closed many schools.

BUILDING PROGRAM. New congregations required new buildings. Even with two or three wards sharing most buildings, the Church found it necessary to complete more than one new MEETINGHOUSE every day. Potential costs were enormous, and in many areas the local Saints could not afford to raise their share.

One solution emerged when the Church encountered a labor shortage while erecting school buildings in the South Pacific. Beginning in 1950, it called young men as “building missionaries” to donate their labor for two years. As they completed buildings at a much lower cost, experienced builders taught them construction skills; labor missionaries also learned marketable skills from experienced builders. In the 1950s and 1960s building missionaries erected schools and chapels in the South Pacific, Latin America, Europe, and elsewhere. Later, in an effort to minimize construction and maintenance costs, the building department developed a series of standardized plans that could be adapted to different locations and expanded as needed.

Though general Church funds assisted with meetinghouses, local congregations were expected to contribute not only labor but also a significant portion of the money needed—in addition to paying regular tithes and offerings. With a view toward easing the financial burden on local congregations, the share borne by local Saints gradually diminished until, by 1989, local contribution was no longer required.

By the 1980s, new meetinghouses were generally smaller and sometimes more austere than earlier ones, but this approach allowed the Church to erect hundreds of chapels annually, and especially to provide badly needed meeting places in developing areas. It was also a move towards equality. Money that might have gone to build more expensive buildings in affluent areas instead provided comfortable places for worship throughout the Church.

TECHNOLOGY AND THE MODERN CHURCH. The Church actively seeks to harness the astonishing developments in modern technology to enhance its administrative capabilities and to aid in delivering its spiritual message. Since the Church installed its first computer in the Financial Department in 1962, it has made use of this technology in myriad ways, including in architectural design, a computerized membership record system, automated accounting, processing missionary papers, record keeping at both the general and local level, and in providing resources for historical and genealogical research.

Perhaps no Church activity has felt the impact of modern technology more than genealogical work. As Church membership grew, so did the need for more effective means of gathering and processing names for temple work. The Genealogical Department (now the Family History Department) microfilmed vital records from around the world, making them available in its library in Salt Lake City (see FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY) and in hundreds of FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS throughout the world. In the 1960s, the Genealogical Department also began using the computer to organize names obtained from these records. Since 1978, designated Church members have been devoting four or more hours of weekly service “extracting” information from microfilms for the sake of temple work. The Family History Department also produced PERSONAL ANCESTRAL FILE, a widely used computerized genealogical program, and began making key genealogical data available on laser disks.

Technology touched the temple in other ways. Motion picture and video technology allowed temple instructions to be presented more efficiently and more effectively. Because this could be done in one room instead of the former series of four rooms, temples could be built smaller and thus were less expensive to construct, making it possible for more members throughout the world to have a temple nearby. The new technology also made it possible to present the ORDINANCES in several languages simultaneously, if necessary.

The effect of television on Church communications and the Church public image was also dramatic. General conferences of the Church were first broadcast on KSL Television in Salt Lake City in 1949, and by the mid-1960s one or more session of each conference were being televised coast-to-coast in the United States. In the 1980s the Church developed a SATELLITE COMMUNICATION SYSTEM connected to stake centers throughout the world so that Latter-day Saints could view both conference and other Church-initiated programs.

MISSIONARY WORK. By 1990 over two-thirds of the Church’s annual growth came from convert baptisms. Approximately 30,000 of more than 40,000 full-time missionaries were young men ages nineteen to twenty-one; single women twenty-one years of age or older and couples who had reached retirement age made up most of the remainder.

Considerable attention was given to improving proselytizing techniques and abilities. After much experimentation, a systematic plan based on a series of regularized lesson discussions was officially adopted in the 1950s. After considerable refinement and modification, by 1990 the plan focused less on memorization on the part of the missionaries and more on their ability to rely on the Spirit in the presentation of outlined subject matter.

Missionaries were also given more effective training, especially in languages. In 1963 a Language Training Mission, later known as MISSIONARY TRAINING CENTER, was established near Brigham Young University, and five years later a similar program opened near the Church College of Hawaii (see BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY: HAWAII CAMPUS). By 1990 missionaries were receiving intensive language and missionary training in fourteen missionary training centers around the world, though about 75 percent were attending the Provo center.

Innovations in the missionary program included encouraging more nonproselytizing activities and Christian service. In 1971, for instance, “health missionaries” began teaching the basics of nutrition, sanitation, and disease prevention, especially in developing countries. By 1990 all missionaries were urged to spend two to four hours a week in community service, in addition to proselytizing. Also, older missionary couples were often assigned to nonproselytizing Church service, including health and welfare work, leadership training, staffing VISITORS CENTERS and doing other public relations activities, assisting patrons in the Church’s various family history centers, temple service missions, and teaching missions.

PUBLIC ISSUES AND SOCIAL CONCERNS. Though the Church attempted to distance itself from direct political involvement, Church leaders nevertheless from time to time declared official positions on moral issues. The First Presidency publicly lamented the growing flood of PORNOGRAPHY, the widespread practice of BIRTH CONTROL, and ABORTION, and the general decline in moral standards, including the rising number of DIVORCES and the increased prominence of HOMOSEXUALITY. In 1968 the Church became directly involved in Utah’s political process by openly opposing liquor-by-the-drink. It has also made public pronouncements in favor of Sunday closing laws and state right-to-work laws and against state lotteries (see GAMBLING).

Amid the intense civil rights conflict that characterized the United States in the 1960s the First Presidency openly called for “full civil equality for all of God’s children,” and specifically urged Latter-day Saints to work for civil rights for blacks.

In the 1970s, as the controversy in America over women's rights escalated, the First Presidency took a public stance in favor of full equality before the law for women but, at the same time, publicly opposed the Equal Rights Amendment as anti-family. The First Presidency was also deeply concerned with the morality of the nuclear arms race and officially denounced it in 1980 and again in 1981 (see WAR AND PEACE).

In contrast to the early twentieth century when most Latter-day Saints lived in predominantly rural settings, since mid-century, most have lived in urban centers. The hectic lifestyle in large cities created added emotional strains, and an array of attractions and temptations tended to pull family members in different directions. Responding to these and other needs, the Church instituted a series of social programs. Since 1919 the Relief Society had operated an adoption agency and provided foster homes for disadvantaged children. This was expanded. The INDIAN STUDENT PLACEMENT SERVICES, begun in the 1950s under the chairmanship of Elder Spencer W. Kimball, extended to thousands of NATIVE AMERICAN children the advantages of attending good schools while living in wholesome LDS family environments. A "youth guidance" program provided counseling to families in need. These three programs, required by law to employ licensed professional social workers, were combined in 1969 to form the Church's SOCIAL SERVICES Department. This department also sponsored youth day camps, programs for members in prison, and counseling for alcohol or drug abusers.

Church leaders also began to show more concern for the special needs of unmarried men and women. Whether divorced, widowed, or simply never married, their social and spiritual needs were often not being met through traditional Church activity oriented toward couples and families. In the 1970s special programs for young single adults as well as older singles were created under the auspices of the priesthood and Relief Society. Through self-directed councils at the ward, stake, and regional level, they participated in dances and other cultural activities and found broader opportunities to become acquainted with other members their own age who shared common interests. In addition, wards for young singles were organized, first in the Emigration Stake in Salt Lake City, and then in other areas.

RETURN TO BASICS. One of President Ezra Taft Benson's clarion calls to the Saints in the 1980s was to return to traditional values. In particular, he urged regular study of the Book of Mormon as a means to strengthen faith in Christ and to receive guidance in meeting contemporary challenges. His call, however, was only one manifestation of the efforts of modern Church leaders to respond to the ever-deepening challenges of the world and to lead the Saints in a return to basics.

In 1972 the adult Gospel Doctrine class in Sunday School began a systematic study of the STANDARD WORKS. The scriptures were the only texts, and they were to be studied in an eight-year (later four-year) rotation. Soon all Church curricula were tied to the scriptures. To support the curriculum and encourage individual scripture study, Church leaders supervised the publication of new editions of the standard works, each cross-referenced to the others. The Church publication of the King James Version of the Bible, in 1979, contained an important 800-page appendix that included a BIBLE DICTIONARY, a TOPICAL GUIDE to all the scriptures, maps, and extracts from the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE. In 1981 new editions of the other standard works appeared, including additional study helps.

The "return to basics" theme was echoed also in many other changes in Church policies and programs. In 1980 the Church meeting schedule was consolidated into a single three-hour block on Sundays, replacing the traditional schedule of priesthood meeting and SUNDAY SCHOOL in the morning, SACRAMENT MEETING in the late afternoon or evening, and auxiliary meetings during the week (see MEETINGS, MAJOR CHURCH). The move simplified transportation challenges for many members, but Church leaders emphasized that the central objective was to allow more time for families to study the scriptures or engage in other appropriate Sabbath activities together.

Beginning in 1990 in the United States and Canada and extended to other parts of the world in 1991, ward and stake budget donations were no longer required from members; all operating expenses of local units would be paid from tithes and offerings. The uniform system promoted greater equality, cutting many local operating budgets while increasing others (see FINANCES OF THE CHURCH; FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS). In explaining the new policy, Elder Boyd K. Packer of the Council of the Twelve called it an inspired “course correction,” part of an overall effort to get back to basics (Ensign 10 [May 1990]:89–91). The metaphor could well be applied to much of what had happened since 1945.

Church members have generally accepted changes well, and have seen in them an opportunity for further spiritual growth. As a result, in 1990 the Church was moving more rapidly than ever before toward being able to accommodate diverse nationalities, language groups, and cultures. Church leaders continued to emphasize the traditional doctrines, but general conference addresses increasingly tended also to define Sainthood in terms of what Elder M. Russell Ballard characterized in April 1990, as the “small and simple things”: love, service, home, family, and worship of the Savior (Ensign 10 [May 1990]:6–8). These are among the universals that constitute the essence of what it means to be a Latter-day Saint.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Much has been written about this period in professional journals. A few broad treatments are mentioned in the introduction to this history section. See also Speneer J. Palmer, The Expanding Church (Salt Lake City, 1978). For additional information, consult the bibliographies accompanying the biographies of Church Presidents who served during this period: George Albert Smith, David O. McKay, Joseph Fielding Smith, Harold B. Lee, Speneer W. Kimball, and Ezra Taft Benson.

JAMES B. ALLEN
RICHARD O. COWAN

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH (HISTORY OF JOSEPH SMITH)

The seven-volume history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints titled History of the Church covers less than two decades and might better be titled “The History of Joseph Smith.” It is the official history of the Church’s founding generation, still in print and still widely used. The motivation for compiling this early history was fourfold: (1) to obey a commandment of the Lord (D&C 21:1); (2) to preserve a record of the Church for later generations (see RECORD KEEPING); (3) to combat and correct ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS; and (4) to provide a written record as a protection against false accusations and lawsuits (see SMITH, JOSEPH: TRIALS OF JOSEPH SMITH).

Although the responsibility for keeping a history of the Church was delegated to the Church recorder and historian, Joseph Smith was the prime motivator. He selected able men, gave them regular encouragement and instruction, and provided space for them in his home or store. Because of his lack of formal education, Joseph Smith depended on others to do most of the actual writing of both the sources and the completed history. More than two dozen scribes and writers are known to have assisted him.

After several early attempts, Joseph Smith and his clerk, James Mulholland, began this history at Commerce, Illinois, on June 10, 1839 (HC 3:375–77). Originally titled “The History of Joseph Smith,” it began with a first-person account of Joseph Smith’s early visions (see VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH), which had been written in the spring of 1838 (HC 3:25–26). Although little of the subsequent history was dictated or written by the Prophet himself, writers used his diaries where available and retained the first-person narrative style throughout.

A series of scribes, clerks, and Church historians labored sporadically on the history for nearly twenty years, through difficult periods of persecution, pioneer travel, and western colonization. Written as annals rather than narrative history, the manuscript version fills six large journals called the “Manuscript History of the Church.” Willard Richards, appointed as Joseph Smith’s “private Sect. & Historian” on December 21, 1842, compiled most of the history—over half after the death of Joseph Smith on June 27, 1844. With the assistance of his adopted son and clerk, Thomas Bullock, Richards completed the narrative to March 1, 1843, before his own death in 1854. It was left to George A. Smith, his successor as Church Historian, to compile the history of the MARTYRDOM OF JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH, expand notes of the Prophet’s sermons, and continue the narrative into August 1844, when Brigham YOUNG was sustained to lead the Church.

The Church published this history serially in its periodicals, first in the TIMES AND SEASONS at Nauvoo and then in Salt Lake City’s DESERET NEWS from 1852 to 1857. The seven-volume version published by the Church today is a product of the editing of B. H. Roberts of the Seventy, who worked intermittently on the project from 1902 to 1932. Because it quotes extensively from letters,

Council of the Twelve called it an inspired “course correction,” part of an overall effort to get back to basics (Ensign 10 [May 1990]:89–91). The metaphor could well be applied to much of what had happened since 1945.

Church members have generally accepted changes well, and have seen in them an opportunity for further spiritual growth. As a result, in 1990 the Church was moving more rapidly than ever before toward being able to accommodate diverse nationalities, language groups, and cultures. Church leaders continued to emphasize the traditional doctrines, but general conference addresses increasingly tended also to define Sainthood in terms of what Elder M. Russell Ballard characterized in April 1990, as the “small and simple things”: love, service, home, family, and worship of the Savior (Ensign 10 [May 1990]:6–8). These are among the universals that constitute the essence of what it means to be a Latter-day Saint.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Much has been written about this period in professional journals. A few broad treatments are mentioned in the introduction to this history section. See also Speneer J. Palmer, The Expanding Church (Salt Lake City, 1978). For additional information, consult the bibliographies accompanying the biographies of Church Presidents who served during this period: George Albert Smith, David O. McKay, Joseph Fielding Smith, Harold B. Lee, Speneer W. Kimball, and Ezra Taft Benson.

JAMES B. ALLEN
RICHARD O. COWAN

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH (HISTORY OF JOSEPH SMITH)

The seven-volume history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints titled History of the Church covers less than two decades and might better be titled “The History of Joseph Smith.” It is the official history of the Church’s founding generation, still in print and still widely used. The motivation for compiling this early history was fourfold: (1) to obey a commandment of the Lord (D&C 21:1); (2) to preserve a record of the Church for later generations (see RECORD KEEPING); (3) to combat and correct ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS; and (4) to provide a written record as a protection against false accusations and lawsuits (see SMITH, JOSEPH: TRIALS OF JOSEPH SMITH).

Although the responsibility for keeping a history of the Church was delegated to the Church recorder and historian, Joseph Smith was the prime motivator. He selected able men, gave them regular encouragement and instruction, and provided space for them in his home or store. Because of his lack of formal education, Joseph Smith depended on others to do most of the actual writing of both the sources and the completed history. More than two dozen scribes and writers are known to have assisted him.

After several early attempts, Joseph Smith and his clerk, James Mulholland, began this history at Commerce, Illinois, on June 10, 1839 (HC 3:375–77). Originally titled “The History of Joseph Smith,” it began with a first-person account of Joseph Smith’s early visions (see VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH), which had been written in the spring of 1838 (HC 3:25–26). Although little of the subsequent history was dictated or written by the Prophet himself, writers used his diaries where available and retained the first-person narrative style throughout.

A series of scribes, clerks, and Church historians labored sporadically on the history for nearly twenty years, through difficult periods of persecution, pioneer travel, and western colonization. Written as annals rather than narrative history, the manuscript version fills six large journals called the “Manuscript History of the Church.” Willard Richards, appointed as Joseph Smith’s “private Sect. & Historian” on December 21, 1842, compiled most of the history—over half after the death of Joseph Smith on June 27, 1844. With the assistance of his adopted son and clerk, Thomas Bullock, Richards completed the narrative to March 1, 1843, before his own death in 1854. It was left to George A. Smith, his successor as Church Historian, to compile the history of the MARTYRDOM OF JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH, expand notes of the Prophet’s sermons, and continue the narrative into August 1844, when Brigham YOUNG was sustained to lead the Church.

The Church published this history serially in its periodicals, first in the TIMES AND SEASONS at Nauvoo and then in Salt Lake City’s DESERET NEWS from 1852 to 1857. The seven-volume version published by the Church today is a product of the editing of B. H. Roberts of the Seventy, who worked intermittently on the project from 1902 to 1932. Because it quotes extensively from letters, minutes, and diaries of the day, the History of the Church has often been referred to as the Documentary History of the Church, or DHC.

Emphasizing the role of God in human affairs, this history falls within the Judeo-Christian tradition of "providential history." Because it was not written in a literary vacuum, it exhibits characteristics and flaws commonly found in the history and biography of its day: unacknowledged ghostwriting, edited sources, and a lack of balance. The most frequent distortion is the changing of an associate's third-person description of Joseph Smith's words and actions to a first-person account attributed to Joseph Smith, thereby conveying a false sense that he wrote it. Nonetheless, resting as it does on extensive documents from the period and compiled by persons who were eyewitnesses to the events, the factual content of the history has proven reliable.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jessee, Dean C. "The Writing of Joseph Smith's History." BYU Studies 11 (Summer 1971):439-73.

———. The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith. Salt Lake City, 1984.

———. The Papers of Joseph Smith, Vol. 1. Salt Lake City, 1989.

HOWARD C. SEARLE

HOLINESS

In LDS thought, as in most religions, it is God who invests a person, place, or object with holiness: "For I am able to make you holy, and your sins are forgiven you" (D&C 60:7). Thus the TEMPLES of the Church are said to be holy because they are dedicated to Deity who has manifested himself within them. Latter-day Saints speak of the SABBATH as holy because God has put his spirit into that day. The wooded area where Joseph SMITH received his FIRST VISION is spoken of as the SACRED GROVE because the Father and the Son appeared there. Marriage and other priesthood ORDINANCES are considered holy because God is directly and personally a party to such covenants. The scriptures are holy because they contain the word of God.

Although they infrequently use the term "holy" (an exception is in a beloved hymn which beseeches God, "More holiness give me"), Latter-day Saints strive for a measure of holiness and PERFECTION in MORTALITY: "Man may be perfect in his sphere; . . . individual perfection is relative. . . . The law of the Gospel is a perfect law and the sure effect of full obedience thereto is perfection" (Talmage, p. 169).

The process of becoming holy is based on three doctrines: JUSTIFICATION, which satisfies the demands of justice for the sins of the individual through the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST; purification, made possible by that same atonement and symbolized in the SACRAMENT of the bread and water, requiring the constant cleansing of oneself from earthly stains and imperfections; and SANCTIFICATION, the process of being made holy. Having minutes, and diaries of the day, the History of the Church has often been referred to as the Documentary History of the Church, or DHC.

The eastern face of the Salt Lake Temple and of each LDS temple bears the inscription, "Holiness to the Lord." The phrase also appeared on doorknobs and other articles of daily use in Nauvoo and pioneer Utah, reflecting the prophecy in Zech. 14:20-21 that "in that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD . . . Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts."

Emphasizing the role of God in human affairs, this history falls within the Judeo-Christian tradition of "providential history." Because it was not written in a literary vacuum, it exhibits characteristics and flaws commonly found in the history and biography of its day: unacknowledged ghostwriting, edited sources, and a lack of balance. The most frequent distortion is the changing of an associate's third-person description of Joseph Smith's words and actions to a first-person account attributed to Joseph Smith, thereby conveying a false sense that he wrote it. Nonetheless, resting as it does on extensive documents from the period and compiled by persons who were eyewitnesses to the events, the factual content of the history has proven reliable.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jessee, Dean C. "The Writing of Joseph Smith's History." BYU Studies 11 (Summer 1971):439-73.

———. The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith. Salt Lake City, 1984.

———. The Papers of Joseph Smith, Vol. 1. Salt Lake City, 1989.

HOWARD C. SEARLE

HOLINESS

In LDS thought, as in most religions, it is God who invests a person, place, or object with holiness: "For I am able to make you holy, and your sins are forgiven you" (D&C 60:7). Thus the TEMPLES of the Church are said to be holy because they are dedicated to Deity who has manifested himself within them. Latter-day Saints speak of the SABBATH as holy because God has put his spirit into that day. The wooded area where Joseph SMITH received his FIRST VISION is spoken of as the SACRED GROVE because the Father and the Son appeared there. Marriage and other priesthood ORDINANCES are considered holy because God is directly and personally a party to such covenants. The scriptures are holy because they contain the word of God.

Although they infrequently use the term "holy" (an exception is in a beloved hymn which beseeches God, "More holiness give me"), Latter-day Saints strive for a measure of holiness and PERFECTION in MORTALITY: "Man may be perfect in his sphere; . . . individual perfection is relative. . . . The law of the Gospel is a perfect law and the sure effect of full obedience thereto is perfection" (Talmage, p. 169).

The process of becoming holy is based on three doctrines: JUSTIFICATION, which satisfies the demands of justice for the sins of the individual through the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST; purification, made possible by that same atonement and symbolized in the SACRAMENT of the bread and water, requiring the constant cleansing of oneself from earthly stains and imperfections; and SANCTIFICATION, the process of being made holy. Having purified oneself of imperfections to the greatest degree possible, one is invested, over a lifetime, with holiness from God. ALMA<sub>2</sub> is an example of one recognized by God as holy (Alma 10:7–9).

The eastern face of the Salt Lake Temple and of each LDS temple bears the inscription, "Holiness to the Lord." The phrase also appeared on doorknobs and other articles of daily use in Nauvoo and pioneer Utah, reflecting the prophecy in Zech. 14:20-21 that "in that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD . . . Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts."

These principles are summarized in the next to the last verse of the Book of Mormon: “And again, if ye by the grace of God are perfect in Christ, and deny not his power, then are ye sanctified in Christ by the grace of God, through the shedding of the blood of Christ, which is in the covenant of the Father unto the remission of your sins, that ye become holy, without spot” (Moro. 10:33).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Lee, Harold B. Stand Ye in Holy Places. Salt Lake City, 1974.
Talmage, James E. The Vitality of Mormonism, p. 169. Boston, 1919.

ELOUISE M. BELL

HOLY GHOST

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that the Holy Ghost is a spirit man, a spirit son of GOD THE FATHER. It is fundamental Church doctrine that God is the Father of the spirits of all men and women, that Jesus is literally God's Son both in the spirit and in the flesh, and that the Holy Ghost is a personage of spirit separate and distinct from both the Father and the Son. The Holy Ghost is the third member of the Eternal GODHEAD, and is identified also as the HOLY SPIRIT, Spirit of God, Spirit of the Lord, and the COMFORTER. All three members of the Godhead were manifested at Jesus' baptism (Mark 1:9–12; see also DOVE, SIGN OF). Regarding them the Prophet Joseph SMITH taught: “The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man's; the Son also; but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit. Were it not so, the Holy Ghost could not dwell in us” (D&C 130:22). In a figurative sense, the Holy Ghost dwells in the hearts of the righteous Saints of all DISPENSATIONS (D&C 20:18–21).

Joseph Smith also stated that an “everlasting covenant was made between three personages before the organization of this earth, and relates to their dispensation of things to men on the earth; these personages . . . are called God the first, the Creator; God the second, the Redeemer; and God the third, the witness or Testator” (TPJS, p. 190).

Latter-day Saints understand that by obedience to the laws and ORDINANCES of the gospel Adam received the Holy Ghost and thus learned that redemption from the Fall will come through Christ to all who accept him (Moses 5:6–9). Thus, the gospel was preached from the beginning, being declared by ANGELS, by the voice of God, and by the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST (Moses 5:58–59; cf. 2 Pet. 1:21). NEPHI<sub>1</sub> (c. 600 B.C.) testified that the Holy Ghost is “the gift of God unto all those who diligently seek him, as well in times of old as in the time that he should manifest himself unto the children of men. . . . For he that diligently seeketh shall find; and the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto them, by the power of the Holy Ghost, as well in these times as in times of old, and as well in times of old as in times to come” (1 Ne. 10:17–19).

Joseph Smith taught that the influence of the Holy Ghost, which is the convincing power of God of the truth of the gospel, can be received before BAPTISM, but the gift, or constant companionship, of the Holy Ghost, which comes by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS, is obtained only after baptism (TPJS, p. 199). “You might as well baptize a bag of sand as a man,” he said, “if not done in view of the remission of sins and getting of the Holy Ghost. Baptism by water is but half a baptism, and is good for nothing without the other half—that is, the baptism of the Holy Ghost” (TPJS, p. 314). Thus, a person is expected to receive the witness of the Holy Ghost to the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, of scripture, and of the words of the living PROPHETS before baptism; the full outpouring of the Spirit does not come, however, until the person has complied with the command to be baptized. Only after baptism can the gift be conferred by one in AUTHORITY (Moro. 10:3–5; D&C 76:52). And even then the Holy Ghost cannot be received by someone who is not worthy of it, since the Holy Ghost will not dwell in the heart of an unrighteous person. Thus, the actual companionship of the Holy Ghost may be received immediately after baptism or at a subsequent time, when the one receiving the promise becomes a fit companion for that holy being. Should the individual cease thereafter to be clean and obedient, the Holy Ghost will withdraw (1 Cor. 3:16–17).

The Holy Ghost is a sanctifier. Because no unclean thing can dwell in a divine presence, the purified oneself of imperfections to the greatest degree possible, one is invested, over a lifetime, with holiness from God. ALMA<sub>2</sub> is an example of one recognized by God as holy (Alma 10:7–9).

These principles are summarized in the next to the last verse of the Book of Mormon: “And again, if ye by the grace of God are perfect in Christ, and deny not his power, then are ye sanctified in Christ by the grace of God, through the shedding of the blood of Christ, which is in the covenant of the Father unto the remission of your sins, that ye become holy, without spot” (Moro. 10:33).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Lee, Harold B. Stand Ye in Holy Places. Salt Lake City, 1974.
Talmage, James E. The Vitality of Mormonism, p. 169. Boston, 1919.

ELOUISE M. BELL

HOLY GHOST

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that the Holy Ghost is a spirit man, a spirit son of GOD THE FATHER. It is fundamental Church doctrine that God is the Father of the spirits of all men and women, that Jesus is literally God's Son both in the spirit and in the flesh, and that the Holy Ghost is a personage of spirit separate and distinct from both the Father and the Son. The Holy Ghost is the third member of the Eternal GODHEAD, and is identified also as the HOLY SPIRIT, Spirit of God, Spirit of the Lord, and the COMFORTER. All three members of the Godhead were manifested at Jesus' baptism (Mark 1:9–12; see also DOVE, SIGN OF). Regarding them the Prophet Joseph SMITH taught: “The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man's; the Son also; but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit. Were it not so, the Holy Ghost could not dwell in us” (D&C 130:22). In a figurative sense, the Holy Ghost dwells in the hearts of the righteous Saints of all DISPENSATIONS (D&C 20:18–21).

Joseph Smith also stated that an “everlasting covenant was made between three personages before the organization of this earth, and relates to their dispensation of things to men on the earth; these personages . . . are called God the first, the Creator; God the second, the Redeemer; and God the third, the witness or Testator” (TPJS, p. 190).

Latter-day Saints understand that by obedience to the laws and ORDINANCES of the gospel Adam received the Holy Ghost and thus learned that redemption from the Fall will come through Christ to all who accept him (Moses 5:6–9). Thus, the gospel was preached from the beginning, being declared by ANGELS, by the voice of God, and by the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST (Moses 5:58–59; cf. 2 Pet. 1:21). NEPHI<sub>1</sub> (c. 600 B.C.) testified that the Holy Ghost is “the gift of God unto all those who diligently seek him, as well in times of old as in the time that he should manifest himself unto the children of men. . . . For he that diligently seeketh shall find; and the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto them, by the power of the Holy Ghost, as well in these times as in times of old, and as well in times of old as in times to come” (1 Ne. 10:17–19).

Joseph Smith taught that the influence of the Holy Ghost, which is the convincing power of God of the truth of the gospel, can be received before BAPTISM, but the gift, or constant companionship, of the Holy Ghost, which comes by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS, is obtained only after baptism (TPJS, p. 199). “You might as well baptize a bag of sand as a man,” he said, “if not done in view of the remission of sins and getting of the Holy Ghost. Baptism by water is but half a baptism, and is good for nothing without the other half—that is, the baptism of the Holy Ghost” (TPJS, p. 314). Thus, a person is expected to receive the witness of the Holy Ghost to the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, of scripture, and of the words of the living PROPHETS before baptism; the full outpouring of the Spirit does not come, however, until the person has complied with the command to be baptized. Only after baptism can the gift be conferred by one in AUTHORITY (Moro. 10:3–5; D&C 76:52). And even then the Holy Ghost cannot be received by someone who is not worthy of it, since the Holy Ghost will not dwell in the heart of an unrighteous person. Thus, the actual companionship of the Holy Ghost may be received immediately after baptism or at a subsequent time, when the one receiving the promise becomes a fit companion for that holy being. Should the individual cease thereafter to be clean and obedient, the Holy Ghost will withdraw (1 Cor. 3:16–17).

The Holy Ghost is a sanctifier. Because no unclean thing can dwell in a divine presence, the whole system of salvation centers on the process of sanctification; people are saved to the extent that they are sanctified. Sanctification and holiness are inseparable. “To be sanctified is to become clean, pure, and spotless; to be free from the blood and sins of the world; to become a new creature of the Holy Ghost, one whose body has been renewed by the rebirth of the Spirit. Sanctification is a state of saintliness, a state attained only by conformity to the laws and ordinances of the gospel” (MD, p. 675).

The Holy Ghost is a revelator. The Prophet Joseph Smith taught that “no man can receive the Holy Ghost without receiving revelations” (TPJS, p. 328). To enjoy the companionship of the Holy Ghost is to enjoy the spirit of REVELATION (D&C 8:2–3). Without revelation there can be no competent witness of Christ or his gospel (Rev. 19:10). The Holy Ghost is the source of all saving knowledge. Those who sincerely and prayerfully seek this knowledge are promised that everything expedient will be revealed to them (D&C 18:18). Nephi testified that Christ manifests himself “unto all those who believe in him, by the power of the Holy Ghost; yea, unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, working mighty miracles, signs, and wonders, among the children of men according to their faith” (2 Ne. 26:13; cf. 1 Cor. 2:11–13; D&C 76:116).

The Holy Ghost is a teacher. All who will be saved must be tutored by the Holy Ghost. The things of the Spirit can only be understood when taught and learned by the Spirit (D&C 50:11–24). The divine commission to teach the truths of salvation rests with the Holy Ghost. Jesus was filled with the power of the Holy Ghost (Luke 4:1). “He spake not as other men, neither could he be taught; for he needed not that any man should teach him” (JST Matt. 3:25). The Father gave Christ the Spirit without measure (John 3:34). Angels also speak by the power of the Holy Ghost (2 Ne. 32:3). Such is the standard for all who go forth in Christ’s name. “Ye are not sent forth to be taught,” the Savior said to the early Latter-day Saints, “but to teach the children of men the things which I have put into your hands by the power of my Spirit; and ye are to be taught from on high. Sanctify yourselves and ye shall be endowed with power, that ye may give even as I have spoken” (D&C 43:15–16).

Describing the influence of the Holy Ghost as it fell upon him and Oliver COWDERY, the Prophet

Joseph Smith said, “We were filled with the Holy Ghost, and rejoiced in the God of our salvation. Our minds being now enlightened, we began to have the scriptures laid open to our understandings, and the true meaning and intention of their more mysterious passages revealed unto us in a manner which we never could attain to previously, nor ever before had thought of” (JS—H 1:73–74; cf. Alma 5:46). The Holy Ghost also brings to remembrance that which has previously been learned (John 14:26), directs that for which one should pray (D&C 46:30), and makes known what is to be spoken in preaching and teaching (D&C 84:85).

The Holy Ghost is the Comforter. A distinctive characteristic of the truths of salvation is that they are attended by a spirit of comfort and peace. It is the office of the Holy Ghost to lift burdens, give courage, strengthen faith, grant consolation, extend hope, and reveal whatever is needed to those having claim on his sacred companionship (Moses 6:61).

Jesus taught that no sin is greater than the sin against the Holy Ghost (Matt. 12:31–32). A latter-day revelation explains, “The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, which shall not be forgiven in the world nor out of the world, is in that ye commit murder wherein ye shed innocent blood, and assent unto my death, after ye have received my new and everlasting covenant, saith the Lord God” (D&C 132:27). Joseph Smith observed further that such a one rejects the Son after the Father has revealed him, denies the truth, and defies the PLAN OF SALVATION. “From that time he begins to be an enemy. . . . He gets the spirit of the devil—the same spirit that they had who crucified the Lord of Life—the same spirit that sins against the Holy Ghost. You cannot save such persons; you cannot bring them to repentance; they make open war, like the devil, and awful is the consequence” (TPJS, p. 357–58; cf. D&C 76:31–38, 43–48; see also UNPARDONABLE SIN).

The Holy Ghost is such an uplifting power and source of necessary gospel knowledge that to have his constant companionship and influence is the greatest gift a person can receive in mortality (cf. D&C 121:46). It is reported that on one occasion, when the Prophet Joseph Smith was asked, “Wherein [the LDS Church] differed from the other religions of the day,” he replied, that it was in “the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying-on of hands, . . . [and] that all other considerations were contained in the gift of the Holy Ghost” (HC 4:42).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, chaps. 28–31. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet. The Holy Ghost. Salt Lake City, 1989.

JOSEPH FIELDING MCCONKIE

HOLY OF HOLIES

In ancient times, through divine instruction to Moses, the Holy of Holies was made the center of the tabernacle (Ex. 25–27). It was a fifteen-foot cube formed by hanging veils made of goat hair, ram skins, and other dyed skins. Some were embroidered with figures of cherubim in blue, purple, and scarlet. The Holy of Holies was designated as the repository for a chest called the ark of the covenant. This chest, constructed of gold-plated acacia wood, was the place of the stone tablets inscribed by the hand of God, and the resting place for the mercy seat. Fashioned in one piece of fine gold, this seat, with cherubim engraven above it, formed the visible throne for the presence of God. Once a year, on the day of atonement, the high priest entered the Holy of Holies and sprinkled sacrificial blood over the mercy seat as expiation for Israel's sins. Though the ark has disappeared, this ritual was continued in the temples of Zerubbabel and Herod.

A latter-day Holy of Holies has been dedicated in the great temple in Salt Lake City. It is a central chamber adjoining the celestial room. Beyond its sliding doors are six steps to similar doors, symbolic of the veil that guarded the Holy of Holies in ancient times. The sanctuary is of circular design with a domed ceiling. The appointments include inlaid wood, gold leaf, stained glass, and unique lighting. The presiding high priest, the President of the Church, controls access to this sanctuary.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Encyclopedia Judaica, Vol. 15, cols. 681–82, 748–49. Jerusalem, 1971.
- Talmage, James E. House of the Lord, pp. 162–63. Salt Lake City, 1974.

LYSLE R. CAHOON

HOLY SPIRIT

The Holy Spirit is a term often used to refer to the HOLY GHOST. In such cases the Holy Spirit is a personage. Ghost is an Old English word meaning spirit. The scriptures use this term to designate the third member of the GODHEAD (Alma 11:44) and to speak of the Spirit's power to testify (Alma 7:16), to grant knowledge (Alma 5:46; D&C 76:116), to persuade (Mosiah 3:19), to indicate remission of sins (D&C 55:1), and to sanctify (Alma 5:54). The term Holy Spirit is the core of the phrase HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE denoting the Holy Ghost's sanction of every ordinance performed in righteousness. The influence or spirit that emanates from Jesus Christ, which is also called the LIGHT OF CHRIST, is holy, but is neither the Holy Spirit nor a personage.

JERRY A. WILSON

HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE

The Holy Spirit of Promise is one of many descriptive name-titles of the HOLY GHOST and refers to a specific function of the Holy Ghost. In John 14:16, the Savior, who had been a comforter to his disciples, assured them that after his departure into heaven they would receive another comforter: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever." The next verse speaks of this Comforter as "the Spirit of truth," who "dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (verse 17). The Lord subsequently identified this promised Comforter as the Holy Ghost (verse 26). Doctrine and Covenants 88:3 reiterates and clarifies: "Wherefore, I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you my friends, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise; which other Comforter is the same that I promised unto my disciples, as is recorded in the testimony of John."

The Holy Spirit of Promise is the power by which ordinances and other righteous acts performed on this earth, such as baptism and eternal marriage, are ratified, validated, and sealed in heaven as well as on earth. Paul taught the Ephesians that after acting on their faith in Christ they "were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise," which was the surety of their "inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. 1:12–14). The SEALING of earthly COVENANTS and

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, chaps. 28–31. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet. The Holy Ghost. Salt Lake City, 1989.

JOSEPH FIELDING MCCONKIE

HOLY OF HOLIES

In ancient times, through divine instruction to Moses, the Holy of Holies was made the center of the tabernacle (Ex. 25–27). It was a fifteen-foot cube formed by hanging veils made of goat hair, ram skins, and other dyed skins. Some were embroidered with figures of cherubim in blue, purple, and scarlet. The Holy of Holies was designated as the repository for a chest called the ark of the covenant. This chest, constructed of gold-plated acacia wood, was the place of the stone tablets inscribed by the hand of God, and the resting place for the mercy seat. Fashioned in one piece of fine gold, this seat, with cherubim engraven above it, formed the visible throne for the presence of God. Once a year, on the day of atonement, the high priest entered the Holy of Holies and sprinkled sacrificial blood over the mercy seat as expiation for Israel's sins. Though the ark has disappeared, this ritual was continued in the temples of Zerubbabel and Herod.

A latter-day Holy of Holies has been dedicated in the great temple in Salt Lake City. It is a central chamber adjoining the celestial room. Beyond its sliding doors are six steps to similar doors, symbolic of the veil that guarded the Holy of Holies in ancient times. The sanctuary is of circular design with a domed ceiling. The appointments include inlaid wood, gold leaf, stained glass, and unique lighting. The presiding high priest, the President of the Church, controls access to this sanctuary.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Encyclopedia Judaica, Vol. 15, cols. 681–82, 748–49. Jerusalem, 1971.
- Talmage, James E. House of the Lord, pp. 162–63. Salt Lake City, 1974.

LYSLE R. CAHOON

HOLY SPIRIT

The Holy Spirit is a term often used to refer to the HOLY GHOST. In such cases the Holy Spirit is a personage. Ghost is an Old English word meaning spirit. The scriptures use this term to designate the third member of the GODHEAD (Alma 11:44) and to speak of the Spirit's power to testify (Alma 7:16), to grant knowledge (Alma 5:46; D&C 76:116), to persuade (Mosiah 3:19), to indicate remission of sins (D&C 55:1), and to sanctify (Alma 5:54). The term Holy Spirit is the core of the phrase HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE denoting the Holy Ghost's sanction of every ordinance performed in righteousness. The influence or spirit that emanates from Jesus Christ, which is also called the LIGHT OF CHRIST, is holy, but is neither the Holy Spirit nor a personage.

JERRY A. WILSON

HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE

The Holy Spirit of Promise is one of many descriptive name-titles of the HOLY GHOST and refers to a specific function of the Holy Ghost. In John 14:16, the Savior, who had been a comforter to his disciples, assured them that after his departure into heaven they would receive another comforter: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever." The next verse speaks of this Comforter as "the Spirit of truth," who "dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (verse 17). The Lord subsequently identified this promised Comforter as the Holy Ghost (verse 26). Doctrine and Covenants 88:3 reiterates and clarifies: "Wherefore, I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you my friends, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise; which other Comforter is the same that I promised unto my disciples, as is recorded in the testimony of John."

The Holy Spirit of Promise is the power by which ordinances and other righteous acts performed on this earth, such as baptism and eternal marriage, are ratified, validated, and sealed in heaven as well as on earth. Paul taught the Ephesians that after acting on their faith in Christ they "were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise," which was the surety of their "inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. 1:12–14). The SEALING of earthly COVENANTS and

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, chaps. 28–31. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet. The Holy Ghost. Salt Lake City, 1989.

JOSEPH FIELDING MCCONKIE

HOLY OF HOLIES

In ancient times, through divine instruction to Moses, the Holy of Holies was made the center of the tabernacle (Ex. 25–27). It was a fifteen-foot cube formed by hanging veils made of goat hair, ram skins, and other dyed skins. Some were embroidered with figures of cherubim in blue, purple, and scarlet. The Holy of Holies was designated as the repository for a chest called the ark of the covenant. This chest, constructed of gold-plated acacia wood, was the place of the stone tablets inscribed by the hand of God, and the resting place for the mercy seat. Fashioned in one piece of fine gold, this seat, with cherubim engraven above it, formed the visible throne for the presence of God. Once a year, on the day of atonement, the high priest entered the Holy of Holies and sprinkled sacrificial blood over the mercy seat as expiation for Israel's sins. Though the ark has disappeared, this ritual was continued in the temples of Zerubbabel and Herod.

A latter-day Holy of Holies has been dedicated in the great temple in Salt Lake City. It is a central chamber adjoining the celestial room. Beyond its sliding doors are six steps to similar doors, symbolic of the veil that guarded the Holy of Holies in ancient times. The sanctuary is of circular design with a domed ceiling. The appointments include inlaid wood, gold leaf, stained glass, and unique lighting. The presiding high priest, the President of the Church, controls access to this sanctuary.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Encyclopedia Judaica, Vol. 15, cols. 681–82, 748–49. Jerusalem, 1971.
- Talmage, James E. House of the Lord, pp. 162–63. Salt Lake City, 1974.

LYSLE R. CAHOON

HOLY SPIRIT

The Holy Spirit is a term often used to refer to the HOLY GHOST. In such cases the Holy Spirit is a personage. Ghost is an Old English word meaning spirit. The scriptures use this term to designate the third member of the GODHEAD (Alma 11:44) and to speak of the Spirit's power to testify (Alma 7:16), to grant knowledge (Alma 5:46; D&C 76:116), to persuade (Mosiah 3:19), to indicate remission of sins (D&C 55:1), and to sanctify (Alma 5:54). The term Holy Spirit is the core of the phrase HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE denoting the Holy Ghost's sanction of every ordinance performed in righteousness. The influence or spirit that emanates from Jesus Christ, which is also called the LIGHT OF CHRIST, is holy, but is neither the Holy Spirit nor a personage.

JERRY A. WILSON

HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE

The Holy Spirit of Promise is one of many descriptive name-titles of the HOLY GHOST and refers to a specific function of the Holy Ghost. In John 14:16, the Savior, who had been a comforter to his disciples, assured them that after his departure into heaven they would receive another comforter: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever." The next verse speaks of this Comforter as "the Spirit of truth," who "dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (verse 17). The Lord subsequently identified this promised Comforter as the Holy Ghost (verse 26). Doctrine and Covenants 88:3 reiterates and clarifies: "Wherefore, I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you my friends, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise; which other Comforter is the same that I promised unto my disciples, as is recorded in the testimony of John."

The Holy Spirit of Promise is the power by which ordinances and other righteous acts performed on this earth, such as baptism and eternal marriage, are ratified, validated, and sealed in heaven as well as on earth. Paul taught the Ephesians that after acting on their faith in Christ they "were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise," which was the surety of their "inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. 1:12–14). The SEALING of earthly COVENANTS and

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, chaps. 28–31. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet. The Holy Ghost. Salt Lake City, 1989.

JOSEPH FIELDING MCCONKIE

HOLY OF HOLIES

In ancient times, through divine instruction to Moses, the Holy of Holies was made the center of the tabernacle (Ex. 25–27). It was a fifteen-foot cube formed by hanging veils made of goat hair, ram skins, and other dyed skins. Some were embroidered with figures of cherubim in blue, purple, and scarlet. The Holy of Holies was designated as the repository for a chest called the ark of the covenant. This chest, constructed of gold-plated acacia wood, was the place of the stone tablets inscribed by the hand of God, and the resting place for the mercy seat. Fashioned in one piece of fine gold, this seat, with cherubim engraven above it, formed the visible throne for the presence of God. Once a year, on the day of atonement, the high priest entered the Holy of Holies and sprinkled sacrificial blood over the mercy seat as expiation for Israel's sins. Though the ark has disappeared, this ritual was continued in the temples of Zerubbabel and Herod.

A latter-day Holy of Holies has been dedicated in the great temple in Salt Lake City. It is a central chamber adjoining the celestial room. Beyond its sliding doors are six steps to similar doors, symbolic of the veil that guarded the Holy of Holies in ancient times. The sanctuary is of circular design with a domed ceiling. The appointments include inlaid wood, gold leaf, stained glass, and unique lighting. The presiding high priest, the President of the Church, controls access to this sanctuary.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Encyclopedia Judaica, Vol. 15, cols. 681–82, 748–49. Jerusalem, 1971.
- Talmage, James E. House of the Lord, pp. 162–63. Salt Lake City, 1974.

LYSLE R. CAHOON

HOLY SPIRIT

The Holy Spirit is a term often used to refer to the HOLY GHOST. In such cases the Holy Spirit is a personage. Ghost is an Old English word meaning spirit. The scriptures use this term to designate the third member of the GODHEAD (Alma 11:44) and to speak of the Spirit's power to testify (Alma 7:16), to grant knowledge (Alma 5:46; D&C 76:116), to persuade (Mosiah 3:19), to indicate remission of sins (D&C 55:1), and to sanctify (Alma 5:54). The term Holy Spirit is the core of the phrase HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE denoting the Holy Ghost's sanction of every ordinance performed in righteousness. The influence or spirit that emanates from Jesus Christ, which is also called the LIGHT OF CHRIST, is holy, but is neither the Holy Spirit nor a personage.

JERRY A. WILSON

HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE

The Holy Spirit of Promise is one of many descriptive name-titles of the HOLY GHOST and refers to a specific function of the Holy Ghost. In John 14:16, the Savior, who had been a comforter to his disciples, assured them that after his departure into heaven they would receive another comforter: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever." The next verse speaks of this Comforter as "the Spirit of truth," who "dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (verse 17). The Lord subsequently identified this promised Comforter as the Holy Ghost (verse 26). Doctrine and Covenants 88:3 reiterates and clarifies: "Wherefore, I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you my friends, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise; which other Comforter is the same that I promised unto my disciples, as is recorded in the testimony of John."

The Holy Spirit of Promise is the power by which ordinances and other righteous acts performed on this earth, such as baptism and eternal marriage, are ratified, validated, and sealed in heaven as well as on earth. Paul taught the Ephesians that after acting on their faith in Christ they "were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise," which was the surety of their "inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. 1:12–14). The SEALING of earthly COVENANTS and performances is conditional and depends upon the recipient's personal commitment and worthiness. If a person who has received the Holy Spirit of Promise subsequently becomes unrighteous, the seal is broken until full repentance and forgiveness occur (DS 1:55; 2:94–99).

The necessity of sealing by the Holy Ghost is emphasized in the following passage: "All covenants, contracts, bonds, obligations, oaths, vows, performances, connections, associations, or expectations, that are not made and entered into and sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, . . . are of no efficacy, virtue, or force in and after the resurrection from the dead; for all contracts that are not made unto this end have an end when men are dead" (D&C 132:7). Earthly representatives of the Lord, such as bishops and elders may be deceived by an unworthy person, but no one can deceive the Holy Spirit, who will not ratify an ordinance received unworthily. This safeguard is attached to all blessings and covenants associated with the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The ultimate manifestation of the Holy Spirit of Promise is in connection with having one's CALLING AND ELECTION made sure—that is, receiving "the more sure word of prophecy" testifying that an individual is sealed up to ETERNAL LIFE (D&C 131:5). The Holy Spirit of Promise validates this blessing or seals it upon the person. Referring to the Holy Spirit of Promise the Lord says, "This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom" (D&C 88:4; cf. MD, pp. 361–62).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, Vol. 3, pp. 333–37. Salt Lake City, 1973.

LAWRENCE R. FLAKE

---

HOME

"Home" refers to more than a dwelling for a family. Latter-day Saints consider the ideal home a sacred place where holiness can be lived and taught. It is where civilization is created, one family at a time, and where God's plan of salvation is taught to the next generation, by both example and precept. Home and family relationships can be eternal. Children are to be nurtured in an atmosphere of love. Homes are to be characterized by service, cooperation, and even sacrifice by and for each other. The ideal home can become a haven from worldliness, materialism, and selfishness. While living in a relationship of fidelity, parents are to make home commitments their first priority.

Articles on the home environment are Abuse, Spouse and Child; Divorce; Family: Family Life; Fatherhood; Marriage; Maternity and Child Health Care; Men, Roles of; Mother in Israel; Motherhood; Women, Roles of; and Youth. Articles related to children and adolescents in the home are Adoption of Children; Birth; Born in the Covenant; Children; Dating and Courtship; and Sex Education. Articles on parental responsibilities and home organization are Birth Control; Book of Remembrance; Emergency Preparedness; Family History; Family Home Evening; Family Organizations; Family Prayer; Father's Blessing; Procreation; Sexuality; Values, Transmission of.]

---

HOME INDUSTRIES

From the earliest days of the Church, home industry, in one form or another, has been advocated among the Latter-day Saints. Included were the more common form of cottage industries and also both light and heavy manufacturing of most of the community's consumable goods. Home industry and manufacturing were to promote thrift and self-sufficiency among the members, to serve as a buffer against possible corrosive influences (greed, materialism, inequality), to provide employment for the poor, and to protect the Saints from persecution or to prepare them for further upheavals and expulsions such as had driven the Saints from state to state.

Home industries became Church policy in 1831, with the establishment of the LAW OF CONSECRATION, which continued in various forms through the nineteenth century (see UNITED ORDERS). From 1831 to 1838, the Church sought to provide material necessities for all according to need. The Saints were to limit consumption voluntarily and, when production exceeded demand, to give the surpluses to the Church. Members pledged time, labor, energy, ability, and material possessions for the good of the group. In pioneer Utah it was not unusual for men to be called on MISSIONS to devote full time to establish specific industries (see PIONEER ECONOMY).

As European converts immigrated to the UTAH TERRITORY during the 1850s, they were encouraged to bring designs and tools for use in manufacturing. Home industries thrived through an performances is conditional and depends upon the recipient's personal commitment and worthiness. If a person who has received the Holy Spirit of Promise subsequently becomes unrighteous, the seal is broken until full repentance and forgiveness occur (DS 1:55; 2:94–99).

The necessity of sealing by the Holy Ghost is emphasized in the following passage: "All covenants, contracts, bonds, obligations, oaths, vows, performances, connections, associations, or expectations, that are not made and entered into and sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, . . . are of no efficacy, virtue, or force in and after the resurrection from the dead; for all contracts that are not made unto this end have an end when men are dead" (D&C 132:7). Earthly representatives of the Lord, such as bishops and elders may be deceived by an unworthy person, but no one can deceive the Holy Spirit, who will not ratify an ordinance received unworthily. This safeguard is attached to all blessings and covenants associated with the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The ultimate manifestation of the Holy Spirit of Promise is in connection with having one's CALLING AND ELECTION made sure—that is, receiving "the more sure word of prophecy" testifying that an individual is sealed up to ETERNAL LIFE (D&C 131:5). The Holy Spirit of Promise validates this blessing or seals it upon the person. Referring to the Holy Spirit of Promise the Lord says, "This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom" (D&C 88:4; cf. MD, pp. 361–62).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, Vol. 3, pp. 333–37. Salt Lake City, 1973.

LAWRENCE R. FLAKE

---

HOME

"Home" refers to more than a dwelling for a family. Latter-day Saints consider the ideal home a sacred place where holiness can be lived and taught. It is where civilization is created, one family at a time, and where God's plan of salvation is taught to the next generation, by both example and precept. Home and family relationships can be eternal. Children are to be nurtured in an atmosphere of love. Homes are to be characterized by service, cooperation, and even sacrifice by and for each other. The ideal home can become a haven from worldliness, materialism, and selfishness. While living in a relationship of fidelity, parents are to make home commitments their first priority.

Articles on the home environment are Abuse, Spouse and Child; Divorce; Family: Family Life; Fatherhood; Marriage; Maternity and Child Health Care; Men, Roles of; Mother in Israel; Motherhood; Women, Roles of; and Youth. Articles related to children and adolescents in the home are Adoption of Children; Birth; Born in the Covenant; Children; Dating and Courtship; and Sex Education. Articles on parental responsibilities and home organization are Birth Control; Book of Remembrance; Emergency Preparedness; Family History; Family Home Evening; Family Organizations; Family Prayer; Father's Blessing; Procreation; Sexuality; Values, Transmission of.]

---

HOME INDUSTRIES

From the earliest days of the Church, home industry, in one form or another, has been advocated among the Latter-day Saints. Included were the more common form of cottage industries and also both light and heavy manufacturing of most of the community's consumable goods. Home industry and manufacturing were to promote thrift and self-sufficiency among the members, to serve as a buffer against possible corrosive influences (greed, materialism, inequality), to provide employment for the poor, and to protect the Saints from persecution or to prepare them for further upheavals and expulsions such as had driven the Saints from state to state.

Home industries became Church policy in 1831, with the establishment of the LAW OF CONSECRATION, which continued in various forms through the nineteenth century (see UNITED ORDERS). From 1831 to 1838, the Church sought to provide material necessities for all according to need. The Saints were to limit consumption voluntarily and, when production exceeded demand, to give the surpluses to the Church. Members pledged time, labor, energy, ability, and material possessions for the good of the group. In pioneer Utah it was not unusual for men to be called on MISSIONS to devote full time to establish specific industries (see PIONEER ECONOMY).

As European converts immigrated to the UTAH TERRITORY during the 1850s, they were encouraged to bring designs and tools for use in manufacturing. Home industries thrived through an performances is conditional and depends upon the recipient's personal commitment and worthiness. If a person who has received the Holy Spirit of Promise subsequently becomes unrighteous, the seal is broken until full repentance and forgiveness occur (DS 1:55; 2:94–99).

The necessity of sealing by the Holy Ghost is emphasized in the following passage: "All covenants, contracts, bonds, obligations, oaths, vows, performances, connections, associations, or expectations, that are not made and entered into and sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, . . . are of no efficacy, virtue, or force in and after the resurrection from the dead; for all contracts that are not made unto this end have an end when men are dead" (D&C 132:7). Earthly representatives of the Lord, such as bishops and elders may be deceived by an unworthy person, but no one can deceive the Holy Spirit, who will not ratify an ordinance received unworthily. This safeguard is attached to all blessings and covenants associated with the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The ultimate manifestation of the Holy Spirit of Promise is in connection with having one's CALLING AND ELECTION made sure—that is, receiving "the more sure word of prophecy" testifying that an individual is sealed up to ETERNAL LIFE (D&C 131:5). The Holy Spirit of Promise validates this blessing or seals it upon the person. Referring to the Holy Spirit of Promise the Lord says, "This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom" (D&C 88:4; cf. MD, pp. 361–62).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, Vol. 3, pp. 333–37. Salt Lake City, 1973.

LAWRENCE R. FLAKE

---

HOME

"Home" refers to more than a dwelling for a family. Latter-day Saints consider the ideal home a sacred place where holiness can be lived and taught. It is where civilization is created, one family at a time, and where God's plan of salvation is taught to the next generation, by both example and precept. Home and family relationships can be eternal. Children are to be nurtured in an atmosphere of love. Homes are to be characterized by service, cooperation, and even sacrifice by and for each other. The ideal home can become a haven from worldliness, materialism, and selfishness. While living in a relationship of fidelity, parents are to make home commitments their first priority.

Articles on the home environment are Abuse, Spouse and Child; Divorce; Family: Family Life; Fatherhood; Marriage; Maternity and Child Health Care; Men, Roles of; Mother in Israel; Motherhood; Women, Roles of; and Youth. Articles related to children and adolescents in the home are Adoption of Children; Birth; Born in the Covenant; Children; Dating and Courtship; and Sex Education. Articles on parental responsibilities and home organization are Birth Control; Book of Remembrance; Emergency Preparedness; Family History; Family Home Evening; Family Organizations; Family Prayer; Father's Blessing; Procreation; Sexuality; Values, Transmission of.]

---

HOME INDUSTRIES

From the earliest days of the Church, home industry, in one form or another, has been advocated among the Latter-day Saints. Included were the more common form of cottage industries and also both light and heavy manufacturing of most of the community's consumable goods. Home industry and manufacturing were to promote thrift and self-sufficiency among the members, to serve as a buffer against possible corrosive influences (greed, materialism, inequality), to provide employment for the poor, and to protect the Saints from persecution or to prepare them for further upheavals and expulsions such as had driven the Saints from state to state.

Home industries became Church policy in 1831, with the establishment of the LAW OF CONSECRATION, which continued in various forms through the nineteenth century (see UNITED ORDERS). From 1831 to 1838, the Church sought to provide material necessities for all according to need. The Saints were to limit consumption voluntarily and, when production exceeded demand, to give the surpluses to the Church. Members pledged time, labor, energy, ability, and material possessions for the good of the group. In pioneer Utah it was not unusual for men to be called on MISSIONS to devote full time to establish specific industries (see PIONEER ECONOMY).

As European converts immigrated to the UTAH TERRITORY during the 1850s, they were encouraged to bring designs and tools for use in manufacturing. Home industries thrived through an abundance of skilled artisans among new immigrant converts. To support a self-sufficient regional economy (autarky), and to discourage a dependence on imports, the Saints developed an exchange economy. Leaders and members gave full patronage to home manufacturers, who were given preferential treatment and verbal support by leaders in Church CONFERENCES and in state legislative sessions.

The opening of the first creamery in Richfield, Utah, typical of many Mormon home industries and local businesses. Photographer: George E. Anderson. Courtesy Nelson Wadsworth.

Thus, in the Utah Territory, the Church, the government, and individuals were involved in a collective entrepreneurship that was supportive of immigration and public works programs. The mutual exchange of goods and labor among residents of the region developed the economic foundations of a commonwealth. Goods available in excess of personal needs were exported to bring money into the territory. This approach also involved dedication to building the KINGDOM OF GOD, so encouragement of home manufacture included caution against exorbitant profits and speculation.

The contributions of women were fundamental to making these economic strategies a success. President Brigham YOUNG encouraged women to study mathematics, accounting, and medicine, among other things, so that they could provide clerking, bookkeeping, shop keeping, health care, and other professional services, thereby releasing the men to perform more strenuous physical labor (JD 13:61).

Both the poor and the not-so-poor were encouraged to live more frugally. Women learned not to waste anything of substance; and the desire, ideally, was for domestic and home manufacture to produce most necessary articles used for food, clothing, and shelter. Such industry was to sustain families religiously, politically, socially, and financially.

In 1867, the Church assigned to the RELIEF SOCIETY the responsibility of teaching the poor to provide for themselves. Female home manufacturing societies supported cottage industries that employed women and children and encouraged families to resist the purchasing of goods not made at home. The Relief Society became a major institutional sponsor of these self-sufficiency programs. For example, approximately 150 units of the Relief Society throughout the territory helped to raise silkworms and to reel and weave the filament produced for the fledgling silk industry (see SILK CULTURE). The need for production of materials not available locally engendered the establishment of substitute industries. Women experimented with the processing of such native plants as stinging nettle, milkweed, and red top grass for use as textiles.

Brigham Young and other leaders encouraged every branch of manufacture that could be adapted to the climate and the territory. A seemingly endless variety of products included downy beds, molasses, milk products, fruits, vegetables and grains, woolen and silk goods, woven rye and native grass products, all kinds of clothing articles, brooms, ink, leather, felt, alum, coppers, dyes, soap, matches, iron, school books, jewelry, perfume, paper, rope, harnesses, wagons, machinery, sack-ing, carpets, tools, sugar, flax, bonnets, and lumber.

In 1867–1869, home industries continued to be a major focus of both the Relief Society and the Young Women's RETRENCHMENT ASSOCIATION. These organizations helped to make homemade articles fashionable and to discourage the purchase of imported goods. The coming of the railroad in 1869 and the resultant influx of outside businesses required a redoubling of these efforts to preserve the independence of the local economy.

Village cooperatives were established to provide the exchange and distribution of the products of home industry. Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution (ZCMI) was a major institution for carrying out such strategies, and the department store followed a policy of preference for the home industries of Mormon manufacturers. In addition, STAKE Boards of Trade were organized to help the cause of home manufacture. As late as 1878, ZCMI had a published policy of providing what was needed for home consumption but exporting the best for profit.

The success of Mormon home industry depended upon geography, economics, and ideology. The expansion of the United States through migration, facilitated by the transcontinental railroad, brought about an effective end to autarky and to LDS protectionist philosophy. Ultimately, however, the economic policies of Brigham Young and the Church had affected all of the mountain West and provided a pattern of economic survival copied and adapted by some other groups as they settled in the Great Basin. Later, the ideals of self-sufficiency, cooperation, and preparedness were reemphasized during the Great Depression of the 1930s and resulted in the implementation of a Church WELFARE SERVICES program.

Today, cottage industries still are a source of income, usually secondary and on a small scale, for some LDS households. A retail outlet known as MORMON HANDICRAFT was established by the Church in 1937 to provide sale on consignment of high quality, hand-crafted products of household industries. In 1986 the DESERET BOOK COMPANY purchased Mormon Handicraft and presently operates the store, which is renowned for hand-sewn quilts, needlework, and other craft items.

In harmony with the ideals that originally spawned the advocacy of home industry, Latter-day Saints today are counseled to grow vegetable gardens, make or preserve whatever commodities they can, and avoid debt and materialism. Work (industry) is expected to be the "ruling principle" in the lives of the Saints, and sharing of one's resources in service to the poor is considered a hallmark virtue of a true Saint.

[See also Business: Church Participation in; Economic History; Self-Sufficiency; Stewardship; Welfare.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.
- Burgess-Olson, Vicky. Family Structure and Dynamics in Early Utah Mormon Families 1847–1885. Evanston, Ill., 1975.
- Young, Brigham. Discourses of Brigham Young, ed. John A. Widtsoe. Salt Lake City, 1971.

MAXINE LEWIS ROWLEY

---

HOME TEACHING

Each ward of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints assigns priesthood holders as home teachers to visit the homes of members every month. They go in pairs; often a youth holding the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD accompanies an adult holding the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. Home teachers are called by their local priesthood quorum leaders and are typically assigned to visit between three and five families. They report on the needs and welfare of their assigned families in regularly scheduled interviews with their priesthood leaders. The home teaching program is a response to modern revelation commissioning those ordained to the priesthood to teach, expound, exhort, baptize, and watch over the church . . . and visit the house of each member, and

of substitute industries. Women experimented with the processing of such native plants as stinging nettle, milkweed, and red top grass for use as textiles.

Brigham Young and other leaders encouraged every branch of manufacture that could be adapted to the climate and the territory. A seemingly endless variety of products included downy beds, molasses, milk products, fruits, vegetables and grains, woolen and silk goods, woven rye and native grass products, all kinds of clothing articles, brooms, ink, leather, felt, alum, coppers, dyes, soap, matches, iron, school books, jewelry, perfume, paper, rope, harnesses, wagons, machinery, sack-ing, carpets, tools, sugar, flax, bonnets, and lumber.

In 1867–1869, home industries continued to be a major focus of both the Relief Society and the Young Women's RETRENCHMENT ASSOCIATION. These organizations helped to make homemade articles fashionable and to discourage the purchase of imported goods. The coming of the railroad in 1869 and the resultant influx of outside businesses required a redoubling of these efforts to preserve the independence of the local economy.

Village cooperatives were established to provide the exchange and distribution of the products of home industry. Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution (ZCMI) was a major institution for carrying out such strategies, and the department store followed a policy of preference for the home industries of Mormon manufacturers. In addition, STAKE Boards of Trade were organized to help the cause of home manufacture. As late as 1878, ZCMI had a published policy of providing what was needed for home consumption but exporting the best for profit.

The success of Mormon home industry depended upon geography, economics, and ideology. The expansion of the United States through migration, facilitated by the transcontinental railroad, brought about an effective end to autarky and to LDS protectionist philosophy. Ultimately, however, the economic policies of Brigham Young and the Church had affected all of the mountain West and provided a pattern of economic survival copied and adapted by some other groups as they settled in the Great Basin. Later, the ideals of self-sufficiency, cooperation, and preparedness were reemphasized during the Great Depression of the 1930s and resulted in the implementation of a Church WELFARE SERVICES program.

Today, cottage industries still are a source of income, usually secondary and on a small scale, for some LDS households. A retail outlet known as MORMON HANDICRAFT was established by the Church in 1937 to provide sale on consignment of high quality, hand-crafted products of household industries. In 1986 the DESERET BOOK COMPANY purchased Mormon Handicraft and presently operates the store, which is renowned for hand-sewn quilts, needlework, and other craft items.

In harmony with the ideals that originally spawned the advocacy of home industry, Latter-day Saints today are counseled to grow vegetable gardens, make or preserve whatever commodities they can, and avoid debt and materialism. Work (industry) is expected to be the "ruling principle" in the lives of the Saints, and sharing of one's resources in service to the poor is considered a hallmark virtue of a true Saint.

[See also Business: Church Participation in; Economic History; Self-Sufficiency; Stewardship; Welfare.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.
- Burgess-Olson, Vicky. Family Structure and Dynamics in Early Utah Mormon Families 1847–1885. Evanston, Ill., 1975.
- Young, Brigham. Discourses of Brigham Young, ed. John A. Widtsoe. Salt Lake City, 1971.

MAXINE LEWIS ROWLEY

---

HOME TEACHING

Each ward of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints assigns priesthood holders as home teachers to visit the homes of members every month. They go in pairs; often a youth holding the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD accompanies an adult holding the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. Home teachers are called by their local priesthood quorum leaders and are typically assigned to visit between three and five families. They report on the needs and welfare of their assigned families in regularly scheduled interviews with their priesthood leaders. The home teaching program is a response to modern revelation commissioning those ordained to the priesthood to teach, expound, exhort, baptize, and watch over the church . . . and visit the house of each member, and

exhort them to pray vocally and in secret and attend to all family duties, . . . to watch over the church always, and be with and strengthen them; and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other, neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking [D&C 20:42–54].

At one time called “acting teachers” (1909), the name was formally changed to “ward teachers” in 1912. However, for years before that time the effort was informally called “block teaching” because of the geographic way in which families were assigned (Hartley, pp. 375–98). In April 1963, the ward teaching program was expanded and renamed “home teaching,” with emphasis “on the responsibilities of the entire priesthood to ‘watch over the Church’ as commanded in the early revelations—to be concerned with the whole family as a group and as individuals” (IE 66 [June 1963]:504).

In a Home Teachers Meeting during general conference in 1966, Marion G. Romney, then an apostle, instructed home teachers to live so that they could always enjoy the companionship of the Holy Ghost and act under his inspiration in their home teaching responsibilities and to encourage and inspire every family to make and keep the home a truly Latter-day Saint home.

In 1987 Church President Ezra Taft BENSON identified three basic guidelines to be followed by home teachers:

First, Church leaders are to encourage home teachers to know as well as possible the people they are called to teach. Home teachers need to be aware of individual attitudes, interests, and general welfare, working closely with the head of each family to meet the family’s temporal and spiritual needs.

Second, the Church expects home teachers to deliver a short monthly message. When possible, messages are to come from the scriptures, particularly the Book of Mormon. Leaders are to instruct home teachers to prepare intellectually and spiritually, giving prayerful consideration to both the temporal and spiritual needs of each family as they prepare lessons. The companionship of the Holy Ghost is essential for successful home teaching, for “if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach” (D&C 42:14). The Church instructs home teachers, therefore, to pray together before each visit, invoking the blessings of the Lord upon the family, and, where possible, to pray with family members at the conclusion of the visit.

Third, home teachers are to magnify their callings (Jacob 1:19) by rendering devoted service. This includes visiting each family early in the month, by appointment, and making additional visits as needed.

Organizationally, home teaching provides a system for effective Churchwide communication. Through stakes, wards, and home teachers, Church leaders have a direct line to every member and have the potential, if necessary, to communicate quickly with the total Church membership, via the local priesthood leaders.

Effective home teaching makes significant contributions to members’ lives. Alert, insightful home teachers find various ways of rendering service, such as providing recognition for achievements; informing families of Church activities; assisting during family emergencies, including illness or death; strengthening and encouraging less active members; and arranging transportation. They serve as resources and share the burden of support that would otherwise be carried by the bishop.

As home teachers are called to work directly with families, they are often in a better position to help these family members than are other Church officers or teachers. As a result, home teaching is one of the most effective ways the Latter-day Saints manifest their commitment to “bear one another’s burdens, that they may be light; . . . mourn with those that mourn; yea, and comfort those that stand in need of comfort, and stand as witnesses of God” (Mosiah 18:8–9).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. “To the Home Teachers of the Church.” Ensign 17 (May 1987):48–51.
- Cullimore, James A. “Home Teachers—Watchmen over the Church.” Ensign 3 (Jan. 1973):124–26.
- Hartley, William. “Ordained and Acting Teachers in the Lesser Priesthood, 1851–1883.” BYU Studies 16 (Spring 1976):375–98.
- Packer, Boyd K. “The Saints Securely Dwell.” Ensign 3 (Jan. 1973):88–90.

R. WAYNE BOSS

---

HOMOSEXUALITY

God’s teachings about human sexuality are clear, unambiguous, and consistent from Adam to the present. “God created man in his own image . . .

exhort them to pray vocally and in secret and attend to all family duties, . . . to watch over the church always, and be with and strengthen them; and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other, neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking [D&C 20:42–54].

At one time called “acting teachers” (1909), the name was formally changed to “ward teachers” in 1912. However, for years before that time the effort was informally called “block teaching” because of the geographic way in which families were assigned (Hartley, pp. 375–98). In April 1963, the ward teaching program was expanded and renamed “home teaching,” with emphasis “on the responsibilities of the entire priesthood to ‘watch over the Church’ as commanded in the early revelations—to be concerned with the whole family as a group and as individuals” (IE 66 [June 1963]:504).

In a Home Teachers Meeting during general conference in 1966, Marion G. Romney, then an apostle, instructed home teachers to live so that they could always enjoy the companionship of the Holy Ghost and act under his inspiration in their home teaching responsibilities and to encourage and inspire every family to make and keep the home a truly Latter-day Saint home.

In 1987 Church President Ezra Taft BENSON identified three basic guidelines to be followed by home teachers:

First, Church leaders are to encourage home teachers to know as well as possible the people they are called to teach. Home teachers need to be aware of individual attitudes, interests, and general welfare, working closely with the head of each family to meet the family’s temporal and spiritual needs.

Second, the Church expects home teachers to deliver a short monthly message. When possible, messages are to come from the scriptures, particularly the Book of Mormon. Leaders are to instruct home teachers to prepare intellectually and spiritually, giving prayerful consideration to both the temporal and spiritual needs of each family as they prepare lessons. The companionship of the Holy Ghost is essential for successful home teaching, for “if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach” (D&C 42:14). The Church instructs home teachers, therefore, to pray together before each visit, invoking the blessings of the Lord upon the family, and, where possible, to pray with family members at the conclusion of the visit.

Third, home teachers are to magnify their callings (Jacob 1:19) by rendering devoted service. This includes visiting each family early in the month, by appointment, and making additional visits as needed.

Organizationally, home teaching provides a system for effective Churchwide communication. Through stakes, wards, and home teachers, Church leaders have a direct line to every member and have the potential, if necessary, to communicate quickly with the total Church membership, via the local priesthood leaders.

Effective home teaching makes significant contributions to members’ lives. Alert, insightful home teachers find various ways of rendering service, such as providing recognition for achievements; informing families of Church activities; assisting during family emergencies, including illness or death; strengthening and encouraging less active members; and arranging transportation. They serve as resources and share the burden of support that would otherwise be carried by the bishop.

As home teachers are called to work directly with families, they are often in a better position to help these family members than are other Church officers or teachers. As a result, home teaching is one of the most effective ways the Latter-day Saints manifest their commitment to “bear one another’s burdens, that they may be light; . . . mourn with those that mourn; yea, and comfort those that stand in need of comfort, and stand as witnesses of God” (Mosiah 18:8–9).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. “To the Home Teachers of the Church.” Ensign 17 (May 1987):48–51.
- Cullimore, James A. “Home Teachers—Watchmen over the Church.” Ensign 3 (Jan. 1973):124–26.
- Hartley, William. “Ordained and Acting Teachers in the Lesser Priesthood, 1851–1883.” BYU Studies 16 (Spring 1976):375–98.
- Packer, Boyd K. “The Saints Securely Dwell.” Ensign 3 (Jan. 1973):88–90.

R. WAYNE BOSS

---

HOMOSEXUALITY

God’s teachings about human sexuality are clear, unambiguous, and consistent from Adam to the present. “God created man in his own image . . .

male and female created he them" (Gen. 1:27). "And the Gods said: Let us make an help meet for the man, for it is not good that the man should be alone, therefore we will form an help meet for him. . . . Therefore shall a man . . . cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh" (Abr. 5:14–18). "Neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord" (1 Cor. 11:11).

When two people of the same sex join in using their bodies for erotic purposes, this conduct is considered homosexual and sinful by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, comparable to sexual relations between any unmarried persons. Masturbation is not condoned but is not considered homosexual.

People who persist in committing acts that violate divine law are subject to Church DISCIPLINARY COUNCILS to help them understand the damage they are doing to their eternal well-being. Particularly offensive is any conduct that harms others, especially those who because of their youth are vulnerable to seduction or coercion. The eternal laws that pertain to CHASTITY before marriage and personal purity within marriage apply to all sexual behavior. However, "marriage is not doctrinal therapy for homosexual relations" (Oaks, p. 10). The restored GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST exalts the relationship of husband and wife, as particularly illustrated in the TEMPLE ORDINANCES. From these doctrines, covenants, and ordinances, it is clear that any sexual relationship other than that between a legally wedded heterosexual husband and wife is sinful. The divine mandate of marriage between man and woman puts in perspective why homosexual acts are offensive to God. They repudiate the gift and the Giver of ETERNAL LIFE.

Recognizing that failure to keep the covenants of the gospel of Jesus Christ deprives a person of God's blessings, the Church offers counseling to help those who are troubled by homosexual thoughts or actions to learn to use their agency to live in accord with divine laws and thereby enjoy the rich blessings a benevolent Father offers to all his children, whatever their temptation or thoughts. "That has been the message of the Jewish and Christian prophets in all ages: repent. Abandon your sins; confess them; forsake them. And become acceptable to God" (Oaks, p. 7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Oaks, Dallin H. CBS-TV interview, Dec. 30, 1986, unpublished transcript.
Packer, Boyd K. "Covenants." Ensign 20 (Nov. 1990):84–86.

VICTOR L. BROWN, JR.

---

HOPE

The concept of hope plays a vital role in Latter-day Saint thought. Firmly centered in Christ and his resurrection, it is the "hope of eternal life" (Titus 1:2) repeatedly alluded to by Paul. It is the opposite of the despair found among those who are "without Christ, having no hope, and without God in the world" (Eph. 2:12). As the Book of Mormon prophet Moroni writes, "If ye have no hope, ye must needs be in despair" (Moro. 10:22). For those, however, who accept Christ's atonement and resurrection, there comes a "brightness of hope" (2 Ne. 31:20) through which all who believe in God "might with surety hope for a better world" (Ether 12:4).

The scriptures employ the term "hope" in a variety of ways. Some usages suggest desire, such as the statement in Article of Faith 13 that "we believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things." Others denote firm expectation, such as Paul's description of Abraham "who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations" (Rom. 4:18). Still others make it an integral part of faith, such as the scriptural observations that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Heb. 11:1).

Regardless of their form, the individual variations of meaning all center on the confidence or trust in God that springs from knowledge that mankind is saved through the Atonement ("for we are saved by hope," Rom. 8:15). Hence, hope is inseparably connected with faith. Book of Mormon passages add insight to New Testament teachings by expanding on this interactive relationship: "How is it that ye can attain unto faith, save ye shall have hope?" (Moro. 7:40); "hope cometh of faith" (Ether 12:4); "without faith there cannot be any hope" (Moro. 7:42).

In combination with faith, hope leads to knowledge of the truth about Jesus Christ ("if ye male and female created he them" (Gen. 1:27). "And the Gods said: Let us make an help meet for the man, for it is not good that the man should be alone, therefore we will form an help meet for him. . . . Therefore shall a man . . . cleave into his wife, and they shall be one flesh" (Abr. 5:14–18). "Neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord" (1 Cor. 11:11).

When two people of the same sex join in using their bodies for erotic purposes, this conduct is considered homosexual and sinful by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, comparable to sexual relations between any unmarried persons. Masturbation is not condoned but is not considered homosexual.

People who persist in committing acts that violate divine law are subject to Church DISCIPLINARY COUNCILS to help them understand the damage they are doing to their eternal well-being. Particularly offensive is any conduct that harms others, especially those who because of their youth are vulnerable to seduction or coercion. The eternal laws that pertain to CHASTITY before marriage and personal purity within marriage apply to all sexual behavior. However, "marriage is not doctrinal therapy for homosexual relations" (Oaks, p. 10). The restored GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST exalts the relationship of husband and wife, as particularly illustrated in the TEMPLE ORDINANCES. From these doctrines, covenants, and ordinances, it is clear that any sexual relationship other than that between a legally wedded heterosexual husband and wife is sinful. The divine mandate of marriage between man and woman puts in perspective why homosexual acts are offensive to God. They repudiate the gift and the Giver of ETERNAL LIFE.

Recognizing that failure to keep the covenants of the gospel of Jesus Christ deprives a person of God's blessings, the Church offers counseling to help those who are troubled by homosexual thoughts or actions to learn to use their agency to live in accord with divine laws and thereby enjoy the rich blessings a benevolent Father offers to all his children, whatever their temptation or thoughts. "That has been the message of the Jewish and Christian prophets in all ages: repent. Abandon your sins; confess them; forsake them. And become acceptable to God" (Oaks, p. 7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Oaks, Dallin H. CBS-TV interview, Dec. 30, 1986, unpublished transcript.
Packer, Boyd K. "Covenants." Ensign 20 (Nov. 1990):84–86.

VICTOR L. BROWN, JR.

---

HOPE

The concept of hope plays a vital role in Latter-day Saint thought. Firmly centered in Christ and his resurrection, it is the "hope of eternal life" (Titus 1:2) repeatedly alluded to by Paul. It is the opposite of the despair found among those who are "without Christ, having no hope, and without God in the world" (Eph. 2:12). As the Book of Mormon prophet Moroni writes, "If ye have no hope, ye must needs be in despair" (Moro. 10:22). For those, however, who accept Christ's atonement and resurrection, there comes a "brightness of hope" (2 Ne. 31:20) through which all who believe in God "might with surety hope for a better world" (Ether 12:4).

The scriptures employ the term "hope" in a variety of ways. Some usages suggest desire, such as the statement in Article of Faith 13 that "we believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things." Others denote firm expectation, such as Paul's description of Abraham "who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations" (Rom. 4:18). Still others make it an integral part of faith, such as the scriptural observations that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Heb. 11:1).

Regardless of their form, the individual variations of meaning all center on the confidence or trust in God that springs from knowledge that mankind is saved through the Atonement ("for we are saved by hope," Rom. 8:15). Hence, hope is inseparably connected with faith. Book of Mormon passages add insight to New Testament teachings by expanding on this interactive relationship: "How is it that ye can attain unto faith, save ye shall have hope?" (Moro. 7:40); "hope cometh of faith" (Ether 12:4); "without faith there cannot be any hope" (Moro. 7:42).

In combination with faith, hope leads to knowledge of the truth about Jesus Christ ("if ye have faith, ye hope for things which are not seen, which are true" [Alma 32:21]). It is also an essential attitude for individual salvation ("man must hope, or he cannot receive an inheritance in the place which thou hast prepared" [Ether 12:32]).

Paul's praise of "faith, hope, and charity" (1 Cor. 13:13) as basic Christian virtues expands understanding of these concepts with its intimation that faith and hope are prerequisites to developing charity—a Christlike love of others. This type of love cannot grow out of despair or disbelief. Using the same triadic concept, the Book of Mormon describes their relationship to repentance, baptism, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost, all required for salvation in the kingdom of God (2 Ne. 31:16–21). Hope is integral to the gospel formula: through steadfastness in Christ (faith), a perfect brightness of hope, and love of God (charity), the baptized can endure to the end and be saved. Having these attributes is also necessary for service in the Lord's kingdom: "If you have not faith, hope, and charity, you can do nothing" (D&C 18:19; cf. D&C 4:5).

Paul observed that the writings of ancient prophets were given "that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope" (Rom. 15:4; cf. Ps. 16:9; Prov. 10:28; 14:32; Jer. 17:7; Joel 3:16). The Prophet Joseph Smith claimed that Latter-day Saints "have the greatest hope . . . for our dead of any people on the earth" if they have died in the faith (TPJS, p. 359). He was referring to their possession of another testament of Christ (the Book of Mormon) and to additional latter-day scriptures that contain newly revealed truth about the purpose of mortal existence, the state of life after death, the eternity of the marriage covenant, and the plan of salvation generally. This additional knowledge gives Latter-day Saints special reason for hope in this life and for life in the worlds to come.

JAMES K. LYON

HOPE OF ISRAEL

The phrase "hope of Israel" appears three times in scripture: Jeremiah 14:8; 17:13; and Acts 28:20. These passages refer to Israel's Lord and Savior as the "hope of Israel." Latter-day Saints believe that all blessings or promises associated with this hope are dependent upon acceptance of, and obedience to, Israel's God, Jesus Christ (see JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST).

The phrase "hope of Israel" also calls to mind the expected fulfillment of divine promises made to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their posterity. The promises included an inheritance in the PROMISED LAND, combined with prosperity and peace—conditioned on their obedience—and an endless posterity that will continue "in the world and out of the world" (D&C 132:29–33; cf. Gen. 15:5; see also ABRAHAMIC COVENANT). Only through Jesus Christ and the latter-day RESTORATION of his Church will the fulfillment come of these promises made to the fathers (cf. 3 Ne. 20:10–46; Isa. 11:10–12; Jer. 14:8, 13; 1 Tim. 1:1; Titus 2:11–13).

In his defense before King Agrippa, Paul referred to this hope (Acts 26:6–8). Apparently Paul, as well as other prophets, believed that the full redemption of Israel can be realized only after the Resurrection, when Jesus Christ comes to rule in his millennial kingdom (cf. Acts 24:15; 28:20; Ps. 16:9–11; 37:1–11; Isa. 26:19; Ezek. 37:1–14).

For Latter-day Saints, the phrase "hope of Israel" is well known through the words of a familiar hymn (Hymns, 259) which characterize the youth of ZION as the "Hope of Israel." They are to "rise in might" and wield "the sword of truth and right" above hosts marshaled in "ranks of sin." If the youth willingly heed the call to battle against sin and error, remaining watchful and prayerful, they will see victory.

[See also Covenant Israel; Israel.]

JOHN M. MADSEN

HORNE, MARY ISABELLA

From 1870 to 1904 Mary Isabella Hales Horne (1818–1905) was president of the Senior Cooperative RETRENCHMENT ASSOCIATION, an organization that spearheaded a number of women's activities, including a Churchwide retrenchment from "worldly," or materialistic, pursuits in the 1870s, and a movement in support of plural marriage in the 1880s. During most of the three decades, she was also president of the Salt Lake Stake RELIEF SOCIETY and treasurer of the Central (later General) Board of Relief Society.

Mary Isabella Hales was born on November 20, 1818, in Rainham, Kent County, England. She have faith, ye hope for things which are not seen, which are true" [Alma 32:21]). It is also an essential attitude for individual salvation ("man must hope, or he cannot receive an inheritance in the place which thou hast prepared" [Ether 12:32]).

Paul's praise of "faith, hope, and charity" (1 Cor. 13:13) as basic Christian virtues expands understanding of these concepts with its intimation that faith and hope are prerequisites to developing charity—a Christlike love of others. This type of love cannot grow out of despair or disbelief. Using the same triadic concept, the Book of Mormon describes their relationship to repentance, baptism, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost, all required for salvation in the kingdom of God (2 Ne. 31:16–21). Hope is integral to the gospel formula: through steadfastness in Christ (faith), a perfect brightness of hope, and love of God (charity), the baptized can endure to the end and be saved. Having these attributes is also necessary for service in the Lord's kingdom: "If you have not faith, hope, and charity, you can do nothing" (D&C 18:19; cf. D&C 4:5).

Paul observed that the writings of ancient prophets were given "that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope" (Rom. 15:4; cf. Ps. 16:9; Prov. 10:28; 14:32; Jer. 17:7; Joel 3:16). The Prophet Joseph Smith claimed that Latter-day Saints "have the greatest hope . . . for our dead of any people on the earth" if they have died in the faith (TPJS, p. 359). He was referring to their possession of another testament of Christ (the Book of Mormon) and to additional latter-day scriptures that contain newly revealed truth about the purpose of mortal existence, the state of life after death, the eternity of the marriage covenant, and the plan of salvation generally. This additional knowledge gives Latter-day Saints special reason for hope in this life and for life in the worlds to come.

JAMES K. LYON

HOPE OF ISRAEL

The phrase "hope of Israel" appears three times in scripture: Jeremiah 14:8; 17:13; and Acts 28:20. These passages refer to Israel's Lord and Savior as the "hope of Israel." Latter-day Saints believe that all blessings or promises associated with this hope are dependent upon acceptance of, and obedience to, Israel's God, Jesus Christ (see JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST).

The phrase "hope of Israel" also calls to mind the expected fulfillment of divine promises made to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their posterity. The promises included an inheritance in the PROMISED LAND, combined with prosperity and peace—conditioned on their obedience—and an endless posterity that will continue "in the world and out of the world" (D&C 132:29–33; cf. Gen. 15:5; see also ABRAHAMIC COVENANT). Only through Jesus Christ and the latter-day RESTORATION of his Church will the fulfillment come of these promises made to the fathers (cf. 3 Ne. 20:10–46; Isa. 11:10–12; Jer. 14:8, 13; 1 Tim. 1:1; Titus 2:11–13).

In his defense before King Agrippa, Paul referred to this hope (Acts 26:6–8). Apparently Paul, as well as other prophets, believed that the full redemption of Israel can be realized only after the Resurrection, when Jesus Christ comes to rule in his millennial kingdom (cf. Acts 24:15; 28:20; Ps. 16:9–11; 37:1–11; Isa. 26:19; Ezek. 37:1–14).

For Latter-day Saints, the phrase "hope of Israel" is well known through the words of a familiar hymn (Hymns, 259) which characterize the youth of ZION as the "Hope of Israel." They are to "rise in might" and wield "the sword of truth and right" above hosts marshaled in "ranks of sin." If the youth willingly heed the call to battle against sin and error, remaining watchful and prayerful, they will see victory.

[See also Covenant Israel; Israel.]

JOHN M. MADSEN

HORNE, MARY ISABELLA

From 1870 to 1904 Mary Isabella Hales Horne (1818–1905) was president of the Senior Cooperative RETRENCHMENT ASSOCIATION, an organization that spearheaded a number of women's activities, including a Churchwide retrenchment from "worldly," or materialistic, pursuits in the 1870s, and a movement in support of plural marriage in the 1880s. During most of the three decades, she was also president of the Salt Lake Stake RELIEF SOCIETY and treasurer of the Central (later General) Board of Relief Society.

Mary Isabella Hales was born on November 20, 1818, in Rainham, Kent County, England. She have faith, ye hope for things which are not seen, which are true" [Alma 32:21]). It is also an essential attitude for individual salvation ("man must hope, or he cannot receive an inheritance in the place which thou hast prepared" [Ether 12:32]).

Paul's praise of "faith, hope, and charity" (1 Cor. 13:13) as basic Christian virtues expands understanding of these concepts with its intimation that faith and hope are prerequisites to developing charity—a Christlike love of others. This type of love cannot grow out of despair or disbelief. Using the same triadic concept, the Book of Mormon describes their relationship to repentance, baptism, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost, all required for salvation in the kingdom of God (2 Ne. 31:16–21). Hope is integral to the gospel formula: through steadfastness in Christ (faith), a perfect brightness of hope, and love of God (charity), the baptized can endure to the end and be saved. Having these attributes is also necessary for service in the Lord's kingdom: "If you have not faith, hope, and charity, you can do nothing" (D&C 18:19; cf. D&C 4:5).

Paul observed that the writings of ancient prophets were given "that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope" (Rom. 15:4; cf. Ps. 16:9; Prov. 10:28; 14:32; Jer. 17:7; Joel 3:16). The Prophet Joseph Smith claimed that Latter-day Saints "have the greatest hope . . . for our dead of any people on the earth" if they have died in the faith (TPJS, p. 359). He was referring to their possession of another testament of Christ (the Book of Mormon) and to additional latter-day scriptures that contain newly revealed truth about the purpose of mortal existence, the state of life after death, the eternity of the marriage covenant, and the plan of salvation generally. This additional knowledge gives Latter-day Saints special reason for hope in this life and for life in the worlds to come.

JAMES K. LYON

HOPE OF ISRAEL

The phrase "hope of Israel" appears three times in scripture: Jeremiah 14:8; 17:13; and Acts 28:20. These passages refer to Israel's Lord and Savior as the "hope of Israel." Latter-day Saints believe that all blessings or promises associated with this hope are dependent upon acceptance of, and obedience to, Israel's God, Jesus Christ (see JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST).

The phrase "hope of Israel" also calls to mind the expected fulfillment of divine promises made to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their posterity. The promises included an inheritance in the PROMISED LAND, combined with prosperity and peace—conditioned on their obedience—and an endless posterity that will continue "in the world and out of the world" (D&C 132:29–33; cf. Gen. 15:5; see also ABRAHAMIC COVENANT). Only through Jesus Christ and the latter-day RESTORATION of his Church will the fulfillment come of these promises made to the fathers (cf. 3 Ne. 20:10–46; Isa. 11:10–12; Jer. 14:8, 13; 1 Tim. 1:1; Titus 2:11–13).

In his defense before King Agrippa, Paul referred to this hope (Acts 26:6–8). Apparently Paul, as well as other prophets, believed that the full redemption of Israel can be realized only after the Resurrection, when Jesus Christ comes to rule in his millennial kingdom (cf. Acts 24:15; 28:20; Ps. 16:9–11; 37:1–11; Isa. 26:19; Ezek. 37:1–14).

For Latter-day Saints, the phrase "hope of Israel" is well known through the words of a familiar hymn (Hymns, 259) which characterize the youth of ZION as the "Hope of Israel." They are to "rise in might" and wield "the sword of truth and right" above hosts marshaled in "ranks of sin." If the youth willingly heed the call to battle against sin and error, remaining watchful and prayerful, they will see victory.

[See also Covenant Israel; Israel.]

JOHN M. MADSEN

HORNE, MARY ISABELLA

From 1870 to 1904 Mary Isabella Hales Horne (1818–1905) was president of the Senior Cooperative RETRENCHMENT ASSOCIATION, an organization that spearheaded a number of women's activities, including a Churchwide retrenchment from "worldly," or materialistic, pursuits in the 1870s, and a movement in support of plural marriage in the 1880s. During most of the three decades, she was also president of the Salt Lake Stake RELIEF SOCIETY and treasurer of the Central (later General) Board of Relief Society.

Mary Isabella Hales was born on November 20, 1818, in Rainham, Kent County, England. She was the oldest of seven children born to Stephen and Mary Ann Hales. Her father was a shoemaker and her mother a seamstress.

Mary Isabella Horne (1818–1905) was an original member of the Relief Society in 1842. She was Relief Society president in the Salt Lake Stake for 30 years. At the same time, she was president of the Senior Cooperative Retrenchment Association from 1870 to 1904.

The Hales family immigrated to York (now Toronto), Canada, where Isabella met Joseph Horne at a Methodist camp meeting in 1834. They were married on May 9, 1836, and were baptized members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in July 1836 by Orson Hyde, an apostle. The newlyweds became friends of the Prophet Joseph SMITH, and both had a firm testimony of his prophetic calling. In 1838, they gathered with the Saints to Far West, Missouri, and subsequently suffered through the violent expulsion of the Saints from Missouri. They moved to Quincy and NAUVOO, Illinois, and then crossed the plains to the Salt Lake Valley in 1847. The Hornes had fifteen children, including three sets of twins.

In 1869 President Brigham YOUNG challenged Isabella Horne to encourage the women of the Church to spend less time preparing elegant meals and sewing fancy clothing, and more time nurturing their spiritual development. On February 10, 1870, the Senior Cooperative Retrenchment Association was formally organized, with Mary Isabella Horne as president. Under her direction, the association also supported local Relief Society, PRIMARY, and YOUNG WOMEN'S organizations; the WOMAN'S EXPONENT; the 1876 centennial fair; and the UNITED ORDER. It also supported mass meetings in which resolutions were drafted in strong support of WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

In December 1877, Isabella Horne was called to preside over the Salt Lake Stake Relief Society. She served twenty-six years, directing a total of sixty-five WARD Relief Society presidencies. She presided over Relief Society sessions of the women's conferences of the stake, which were attended by many women from throughout the territory until the first general auxiliary conferences were inaugurated in 1889. She also instituted a nurse training program in the stake that was later adopted by Relief Society's general officers. In 1880 the Central Board of the Relief Society was organized and she was appointed treasurer, a position she held until 1901.

In addition to these assignments, Isabella Horne served as a member of the DESERET HOSPITAL committee (1882–1894); as a counselor to Zina D. H. YOUNG in the presidency of the Deseret Silk Association, established in 1876; and as president of the Women's Cooperative Mercantile and Manufacturing Institution from 1890 to 1905.

She died on August 25, 1905, at the age of eighty-six. At her death, Emmeline B. WELLS, another prominent leader among Utah women, said of her that she "was a born leader, a sort of General among women and indeed in this respect might surpass most men, of extraordinary ability. . . . A woman of great force of character, and wonderful ability, such a one as might stand at the head of a great institution and carry it on successfully. . . . Sister Horne can appropriately be called a stalwart, a champion for the rights of her own sex, and indeed for all mankind" [Woman's Exponent 36 (Apr. 1908):58].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Horne, Mrs. Joseph. "Migration and Settlement of the Latter-day Saints." Typescript, 1884. Bancroft Library, University of California, Berkeley.

Kramer, Lyneve Wilson, and Eva Durrant Wilson. "Mary Isabella Hales Horne: Faithful Sister and Leader." Ensign 12 (Aug. 1982):63–66.

SUSAN ARRINGTON MADSEN

---

HOSANNA SHOUT

Among Latter-day Saints, the sacred ceremony of the Hosanna Shout is usually reserved for TEMPLE DEDICATIONS. It is given in the spirit of thanksgiving and petition, fulfilling the instruction to bless the name of the Lord with loud voices and "with a sound of rejoicing", with "hosannas to him that sitteth upon the throne forever" (D&C 19:37; 36:3; 39:19; 124:101).

When the ordinance of the WASHING OF FEET was introduced at Kirtland, shouts of hosanna were viewed as a sealing benediction on both private and quorum prayer and then on the dedicatory prayer. At prayer meetings in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE, the Saints sometimes used related phrases such as "Blessed is the name of the Most High God" and "Glory to God in the highest" (HC 2:386).

The Hosanna Shout is whole-souled, given to the full limit of one's strength. The congregation stands and in unison shouts the words "Hosanna, Hosanna, Hosanna to God and the Lamb. Amen, Amen, and Amen," repeating them three times. This is usually accompanied by the rhythmic waving of white handkerchiefs with uplifted hands. The epithet "Lamb" relates to the condescension and atonement of Jesus Christ.

The Hosanna Shout memorializes the pre-earthly COUNCIL IN HEAVEN, as "when . . . all the sons of God shouted for joy" (Job 38:7). It also recalls the hosannas and the waving of palm branches accorded the Messiah as he entered Jerusalem. And hosannas welcomed him as he appeared to the Nephites. President Lorenzo Snow taught that this shout will herald the Messiah when he comes in the glory of the Father (cf. 1 Thes. 4:16).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Woodbury, Lael J. "The Origin and Uses of the Sacred Hosanna Shout." In Sperry Lecture Series. Provo, Utah, 1975.

LAEL J. WOODBURY

---

HOSPITALS

Members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have historically felt a responsibility to care for the physical well-being of fellow Church members and their neighbors. This early commitment was typified by the establishment of a board of health for the city of Nauvoo, Illinois, and a formal council of health in Salt Lake City in 1849. The Church has continued to sponsor health services through the operation of several hospitals and a welfare program.

In 1874, because of the high infant and maternity mortality rate, RELIEF SOCIETY president Eliza R. SNOW, with the support of Church President Brigham YOUNG, urged a number of women to obtain medical degrees at Eastern medical colleges. In 1882, under her direction, the DESERET HOSPITAL was established in Salt Lake City and staffed and administered primarily by Latter-day Saint women doctors. While it was highly regarded by the community and supported in part by the Relief Society and the RETRENCHMENT SOCIETY, it closed only eight years later because of inadequate funding.

Though the Deseret Hospital was short-lived, interest in having a hospital sponsored by the Church continued. In January 1905, the Dr. W. H. Groves LDS Hospital opened, also in Salt Lake City, becoming one of several denominational hospitals in the area. It was largely funded through a bequest of W. H. Groves, an LDS dentist who had come to Utah from Nottingham, England. The hospital, a five-story complex with eighty beds, was equipped with up-to-date medical equipment and innovations, including an elevator and a nurse-calling system. In 1924 the Cottonwood Maternity Hospital, a major facility in childbirth care, was established and was maintained thereafter for several years by the Cottonwood Stake Relief Society in Salt Lake County.

wart, a champion for the rights of her own sex, and indeed for all mankind" [Woman's Exponent 36 (Apr. 1908):58].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Horne, Mrs. Joseph. "Migration and Settlement of the Latter-day Saints." Typescript, 1884. Bancroft Library, University of California, Berkeley.

Kramer, Lyneve Wilson, and Eva Durrant Wilson. "Mary Isabella Hales Horne: Faithful Sister and Leader." Ensign 12 (Aug. 1982):63–66.

SUSAN ARRINGTON MADSEN

---

HOSANNA SHOUT

Among Latter-day Saints, the sacred ceremony of the Hosanna Shout is usually reserved for TEMPLE DEDICATIONS. It is given in the spirit of thanksgiving and petition, fulfilling the instruction to bless the name of the Lord with loud voices and "with a sound of rejoicing", with "hosannas to him that sitteth upon the throne forever" (D&C 19:37; 36:3; 39:19; 124:101).

When the ordinance of the WASHING OF FEET was introduced at Kirtland, shouts of hosanna were viewed as a sealing benediction on both private and quorum prayer and then on the dedicatory prayer. At prayer meetings in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE, the Saints sometimes used related phrases such as "Blessed is the name of the Most High God" and "Glory to God in the highest" (HC 2:386).

The Hosanna Shout is whole-souled, given to the full limit of one's strength. The congregation stands and in unison shouts the words "Hosanna, Hosanna, Hosanna to God and the Lamb. Amen, Amen, and Amen," repeating them three times. This is usually accompanied by the rhythmic waving of white handkerchiefs with uplifted hands. The epithet "Lamb" relates to the condescension and atonement of Jesus Christ.

The Hosanna Shout memorializes the pre-earthly COUNCIL IN HEAVEN, as "when . . . all the sons of God shouted for joy" (Job 38:7). It also recalls the hosannas and the waving of palm branches accorded the Messiah as he entered Jerusalem. And hosannas welcomed him as he appeared to the Nephites. President Lorenzo Snow taught that this shout will herald the Messiah when he comes in the glory of the Father (cf. 1 Thes. 4:16).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Woodbury, Lael J. "The Origin and Uses of the Sacred Hosanna Shout." In Sperry Lecture Series. Provo, Utah, 1975.

LAEL J. WOODBURY

---

HOSPITALS

Members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have historically felt a responsibility to care for the physical well-being of fellow Church members and their neighbors. This early commitment was typified by the establishment of a board of health for the city of Nauvoo, Illinois, and a formal council of health in Salt Lake City in 1849. The Church has continued to sponsor health services through the operation of several hospitals and a welfare program.

In 1874, because of the high infant and maternity mortality rate, RELIEF SOCIETY president Eliza R. SNOW, with the support of Church President Brigham YOUNG, urged a number of women to obtain medical degrees at Eastern medical colleges. In 1882, under her direction, the DESERET HOSPITAL was established in Salt Lake City and staffed and administered primarily by Latter-day Saint women doctors. While it was highly regarded by the community and supported in part by the Relief Society and the RETRENCHMENT SOCIETY, it closed only eight years later because of inadequate funding.

Though the Deseret Hospital was short-lived, interest in having a hospital sponsored by the Church continued. In January 1905, the Dr. W. H. Groves LDS Hospital opened, also in Salt Lake City, becoming one of several denominational hospitals in the area. It was largely funded through a bequest of W. H. Groves, an LDS dentist who had come to Utah from Nottingham, England. The hospital, a five-story complex with eighty beds, was equipped with up-to-date medical equipment and innovations, including an elevator and a nurse-calling system. In 1924 the Cottonwood Maternity Hospital, a major facility in childbirth care, was established and was maintained thereafter for several years by the Cottonwood Stake Relief Society in Salt Lake County.

wart, a champion for the rights of her own sex, and indeed for all mankind" [Woman's Exponent 36 (Apr. 1908):58].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Horne, Mrs. Joseph. "Migration and Settlement of the Latter-day Saints." Typescript, 1884. Bancroft Library, University of California, Berkeley.

Kramer, Lyneve Wilson, and Eva Durrant Wilson. "Mary Isabella Hales Horne: Faithful Sister and Leader." Ensign 12 (Aug. 1982):63–66.

SUSAN ARRINGTON MADSEN

---

HOSANNA SHOUT

Among Latter-day Saints, the sacred ceremony of the Hosanna Shout is usually reserved for TEMPLE DEDICATIONS. It is given in the spirit of thanksgiving and petition, fulfilling the instruction to bless the name of the Lord with loud voices and "with a sound of rejoicing", with "hosannas to him that sitteth upon the throne forever" (D&C 19:37; 36:3; 39:19; 124:101).

When the ordinance of the WASHING OF FEET was introduced at Kirtland, shouts of hosanna were viewed as a sealing benediction on both private and quorum prayer and then on the dedicatory prayer. At prayer meetings in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE, the Saints sometimes used related phrases such as "Blessed is the name of the Most High God" and "Glory to God in the highest" (HC 2:386).

The Hosanna Shout is whole-souled, given to the full limit of one's strength. The congregation stands and in unison shouts the words "Hosanna, Hosanna, Hosanna to God and the Lamb. Amen, Amen, and Amen," repeating them three times. This is usually accompanied by the rhythmic waving of white handkerchiefs with uplifted hands. The epithet "Lamb" relates to the condescension and atonement of Jesus Christ.

The Hosanna Shout memorializes the pre-earthly COUNCIL IN HEAVEN, as "when . . . all the sons of God shouted for joy" (Job 38:7). It also recalls the hosannas and the waving of palm branches accorded the Messiah as he entered Jerusalem. And hosannas welcomed him as he appeared to the Nephites. President Lorenzo Snow taught that this shout will herald the Messiah when he comes in the glory of the Father (cf. 1 Thes. 4:16).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Woodbury, Lael J. "The Origin and Uses of the Sacred Hosanna Shout." In Sperry Lecture Series. Provo, Utah, 1975.

LAEL J. WOODBURY

---

HOSPITALS

Members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have historically felt a responsibility to care for the physical well-being of fellow Church members and their neighbors. This early commitment was typified by the establishment of a board of health for the city of Nauvoo, Illinois, and a formal council of health in Salt Lake City in 1849. The Church has continued to sponsor health services through the operation of several hospitals and a welfare program.

In 1874, because of the high infant and maternity mortality rate, RELIEF SOCIETY president Eliza R. SNOW, with the support of Church President Brigham YOUNG, urged a number of women to obtain medical degrees at Eastern medical colleges. In 1882, under her direction, the DESERET HOSPITAL was established in Salt Lake City and staffed and administered primarily by Latter-day Saint women doctors. While it was highly regarded by the community and supported in part by the Relief Society and the RETRENCHMENT SOCIETY, it closed only eight years later because of inadequate funding.

Though the Deseret Hospital was short-lived, interest in having a hospital sponsored by the Church continued. In January 1905, the Dr. W. H. Groves LDS Hospital opened, also in Salt Lake City, becoming one of several denominational hospitals in the area. It was largely funded through a bequest of W. H. Groves, an LDS dentist who had come to Utah from Nottingham, England. The hospital, a five-story complex with eighty beds, was equipped with up-to-date medical equipment and innovations, including an elevator and a nurse-calling system. In 1924 the Cottonwood Maternity Hospital, a major facility in childbirth care, was established and was maintained thereafter for several years by the Cottonwood Stake Relief Society in Salt Lake County.

The Dr. W. H. Groves LDS Hospital in Salt Lake City, as it appeared when established in 1905, was one of a number of hospitals owned and operated by the LDS Church between 1882 and 1974.

LDS Hospital, the 571-bed successor to the Groves LDS Hospital, is regarded as one of the West's premier tertiary care centers. The hospital supports continuous physician and nursing education and is a leader in medical research, including the treatment of heart disease, organ transplants, respiratory disorders, and obstetrical care, and in its pioneering use of computers in health care, both clinically and administratively.

In 1911 May Anderson of the Primary Association recognized the need for a medical center to meet the unique needs of children. Her efforts, with support of general Primary president Louie B. Felt, led to the establishment of the children's ward at the LDS Hospital in 1913. In 1922 the Primary proposed that a separate facility be established, emphasizing the need for children to be treated by pediatric professionals. Consequently, the Church purchased and remodeled an old home in downtown Salt Lake City for use as the LDS Children's Convalescent Hospital, under the supervision of the Primary Association.

During the next twenty-five years, nearly 6,000 children were treated, and the hospital attracted pediatric specialists of national and international reputation. By 1937 this facility became inadequate, but not until after World War II were sufficient funds gathered to build a new one.

In 1922, to help support charity cases, Primary board member Nelle Talmage suggested an annual "Penny Day" when Church members would contribute pennies equaling their age. Children would contribute pennies on their birthdays. The program continues presently as the Pennies by the Inch campaign (a penny donated for each inch of the donor's height), which furthers the idea of children helping other children in need.

A new Primary Children's Hospital facility was completed in 1953, and its size was doubled in 1966. The LDS Hospital shortly thereafter closed its pediatric unit, shifting its care for infants and children to the Primary Children's Medical Center. In 1990 the Center moved to a larger facility at the University of Utah Medical Complex and has become one of the finest children's hospitals in the United States.

In 1963 the Church owned or administered fifteen hospitals in the intermountain area under the direction of the PRESIDING BISHOPRIC. In 1970 the Health Services Corporation of the Church was organized and a commissioner of health was appointed to oversee the rapidly expanding health needs of the Church and to unite the fifteen hospitals into a coordinated health care system. This system demanded increasing amounts of administrative time and financial commitment by the Church.

In 1974 the First Presidency announced that the Church's fifteen hospitals would be donated and turned over to a new nonprofit organization so that the Church could devote "the full effort of [its] Health Services . . . to the health needs of the worldwide Church." While noting that the hospitals were "a vigorous and financially viable enterprise," the First Presidency emphasized that "the operation of hospitals is not central to the mission of the Church." The First Presidency further indicated that with the expansion of the Church in many nations it was "difficult to justify the provision of curative services in a single, affluent, geographical locality" (news release, Sept. 6, 1974).

On April 1, 1975, the Presiding Bishopric signed the final divestiture agreement transferring ownership and management of LDS Hospital, Primary Children's Hospital, and thirteen other facilities to the new philanthropic organization. This nonprofit organization was named Intermountain Health Care. It is directed by a geographically and religiously diverse board of trustees. With the divestiture of the hospitals, the Church rapidly expanded its medical missionary program—a program more compatible with its worldwide religious mission.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bush, Lester E., Jr. "The Mormon Tradition." In Caring and Curing, ed. R. Numbers and D. Amundsen, pp. 397–420. New York, 1986.

DeWitt, Robert J. Medicine and the Mormons. Bountiful, Utah, 1981.

Josephson, Marba. "The Primary Children's Hospital." IE 55 (Oct. 1952):714–17, 734, 736, 738, 740, 742, 744–45.

WILLIAM N. JONES

HUMANITARIAN SERVICE

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has a continuing commitment to relieve human suffering, to help eliminate life-threatening conditions, and to promote self-reliance among all people. Assistance is to be provided as Christian service, without regard to race, nationality, or religion. This obligation is an expression of scriptural counsel such as is found in the Book of Mormon:

They did not send away any who were naked, or . . . hungry, or that were athirst, or that were sick, or that had not been nourished; and they did not set their hearts upon riches; therefore they were liberal to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, whether out of the church or in the church, having no respect to persons as to those who stood in need [Alma 1:30].

Church giving is possible because of donations by individual members, who honor the counsel of Joseph Smith regarding one's temporal obligation to others:

Respecting how much a man . . . shall give annually we have no special instructions to give; he is to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to provide for the widow, to dry up the tear of the orphan, to comfort the afflicted, whether in this church or in any other, or in no church at all, wherever he finds them [T&S 3:732].

The Church has always felt a responsibility to "take care of its own" (see WELFARE SERVICES), but traditionally it has also reached out to the general population in times of need, both in North America and throughout the world. As early as 1851, just four years after reaching the Salt Lake Valley, Brigham

Young instituted a program of teaching Indians to farm by appointing three men as "farmers to the Indians." By 1857 more than 700 acres were under cultivation among the Indians (L. J. Arrington, Brigham Young: American Moses, New York, 1985, pp. 217–18).

The Church has responded to major world calamities according to its ability to give. In 1918 the U.S. House of Representatives formally expressed its appreciation to the RELIEF SOCIETY women of the Church "for . . . contributions of wheat to the Government for the use of the starving women and children of the allies, and for the use of our soldiers and sailors in the army and navy of the United States" (IE 21:917). The Relief Society had provided from its storage granaries more than 200,000 bushels of "first-class milling wheat" to the United States for the cause of human liberty and to save the lives of thousands who might have suffered for the lack of bread.

Even more extensive assistance to Europe during and after World War II was made possible in part because of a Church Welfare Services plan implemented in 1936. The plan taught members frugality and provident living and encouraged donations for the needy, which then would be available for emergencies and calamities.

President David O. MCKAY summarized the Church's actions during World War II: "We have given to the national Red Cross in Washington very large sums, and expect to add to these from time to time. Insofar as contributions toward foreign sufferers in war-ridden countries is concerned, we have sent considerable sums . . . to those countries to help our needy Church membership there and have made available for charitable purposes considerable local funds in those countries" (MFP 6:163–64).

Post-World War II humanitarian aid included ninety-two railway carloads of welfare supplies (about two thousand tons) sent to Europe from the Church in Salt Lake City. Ezra Taft BENSON, then a member of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, spent 1946 in Europe supervising the distribution of this aid, consisting mainly of food, clothing, utensils, and medical supplies. These goods were supplemented by a program in which Church members in North America sent tens of thousands of individual food and clothing parcels. While a primary objective of the Church's efforts was to assist Church members in Europe, generous amounts of food and clothing were given to expanded its medical missionary program—a program more compatible with its worldwide religious mission.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bush, Lester E., Jr. "The Mormon Tradition." In Caring and Curing, ed. R. Numbers and D. Amundsen, pp. 397–420. New York, 1986.

DeWitt, Robert J. Medicine and the Mormons. Bountiful, Utah, 1981.

Josephson, Marba. "The Primary Children's Hospital." IE 55 (Oct. 1952):714–17, 734, 736, 738, 740, 742, 744–45.

WILLIAM N. JONES

HUMANITARIAN SERVICE

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has a continuing commitment to relieve human suffering, to help eliminate life-threatening conditions, and to promote self-reliance among all people. Assistance is to be provided as Christian service, without regard to race, nationality, or religion. This obligation is an expression of scriptural counsel such as is found in the Book of Mormon:

They did not send away any who were naked, or . . . hungry, or that were athirst, or that were sick, or that had not been nourished; and they did not set their hearts upon riches; therefore they were liberal to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, whether out of the church or in the church, having no respect to persons as to those who stood in need [Alma 1:30].

Church giving is possible because of donations by individual members, who honor the counsel of Joseph Smith regarding one's temporal obligation to others:

Respecting how much a man . . . shall give annually we have no special instructions to give; he is to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to provide for the widow, to dry up the tear of the orphan, to comfort the afflicted, whether in this church or in any other, or in no church at all, wherever he finds them [T&S 3:732].

The Church has always felt a responsibility to "take care of its own" (see WELFARE SERVICES), but traditionally it has also reached out to the general population in times of need, both in North America and throughout the world. As early as 1851, just four years after reaching the Salt Lake Valley, Brigham

Young instituted a program of teaching Indians to farm by appointing three men as "farmers to the Indians." By 1857 more than 700 acres were under cultivation among the Indians (L. J. Arrington, Brigham Young: American Moses, New York, 1985, pp. 217–18).

The Church has responded to major world calamities according to its ability to give. In 1918 the U.S. House of Representatives formally expressed its appreciation to the RELIEF SOCIETY women of the Church "for . . . contributions of wheat to the Government for the use of the starving women and children of the allies, and for the use of our soldiers and sailors in the army and navy of the United States" (IE 21:917). The Relief Society had provided from its storage granaries more than 200,000 bushels of "first-class milling wheat" to the United States for the cause of human liberty and to save the lives of thousands who might have suffered for the lack of bread.

Even more extensive assistance to Europe during and after World War II was made possible in part because of a Church Welfare Services plan implemented in 1936. The plan taught members frugality and provident living and encouraged donations for the needy, which then would be available for emergencies and calamities.

President David O. MCKAY summarized the Church's actions during World War II: "We have given to the national Red Cross in Washington very large sums, and expect to add to these from time to time. Insofar as contributions toward foreign sufferers in war-ridden countries is concerned, we have sent considerable sums . . . to those countries to help our needy Church membership there and have made available for charitable purposes considerable local funds in those countries" (MFP 6:163–64).

Post-World War II humanitarian aid included ninety-two railway carloads of welfare supplies (about two thousand tons) sent to Europe from the Church in Salt Lake City. Ezra Taft BENSON, then a member of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, spent 1946 in Europe supervising the distribution of this aid, consisting mainly of food, clothing, utensils, and medical supplies. These goods were supplemented by a program in which Church members in North America sent tens of thousands of individual food and clothing parcels. While a primary objective of the Church's efforts was to assist Church members in Europe, generous amounts of food and clothing were given to local child-care and feeding programs (Babbel, pp. 168–69).

In 1953, a cooperative movement on the part of all Utah denominations collected relief supplies for Greece to relieve suffering caused by earthquakes. The United Churches Ionian Relief Committee was formed with Dr. J. Frank Robinson, president of Westminster College in Salt Lake City, as chairman. Among the denominations represented were the Greek Orthodox and Roman Catholic churches, the Jewish synagogues, and the Latter-day Saints. Expressing thanks to the Church for its efforts, Mr. John Tzounis, Greek consul in San Francisco, stated: "It is no secret, and I am thankful for this opportunity to stress the fact publicly, that the contribution of the Mormon Church was the greatest single contribution to the relief fund, not only in the United States, but the whole world over" ("President McKay Given Royal Award by King of Greece," Deseret News, Dec. 4, 1954, p. 2).

The Welfare Services Missionary Program was created in 1971, allowing service beyond emergency circumstances. Health professionals called as missionaries to various lands have provided training in hospitals, clinics, and community health organizations, as well as health education for the general population through seminars and workshops. Agricultural missionaries were added to the welfare missionary ranks in 1973, giving technical assistance to farmers in Central and South America, in the South Pacific, and on Indian reservations in the United States and Canada.

The Church's humanitarian response to the proliferation of refugees coming from Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos in the 1970s began, through an agreement with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR), with a team of Welfare Services missionaries at the Phenot Nikom Refugee Camp in Thailand. From 1978 to the present, missionary teams have provided continuous training in English language and American culture for refugees bound for the United States at camps in Thailand, the Philippines, and Hong Kong.

By 1980, some 768 welfare missionaries (volunteers to give humanitarian aid) were serving in more than forty Church mission areas throughout the world. By 1990, more than 350 missionaries with specific professional backgrounds (nurses, doctors, educators, agricultural specialists) also were providing temporal assistance in many nations (including countries in eastern Europe), primarily in health, agriculture, and leadership development.

A severe drought and civil war in northeast Africa resulted in famine during 1984 and 1985. The FIRST PRESIDENCY and the Quorum of the Twelve "determined that Sunday, January 25, 1985, should be designated as the special fast day when our people will be invited to refrain from partaking two meals and contribute the equivalent value, or more, to the Church to assist those in need. All FAST OFFERING funds contributed on this day will be dedicated for the use of the victims of famine and other causes resulting in hunger and privation among people of Africa, and possibly in some other areas, . . . regardless of Church membership" (The First Presidency Letter to General and Local Priesthood Authorities, Jan. 11, 1985). This special fast day in the United States and Canada produced contributions from the Latter-day Saints of $6.4 million (Welfare Services Department, unpublished document).

The Church immediately collaborated with reputable organizations in providing temporal assistance to the famine-stricken populations of northeast Africa. Specific contributions of grain, tents, and trucks for transporting the needed goods were made to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and Catholic Relief Services, valued at more than $3.5 million. Additional donations were made to Catholic Relief Services, CARE, and Africare for projects relating to longer-term relief in the same geographic region (see ECONOMIC AID).

Additional monies were later contributed to the ICRC and Catholic Relief Services for airlifting needed food to isolated populations in Ethiopia and the Sudan, where civil strife made trucking the goods impossible. The entire $6.4 million contributed during the first fast, as well as the accumulated interest, had been spent for assistance to Africa by the end of 1986. A second fast, also undertaken in 1985 in concert with a resolution by the U.S. Congress (The First Presidency Letter to General and Local Priesthood Authorities, Jan. 11, 1985), produced an additional $4 million to assist the needy. Special events such as these supplement regular, ongoing humanitarian efforts in the Church. Surpluses from the Welfare Services system are regularly contributed to charitable organizations in the form of food, clothing, and other in-kind household goods throughout the United States and internationally.

Most recently, more than twenty development projects have been sponsored by the Church in Africa (e.g., Kenya, Zimbabwe, Mozambique, Zaire, Chad, Mali, Nigeria, Ghana) as well as additional projects in Central and South America, Asia, and the United States.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Babbel, Frederick W. On Wings of Faith. Salt Lake City, 1972.
- Ballard, M. Russell. "Prepare to Serve." Ensign 15 (May 1985):41-43.
- Benson, Ezra T. "Ministering to Needs through the Lord's Storehouse System." Ensign 7 (May 1977):82-84.
- Ferguson, Isaac C. "Freely Given." Ensign 18 (Aug. 1988):10-15.
- "Food for Destitute Greeks." Deseret News (Church Section), Feb. 20, 1954, pp. 8-9.
- Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Victory over Death." Ensign 15 (May 1985):51-54, 59.
- Pace, Glenn L. "Principles and Programs." Ensign 16 (May 1986):23-25.
- Smith, Joseph F. "Our Duty to Humanity, to God and to Country." IE 20 (May 1917):645-56.
- Times and Seasons* 3 (Mar. 15, 1842):732.

ISAAC C. FERGUSON

HUMILITY

True humility is the recognition of one's imperfection that is acquired only as one joyfully, voluntarily, and quietly submits one's whole life to God's will (Micah 6:8; James 4:6; Mosiah 4:10; Morm. 5:24; Ether 6:17). This includes obeying in love his every commandment, repenting of sins, honoring with endurance his every COVENANT, and striving for greater PERFECTION with self-discipline. Humility can result only from faithful submission to the teachings of Jesus Christ. Seeds of humility can be experienced in spontaneous moments of overwhelming gratitude, awe, and reverence when individuals recognize God's hand in the beauty of a sunset, the power of a waterfall, the miracle of life, or the magnitude and glory of human creations. Thus humility is not only a state of being but a process of obeying and reconciling one's life to God's providence as it is made known through his scriptures, prophets, creations, and answers to prayer.

Those seeking to be humble are counseled to pursue knowledge of God's glory, to experience his goodness and love, to receive a REMISSION OF SINS, and to "retain in remembrance, the greatness of God, and your own nothingness, and his goodness and long-suffering towards you" (Mosiah 4:11).

The Church promotes understanding of humility by encouraging members to study the scriptures and writings of Church leaders who pair this virtue with other virtues such as being meek, patient, loving, and submissive (Mosiah 3:19); gentle, long-suffering, diligent in obeying God's commandments, and full of hope and charity (Alma 7:23, 24); faithful and prayerful (D&C 105:23); repentant (Moro. 8:10); wise (Alma 32:12); able to bear adversity and weaknesses (Ether 12:27); joyful and pure in heart (Hel. 3:35); knowledgeable (D&C 4:6); self-disciplined; and teachable and broken-hearted. A lifestyle void of humility exhibits undesirable qualities: PRIDE (Hel. 4:12); haughtiness (Isa. 2:11), wickedness (2 Ne. 28:14), guile (D&C 124:97), jealousy (D&C 67:10), evil (2 Chr. 36:12), hate, envy, anger, arrogance, inordinate ambition, fault-finding, and self-righteousness.

Latter-day Saints with a TESTIMONY pursue humility as a duty, believing it is God's will to seek this virtue. "God will have a humble people. We can either choose to be humble or we can be compelled to be humble" (Benson, 1989, p. 6). As the foundation for spiritual progress, humility disposes people to hear God's word, to be receptive to inspiration, revelation, and spiritual wisdom. It benefits members to accept CALLINGS in the Church. Humility must accompany REPENTANCE before BAPTISM (D&C 20:37), approaching the divine with "a broken heart and contrite spirit" (2 Ne. 2:7; 3 Ne. 12:19; D&C 20:37). To seek humility is to ask it of God, to recognize it as fruit of a spiritual life (2 Chr. 33:12). Divine grace, strength, and forgiveness are promised to the humble (1 Pet. 5:5; 3 Ne. 4:33; Ether 9:35; D&C 1:28; 104:23). Scripture warns the proud of impending afflictions, temptations, and even destruction (Isa. 10:33; 2 Chr. 12:7; Mosiah 3:18; Morm. 5:24; D&C 5:28, 32). Adversity and weaknesses can humble individuals, bringing them closer to God. TRIALS often develop spirituality and humility. However, Church leaders emphasize that good conduct and humility without covenants and ORDINANCES will neither redeem nor exalt (Packer, p. 82).

Latter-day Saints are enjoined to imitate Jesus, who was meek and lowly, following not only his example and teachings but also those of his prophets as they walk in his footsteps. "Only Jesus Christ is uniquely qualified to provide that hope,

Most recently, more than twenty development projects have been sponsored by the Church in Africa (e.g., Kenya, Zimbabwe, Mozambique, Zaire, Chad, Mali, Nigeria, Ghana) as well as additional projects in Central and South America, Asia, and the United States.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Babbel, Frederick W. On Wings of Faith. Salt Lake City, 1972.
- Ballard, M. Russell. "Prepare to Serve." Ensign 15 (May 1985):41-43.
- Benson, Ezra T. "Ministering to Needs through the Lord's Storehouse System." Ensign 7 (May 1977):82-84.
- Ferguson, Isaac C. "Freely Given." Ensign 18 (Aug. 1988):10-15.
- "Food for Destitute Greeks." Deseret News (Church Section), Feb. 20, 1954, pp. 8-9.
- Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Victory over Death." Ensign 15 (May 1985):51-54, 59.
- Pace, Glenn L. "Principles and Programs." Ensign 16 (May 1986):23-25.
- Smith, Joseph F. "Our Duty to Humanity, to God and to Country." IE 20 (May 1917):645-56.
- Times and Seasons* 3 (Mar. 15, 1842):732.

ISAAC C. FERGUSON

HUMILITY

True humility is the recognition of one's imperfection that is acquired only as one joyfully, voluntarily, and quietly submits one's whole life to God's will (Micah 6:8; James 4:6; Mosiah 4:10; Morm. 5:24; Ether 6:17). This includes obeying in love his every commandment, repenting of sins, honoring with endurance his every COVENANT, and striving for greater PERFECTION with self-discipline. Humility can result only from faithful submission to the teachings of Jesus Christ. Seeds of humility can be experienced in spontaneous moments of overwhelming gratitude, awe, and reverence when individuals recognize God's hand in the beauty of a sunset, the power of a waterfall, the miracle of life, or the magnitude and glory of human creations. Thus humility is not only a state of being but a process of obeying and reconciling one's life to God's providence as it is made known through his scriptures, prophets, creations, and answers to prayer.

Those seeking to be humble are counseled to pursue knowledge of God's glory, to experience his goodness and love, to receive a REMISSION OF SINS, and to "retain in remembrance, the greatness of God, and your own nothingness, and his goodness and long-suffering towards you" (Mosiah 4:11).

The Church promotes understanding of humility by encouraging members to study the scriptures and writings of Church leaders who pair this virtue with other virtues such as being meek, patient, loving, and submissive (Mosiah 3:19); gentle, long-suffering, diligent in obeying God's commandments, and full of hope and charity (Alma 7:23, 24); faithful and prayerful (D&C 105:23); repentant (Moro. 8:10); wise (Alma 32:12); able to bear adversity and weaknesses (Ether 12:27); joyful and pure in heart (Hel. 3:35); knowledgeable (D&C 4:6); self-disciplined; and teachable and broken-hearted. A lifestyle void of humility exhibits undesirable qualities: PRIDE (Hel. 4:12); haughtiness (Isa. 2:11), wickedness (2 Ne. 28:14), guile (D&C 124:97), jealousy (D&C 67:10), evil (2 Chr. 36:12), hate, envy, anger, arrogance, inordinate ambition, fault-finding, and self-righteousness.

Latter-day Saints with a TESTIMONY pursue humility as a duty, believing it is God's will to seek this virtue. "God will have a humble people. We can either choose to be humble or we can be compelled to be humble" (Benson, 1989, p. 6). As the foundation for spiritual progress, humility disposes people to hear God's word, to be receptive to inspiration, revelation, and spiritual wisdom. It benefits members to accept CALLINGS in the Church. Humility must accompany REPENTANCE before BAPTISM (D&C 20:37), approaching the divine with "a broken heart and contrite spirit" (2 Ne. 2:7; 3 Ne. 12:19; D&C 20:37). To seek humility is to ask it of God, to recognize it as fruit of a spiritual life (2 Chr. 33:12). Divine grace, strength, and forgiveness are promised to the humble (1 Pet. 5:5; 3 Ne. 4:33; Ether 9:35; D&C 1:28; 104:23). Scripture warns the proud of impending afflictions, temptations, and even destruction (Isa. 10:33; 2 Chr. 12:7; Mosiah 3:18; Morm. 5:24; D&C 5:28, 32). Adversity and weaknesses can humble individuals, bringing them closer to God. TRIALS often develop spirituality and humility. However, Church leaders emphasize that good conduct and humility without covenants and ORDINANCES will neither redeem nor exalt (Packer, p. 82).

Latter-day Saints are enjoined to imitate Jesus, who was meek and lowly, following not only his example and teachings but also those of his prophets as they walk in his footsteps. "Only Jesus Christ is uniquely qualified to provide that hope, that confidence and that strength to . . . rise above our human failings. To do that, we must . . . live by his laws and teachings" (Benson, 1983, p. 6). To become humble like Jesus, to become his disciples, individuals must take up their crosses, trust in him, approach perfection through wise choices, and submissively endure to the end (D&C 122:7). Christ's pattern of humility was unblemished. Though members aspire to this perfection, they are to keep perspective on their fallibility by balancing unfulfilled aspirations to emulate Christ with positive recognition of his gifts to them, of their worth as God's children, and of their progress toward humility over a lifetime. In the face of social pressures for self-interested individuality, the Church stresses selflessness and humility as keys for returning to God. Persons who would attain the fulness of the immortalizing promises of the ATONEMENT must persist in achieving humility in spite of obstacles and societal ethics that distract from this goal (Mosiah 3:19).

The desire for humility is nourished by an understanding acceptance of the greatness of the Savior's sacrifice to provide SALVATION and RESURRECTION for all. As people comprehend God's love for them, hearts and minds will be humbled and drawn into closer unity with him and with all fellow beings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. "Jesus Christ: Our Savior and Redeemer." Ensign 13 (Nov. 1983):6-8.
- . "To the Elderly in the Church." Ensign 19 (May 1989):4-8.
- Maxwell, Neal A. Meek and Lowly. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Packer, Boyd K. "The Only True Church." Ensign 15 (Nov. 1985):80-82.

ALICE T. CLARK

HUMOR

Although LDS doctrines, practices, and experiences have in some circles evoked a measure of scoffing and laughter over the years, only since the 1970s has a body of published humor dealing with the Mormon experience appeared. Institutionalized LDS humor divides roughly into an early period when the Church was the object of outsiders' jokes and a modern period when members have become able to laugh at themselves.

As with many minority groups, the first humor that dealt with the Church was created by antagonists to turn people away from it. Much of this humor took the form of cartoons in the popular press, and verses and parodies of popular or folk songs (Bunker and Bitton, 1983). These attacks were prevalent in nineteenth-century periodicals, and such noted writers as Mark Twain and Artemus Ward took aim at available targets like Brigham YOUNG and POLYGAMY.

From this early period, almost no pro-Mormon humor or humor regarding the Church created by the members of the Church themselves survives. While it is certain that members enjoyed humor, as evidenced in numerous JOURNALS and letters, little of it was apparently directed at their own experiences and cultural practices. This was particularly true of published material. Latter-day Saints were too involved with building a new way of life to indulge in frivolity or of anything that might appear to question their commitment. Humor, therefore, was incidental.

Around 1900 this attitude began to change, expressly in the talks of Elder J. Golden Kimball, of the Seventy. During his long tenure as a General Authority, his iconoclastic wit and biting sense of humor not only made the Saints love and quote him, but also helped them to see a lighter side of their often difficult existence.

Still, little in-group humor appeared in print before 1948, when Samuel W. Taylor's novel Heaven Knows Why! was published. Playing on the cultural patterns of typical small-town western Mormonism, the book gained limited success and recognition as an alternative selection of the Literary Guild, but it also caused a stir of discontent in the LDS community, hitting too close to home and seeming to ridicule not only lifestyle but also sacred doctrines. Because of its limited acceptance, it quickly dropped out of print.

A turning point seems to have come as a result of World War II, which brought outsiders into the almost exclusively LDS Rocky Mountain communities and spread members of the Church throughout the world. The resulting interchange showed both groups that in many ways they were not as different from each other as they had assumed, and allowed them to laugh at their common foibles and presumptions.

As the Church became better known as an American lifestyle, its members felt freer to find humor in their own cultural patterns and practices.

that confidence and that strength to . . . rise above our human failings. To do that, we must . . . live by his laws and teachings" (Benson, 1983, p. 6). To become humble like Jesus, to become his disciples, individuals must take up their crosses, trust in him, approach perfection through wise choices, and submissively endure to the end (D&C 122:7). Christ's pattern of humility was unblemished. Though members aspire to this perfection, they are to keep perspective on their fallibility by balancing unfulfilled aspirations to emulate Christ with positive recognition of his gifts to them, of their worth as God's children, and of their progress toward humility over a lifetime. In the face of social pressures for self-interested individuality, the Church stresses selflessness and humility as keys for returning to God. Persons who would attain the fulness of the immortalizing promises of the ATONEMENT must persist in achieving humility in spite of obstacles and societal ethics that distract from this goal (Mosiah 3:19).

The desire for humility is nourished by an understanding acceptance of the greatness of the Savior's sacrifice to provide SALVATION and RESURRECTION for all. As people comprehend God's love for them, hearts and minds will be humbled and drawn into closer unity with him and with all fellow beings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. "Jesus Christ: Our Savior and Redeemer." Ensign 13 (Nov. 1983):6-8.
- . "To the Elderly in the Church." Ensign 19 (May 1989):4-8.
- Maxwell, Neal A. Meek and Lowly. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Packer, Boyd K. "The Only True Church." Ensign 15 (Nov. 1985):80-82.

ALICE T. CLARK

HUMOR

Although LDS doctrines, practices, and experiences have in some circles evoked a measure of scoffing and laughter over the years, only since the 1970s has a body of published humor dealing with the Mormon experience appeared. Institutionalized LDS humor divides roughly into an early period when the Church was the object of outsiders' jokes and a modern period when members have become able to laugh at themselves.

As with many minority groups, the first humor that dealt with the Church was created by antagonists to turn people away from it. Much of this humor took the form of cartoons in the popular press, and verses and parodies of popular or folk songs (Bunker and Bitton, 1983). These attacks were prevalent in nineteenth-century periodicals, and such noted writers as Mark Twain and Artemus Ward took aim at available targets like Brigham YOUNG and POLYGAMY.

From this early period, almost no pro-Mormon humor or humor regarding the Church created by the members of the Church themselves survives. While it is certain that members enjoyed humor, as evidenced in numerous JOURNALS and letters, little of it was apparently directed at their own experiences and cultural practices. This was particularly true of published material. Latter-day Saints were too involved with building a new way of life to indulge in frivolity or of anything that might appear to question their commitment. Humor, therefore, was incidental.

Around 1900 this attitude began to change, expressly in the talks of Elder J. Golden Kimball, of the Seventy. During his long tenure as a General Authority, his iconoclastic wit and biting sense of humor not only made the Saints love and quote him, but also helped them to see a lighter side of their often difficult existence.

Still, little in-group humor appeared in print before 1948, when Samuel W. Taylor's novel Heaven Knows Why! was published. Playing on the cultural patterns of typical small-town western Mormonism, the book gained limited success and recognition as an alternative selection of the Literary Guild, but it also caused a stir of discontent in the LDS community, hitting too close to home and seeming to ridicule not only lifestyle but also sacred doctrines. Because of its limited acceptance, it quickly dropped out of print.

A turning point seems to have come as a result of World War II, which brought outsiders into the almost exclusively LDS Rocky Mountain communities and spread members of the Church throughout the world. The resulting interchange showed both groups that in many ways they were not as different from each other as they had assumed, and allowed them to laugh at their common foibles and presumptions.

As the Church became better known as an American lifestyle, its members felt freer to find humor in their own cultural patterns and practices.

J. Golden Kimball, by Gordon N. Cope (1933, oil canvas, 31" × 24"). J. Golden Kimball (1853–1938), a member of the First Council of the Seventy from 1892 until his death, was known and loved for his frank, sometimes disturbing, wit and humor. Church Museum of History and Art.

Concurrently, its rapid growth created a larger audience for specifically LDS materials as well as an audience educated, sophisticated, and affluent enough to understand, enjoy, and buy them.

Taylor's book, reissued in 1979, now has enthusiastic readers, as have the works of cartoonists Calvin Grondahl and Pat Bagley. Jack Weyland's A New Dawn and Alma Yates's The Miracle of Miss Willie are among recent novels that depict LDS cultural idiosyncrasies. Parodies and spoofs aimed at the LDS audience include Orson Scott Card's Saintspeak, Carol Lynn Pearson's "notebooks," and numerous articles by Chris Crowe.

However, this growing acceptance of culturally bound humor has limitations. LDS DOCTRINES, ORDINANCES, and TEMPLE ceremonies are not usually the objects of humor, although unexpected or unorthodox responses to specific doctrines, particularly those by nonmembers or of small children may be. Scandal or notoriety that might reflect on all members is not considered funny, but the everyday problems of family life, Church and missionary service, as well as the need to reconcile principles and practices, lend themselves well to humor. Latter-day Saints generally seem willing to laugh at themselves and their LIFESTYLE, but not at sacred things (see LIGHTMINDEDNESS).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bunker, Gary L. and Davis Bitton. The Mormon Graphic Image, 1834–1914. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Cracroft, Richard H. "The Humor of Mormon Seriousness." Sunstone (Jan. 1985):14–17.
- Wilson, William A. "The Seriousness of Mormon Humor." Sunstone (Jan. 1985):8–13.

MARGARET P. BAKER

HYDE, ORSON

As a member of the first Twelve Apostles (1835) of the modern dispensation and the first missionary to take the message of the restored gospel to continental Europe and the Near East, Orson Hyde was closely allied with the rise and the development of the LDS Church. Born on January 8, 1805, in Oxford, New Haven County, Connecticut, he was raised in the care of Nathan Wheeler of Derby, Connecticut. In 1819, Hyde walked some six hundred miles to the town of KIRTLAND, OHIO, where Wheeler had purchased land. There he found employment as a clerk in the N. K. Whitney & Co. store. Continuously searching for deeper religious truths, he came under the influence of Sidney RIGDON, a Reformed Baptist minister, and embraced restorationist ideals advanced by Alexander Campbell and Sidney Rigdon.

When Oliver COWDERY and other missionaries to the Lamanites came through the Kirtland region in October–November 1830, Orson spoke against the "Mormon Bible," a position he changed after carefully examining the Book of Mormon. After three months of studying and pondering the doctrines taught by the Latter-day Saints, he was baptized in the Chagrin River on October 30, 1831, by Sidney Rigdon, who also had been converted (Barron, pp. 15–25).

A succession of missions followed Hyde's conversion. He and Hyrum Smith preached in Elyria

J. Golden Kimball, by Gordon N. Cope (1933, oil canvas, 31" × 24"). J. Golden Kimball (1853–1938), a member of the First Council of the Seventy from 1892 until his death, was known and loved for his frank, sometimes disturbing, wit and humor. Church Museum of History and Art.

Concurrently, its rapid growth created a larger audience for specifically LDS materials as well as an audience educated, sophisticated, and affluent enough to understand, enjoy, and buy them.

Taylor's book, reissued in 1979, now has enthusiastic readers, as have the works of cartoonists Calvin Grondahl and Pat Bagley. Jack Weyland's A New Dawn and Alma Yates's The Miracle of Miss Willie are among recent novels that depict LDS cultural idiosyncrasies. Parodies and spoofs aimed at the LDS audience include Orson Scott Card's Saintspeak, Carol Lynn Pearson's "notebooks," and numerous articles by Chris Crowe.

However, this growing acceptance of culturally bound humor has limitations. LDS DOCTRINES, ORDINANCES, and TEMPLE ceremonies are not usually the objects of humor, although unexpected or unorthodox responses to specific doctrines, particularly those by nonmembers or of small children may be. Scandal or notoriety that might reflect on all members is not considered funny, but the everyday problems of family life, Church and missionary service, as well as the need to reconcile principles and practices, lend themselves well to humor. Latter-day Saints generally seem willing to laugh at themselves and their LIFESTYLE, but not at sacred things (see LIGHTMINDEDNESS).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bunker, Gary L. and Davis Bitton. The Mormon Graphic Image, 1834–1914. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Cracroft, Richard H. "The Humor of Mormon Seriousness." Sunstone (Jan. 1985):14–17.
- Wilson, William A. "The Seriousness of Mormon Humor." Sunstone (Jan. 1985):8–13.

MARGARET P. BAKER

HYDE, ORSON

As a member of the first Twelve Apostles (1835) of the modern dispensation and the first missionary to take the message of the restored gospel to continental Europe and the Near East, Orson Hyde was closely allied with the rise and the development of the LDS Church. Born on January 8, 1805, in Oxford, New Haven County, Connecticut, he was raised in the care of Nathan Wheeler of Derby, Connecticut. In 1819, Hyde walked some six hundred miles to the town of KIRTLAND, OHIO, where Wheeler had purchased land. There he found employment as a clerk in the N. K. Whitney & Co. store. Continuously searching for deeper religious truths, he came under the influence of Sidney RIGDON, a Reformed Baptist minister, and embraced restorationist ideals advanced by Alexander Campbell and Sidney Rigdon.

When Oliver COWDERY and other missionaries to the Lamanites came through the Kirtland region in October–November 1830, Orson spoke against the "Mormon Bible," a position he changed after carefully examining the Book of Mormon. After three months of studying and pondering the doctrines taught by the Latter-day Saints, he was baptized in the Chagrin River on October 30, 1831, by Sidney Rigdon, who also had been converted (Barron, pp. 15–25).

A succession of missions followed Hyde's conversion. He and Hyrum Smith preached in Elyria

Orson Hyde (1805–1878), about 1853. He accepted the gospel in 1831 in Kirtland, Ohio, and was ordained an apostle in 1835. He was called to go to Jerusalem in 1840, and on October 24, 1841, dedicated the Holy Land for the gathering of Israel. Attributed to Marsena Cannon.

and Florence, Ohio, and in 1832 he joined Samuel Smith in journeying to the “eastern countries” of the United States. In 1833 he and John Gould were sent as Church emissaries to resolve difficulties in Jackson County, Missouri. He marched with ZION’S CAMP the following year. After returning to Ohio, he married Naney Marinda Johnson in Kirtland, on September 4, 1834.

On February 15, 1835, Orson Hyde was ordained a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and in 1837 he represented the Church in petitioning the Ohio state legislature for a bank charter for the Kirtland Safety Society. He went with Heber C. KIMBALL on the first mission to Great Britain (1837–1838). Their work led to the eventual conversion of thousands to the Mormon faith (see MISSIONS OF THE TWELVE TO THE BRITISH ISLES).

Hyde was in Far West, Missouri, by the summer of 1838, and in October he signed an affidavit against the Saints during the severe persecution of that period. John Taylor said that perhaps Hyde “had been sick with a violent fever” (HC 3:168). Whatever the reason, Hyde made things right with Joseph SMITH and in the spring of 1839 wrote to the Twelve in Illinois asking if he could return. Dropped from the Quorum of the Twelve on May 4, 1839, he was again sustained as an apostle on June 27, 1839.

Years before, it had been prophesied that Hyde “had a great work to perform among the Jews” (HC 4:106), and in 1840 he was directed to undertake a mission that took him to New York, London, Amsterdam, Constantinople (Istanbul), and Jerusalem, speaking to the Jewish communities wherever he could. On October 24, 1841, Elder Hyde climbed the Mount of Olives near Jerusalem and offered a prophetic prayer of dedication, asking the Lord to remove the “barrenness and sterility of this land” (Hyde, p. 21). He returned home via Cairo, Alexandria, Trieste, and Germany. In Germany he published the first LDS German tract, Ein Ruf aus der Wüste (A Cry out of the Wilderness; Frankfurt, 1842).

When the majority of the Saints left Nauvoo for Iowa Territory early in 1846, Orson Hyde was asked to remain behind to supervise the completion and dedication of the NAUVOO TEMPLE. Dedication services were conducted on April 30 and May 1, 1846. From 1846 to 1847 he presided over the British mission. When President Brigham YOUNG returned to the Salt Lake Valley in 1848, Hyde was placed in charge of the camps of Israel in the Midwest. He remained in Kanessville (Conneil Bluffs, Iowa) until 1852, publishing the Frontier Guardian (1849–1852).

In Utah, Elder Hyde was called to head the Carson Valley Nevada Mission in 1855. He returned to Salt Lake in 1857 because of the UTAH EXPEDITION. Further implementing his plan to have the Twelve Apostles preside over designated settlement areas, President Young called Elder Hyde to supervise settlement in the Sanpete-Sevier district of Utah in 1858.

At a meeting of the Twelve Apostles held in 1875, Brigham Young made a decision affecting Hyde’s standing as the senior member of the Quorum. It was ruled that since he and Orson PRATT had briefly separated themselves from the Quorum in 1838 and 1842, respectively, they should lose their seniority to Elders John TAYLOR, Wilford WOODRUFF, and George A. Smith, who had been ordained during their time away (Durham, Succession in the Church [Salt Lake City, 1970], pp. 73–76). Because of that decision, John Taylor rather than Orson Hyde succeeded Brigham Young as President of the Church.

Following a lingering illness, Orson Hyde died at his home in Spring City, Utah, on November 28, 1878. With his passing the Church lost a noted missionary, colonizer, eloquent speaker, and devoted servant.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Barron, Howard H. Orson Hyde, Missionary, Apostle, Colonizer. Bountiful, Utah, 1977.
- Hill, Marvin S. "An Historical Study of the Life of Orson Hyde, Early Mormon Missionary and Apostle from 1805–1852." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1955.
- Hyde, Orson. A Sketch of the Travels and Ministry of Elder Orson Hyde. Salt Lake City, 1869.

HOWARD H. BARRON

HYMNS AND HYMNODY

Hymns have been central to the LDS tradition of worship from the earliest days of the Church. Latter-day Saints revere their hymnbook almost as scripture because of their belief that the first LDS hymnal had its origins in divine commandment. In July of 1830, only three months after the Church was organized, Joseph SMITH's wife Emma SMITH was instructed to "make a selection of sacred hymns . . . to be had in my church" (D&C 25:11). The resulting 1835 volume, A Collection of Sacred Hymns, for the Church of the Latter Day Saints, included among its ninety hymns a number of original, distinctively LDS texts. For example, two by the book's co-editor William W. Phelps, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning" (Hymns 1985, No. 2) and "Now Let Us Rejoice" (Hymns 1985, No. 3) celebrate the RESTORATION of the latter-day Church. These and other original hymns were printed alongside well-known Protestant texts by such authors as Isaac Watts and Reginald Heber. A second hymnal, expanded to 304 hymns, was printed in Nauvoo in 1841.

Under the direction of Brigham YOUNG, Parley PRATT, and John TAYLOR, a volume familiarly known as the Manchester Hymnal was printed in Manchester, England, in 1840. Formally titled A Collection of Sacred Hymns for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Europe, this book served as the principal hymnbook of the English-speaking Saints for many decades. Converts from the BRITISH ISLES brought it with them when they traveled to join the main body of the Saints in Utah. New hymns, most of them American in origin, were added to each later edition, but the Manchester Hymnal continued to be published in England until 1890. By 1912 it had gone through twenty-five editions. Like Emma Smith's hymnal and most others of the time, it printed the texts but not the music.

Emma Smith had looked forward to the day when the Saints would be "blessed with a copious variety of the songs of Zion," as she wrote in the preface to the first hymnbook. Her hopes were fulfilled; early LDS hymn writers continued to add important original hymns on such distinctive doctrines as the PREMORTAL LIFE (Eliza R. SNOW, "O My Father," Hymns 1985, No. 292), the latter-day restoration (Parley P. Pratt, "An Angel from on High," Hymns 1985, No. 13), and the GATHERING of the Saints to Utah (William G. Mills, "Arise, O Glorious Zion," Hymns 1985, No. 40).

In 1886 President John Taylor called together a committee to provide a musical supplement to the Manchester Hymnal. The result was the Latter-day Saints' Psalmody, which was published in Salt Lake City in 1889 and went through six more editions. The Psalmody emphasized home composition, that is, new music that was written by such LDS composers as George Careless and Ebenezer Beesley to accompany the old texts in the Manchester Hymnal. For some of the longer texts in the Psalmody, only the first few verses were printed.

During the 1870s and 1880s the SUNDAY SCHOOL and PRIMARY organizations began to print hymns and songs, singly and in collections, for their own use. In 1873 the Sunday School began publishing Sunday School hymns in the JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR magazine, and in 1880, under the direction of Eliza R. Snow, the Primary published a volume of texts and a companion volume of tunes.

In earlier decades the line between official and unofficial hymnbooks was not clearly drawn, and some of the LDS hymnals were private undertakings. An unofficial hymnbook, Songs of Zion, compiled by German Ellsworth and published in Chicago, became extremely popular. It went through eleven editions between 1908 and 1925.

Deseret Sunday School Songs, published by the Sunday School in 1909, was intended as a Sun-ordained during their time away (Durham, Succession in the Church [Salt Lake City, 1970], pp. 73–76). Because of that decision, John Taylor rather than Orson Hyde succeeded Brigham Young as President of the Church.

Following a lingering illness, Orson Hyde died at his home in Spring City, Utah, on November 28, 1878. With his passing the Church lost a noted missionary, colonizer, eloquent speaker, and devoted servant.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Barron, Howard H. Orson Hyde, Missionary, Apostle, Colonizer. Bountiful, Utah, 1977.
- Hill, Marvin S. "An Historical Study of the Life of Orson Hyde, Early Mormon Missionary and Apostle from 1805–1852." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1955.
- Hyde, Orson. A Sketch of the Travels and Ministry of Elder Orson Hyde. Salt Lake City, 1869.

HOWARD H. BARRON

HYMNS AND HYMNODY

Hymns have been central to the LDS tradition of worship from the earliest days of the Church. Latter-day Saints revere their hymnbook almost as scripture because of their belief that the first LDS hymnal had its origins in divine commandment. In July of 1830, only three months after the Church was organized, Joseph SMITH's wife Emma SMITH was instructed to "make a selection of sacred hymns . . . to be had in my church" (D&C 25:11). The resulting 1835 volume, A Collection of Sacred Hymns, for the Church of the Latter Day Saints, included among its ninety hymns a number of original, distinctively LDS texts. For example, two by the book's co-editor William W. Phelps, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning" (Hymns 1985, No. 2) and "Now Let Us Rejoice" (Hymns 1985, No. 3) celebrate the RESTORATION of the latter-day Church. These and other original hymns were printed alongside well-known Protestant texts by such authors as Isaac Watts and Reginald Heber. A second hymnal, expanded to 304 hymns, was printed in Nauvoo in 1841.

Under the direction of Brigham YOUNG, Parley PRATT, and John TAYLOR, a volume familiarly known as the Manchester Hymnal was printed in Manchester, England, in 1840. Formally titled A Collection of Sacred Hymns for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Europe, this book served as the principal hymnbook of the English-speaking Saints for many decades. Converts from the BRITISH ISLES brought it with them when they traveled to join the main body of the Saints in Utah. New hymns, most of them American in origin, were added to each later edition, but the Manchester Hymnal continued to be published in England until 1890. By 1912 it had gone through twenty-five editions. Like Emma Smith's hymnal and most others of the time, it printed the texts but not the music.

Emma Smith had looked forward to the day when the Saints would be "blessed with a copious variety of the songs of Zion," as she wrote in the preface to the first hymnbook. Her hopes were fulfilled; early LDS hymn writers continued to add important original hymns on such distinctive doctrines as the PREMORTAL LIFE (Eliza R. SNOW, "O My Father," Hymns 1985, No. 292), the latter-day restoration (Parley P. Pratt, "An Angel from on High," Hymns 1985, No. 13), and the GATHERING of the Saints to Utah (William G. Mills, "Arise, O Glorious Zion," Hymns 1985, No. 40).

In 1886 President John Taylor called together a committee to provide a musical supplement to the Manchester Hymnal. The result was the Latter-day Saints' Psalmody, which was published in Salt Lake City in 1889 and went through six more editions. The Psalmody emphasized home composition, that is, new music that was written by such LDS composers as George Careless and Ebenezer Beesley to accompany the old texts in the Manchester Hymnal. For some of the longer texts in the Psalmody, only the first few verses were printed.

During the 1870s and 1880s the SUNDAY SCHOOL and PRIMARY organizations began to print hymns and songs, singly and in collections, for their own use. In 1873 the Sunday School began publishing Sunday School hymns in the JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR magazine, and in 1880, under the direction of Eliza R. Snow, the Primary published a volume of texts and a companion volume of tunes.

In earlier decades the line between official and unofficial hymnbooks was not clearly drawn, and some of the LDS hymnals were private undertakings. An unofficial hymnbook, Songs of Zion, compiled by German Ellsworth and published in Chicago, became extremely popular. It went through eleven editions between 1908 and 1925.

Deseret Sunday School Songs, published by the Sunday School in 1909, was intended as a Sunday School songbook rather than a general WORSHIP hymnal. However, because so many Latter-day Saints loved its gospel-song hymns, with their energetic rhythms and simple exhortative texts, several of its hymns have found a secure place among the Mormons. "Master, the Tempest Is Raging" (Hymns 1985, No. 105) and "Put Your Shoulder to the Wheel" (Hymns 1985, No. 252) are two examples. The 1927 Latter-day Saint Hymns, a volume of more dignified and traditional hymns, was intended to supplement Deseret Sunday School Songs as the hymnal for SACRAMENT MEETINGS.

Hymns: Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, printed in 1948, replaced both the 1927 hymnbook and Deseret Sunday School Songs. Many Church members were disappointed, however, to find that the 1948 hymnal omitted some favorites from among those in the Deseret Sunday School Songs and other sources. Responding to popular preference, the Church printed a new edition in 1950, restoring such well-established hymns as "A Poor Wayfaring Man of Grief" (Hymns 1985, No. 29) and "Have I Done Any Good?" (Hymns 1985, No. 223).

The 1950 hymnal retained official status until 1985, when it was replaced by Hymns of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. This hymnal, published 150 years after Emma Smith's first one, retains almost one-third of the hymns she originally chose—a remarkable tribute to her judgment and to the well-defined and enduring nature of the LDS hymn tradition. There is little that is revolutionary about the new hymnal but much that is significant. Its publication provided an opportunity to omit outdated or little-used hymns in favor of new material of high quality. In all, seventy hymns that were part of the 1950 hymnal were dropped in 1985, and ninety-two new or newly borrowed hymns were added, of which forty-four are LDS contributions wholly or in part. Hymns by present-day LDS contributors continue to reflect Church thinking and concerns: FASTING (Nos. 138, 139), home and family (Nos. 298, 300), MISSIONARY work (Nos. 253, 263), and so forth. Out of a total of 358 contributors, 168 are Latter-day Saints.

The 1985 hymnal shows that, as in the past, LDS hymnody embraces well-known material from other Christian traditions, for example, Martin Luther's "A Mighty Fortress" (No. 68) and Charles Wesley's "Rejoice, the Lord Is King!" (No.

66). Many of the hymns pair a Latter-day Saint text with a borrowed hymn tune, or an indigenous tune with a borrowed text. Tunes are again drawn from many sources: opera (Nos. 160, 196), popular songs of an earlier time (Nos. 34, 237), folk songs (Nos. 15, 284), and others. The selections overall, especially among the new hymns, reflect a strong denominational preference for traditional styles in both music and text. Because the custom of four-part congregational singing continues in most areas of the Church today, virtually all the hymns are printed with soprano, alto, tenor, and bass lines. Although a number of older gospel songs remain strong favorites, the ballad-type sacred song, important today in the congregational singing of some other denominations, has not found a place in Mormon hymnody.

A committee appointed by the General Authorities of the Church, and working under their guidance, recommended the hymns for the 1985 hymnbook. The goal was to include as many of superior artistic merit as possible while keeping in mind the preferences and needs of the general Church membership; a well-loved hymn ran little risk of being dropped, even if it did not meet high literary or musical standards. In the process of selecting and editing these hymns, certain issues that have become major points of discussion in other denominations presented far fewer difficulties. For example, male-oriented language with reference to GOD THE FATHER and Jesus Christ was retained, consistent with the LDS concept of them as male. In addition, Latter-day Saints seem fairly comfortable with military metaphors in their hymn texts, though some language dating from times of actual physical conflict, particularly in "Up, Awake, Ye Defenders of Zion" (No. 284), was edited to make it less bellicose. Certain other texts that originally focused on North America were altered to reflect the Church's overall worldwide mission (Nos. 91, 290).

The present hymnbook is divided into eleven sections: Hymns about the Restoration, Praise and THANKSGIVING, Prayer and Supplication, Sacrament, Easter, Christmas, Special Topics, Children's Songs, For Women, For Men, and Patriotic. The national anthems of the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA and the United Kingdom are included, and anthems for Canada, Australia, and New Zealand are available separately.

An eight-page appendix called "Using the Hymnbook" provides instructions for directors and organists. It is followed by seven indexes: Authors and Composers; Titles, Tunes, and Meters; Tune Names; Meters; Scriptures (an index correlating scriptural passages with hymn texts); Topics; and First Lines and Titles. Scripture references also appear with each hymn.

Subsequently, the Church Music Committee identified one hundred hymns from the 1985 hymnbook as the standard core of hymns to be published in other languages, with a list of fifty optional additional hymns. The remaining hymns in non-English hymnbooks reflect the choices and contributions of the members in the particular language areas. In this way the Church strives to preserve in its international hymnbooks a balance between Churchwide tradition and local preference.

The Children's Songbook, published in 1989, follows The Children Sing (1951) and Sing with Me (1969) as the official music resource for the Primary organization. With its straightforward messages and attractive melodies, its simplified accompaniments, and its many color illustrations, the Chil- dren's Songbook is intended to appeal directly to children as well as to their parents and teachers.

[See also the Appendix for a brief selection of important Latter-day Saint music.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cornwall, J. Spencer. Stories of Our Mormon Hymns. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- Davidson, Karen Lynn. Our Latter-day Hymns: The Stories and the Messages. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Macare, Helen Hanks. "The Singing Saints: A Study of the Mormon Hymnal, 1835-1950." Ph.D. diss., UCLA, 1961.
- Moody, Michael F. "Contemporary Hymnody in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." Ph.D. diss., University of Southern California, 1972.
- Pyper, George D. Stories of Latter-day Saint Hymns. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Weight, Newell B. "An Historical Study of the Origins and Character of the Indigenous Hymn Tunes of the Latter-day Saints." D.M.A. diss., University of Southern California, 1961.

KAREN LYNN DAVIDSON

---

I

---

---

“I AM”

See: Jesus Christ, Names and Titles of

---

IDAHO, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN

Although the main thrust of Latter-day Saint COLONIZATION was to the south of Salt Lake City, Church members also established numerous settlements in the rich farm valleys of southern Idaho.

The first LDS excursion into Idaho followed President Brigham YOUNG’s call of twenty-seven families to labor among the Indians in the Oregon Territory in 1855. The result was the founding of Fort Limhi on a tributary of the Salmon River near present-day Salmon, Idaho. As the U.S. Army approached Utah in 1857 (see UTAH EXPEDITION), conflict with local Indians erupted, two missionaries were killed, and, in 1858, the fort lost most of its stock. The settlers were called back to Salt Lake City and the colony was never reopened.

In 1860 the community of Franklin, near the present Utah-Idaho border, became the first permanent Anglo-American settlement in the future territory of Idaho. Indian problems plagued the settlement until the Battle Creek massacre, in which federal soldiers from Salt Lake City’s Fort Douglas killed a large number of Indians in 1863.

Additional settlers went east from Cache Valley (Franklin was its northernmost town) over the mountains into the Bear Lake region in southeastern Idaho, opening the settlements of Paris, Bloomington, St. Charles, Ovid, Montpelier, Fish Haven, Liberty, and Bennington. Charles C. Rich, an apostle, oversaw these communities, which by 1864 included nearly seven hundred settlers. Latter-day Saints started additional settlements in the Idaho part of northern Cache Valley, Malad Valley, and Marsh Valley beginning in the 1860s, and in Gentile Valley in the 1870s.

Church members helped construct the railroad between Ogden, Utah, and Franklin, Idaho, in 1871–1874, and beginning in 1878, they helped extend the line farther into Idaho through Blackfoot and Idaho Falls (then called Eagle Rock) to Monida Pass, on the present-day Idaho-Montana border. Many Latter-day Saints homesteaded near the railroad and established such communities as Chesterfield, Egin Bench, and Rexburg. For the next two decades, Mormon settlements increasingly dotted the landscape for two hundred miles between Pocatello and Victor in the Teton Basin. By 1890, the Bannock Stake, centered in Rexburg, reported 3,861 members. Because the Snake River Valley was arid, LDS settlers devoted considerable energies to canal building. By 1910, more than one hundred canals operated in the Upper Snake River Valley, and LDS settlements were established

The first frame house north of Bear River (built in Marsh Valley, Idaho, 1873). William West Woodland (center) crossed the plains in 1847 and again as a guide in 1848; pictured here with his wife, some of his 14 children, two granddaughters, and a hired hand (c. 1897). Courtesy the Woodland family.

(Moreland, New Sweden, Thomas, Springfield, and Aberdeen) where there were canals.

Latter-day Saints also moved west from Pocatello. In 1879 William C. Martindale, from Tooele, Utah, explored the Goose Creek Valley and returned to Utah with a favorable report. Church families soon began homesteading areas that included Goose Creek and Raft River. Oakley, where the Oregon and California trails separated, became the central location of the colony.

LDS influence in Idaho in the nineteenth century was confined largely to the southeast, where the Saints were a majority in many settlements. In the twentieth century Latter-day Saints have become a significant minority in communities farther west, still primarily in the southern part of the state.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bitton, Davis. "Peopling the Upper Snake: The Second Wave of Mormon Settlement in Idaho." Idaho Yesterdays 23 (Summer 1979):47-52.
- Campbell, Eugene E. Establishing Zion: The Mormon Church in the American West. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Rich, Russell R. Land of the Sky-Blue Water: A History of the LDS Settlement of the Bear Lake Valley. Provo, Utah, 1963.

Ricks, Joel E., ed. The History of a Valley: Cache Valley, Utah-Idaho. Logan, Utah, 1956.

ROBERT D. MARCUM

ILLINOIS, LDS COMMUNITIES IN

[The Church was centered in western Illinois from 1839 to 1846. After their expulsion from Missouri in 1838-1839, Mormon refugees fled to Quincy, Springfield, and other locations in Illinois, where local residents gave them assistance. Church leaders purchased the village of Commerce and land in its vicinity, along with a large tract across the Mississippi River in Iowa. Commerce was renamed Nauvoo and became the principal LDS community of its time and one of the largest cities in Illinois.]

Numerous small settlements in the vicinity of Nauvoo fell within the city's sphere of influence (see Donald Q. Cannon, "Spokes on the Wheel: Early Latter-day Saints Settlements in Hancock County, Illinois," Ensign 16 [Feb. 1986]:62-68). The LDS town of Ramus (later Macedonia and now Webster), about twenty miles southeast of Nauvoo, became a Church stake, as did Lima, twenty-five miles south of Nauvoo. La Harpe, a few miles north of Ramus, also had a considerable LDS pop-

The first frame house north of Bear River (built in Marsh Valley, Idaho, 1873). William West Woodland (center) crossed the plains in 1847 and again as a guide in 1848; pictured here with his wife, some of his 14 children, two granddaughters, and a hired hand (c. 1897). Courtesy the Woodland family.

(Moreland, New Sweden, Thomas, Springfield, and Aberdeen) where there were canals.

Latter-day Saints also moved west from Pocatello. In 1879 William C. Martindale, from Tooele, Utah, explored the Goose Creek Valley and returned to Utah with a favorable report. Church families soon began homesteading areas that included Goose Creek and Raft River. Oakley, where the Oregon and California trails separated, became the central location of the colony.

LDS influence in Idaho in the nineteenth century was confined largely to the southeast, where the Saints were a majority in many settlements. In the twentieth century Latter-day Saints have become a significant minority in communities farther west, still primarily in the southern part of the state.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bitton, Davis. "Peopling the Upper Snake: The Second Wave of Mormon Settlement in Idaho." Idaho Yesterdays 23 (Summer 1979):47-52.
- Campbell, Eugene E. Establishing Zion: The Mormon Church in the American West. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Rich, Russell R. Land of the Sky-Blue Water: A History of the LDS Settlement of the Bear Lake Valley. Provo, Utah, 1963.

Ricks, Joel E., ed. The History of a Valley: Cache Valley, Utah-Idaho. Logan, Utah, 1956.

ROBERT D. MARCUM

ILLINOIS, LDS COMMUNITIES IN

[The Church was centered in western Illinois from 1839 to 1846. After their expulsion from Missouri in 1838-1839, Mormon refugees fled to Quincy, Springfield, and other locations in Illinois, where local residents gave them assistance. Church leaders purchased the village of Commerce and land in its vicinity, along with a large tract across the Mississippi River in Iowa. Commerce was renamed Nauvoo and became the principal LDS community of its time and one of the largest cities in Illinois.]

Numerous small settlements in the vicinity of Nauvoo fell within the city's sphere of influence (see Donald Q. Cannon, "Spokes on the Wheel: Early Latter-day Saints Settlements in Hancock County, Illinois," Ensign 16 [Feb. 1986]:62-68). The LDS town of Ramus (later Macedonia and now Webster), about twenty miles southeast of Nauvoo, became a Church stake, as did Lima, twenty-five miles south of Nauvoo. La Harpe, a few miles north of Ramus, also had a considerable LDS pop-nation. Warren, twenty miles southwest of Nauvoo, was a short-lived LDS community adjacent to Warsaw. Anti-Mormon violence focused on these outlying LDS communities and caused their evacuation in 1845.

Paris, Idaho, Tabernacle in 1987. Designed by one of Brigham Young's sons, Joseph Don Carlos Young, this Romanesque pioneer building was constructed 1884–1889. The distinctive dark and light red sandstone was hauled by teams from canyons 18 miles away or pulled during the winter across the frozen Bear Lake. Courtesy Craig Law.

In addition to several entries under Nauvoo, see Carthage Jail; Historical Sites; and Martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Two articles include information on the Illinois period: Joseph Smith, and History of the Church: c. 1831–1844 and c. 1844–1877.

For LDS immigration to Illinois and subsequent departure for the Rocky Mountains, see Immigration and Emigration and Westward Migration, Planning and Prophecy.]

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION

Immaculate conception is the belief of some Christians that from her conception in her mother's womb, Jesus' mother was free from ORIGINAL SIN.

Original sin holds that ADAM's sinful choice in the Garden of Eden, made for all his descendants, led to a hereditary sin incurred at conception by every human being and removed only by the sacraments of the church. From this view arose the concept of Mary's immaculate conception. By a unique grace, Mary was preserved from the stain of original sin, inheriting human nature without taint in order that she be a suitable mother for Jesus. This teaching was defined as obligatory dogma by Pope Pius IX in 1854.

Latter-day Saints accept neither the above doctrine of original sin nor the need for Mary's immaculate conception (MD, p. 375). Instead, they "believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression" (A of F 2), because Jesus' ATONEMENT redeems all, including Mary, from the responsibility for Adam's trespass (Moro. 8:8). "God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again, in their infant state, innocent before God" (D&C 93:38). For Latter-day Saints, Mary was a choice servant selected by God to be the mother of Jesus.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "Immaculate Conception." New Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 7, pp. 378–82. New York, 1967.
 Watlington, Amanda G. Official Catholic Teachings: Christ Our Lord. Wilmington, 1978.

CONNIE LAMB

IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION

The immigration of tens of thousands of converts, first into America's Midwest and then into the mountain West, was a major part of the growth of the Church in the United States during the nineteenth century. So closely interrelated were proselytizing and the GATHERING of the faithful in the vicinity of Church headquarters that President Brigham YOUNG declared in 1860 that emigration "upon the first feasible opportunity, directly follows obedience to the first principles of the gospel we have embraced" (Brigham Young to A. Lyman, et al., and Saints in the British Isles, Aug. 2, 1860, Brigham Young Letterbooks, LDS Church Archives). With millennial fervor, Latter-day Saint converts sought to flee the impending woes of a sinful world by gathering "home to Zion," where nation. Warren, twenty miles southwest of Nauvoo, was a short-lived LDS community adjacent to Warsaw. Anti-Mormon violence focused on these outlying LDS communities and caused their evacuation in 1845.

Paris, Idaho, Tabernacle in 1987. Designed by one of Brigham Young's sons, Joseph Don Carlos Young, this Romanesque pioneer building was constructed 1884–1889. The distinctive dark and light red sandstone was hauled by teams from canyons 18 miles away or pulled during the winter across the frozen Bear Lake. Courtesy Craig Law.

In addition to several entries under Nauvoo, see Carthage Jail; Historical Sites; and Martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Two articles include information on the Illinois period: Joseph Smith, and History of the Church: c. 1831–1844 and c. 1844–1877.

For LDS immigration to Illinois and subsequent departure for the Rocky Mountains, see Immigration and Emigration and Westward Migration, Planning and Prophecy.]

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION

Immaculate conception is the belief of some Christians that from her conception in her mother's womb, Jesus' mother was free from ORIGINAL SIN.

Original sin holds that ADAM's sinful choice in the Garden of Eden, made for all his descendants, led to a hereditary sin incurred at conception by every human being and removed only by the sacraments of the church. From this view arose the concept of Mary's immaculate conception. By a unique grace, Mary was preserved from the stain of original sin, inheriting human nature without taint in order that she be a suitable mother for Jesus. This teaching was defined as obligatory dogma by Pope Pius IX in 1854.

Latter-day Saints accept neither the above doctrine of original sin nor the need for Mary's immaculate conception (MD, p. 375). Instead, they "believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression" (A of F 2), because Jesus' ATONEMENT redeems all, including Mary, from the responsibility for Adam's trespass (Moro. 8:8). "God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again, in their infant state, innocent before God" (D&C 93:38). For Latter-day Saints, Mary was a choice servant selected by God to be the mother of Jesus.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Immaculate Conception." New Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 7, pp. 378–82. New York, 1967.

Watlington, Amanda G. Official Catholic Teachings: Christ Our Lord. Wilmington, 1978.

CONNIE LAMB

IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION

The immigration of tens of thousands of converts, first into America's Midwest and then into the mountain West, was a major part of the growth of the Church in the United States during the nineteenth century. So closely interrelated were proselytizing and the GATHERING of the faithful in the vicinity of Church headquarters that President Brigham YOUNG declared in 1860 that emigration "upon the first feasible opportunity, directly follows obedience to the first principles of the gospel we have embraced" (Brigham Young to A. Lyman, et al., and Saints in the British Isles, Aug. 2, 1860, Brigham Young Letterbooks, LDS Church Archives). With millennial fervor, Latter-day Saint converts sought to flee the impending woes of a sinful world by gathering "home to Zion," where nation. Warren, twenty miles southwest of Nauvoo, was a short-lived LDS community adjacent to Warsaw. Anti-Mormon violence focused on these outlying LDS communities and caused their evacuation in 1845.

Paris, Idaho, Tabernacle in 1987. Designed by one of Brigham Young's sons, Joseph Don Carlos Young, this Romanesque pioneer building was constructed 1884–1889. The distinctive dark and light red sandstone was hauled by teams from canyons 18 miles away or pulled during the winter across the frozen Bear Lake. Courtesy Craig Law.

In addition to several entries under Nauvoo, see Carthage Jail; Historical Sites; and Martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Two articles include information on the Illinois period: Joseph Smith, and History of the Church: c. 1831–1844 and c. 1844–1877.

For LDS immigration to Illinois and subsequent departure for the Rocky Mountains, see Immigration and Emigration and Westward Migration, Planning and Prophecy.]

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION

Immaculate conception is the belief of some Christians that from her conception in her mother's womb, Jesus' mother was free from ORIGINAL SIN.

Original sin holds that ADAM's sinful choice in the Garden of Eden, made for all his descendants, led to a hereditary sin incurred at conception by every human being and removed only by the sacraments of the church. From this view arose the concept of Mary's immaculate conception. By a unique grace, Mary was preserved from the stain of original sin, inheriting human nature without taint in order that she be a suitable mother for Jesus. This teaching was defined as obligatory dogma by Pope Pius IX in 1854.

Latter-day Saints accept neither the above doctrine of original sin nor the need for Mary's immaculate conception (MD, p. 375). Instead, they "believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression" (A of F 2), because Jesus' ATONEMENT redeems all, including Mary, from the responsibility for Adam's trespass (Moro. 8:8). "God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again, in their infant state, innocent before God" (D&C 93:38). For Latter-day Saints, Mary was a choice servant selected by God to be the mother of Jesus.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Immaculate Conception." New Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 7, pp. 378–82. New York, 1967.

Watlington, Amanda G. Official Catholic Teachings: Christ Our Lord. Wilmington, 1978.

CONNIE LAMB

IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION

The immigration of tens of thousands of converts, first into America's Midwest and then into the mountain West, was a major part of the growth of the Church in the United States during the nineteenth century. So closely interrelated were proselytizing and the GATHERING of the faithful in the vicinity of Church headquarters that President Brigham YOUNG declared in 1860 that emigration "upon the first feasible opportunity, directly follows obedience to the first principles of the gospel we have embraced" (Brigham Young to A. Lyman, et al., and Saints in the British Isles, Aug. 2, 1860, Brigham Young Letterbooks, LDS Church Archives). With millennial fervor, Latter-day Saint converts sought to flee the impending woes of a sinful world by gathering "home to Zion," where they could join their American counterparts in preparing for the SECOND COMING OF JESUS CHRIST. This gathering made it possible for the Latter-day Saints to become a dominant economic, political, and religious force in the Great Basin. It reinforced a sense of group identity and shielded them from religious persecution while providing individuals and families with greater economic opportunity.

Most converts were poor; indeed, the majority lacked sufficient funds to emigrate. Individuals and families were encouraged to save systematically, and the few who had surplus funds after emigrating were asked to assist fellow converts. In 1849 the Church organized the PERPETUAL EMIGRATING FUND (PEF) to solicit donations and provide emigrants with loans, the repayment of which would aid others. Such loans were most often made available to individuals with needed skills, to those whose relatives or friends donated to the PEF, or to those who had been faithful Church members for ten years or longer. From 1852 until 1887 the PEF assisted some 26,000 immigrants—more than one-third of the total LDS emigrants from Europe during that period—with at least part of the journey to the mountain West. In the 1850s and 1860s there were three categories of immigrants: the independent, who paid their own way to Utah; “states” or “ordinary” immigrants, who paid only enough to reach a port of entry or other intermediate stopping place in the United States, hoping to earn enough there to finish the journey; and PEF immigrants, assisted by the Perpetual Emigrating Fund. In later years private assistance eclipsed the PEF in the amount of aid rendered. In the 1880s and 1890s, 20 to 50 percent of the immigrants each year received private assistance.

Enthusiasm for emigration was highest during periods of international unrest, with accompanying millennialist expectations of increasing troubles worldwide prior to Jesus’ second coming. Thus, in 1855, during the Crimean War, more Latter-day Saints emigrated from Europe than during any other year. That year 4,225 emigrants—about 2.4 percent of all Europeans who migrated in 1855 to the United States—were Latter-day Saints, even though the total number of Church members in Great Britain and on the Continent, from whom the emigrants were drawn, was fewer than 35,000. The American Civil War brought exceptionally high LDS emigration in the years 1861–1865, a time when the general emigration from Europe was relatively low.

Because Church funds, including those of the PEF, were never sufficient to help as many as wished to immigrate, Church leaders on both sides of the Atlantic utilized many approaches. After the 1855 season, when Church and PEF resources were exhausted, donations of Salt Lake City real estate were sold for cash to British arrivals with the proceeds applied to emigration; and the use of handcarts rather than large wagons cut costs for the overland journey from Iowa to Utah. The tragic loss of more than two hundred lives in the two last HANDCART COMPANIES of 1856, because they departed too late and were caught in early snowstorms, grimly underscored the necessity of careful planning and implementation.

While the PEF continued to assist with individual expenses for transatlantic voyages on a limited basis after 1856, most of its aid was applied to the overland portion of the trip. Beginning in 1861 this was made possible by the use of the “Church trains” system for conveying immigrants. Under Brigham Young’s direction, oxen and wagons along with teamsters and other personnel from throughout Utah appeared in Salt Lake City as soon as spring grass began to grow along the immigrant trail. The men, for their labors, and the owners of teams and wagons received either credit for TITHING or wages paid in goods from local tithing storerooms. This practice resulted in the Church’s tithing system subsidizing the operation heavily: in 1868 teamsters and owners received about $200,000 in tithing credit, while immigrants were charged only $75,000, on credit. It often took immigrants years to pay their indebtedness for emigration, and many failed to complete payment. By 1887, about one-third of the emigrants had paid their debt to the PEF in full, one-third had paid part, and one-third had paid nothing.

After the completion of the transcontinental railroad in 1869, immigrants traveling by steam-powered ships and trains could make the trip from Liverpool, England, to Salt Lake City in just over three weeks. Earlier, the journey by ship and wagon often took nearly six months. Yet advantages in time, comfort, and health were countered by the fact that more cash—a scarce commodity in the pioneer economy (see PIONEER ECONOMY)—was required for the trip. The PEF still provided full passage for more than one hundred emigrants yearly from Europe to Utah in the years 1871–1875 and 1878–1881.

Church personnel at both local and mission levels played important roles in organizing the emigration from Europe. Clerks in each branch (congregation) received deposits to individual emigration savings accounts, which were forwarded to headquarters for a larger area, called a “conference,” and then sent on to the mission headquarters. Local leaders sought out potential emigrants who seemed deserving of assistance and forwarded information about them to mission headquarters. Expanding a system dating from 1840–1841, when the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES organized the first emigrant companies (see MISSIONS OF THE TWELVE TO THE BRITISH ISLES), mission publications gave notice of planned departures and costs and provided helpful information such as lists of items passengers should bring. Well in advance of the departure date, conference presidents collected deposits to reserve places on particular vessels. Mission personnel served as passenger agents, thus avoiding middlemen, and used the commission they received for the benefit of poor emigrants or missionaries. Where necessary, they made arrangements for provisions and for cookware and eating utensils. In hectic last-minute efforts they helped hundreds of passengers board ship and obtain their berths. Men traveling with the group, usually returning missionaries, were appointed as presidencies for the ship and were responsible for the conduct and morale of the passengers and for holding religious services. Generally the daily routine involved prayer, washing the decks, cooperative cooking arrangements, and special meetings to discuss problems that arose.

Because the Saints traveled as a Church family under PRIESTHOOD leadership—and with the assistance of an experienced and well-organized system—LDS emigration impressed nonmember observers as orderly and civilized compared with the tumult generally surrounding emigrant ships. One writer noted:

The ordinary emigrant is exposed to all the chances and misadventures of a heterogeneous, childish, mannerless crowd during the voyage, and to the merciless cupidity of land-sharks the moment he has touched the opposite shore. But the Mormon ship is a Family under strong and accepted discipline, with every provision for comfort, decorum, and internal peace. On his arrival in the New World the wanderer is received into a confraternity which speeds him onwards with as little hardship and anxiety as the circumstances permit and he is passed on from friend to friend, till he reaches the promised home [Edinburgh Review, Jan. 1862, p. 199].

When passengers arrived in America, they were usually met by a Church emigration agent who assisted them with arrangements for transportation to the frontier outfitting point. At the frontier the emigrants remained encamped until all arrangements could be completed for the arduous overland trek (see MORMON PIONEER TRAIL). Before the immigrants arrived, agents purchased teams and wagons or handcarts. During the era of “down and back” Church trains, flour was generally hauled from Salt Lake City—part of it stashed along the trail—and other provisions were purchased by agents near the outfitting point. After 1861, wagon trains sent periodic reports on their progress by telegraph, and, when necessary, relief parties met immigrants en route as they neared the end of the journey.

Immigrant companies were officially welcomed as they arrived at Salt Lake City, where they camped while awaiting assignments. BISHOPS or their representatives then escorted them to the various settlements to which quotas had been assigned.

LDS immigrants, particularly those from northern Europe, were usually assimilated into communities and congregations quickly. New arrivals who did not speak English availed themselves of Church-sponsored publications and activities in their mother tongue, while also attending worship services in English. There was a short-lived effort to produce materials in a phonetic alphabet to ease immigrant learning (see DESERET ALPHABET), but most of the immigrants and virtually all their children became fluent in English. With few exceptions, relatively little sense of ethnic community survived beyond the generation of immigrants themselves. Most descendants of the immigrants who served as missionaries to ancestral lands had to learn the native language during their service.

After the late 1880s, coinciding with a new wave of emigration from central and southern Europe and with negative publicity and ANTIPOLYCY-AMY LEGISLATION, LDS immigration was frowned upon by many in the United States. The large number of LDS steamship passengers were still assisted with arrangements by Church personnel, but they were instructed to maintain a low profile and did not function visibly as Mormon emigrant companies. By the 1890s the number of Latter-day Saints in Europe had dwindled, and in view of economic conditions in the United States, Church leaders began to discourage emigration—though LDS immigration revived modestly during the following decade. More than 103,000 emigrated in the years 1840–1910, an average of some 2,000 annually. In the years 1911–1946, with two world wars and the Great Depression dampening interest in relocation, LDS emigration declined to an average of only 291 annually. Encouraging the Saints to remain in their native lands and strengthen the Church there—a temporary expedience in the 1890s—eventually became a firmer policy. Leaders obtained more substantial locations for Church meetings in major European cities and promoted a greater sense of permanence.

A resurgence of LDS emigration from Europe took place in the years immediately following World War II; an average of more than 1,000 Latter-day Saints emigrated annually in the years 1947–1953. Beginning in the late 1950s the Church moved to provide its members in Europe and other areas with greater access to opportunities found in the United States, including the TEMPLES, more substantial local meeting places, and local leadership. This reinforced the encouragement to build ZION wherever Saints were found, and emigration from Europe tapered off. The gathering of emigration statistics was discontinued after 1962. By that time approximately 127,000 Latter-day Saints had emigrated from Europe, and thousands more from Canada, the South Pacific, and Mexico, to bring the total to about 150,000 emigrants. The influx of Church members from such areas as Canada and the South Pacific to Utah, California, and Missouri remained at a significant level into the 1970s and 1980s. Additionally, conversions from among other recent immigrants, particularly refugees from Southeast Asia, continued to give the Church in the United States an international flavor. This was also true for other areas of the world, with converts from Africa and the West Indies becoming an important factor in the Church in the British Isles.

From the 1840s on, immigrants made vital contributions to Latter-day Saint life. Immigrant educators, artists, craftsmen, musicians, architects, clerks, and others all enriched life in their adopted land (see SOCIAL AND CULTURAL HISTORY). Immigrants played a particularly significant role in local Church leadership in the nineteenth century. Of 605 bishops and presiding elders in Latter-day Saint congregations in the United States from 1848 to 1890, 40 percent were born outside the United States. Twenty-nine percent were born in the British Isles. Scandinavia, the next richest source of LDS immigrants, accounted for 8 percent. In addition, 29 percent of STAKE PRESIDENTS in the period were born outside the United States, including 23 percent born in the British Isles. Other immigrants have served as General Authorities, including several who served in the FIRST PRESIDENCY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom: An Economic History of the Latter-day Saints 1830–1900, pp. 96–240. Cambridge, 1958.
- Larson, Gustave O. Prelude to the Kingdom: Mormon Desert Conquest: A Chapter in American Cooperative Experience. Francetown, N.H., 1947.
- Mulder, William. Homeward to Zion: The Mormon Migration from Scandinavia. Minneapolis, 1957.
- Sonne, Conway B. Saints on the Seas: A Maritime History of Mormon Migration 1830–1890. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Taylor, P. A. M. Expectations Westward: The Mormons and the Emigration of Their British Converts in the Nineteenth Century. London, 1965.

RICHARD L. JENSEN
WILLIAM G. HARTLEY

---

IMMORTALITY

“Immortality is to live forever in the resurrected state with body and spirit inseparably connected” (MD, p. 376). The FALL OF ADAM brought death, and the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST brought life. Immortality is as broad as the Fall; since all creatures die, all will be given everlasting life (1 Cor. 15:22).

In the Garden of Eden, Adam and Eve were not subject to death until the Fall. When they partook of the forbidden fruit, they were ushered out of God’s presence; mortality and its consequent death descended upon them, and subsequently upon all mankind and all other living things.

That humans became mortal was a necessary step in the Lord’s eternal PLAN OF SALVATION for his children. The conditions of mortality, however, assisted with arrangements by Church personnel, but they were instructed to maintain a low profile and did not function visibly as Mormon emigrant companies. By the 1890s the number of Latter-day Saints in Europe had dwindled, and in view of economic conditions in the United States, Church leaders began to discourage emigration—though LDS immigration revived modestly during the following decade. More than 103,000 emigrated in the years 1840–1910, an average of some 2,000 annually. In the years 1911–1946, with two world wars and the Great Depression dampening interest in relocation, LDS emigration declined to an average of only 291 annually. Encouraging the Saints to remain in their native lands and strengthen the Church there—a temporary expedience in the 1890s—eventually became a firmer policy. Leaders obtained more substantial locations for Church meetings in major European cities and promoted a greater sense of permanence.

A resurgence of LDS emigration from Europe took place in the years immediately following World War II; an average of more than 1,000 Latter-day Saints emigrated annually in the years 1947–1953. Beginning in the late 1950s the Church moved to provide its members in Europe and other areas with greater access to opportunities found in the United States, including the TEMPLES, more substantial local meeting places, and local leadership. This reinforced the encouragement to build ZION wherever Saints were found, and emigration from Europe tapered off. The gathering of emigration statistics was discontinued after 1962. By that time approximately 127,000 Latter-day Saints had emigrated from Europe, and thousands more from Canada, the South Pacific, and Mexico, to bring the total to about 150,000 emigrants. The influx of Church members from such areas as Canada and the South Pacific to Utah, California, and Missouri remained at a significant level into the 1970s and 1980s. Additionally, conversions from among other recent immigrants, particularly refugees from Southeast Asia, continued to give the Church in the United States an international flavor. This was also true for other areas of the world, with converts from Africa and the West Indies becoming an important factor in the Church in the British Isles.

From the 1840s on, immigrants made vital contributions to Latter-day Saint life. Immigrant educators, artists, craftsmen, musicians, architects, clerks, and others all enriched life in their adopted land (see SOCIAL AND CULTURAL HISTORY). Immigrants played a particularly significant role in local Church leadership in the nineteenth century. Of 605 bishops and presiding elders in Latter-day Saint congregations in the United States from 1848 to 1890, 40 percent were born outside the United States. Twenty-nine percent were born in the British Isles. Scandinavia, the next richest source of LDS immigrants, accounted for 8 percent. In addition, 29 percent of STAKE PRESIDENTS in the period were born outside the United States, including 23 percent born in the British Isles. Other immigrants have served as General Authorities, including several who served in the FIRST PRESIDENCY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom: An Economic History of the Latter-day Saints 1830–1900, pp. 96–240. Cambridge, 1958.
- Larson, Gustave O. Prelude to the Kingdom: Mormon Desert Conquest: A Chapter in American Cooperative Experience. Francetown, N.H., 1947.
- Mulder, William. Homeward to Zion: The Mormon Migration from Scandinavia. Minneapolis, 1957.
- Sonne, Conway B. Saints on the Seas: A Maritime History of Mormon Migration 1830–1890. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Taylor, P. A. M. Expectations Westward: The Mormons and the Emigration of Their British Converts in the Nineteenth Century. London, 1965.

RICHARD L. JENSEN
WILLIAM G. HARTLEY

---

IMMORTALITY

“Immortality is to live forever in the resurrected state with body and spirit inseparably connected” (MD, p. 376). The FALL OF ADAM brought death, and the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST brought life. Immortality is as broad as the Fall; since all creatures die, all will be given everlasting life (1 Cor. 15:22).

In the Garden of Eden, Adam and Eve were not subject to death until the Fall. When they partook of the forbidden fruit, they were ushered out of God’s presence; mortality and its consequent death descended upon them, and subsequently upon all mankind and all other living things.

That humans became mortal was a necessary step in the Lord’s eternal PLAN OF SALVATION for his children. The conditions of mortality, however, left mankind subject to death and incapable on its own of reclaiming the dead from the grave. Jesus Christ, the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, was the only one capable of redeeming the human family from the effects of the Fall, thus providing for a RESURRECTION of the PHYSICAL BODY.

The individual spirit that inhabits and gives life to the mortal physical body is not subject to the same death that is common to mortality. All spirits are immortal (cf. Alma 42:9; TPJS, p. 207; see also SOUL; SPIRIT).

The Lord himself died a physical death in order to bring about the resurrection of all the dead and to grant immortality to all mankind. The prophet Lehi said, "Wherefore, how great the importance to make these things known unto the inhabitants of the earth, that they may know that there is no flesh that can dwell in the presence of God, save it be through the merits, and merey, and grace of the Holy Messiah, who layeth down his life according to the flesh, and taketh it again by the power of the Spirit, that he may bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, being the first that should rise" (2 Ne. 2:8).

During his earthly life, Jesus Christ raised several from the dead; however, they were restored only to mortal life. By his later atonement and resurrection of his physical, tangible body (Luke 24:36–40), Jesus provided the means by which every person will be resurrected to immortal life, with a tangible body of flesh and bones, even as he has. Paul taught, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22), and "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. 15:54; cf. Rom. 6:5).

Immortality is a free gift for all mankind. AMULEK, a Book of Mormon prophet, taught that "this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; . . . every thing shall be restored to its perfect frame, as it is now, or in the body, . . . that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided" (Alma 11:44–45). Immortality, or the resurrection from the dead, will be given to all forms of life, for God glorifies himself "by saving all that His hands had made, whether beasts, fowls, fishes or men" (TPJS, p. 291; D&C 29:24–25).

Although sometimes used interchangeably, the words "immortality" and "eternal life" are not synonymous. All who obtain eternal life will also have immortality, but not all who receive immortality will have eternal life. The term "eternal life" has reference to the type or quality of life that God has, which is given only to the faithful, and includes much more than living forever. "And thus did I, the Lord God, appoint unto man the days of his probation—that by his natural death he might be raised in immortality unto eternal life, even as many as would believe" (D&C 29:43).

[See also Immortality and Eternal Life.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Doctrines of Salvation, Vol. 2, pp. 4–13. Salt Lake City, 1955.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 87–93. Salt Lake City, 1952.

DAN W. ANDERSEN

---

IMMORTALITY AND ETERNAL LIFE

The Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints teaches that the work and glory of God is to bring to pass both the IMMORTALITY and the ETERNAL LIFE of men and women (Moses 1:39; 2 Ne. 10:23–25). These two conditions in the AFTERLIFE are not necessarily synonymous, though each is given as a consequence of the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST.

Immortality is to live forever in a resurrected condition without death that was introduced to this world through the FALL OF ADAM AND EVE (2 Ne. 2:22–23). Through Jesus Christ's atonement, all living things will receive a resurrection, the spirit and the flesh uniting never again to be separated, and will live forever in an immortal state (2 Ne. 2:8–9; 9:13; Alma 11:45). Immortality is a free gift from God because of unconditional GRACE, and does not require works of OBEDIENCE. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22).

"Eternal life" is a higher state than immortality alone and means to live forever in a resurrected condition in the presence of God, and to become like God. It likewise is available only through the grace of Jesus Christ and is the greatest of all gifts that God bestows upon his children (D&C 14:7). Eternal life is EXALTATION into the type and quality of life that God lives. Receiving eternal life is left mankind subject to death and incapable on its own of reclaiming the dead from the grave. Jesus Christ, the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, was the only one capable of redeeming the human family from the effects of the Fall, thus providing for a RESURRECTION of the PHYSICAL BODY.

The individual spirit that inhabits and gives life to the mortal physical body is not subject to the same death that is common to mortality. All spirits are immortal (cf. Alma 42:9; TPJS, p. 207; see also SOUL; SPIRIT).

The Lord himself died a physical death in order to bring about the resurrection of all the dead and to grant immortality to all mankind. The prophet Lehi said, "Wherefore, how great the importance to make these things known unto the inhabitants of the earth, that they may know that there is no flesh that can dwell in the presence of God, save it be through the merits, and merey, and grace of the Holy Messiah, who layeth down his life according to the flesh, and taketh it again by the power of the Spirit, that he may bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, being the first that should rise" (2 Ne. 2:8).

During his earthly life, Jesus Christ raised several from the dead; however, they were restored only to mortal life. By his later atonement and resurrection of his physical, tangible body (Luke 24:36–40), Jesus provided the means by which every person will be resurrected to immortal life, with a tangible body of flesh and bones, even as he has. Paul taught, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22), and "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. 15:54; cf. Rom. 6:5).

Immortality is a free gift for all mankind. AMULEK, a Book of Mormon prophet, taught that "this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; . . . every thing shall be restored to its perfect frame, as it is now, or in the body, . . . that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided" (Alma 11:44–45). Immortality, or the resurrection from the dead, will be given to all forms of life, for God glorifies himself "by saving all that His hands had made, whether beasts, fowls, fishes or men" (TPJS, p. 291; D&C 29:24–25).

Although sometimes used interchangeably, the words "immortality" and "eternal life" are not synonymous. All who obtain eternal life will also have immortality, but not all who receive immortality will have eternal life. The term "eternal life" has reference to the type or quality of life that God has, which is given only to the faithful, and includes much more than living forever. "And thus did I, the Lord God, appoint unto man the days of his probation—that by his natural death he might be raised in immortality unto eternal life, even as many as would believe" (D&C 29:43).

[See also Immortality and Eternal Life.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Doctrines of Salvation, Vol. 2, pp. 4–13. Salt Lake City, 1955.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 87–93. Salt Lake City, 1952.

DAN W. ANDERSEN

---

IMMORTALITY AND ETERNAL LIFE

The Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints teaches that the work and glory of God is to bring to pass both the IMMORTALITY and the ETERNAL LIFE of men and women (Moses 1:39; 2 Ne. 10:23–25). These two conditions in the AFTERLIFE are not necessarily synonymous, though each is given as a consequence of the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST.

Immortality is to live forever in a resurrected condition without death that was introduced to this world through the FALL OF ADAM AND EVE (2 Ne. 2:22–23). Through Jesus Christ's atonement, all living things will receive a resurrection, the spirit and the flesh uniting never again to be separated, and will live forever in an immortal state (2 Ne. 2:8–9; 9:13; Alma 11:45). Immortality is a free gift from God because of unconditional GRACE, and does not require works of OBEDIENCE. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22).

"Eternal life" is a higher state than immortality alone and means to live forever in a resurrected condition in the presence of God, and to become like God. It likewise is available only through the grace of Jesus Christ and is the greatest of all gifts that God bestows upon his children (D&C 14:7). Eternal life is EXALTATION into the type and quality of life that God lives. Receiving eternal life is conditional, predicated upon obedience to the fullness of gospel law and ORDINANCES (D&C 29:43–44; 130:20–21). It requires voluntary obedience to all of the ordinances and principles of the gospel, beginning with FAITH in Jesus Christ and continuing through BAPTISM, the LAYING ON OF HANDS for the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, and the COVENANTS of the ENDOWMENT and MARRIAGE in the TEMPLE, and of ENDURING TO THE END.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man, His Origin and Destiny, pp. 271–72. Salt Lake City, 1954.

LEAUN G. OTTEN

---

IMPROVEMENT ERA

One of six publications begun as Church auxiliary magazines between 1866 and 1902, the Improvement Era (1897–1970) was the official arm of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association (YMMIA, which became the YOUNG MEN in 1977). It followed the demise of the CONTRIBUTOR MAGAZINE (1879–1896), an independent journal associated with the YMMIA. Joined officially to the YMMIA, the Era immediately became the premier adult periodical of the Church through its General Authority sponsorship and its focus on theology, history, contemporary affairs, and life in the Church. Its name reflected its sponsor's goal to be for the intellectual, moral, and spiritual mutual improvement of its readers in a new Church era just one year after Utah achieved statehood. The Era's preeminence from 1901 onward for more than half a century was in part due to the participation of the President of the Church as its principal editor; thus, its pages were often used to voice concerns important to Church leadership and to respond to queries concerning Church doctrine and LDS LIFESTYLE. Its circulation of 2,000 in 1897 reached 275,000 when it was succeeded by the ENSIGN in January 1971.

The Era soon served more than the YMMIA. It was the publication arm of the Seventies in 1908, of other PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS in 1909, and of Church schools in 1913. It merged with YOUNG WOMAN'S JOURNAL, the publication of the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association (YWMIA, which became YOUNG WOMEN in 1977) in 1929. By 1936 it had become the arm of the music committee, ward teaching, and other agencies of the Church. Beginning in 1942, the Era printed all General Conference addresses (it had previously printed selected addresses).

In 1897 the Era had a 5 3/4-by-8 5/8-inch format. Thereafter, it usually contained eighty pages, with photographs printed on stitched-in leaves. In 1908 the paper was upgraded, and the number of photographs was increased. At its 1929 merger, the Era changed to an 8-by-10 7/8-inch magazine format, printed its covers in color, and began forty-one years of advertisements for its readers. It also added more general-interest articles. In 1957 the Era began publishing anniversary issues with four-color sections, but it did not use four-color printing regularly until 1969. In 1960 it began the section "The Era of Youth," a prelude to the NEW ERA.

The list of editors of the Era includes five presidents of the Church: Joseph F. SMITH, Heber J. GRANT, George Albert SMITH, David O. MCKAY, and Joseph Fielding SMITH; two members of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES: John A. Widtsoe and Richard L. Evans; and two members of the First Council of the SEVENTY: B. H. Roberts and Richard L. Evans. Other editors or managing editors were Edward H. Anderson, Hugh J. Cannon, Harrison R. Merrill, and Doyle L. Green. "The Era of Youth" section was edited by Elder Marion D. Hanks of the Seventy, and Elaine A. Cannon, who later became president of the Young Women (1978–1984).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Green, Doyle L. "The Improvement Era—The Voice of the Church (1897–1970)." IE 73 (Nov. 1970):12–20.

JAY M. TODD

---

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The tenth Article of Faith of the Church states, "We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion [the New Jerusalem] will be built upon the American continent." From the Book of Mormon (Ether 13:1–5), early Latter-day Saints realized they had a role in the fulfillment of prophecy and were looking forward to the establishment of the NEW JERUSALEM in America.

Anxious to know exactly where the promised city would be and when it would be built, the conditional, predicated upon obedience to the fullness of gospel law and ORDINANCES (D&C 29:43–44; 130:20–21). It requires voluntary obedience to all of the ordinances and principles of the gospel, beginning with FAITH in Jesus Christ and continuing through BAPTISM, the LAYING ON OF HANDS for the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, and the COVENANTS of the ENDOWMENT and MARRIAGE in the TEMPLE, and of ENDURING TO THE END.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man, His Origin and Destiny, pp. 271–72. Salt Lake City, 1954.

LEAUN G. OTTEN

---

IMPROVEMENT ERA

One of six publications begun as Church auxiliary magazines between 1866 and 1902, the Improvement Era (1897–1970) was the official arm of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association (YMMIA, which became the YOUNG MEN in 1977). It followed the demise of the CONTRIBUTOR MAGAZINE (1879–1896), an independent journal associated with the YMMIA. Joined officially to the YMMIA, the Era immediately became the premier adult periodical of the Church through its General Authority sponsorship and its focus on theology, history, contemporary affairs, and life in the Church. Its name reflected its sponsor's goal to be for the intellectual, moral, and spiritual mutual improvement of its readers in a new Church era just one year after Utah achieved statehood. The Era's preeminence from 1901 onward for more than half a century was in part due to the participation of the President of the Church as its principal editor; thus, its pages were often used to voice concerns important to Church leadership and to respond to queries concerning Church doctrine and LDS LIFESTYLE. Its circulation of 2,000 in 1897 reached 275,000 when it was succeeded by the ENSIGN in January 1971.

The Era soon served more than the YMMIA. It was the publication arm of the Seventies in 1908, of other PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS in 1909, and of Church schools in 1913. It merged with YOUNG WOMAN'S JOURNAL, the publication of the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association (YWMIA, which became YOUNG WOMEN in 1977) in 1929. By 1936 it had become the arm of the music committee, ward teaching, and other agencies of the Church. Beginning in 1942, the Era printed all General Conference addresses (it had previously printed selected addresses).

In 1897 the Era had a 5 3/4-by-8 5/8-inch format. Thereafter, it usually contained eighty pages, with photographs printed on stitched-in leaves. In 1908 the paper was upgraded, and the number of photographs was increased. At its 1929 merger, the Era changed to an 8-by-10 7/8-inch magazine format, printed its covers in color, and began forty-one years of advertisements for its readers. It also added more general-interest articles. In 1957 the Era began publishing anniversary issues with four-color sections, but it did not use four-color printing regularly until 1969. In 1960 it began the section "The Era of Youth," a prelude to the NEW ERA.

The list of editors of the Era includes five presidents of the Church: Joseph F. SMITH, Heber J. GRANT, George Albert SMITH, David O. MCKAY, and Joseph Fielding SMITH; two members of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES: John A. Widtsoe and Richard L. Evans; and two members of the First Council of the SEVENTY: B. H. Roberts and Richard L. Evans. Other editors or managing editors were Edward H. Anderson, Hugh J. Cannon, Harrison R. Merrill, and Doyle L. Green. "The Era of Youth" section was edited by Elder Marion D. Hanks of the Seventy, and Elaine A. Cannon, who later became president of the Young Women (1978–1984).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Green, Doyle L. "The Improvement Era—The Voice of the Church (1897–1970)." IE 73 (Nov. 1970):12–20.

JAY M. TODD

---

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The tenth Article of Faith of the Church states, "We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion [the New Jerusalem] will be built upon the American continent." From the Book of Mormon (Ether 13:1–5), early Latter-day Saints realized they had a role in the fulfillment of prophecy and were looking forward to the establishment of the NEW JERUSALEM in America.

Anxious to know exactly where the promised city would be and when it would be built, the conditional, predicated upon obedience to the fullness of gospel law and ORDINANCES (D&C 29:43–44; 130:20–21). It requires voluntary obedience to all of the ordinances and principles of the gospel, beginning with FAITH in Jesus Christ and continuing through BAPTISM, the LAYING ON OF HANDS for the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, and the COVENANTS of the ENDOWMENT and MARRIAGE in the TEMPLE, and of ENDURING TO THE END.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man, His Origin and Destiny, pp. 271–72. Salt Lake City, 1954.

LEAUN G. OTTEN

---

IMPROVEMENT ERA

One of six publications begun as Church auxiliary magazines between 1866 and 1902, the Improvement Era (1897–1970) was the official arm of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association (YMMIA, which became the YOUNG MEN in 1977). It followed the demise of the CONTRIBUTOR MAGAZINE (1879–1896), an independent journal associated with the YMMIA. Joined officially to the YMMIA, the Era immediately became the premier adult periodical of the Church through its General Authority sponsorship and its focus on theology, history, contemporary affairs, and life in the Church. Its name reflected its sponsor's goal to be for the intellectual, moral, and spiritual mutual improvement of its readers in a new Church era just one year after Utah achieved statehood. The Era's preeminence from 1901 onward for more than half a century was in part due to the participation of the President of the Church as its principal editor; thus, its pages were often used to voice concerns important to Church leadership and to respond to queries concerning Church doctrine and LDS LIFESTYLE. Its circulation of 2,000 in 1897 reached 275,000 when it was succeeded by the ENSIGN in January 1971.

The Era soon served more than the YMMIA. It was the publication arm of the Seventies in 1908, of other PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS in 1909, and of Church schools in 1913. It merged with YOUNG WOMAN'S JOURNAL, the publication of the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association (YWMIA, which became YOUNG WOMEN in 1977) in 1929. By 1936 it had become the arm of the music committee, ward teaching, and other agencies of the Church. Beginning in 1942, the Era printed all General Conference addresses (it had previously printed selected addresses).

In 1897 the Era had a 5 3/4-by-8 5/8-inch format. Thereafter, it usually contained eighty pages, with photographs printed on stitched-in leaves. In 1908 the paper was upgraded, and the number of photographs was increased. At its 1929 merger, the Era changed to an 8-by-10 7/8-inch magazine format, printed its covers in color, and began forty-one years of advertisements for its readers. It also added more general-interest articles. In 1957 the Era began publishing anniversary issues with four-color sections, but it did not use four-color printing regularly until 1969. In 1960 it began the section "The Era of Youth," a prelude to the NEW ERA.

The list of editors of the Era includes five presidents of the Church: Joseph F. SMITH, Heber J. GRANT, George Albert SMITH, David O. MCKAY, and Joseph Fielding SMITH; two members of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES: John A. Widtsoe and Richard L. Evans; and two members of the First Council of the SEVENTY: B. H. Roberts and Richard L. Evans. Other editors or managing editors were Edward H. Anderson, Hugh J. Cannon, Harrison R. Merrill, and Doyle L. Green. "The Era of Youth" section was edited by Elder Marion D. Hanks of the Seventy, and Elaine A. Cannon, who later became president of the Young Women (1978–1984).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Green, Doyle L. "The Improvement Era—The Voice of the Church (1897–1970)." IE 73 (Nov. 1970):12–20.

JAY M. TODD

---

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The tenth Article of Faith of the Church states, "We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion [the New Jerusalem] will be built upon the American continent." From the Book of Mormon (Ether 13:1–5), early Latter-day Saints realized they had a role in the fulfillment of prophecy and were looking forward to the establishment of the NEW JERUSALEM in America.

Anxious to know exactly where the promised city would be and when it would be built, the Saints were excited when in 1831 a series of revelations identified Missouri as the general location of the city of Zion, that "Independence is the center place, and a spot for the temple is lying westward, upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse" (D&C 57:1-3; 45:64-66; 48:4-6; 52:1-5, 42-43). Subsequently, Joseph Smith also indicated that the Jackson County area had been the location of the GARDEN OF EDEN.

Independence, Missouri, county seat of Jackson County, was the preparation and departure point in the 1830s and 1840s for trappers, explorers, and pioneers who were going to western America over the Santa Fe, Oregon, and California trails. The Latter-day Saints, however, anticipating permanent residence, purchased land, built homes, prepared their farms, and dedicated a temple site.

After one year of living peacefully in Independence and vicinity, the Saints began to be persecuted by their non-Mormon neighbors. Social, religious, and political differences finally developed into open hostilities, and the Latter-day Saints were driven into neighboring Clay County in 1833, where they petitioned for a peaceful settlement so that they could return to their homes. A settlement never came, but Latter-day Saints still look forward to a time when the city of Zion, the New Jerusalem, will be built in the area of Independence, Missouri.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. "Jackson County in Early Mormon Descriptions." Missouri Historical Review 65 (Apr. 1971):270-93.
- Bushman, Richard L. "Mormon Persecutions in Missouri in 1833." BYU Studies 3 (Autumn 1960):11-20.

LAMAR C. BERRETT

INDIAN STUDENT PLACEMENT SERVICES

The Indian Student Placement Services was established among NATIVE AMERICANS by the LDS Church in part to fulfill the obligation felt by the Church to help care for the Indians in the Americas (2 Ne. 10:18-19). The program places Indian students in Latter-day Saint homes, where they live while attending the public school of the community during the academic year. Another goal of Indian Student Placement Services, in addition to giving Indian youth better opportunities for education, has been to develop leadership and to promote greater understanding between Indians and non-Indians.

The program started in 1947 in Richfield, Utah, when Helen John, a sixteen-year-old daughter of Navajo beet-field workers, requested permission to stay in Richfield to attend school. As an outgrowth of this request, Golden Buchanan of the Sevier Stake presidency and Miles Jensen, with Elder Spencer W. KIMBALL's support, organized an informal placement program that grew from three students in 1947 to sixty-eight in 1954, with foster homes in four western states.

In July 1954 the program was formalized under Church SOCIAL SERVICES and the Southwest Indian Mission. For the next several years the program grew rapidly, peaking at 4,997 in 1972. The policy for participation was that the natural parents had to request the placement; then foster parents (recommended for the program by their bishop) provided free board, room, and clothing for the Indian children to help them have additional educational, spiritual, and sociocultural experiences. The Indian children, had to be at least eight years of age, baptized members of the Church, and in good health. In 1972 the responsibility for recruiting and screening students for the program was given to local priesthood leaders, and the number of students leveled in the mid and late 1970s to around 2,500 a year.

In the early 1980s several of the Indian tribes from whom many of the placement students had come replaced their boarding schools with dramatically improved education on the reservations. In support of this move, the Church limited Indian Placement Student Services to high school students. New goals emphasized the development and strengthening of LDS family and religious values, with Church Social Services taking responsibility for establishing stronger ties and communication between natural families and foster families. The placement service would introduce young Native Americans to mainstream values and social roles without demanding the abandonment of the old for the new. In 1990 the program served about 500 high school students.

Supporters of the services believe that bicultural experiences have great value. Critics view intervention as an intrusion on the right to be fully Native American, a weakening of cultural pluralism, and a cause of psychological damage. How-

Saints were excited when in 1831 a series of revelations identified Missouri as the general location of the city of Zion, that "Independence is the center place, and a spot for the temple is lying westward, upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse" (D&C 57:1-3; 45:64-66; 48:4-6; 52:1-5, 42-43). Subsequently, Joseph Smith also indicated that the Jackson County area had been the location of the GARDEN OF EDEN.

Independence, Missouri, county seat of Jackson County, was the preparation and departure point in the 1830s and 1840s for trappers, explorers, and pioneers who were going to western America over the Santa Fe, Oregon, and California trails. The Latter-day Saints, however, anticipating permanent residence, purchased land, built homes, prepared their farms, and dedicated a temple site.

After one year of living peacefully in Independence and vicinity, the Saints began to be persecuted by their non-Mormon neighbors. Social, religious, and political differences finally developed into open hostilities, and the Latter-day Saints were driven into neighboring Clay County in 1833, where they petitioned for a peaceful settlement so that they could return to their homes. A settlement never came, but Latter-day Saints still look forward to a time when the city of Zion, the New Jerusalem, will be built in the area of Independence, Missouri.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. "Jackson County in Early Mormon Descriptions." Missouri Historical Review 65 (Apr. 1971):270-93.
- Bushman, Richard L. "Mormon Persecutions in Missouri in 1833." BYU Studies 3 (Autumn 1960):11-20.

LAMAR C. BERRETT

INDIAN STUDENT PLACEMENT SERVICES

The Indian Student Placement Services was established among NATIVE AMERICANS by the LDS Church in part to fulfill the obligation felt by the Church to help care for the Indians in the Americas (2 Ne. 10:18-19). The program places Indian students in Latter-day Saint homes, where they live while attending the public school of the community during the academic year. Another goal of Indian Student Placement Services, in addition to giving Indian youth better opportunities for education, has been to develop leadership and to promote greater understanding between Indians and non-Indians.

The program started in 1947 in Richfield, Utah, when Helen John, a sixteen-year-old daughter of Navajo beet-field workers, requested permission to stay in Richfield to attend school. As an outgrowth of this request, Golden Buchanan of the Sevier Stake presidency and Miles Jensen, with Elder Spencer W. KIMBALL's support, organized an informal placement program that grew from three students in 1947 to sixty-eight in 1954, with foster homes in four western states.

In July 1954 the program was formalized under Church SOCIAL SERVICES and the Southwest Indian Mission. For the next several years the program grew rapidly, peaking at 4,997 in 1972. The policy for participation was that the natural parents had to request the placement; then foster parents (recommended for the program by their bishop) provided free board, room, and clothing for the Indian children to help them have additional educational, spiritual, and sociocultural experiences. The Indian children, had to be at least eight years of age, baptized members of the Church, and in good health. In 1972 the responsibility for recruiting and screening students for the program was given to local priesthood leaders, and the number of students leveled in the mid and late 1970s to around 2,500 a year.

In the early 1980s several of the Indian tribes from whom many of the placement students had come replaced their boarding schools with dramatically improved education on the reservations. In support of this move, the Church limited Indian Placement Student Services to high school students. New goals emphasized the development and strengthening of LDS family and religious values, with Church Social Services taking responsibility for establishing stronger ties and communication between natural families and foster families. The placement service would introduce young Native Americans to mainstream values and social roles without demanding the abandonment of the old for the new. In 1990 the program served about 500 high school students.

Supporters of the services believe that bicultural experiences have great value. Critics view intervention as an intrusion on the right to be fully Native American, a weakening of cultural pluralism, and a cause of psychological damage. However, empirical studies, even by critics, are ambivalent. One claims that the program has failed to raise achievement and IQ scores of placement students, but notes that placement students read more than their reservation counterparts. A second suggests that students suffer intercultural conflict within their foster families, but expresses surprise that these students function without major symptoms of psychological distress. Still another asserts that the placement experience interferes with the process of identity formation, but acknowledges that the program has done more for the Indian people than any other program to date.

Many theses, dissertations, formal reports, and published articles find that the program has been successful and valuable. Placement students usually come from rural families with stable but limited economic and cultural opportunities. Starting with limited language skills, the students in the placement program come out with less fear of failure, more confidence in their future, and higher academic skills and grades, and a better self-image than their reservation peers. Other studies indicate that placement services graduates are aware of a great variety of occupations open to them and are anxious to continue their education to prepare for them. They typically have come to believe in working hard for future rewards and feel that being Indian does not hold them down. They graduate from high school in larger numbers than non-placement Native Americans, and the college grades of rural placement students are on a par with the grades of urban Indian students.

Most placement students express more pride and interest in Indian culture than do students from Indian boarding schools. That they perceive themselves as truly bicultural, at ease in both societies, is confirmed by their rate of interaction with Indian students as well as with Anglo peers. They also become Church leaders. Most of them are active in the Church, go on missions, and agree with major Church beliefs; many marry in the temple.

Foster parents volunteer for religious reasons and remain in the program to see the child grow and develop emotionally and spiritually. They typically become very attached to their Indian children, maintaining a close relationship with them after graduation from school.

Accusations that the LDS Church used its influence to push children into joining the program prompted the U.S. government in 1977 to commission a study conducted under the auspices of the Interstate Compact Secretariat. Its findings rejected such accusations. In the resulting report, written by Robert E. Leach, Native American parents emphatically stated that they, not the children, decided to apply for placement. These parents typically stated that they were pleased that the program led their children to happiness and a better economic situation while the children still identified with their Indian heritage. This participation, they claimed, also helped the rest of the family to understand and deal more effectively with Anglos. They consistently expressed appreciation to the foster families for caring for their children. Some Indian leaders were intent on limiting the placement of Indian children among Anglos. However, after hearing testimony and examining current research, the committee agreed in 1977 to permit the LDS Indian Student Placement program to continue.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bishop, Clarence R. "An Evaluation of the Scholastic Achievement of Selected Indian Students Attending Elementary Public Schools of Utah." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1960.
- Chadwick, Bruce A., Stan L. Albrecht, and Howard M. Bahr. "Evaluation of an Indian Student Placement Program." Social Casework 67 (Nov. 1986):515-24.
- The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Presiding Bishopric, Research and Evaluation Services. Indian Student Placement Service Evaluation Study. Salt Lake City, May 1982.
- Taylor, Grant H. "A Comparative Study of Former LDS Placement and Non-Placement Navajo Students at Brigham Young University." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1981.

GENEVIEVE DEHOYOS

---

INDIVIDUALITY

It is LDS doctrine that every human being has an eternal identity, existing from the premortal state and continuing forever (Abr. 3:22-23). Moreover, all individuals are responsible for their own choices, and all will stand before the Lord to present an accounting of their lives at the Judgment Day (A of F 2; Moro. 10:27). This, however, does not mean that individuals are autonomous or alone. All individuals are spirit children of God the Father, who organized them into relationships in order to maximize their growth and happiness through loving and serving one another.

ever, empirical studies, even by critics, are ambivalent. One claims that the program has failed to raise achievement and IQ scores of placement students, but notes that placement students read more than their reservation counterparts. A second suggests that students suffer intercultural conflict within their foster families, but expresses surprise that these students function without major symptoms of psychological distress. Still another asserts that the placement experience interferes with the process of identity formation, but acknowledges that the program has done more for the Indian people than any other program to date.

Many theses, dissertations, formal reports, and published articles find that the program has been successful and valuable. Placement students usually come from rural families with stable but limited economic and cultural opportunities. Starting with limited language skills, the students in the placement program come out with less fear of failure, more confidence in their future, and higher academic skills and grades, and a better self-image than their reservation peers. Other studies indicate that placement services graduates are aware of a great variety of occupations open to them and are anxious to continue their education to prepare for them. They typically have come to believe in working hard for future rewards and feel that being Indian does not hold them down. They graduate from high school in larger numbers than non-placement Native Americans, and the college grades of rural placement students are on a par with the grades of urban Indian students.

Most placement students express more pride and interest in Indian culture than do students from Indian boarding schools. That they perceive themselves as truly bicultural, at ease in both societies, is confirmed by their rate of interaction with Indian students as well as with Anglo peers. They also become Church leaders. Most of them are active in the Church, go on missions, and agree with major Church beliefs; many marry in the temple.

Foster parents volunteer for religious reasons and remain in the program to see the child grow and develop emotionally and spiritually. They typically become very attached to their Indian children, maintaining a close relationship with them after graduation from school.

Accusations that the LDS Church used its influence to push children into joining the program prompted the U.S. government in 1977 to commission a study conducted under the auspices of the Interstate Compact Secretariat. Its findings rejected such accusations. In the resulting report, written by Robert E. Leach, Native American parents emphatically stated that they, not the children, decided to apply for placement. These parents typically stated that they were pleased that the program led their children to happiness and a better economic situation while the children still identified with their Indian heritage. This participation, they claimed, also helped the rest of the family to understand and deal more effectively with Anglos. They consistently expressed appreciation to the foster families for caring for their children. Some Indian leaders were intent on limiting the placement of Indian children among Anglos. However, after hearing testimony and examining current research, the committee agreed in 1977 to permit the LDS Indian Student Placement program to continue.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bishop, Clarence R. "An Evaluation of the Scholastic Achievement of Selected Indian Students Attending Elementary Public Schools of Utah." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1960.
- Chadwick, Bruce A., Stan L. Albrecht, and Howard M. Bahr. "Evaluation of an Indian Student Placement Program." Social Casework 67 (Nov. 1986):515-24.
- The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Presiding Bishopric, Research and Evaluation Services. Indian Student Placement Service Evaluation Study. Salt Lake City, May 1982.
- Taylor, Grant H. "A Comparative Study of Former LDS Placement and Non-Placement Navajo Students at Brigham Young University." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1981.

GENEVIEVE DEHOYOS

---

INDIVIDUALITY

It is LDS doctrine that every human being has an eternal identity, existing from the premortal state and continuing forever (Abr. 3:22-23). Moreover, all individuals are responsible for their own choices, and all will stand before the Lord to present an accounting of their lives at the Judgment Day (A of F 2; Moro. 10:27). This, however, does not mean that individuals are autonomous or alone. All individuals are spirit children of God the Father, who organized them into relationships in order to maximize their growth and happiness through loving and serving one another.

LDS teachings make clear that living the gospel of Jesus Christ means voluntarily submitting the self to the will of God. Joseph F. SMITH felt that it shows “a stronger characteristic of individuality” to bring the self into harmony with God than to be separate from him (JD 25:245). An individual must voluntarily obey God’s will to achieve righteousness (John 7:16), and God’s will requires service to others in one’s family and community (Matt. 20:26–27). Paradoxically, “he that loseth his life for [Christ’s] sake shall find it” (Matt. 10:39); and as David O. MCKAY stated, “A man’s duties to himself and to his fellow men are indissolubly connected” (p. 289). The Church cannot force individuals to become one with God and others. That must be done “only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned; by kindness” (D&C 121:41–43).

The ultimate objectives of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are as inclusive and extensive as can be imagined, both individually and collectively—namely, to attain ETERNAL LIFE for all individuals and eternal continuity for families and to maintain a supportive, unified community of Saints on earth who live the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The scale and profundity of these objectives are equal to the depth of commitment they require. Christ promises righteous men and women that they shall be joint-heirs with him, inheritors of “all that my Father hath” (D&C 84:33–39; Rom. 8:14–18). Having offered the RICHES OF ETERNITY, the Savior may require the faithful to voluntarily sacrifice all their earthly possessions, including life itself, in order “to produce the faith necessary unto life and salvation” (Lectures on Faith, Lecture 6, paragraph 7). Latter-day Saints express this principle in a beloved hymn: “I’ll go where you want me to go, dear Lord, . . . I’ll be what you want me to be” (Hymns, p. 270).

Salvation is both an individual and a collective matter. Individuals are punished for their own sins, but the personal choices that foster growth and exaltation necessarily involve other people. The atonement of Jesus Christ is relational: “No man cometh unto the Father, but by me,” the Savior said, and people demonstrate their love for him by keeping his commandments (John 14:6, 15). The BAPTISMAL COVENANT is both personal and social: it involves personal willingness to remember Christ always, and it encourages members to “bear one another’s burdens” (Mosiah 18:8).

While the singular focus of the Church on achieving its ultimate objectives unifies its members in ways that contrast markedly with organizations having internally competing objectives, there are limits to the diversity in individual beliefs and practices that the Church can tolerate and still achieve its mission (see ORTHODOXY, HETERODOXY, AND HERESY). Neither Joseph Smith’s oft-quoted statement that “I teach the people correct principles and they govern themselves” (JD 10:57–58) nor Lehi’s insistence that people are free to choose liberty and eternal life or captivity and death (2 Ne. 2:26–27) means that the Church can ignore internal challenges to its integrity or principles (Matt. 18:17; 2 Thes. 3:14–15; D&C 42:24, 74–93). Severe cases of disruption and violation may be subjected to DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES and may result in disfellowshipment or even excommunication.

Christ affirms great diversity and individuality in gospel service. Each person has abilities to perform Christlike service that others may not be able to perform. Jesus taught that personal spiritual gifts and talents are to be cultivated and shared: “the best gifts” are given “that all may be profited thereby” (D&C 46:8–12; see also GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT).

Organizations may in a measure constrain behavior, and the Church has a constraining influence on individuals insofar as they choose to conform or fulfill the requirements for holding CALLINGS or a TEMPLE RECOMMEND. However, there is ample room for the expression of individuality and appreciation for those who may take a novel approach to the righteous fulfillment of their responsibilities. God counsels his children to use their gifts creatively and intelligently in his service: “It is not meet that I should command in all things; for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant” (D&C 58:26–28). Moreover, most Church constraints, such as the law of chastity or the directive to avoid addictive substances, are intended to free the individual for a happier life. Voluntarily following Jesus Christ is the ultimate liberty, and sin, the ultimate captivity (John 8:32; 2 Ne. 2:26–27).

Latter-day Saints are taught that they and all the rest of the human family are eternal children of a loving Heavenly Father. Their individuality is priceless and eternal. The recognition that the Church is enriched by a diversity of individual endowments, experiences, and interests always has been fundamental to the LDS faith. The concluding sentence of the Articles of Faith celebrates the diverse individual paths that are part of the righteous life: "If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things."

[See also Socialization; Unity; Values, Transmission of.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Victor, Jr. "Differences." Ensign 8 (July 1978):8–11.
- Dahl, Larry E., and Charles D. Tate, Jr., eds. The Lectures on Faith in Historical Perspective. Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Higbee, Kenneth. "On Doing Your Own Thing." New Era 5 (Apr. 1975):18–20.
- McKay, David O. "Each Individual Must Work Out His Own Salvation." Instructor 96 (1961):289–90.
- Packer, Boyd K. Teach Ye Diligently. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- Talmage, James E. "Practical Religion." AF, chap. 24.

HOWARD M. BAHR

---

INFANT BAPTISM

[This entry has two parts: the LDS Perspective concerning this practice, and the Early Christian Origins.]

LDS PERSPECTIVE

Children are baptized as members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints when they reach age eight and receive a bishop's interview to assess their understanding and commitment. This age for baptism was identified by revelation (D&C 68:25, 28). The Church does not baptize infants.

The practice of baptizing infants emerged among Christians in the third century A.D. and was controversial for some time. According to the Book of Mormon, it similarly became an issue and was denounced among the Nephites in the fourth century A.D. When MORMON, a Nephite prophet, inquired of the Lord concerning baptism of little children, he was told that they are incapable of committing sin and that the curse of Adam is removed from them through the ATONEMENT of Christ. Hence little children need neither repentance nor baptism (Moro. 8:8–22). They are to be taught "to pray and walk uprightly" so that by the age of accountability their baptism will be meaningful and effective for their lives.

[See also Accountability; Children: Salvation of Children; Fall of Adam; Original Sin.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. "The Salvation of Little Children." Ensign 7 (Apr. 1977):3–7.

ROBERT E. PARSONS

EARLY CHRISTIAN ORIGINS

Although the New Testament never mentions infant baptism either to approve or to condemn the practice, many passages therein associate BAPTISM with FAITH in Jesus Christ, REPENTANCE, and forgiveness of SINS, none of which are appropriate requirements for infants (Mark 1:4–5; 16:15–16; Acts 2:37–38; 19:4; 22:16; Rom. 6:1–6; 1 Cor. 6:9–11; Gal. 3:26–27; Col. 2:12–13; Heb. 6:1–6; 10:22; 1 Pet. 3:21).

The assumption that those baptized are committed disciples continues through the second century in Christian literature (Didache 7.1; Shepherd of Hermas: "Vision" 3.7 and "Mandates" 4.3; Epistle of Barnabas 11; Justin, First Apology 1.11, 15). The earliest explicit reference to the practice of baptizing infants dates to shortly after A.D. 200 in the writings of Tertullian, a North African theologian who opposed it on the grounds that baptism carries an awesome responsibility and should be delayed until a person is fully committed to living righteously (De baptismo 18). A decade later Hippolytus, who would become a schismatic bishop in Rome, wrote a handbook of rules for church organization and practice. Some versions of his Apostolic Tradition (21.3–4) refer to baptizing "little ones," who should have an adult relative speak for them if they are unable to do so themselves. However, since Hippolytus prescribed a normative three-year preparatory period of teaching, reading, fasting, and prayer prior to baptism (Apostolic Tradition 17), the infant baptism passage has been questioned as a later interpolation.

The first Christian writer to defend infant baptism as an apostolic practice was apparently Origen, the preeminent theologian of the Greek-speaking church, who wrote on the subject around A.D. 240 in Alexandria, Egypt. Origen referred to the frequently asked question of why the church should baptize sinless infants (Homily on Luke 14). In response, he argued that baptism takes away the pollution of birth. Origen's Commentary on Romans further elaborates this theme, asserting that because of hereditary sin, "the church has a tradition from the apostles to give baptism even to infants" (5.9). However, this passage is suspect be-

has been fundamental to the LDS faith. The concluding sentence of the Articles of Faith celebrates the diverse individual paths that are part of the righteous life: "If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things."

[See also Socialization; Unity; Values, Transmission of.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Victor, Jr. "Differences." Ensign 8 (July 1978):8–11.
- Dahl, Larry E., and Charles D. Tate, Jr., eds. The Lectures on Faith in Historical Perspective. Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Higbee, Kenneth. "On Doing Your Own Thing." New Era 5 (Apr. 1975):18–20.
- McKay, David O. "Each Individual Must Work Out His Own Salvation." Instructor 96 (1961):289–90.
- Packer, Boyd K. Teach Ye Diligently. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- Talmage, James E. "Practical Religion." AF, chap. 24.

HOWARD M. BAHR

---

INFANT BAPTISM

[This entry has two parts: the LDS Perspective concerning this practice, and the Early Christian Origins.]

LDS PERSPECTIVE

Children are baptized as members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints when they reach age eight and receive a bishop's interview to assess their understanding and commitment. This age for baptism was identified by revelation (D&C 68:25, 28). The Church does not baptize infants.

The practice of baptizing infants emerged among Christians in the third century A.D. and was controversial for some time. According to the Book of Mormon, it similarly became an issue and was denounced among the Nephites in the fourth century A.D. When MORMON, a Nephite prophet, inquired of the Lord concerning baptism of little children, he was told that they are incapable of committing sin and that the curse of Adam is removed from them through the ATONEMENT of Christ. Hence little children need neither repentance nor baptism (Moro. 8:8–22). They are to be taught "to pray and walk uprightly" so that by the age of accountability their baptism will be meaningful and effective for their lives.

[See also Accountability; Children: Salvation of Children; Fall of Adam; Original Sin.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. "The Salvation of Little Children." Ensign 7 (Apr. 1977):3–7.

ROBERT E. PARSONS

EARLY CHRISTIAN ORIGINS

Although the New Testament never mentions infant baptism either to approve or to condemn the practice, many passages therein associate BAPTISM with FAITH in Jesus Christ, REPENTANCE, and forgiveness of SINS, none of which are appropriate requirements for infants (Mark 1:4–5; 16:15–16; Acts 2:37–38; 19:4; 22:16; Rom. 6:1–6; 1 Cor. 6:9–11; Gal. 3:26–27; Col. 2:12–13; Heb. 6:1–6; 10:22; 1 Pet. 3:21).

The assumption that those baptized are committed disciples continues through the second century in Christian literature (Didache 7.1; Shepherd of Hermas: "Vision" 3.7 and "Mandates" 4.3; Epistle of Barnabas 11; Justin, First Apology 1.11, 15). The earliest explicit reference to the practice of baptizing infants dates to shortly after A.D. 200 in the writings of Tertullian, a North African theologian who opposed it on the grounds that baptism carries an awesome responsibility and should be delayed until a person is fully committed to living righteously (De baptismo 18). A decade later Hippolytus, who would become a schismatic bishop in Rome, wrote a handbook of rules for church organization and practice. Some versions of his Apostolic Tradition (21.3–4) refer to baptizing "little ones," who should have an adult relative speak for them if they are unable to do so themselves. However, since Hippolytus prescribed a normative three-year preparatory period of teaching, reading, fasting, and prayer prior to baptism (Apostolic Tradition 17), the infant baptism passage has been questioned as a later interpolation.

The first Christian writer to defend infant baptism as an apostolic practice was apparently Origen, the preeminent theologian of the Greek-speaking church, who wrote on the subject around A.D. 240 in Alexandria, Egypt. Origen referred to the frequently asked question of why the church should baptize sinless infants (Homily on Luke 14). In response, he argued that baptism takes away the pollution of birth. Origen's Commentary on Romans further elaborates this theme, asserting that because of hereditary sin, "the church has a tradition from the apostles to give baptism even to infants" (5.9). However, this passage is suspect because it is found only in a Latin translation by Rufinus, who tended on several occasions to “correct” Origen according to later doctrine. A few years later, Cyprian, bishop of Carthage, addressing the question of the timing of infant baptism, wrote that a child’s soul should not be placed in jeopardy of perdition even one day by delaying the grace of baptism (De peccatorum meritis 1.34).

Historically, then, infant baptism cannot be demonstrated as beginning before the third century, when it emerged as a topic of extended controversy. Not until Augustine wrote against the Donatists two centuries later was infant baptism established as a universal custom (Jeremias, pp. 94–97; Jewett, p. 16). Thereafter, the practice went largely unquestioned until the Protestant Reformation, when a radical group in Zurich broke with the reformer Zwingli over this and other issues in 1525. These so-called Anabaptists (those who denied the validity of their baptism as infants and were rebaptized as adults) were precursors of the Baptist movement.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Beasley-Murray, G. R. Baptism in the New Testament. London, 1962.
- Cullmann, Oscar. Baptism in the New Testament, trans. J. Reid. Chicago, 1950.
- Jeremias, Joachim. Infant Baptism in the First Four Centuries, translated by D. Cairns. Philadelphia, Pa., 1962.
- Jewett, Paul K. Infant Baptism and the Covenant of Grace. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1978.

KEITH E. NORMAN

INSPIRATION

All humans are entitled to inspiration, which is the influence of the Spirit of the Lord upon their minds and souls (Benson, p. 142). The Lord inspires men and women and calls them “to his holy work in this age and generation, as well as in generations of old” (D&C 20:11). Inspiration from God is essential to understanding spiritual matters. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, “If a man learns nothing more than to eat, drink and sleep, and does not comprehend any of the designs of God, the beast comprehends the same things . . . it knows as much as we, unless we are able to comprehend by the inspiration of Almighty God” (TPJS, p. 343).

“Inspiration” and “revelation” are sometimes used interchangeably by LDS leaders in explaining the source of prophetic authority. The FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church said, “Moses wrote the history of the creation, and we believe that he had the inspiration of the Almighty resting upon him. The Prophets who wrote after him were likewise endowed with the Spirit of revelation” (MFP 2:232). President Wilford WOODRUFF later noted, “This Church has never been led a day except by revelation. And He will never leave it. It matters not who lives or who dies, or who is called to lead this Church, they have got to lead it by inspiration of Almighty God” (MFP 3:225).

Latter-day Saints believe that their efforts can be enhanced and their personal capabilities expanded when they do their best work and at the same time depend upon the Lord “for light and inspiration beyond [their] own natural talents” (Benson, p. 173). Inspiration must be sought and then acted upon when it is received. This quest for inspiration is important in all the affairs of life. President Ezra Taft BENSON’s explanation of the necessity of inspiration is as valid in temporal, family, and all other matters as it is in Church concerns: “Inspiration is essential to properly lead (D&C 50:13–14). We must have the spirit of inspiration whether we are teaching (D&C 50:13–14) or administering the affairs of the kingdom (D&C 46:2). If we do our part in preparation and work and have the Spirit of the Lord, we can be led, though we do not know beforehand what needs to be done (1 Ne. 4:6; Alma 17:3). Therefore, we should always pray, especially prior to commencing the work of the Lord (2 Ne. 32:9)” (Benson, p. 433).

Inspiration comes from the Lord and may be received in various ways. It comes from prayer (D&C 63:64), from a personal manifestation of the spirit of the Lord (D&C 20:11), from reading and following the commandments, and from studying and pondering the scriptures. Women and men may also be inspired by good causes, such as protection of home, family, and personal freedoms (Alma 43:45). President Spencer W. KIMBALL explained, “We pray for enlightenment, then go to with all our might and our books and our thoughts and righteousness to get the inspiration” (Kimball, p. 122). Much of the world’s fine music, art, and literature can inspire, as can the role models provided by noble people living in the past or present, because “every thing which inviteth and enticeth cause it is found only in a Latin translation by Rufinus, who tended on several occasions to “correct” Origen according to later doctrine. A few years later, Cyprian, bishop of Carthage, addressing the question of the timing of infant baptism, wrote that a child’s soul should not be placed in jeopardy of perdition even one day by delaying the grace of baptism (De peccatorum meritis 1.34).

Historically, then, infant baptism cannot be demonstrated as beginning before the third century, when it emerged as a topic of extended controversy. Not until Augustine wrote against the Donatists two centuries later was infant baptism established as a universal custom (Jeremias, pp. 94–97; Jewett, p. 16). Thereafter, the practice went largely unquestioned until the Protestant Reformation, when a radical group in Zurich broke with the reformer Zwingli over this and other issues in 1525. These so-called Anabaptists (those who denied the validity of their baptism as infants and were rebaptized as adults) were precursors of the Baptist movement.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Beasley-Murray, G. R. Baptism in the New Testament. London, 1962.
- Cullmann, Oscar. Baptism in the New Testament, trans. J. Reid. Chicago, 1950.
- Jeremias, Joachim. Infant Baptism in the First Four Centuries, translated by D. Cairns. Philadelphia, Pa., 1962.
- Jewett, Paul K. Infant Baptism and the Covenant of Grace. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1978.

KEITH E. NORMAN

INSPIRATION

All humans are entitled to inspiration, which is the influence of the Spirit of the Lord upon their minds and souls (Benson, p. 142). The Lord inspires men and women and calls them “to his holy work in this age and generation, as well as in generations of old” (D&C 20:11). Inspiration from God is essential to understanding spiritual matters. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, “If a man learns nothing more than to eat, drink and sleep, and does not comprehend any of the designs of God, the beast comprehends the same things . . . it knows as much as we, unless we are able to comprehend by the inspiration of Almighty God” (TPJS, p. 343).

“Inspiration” and “revelation” are sometimes used interchangeably by LDS leaders in explaining the source of prophetic authority. The FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church said, “Moses wrote the history of the creation, and we believe that he had the inspiration of the Almighty resting upon him. The Prophets who wrote after him were likewise endowed with the Spirit of revelation” (MFP 2:232). President Wilford WOODRUFF later noted, “This Church has never been led a day except by revelation. And He will never leave it. It matters not who lives or who dies, or who is called to lead this Church, they have got to lead it by inspiration of Almighty God” (MFP 3:225).

Latter-day Saints believe that their efforts can be enhanced and their personal capabilities expanded when they do their best work and at the same time depend upon the Lord “for light and inspiration beyond [their] own natural talents” (Benson, p. 173). Inspiration must be sought and then acted upon when it is received. This quest for inspiration is important in all the affairs of life. President Ezra Taft BENSON’s explanation of the necessity of inspiration is as valid in temporal, family, and all other matters as it is in Church concerns: “Inspiration is essential to properly lead (D&C 50:13–14). We must have the spirit of inspiration whether we are teaching (D&C 50:13–14) or administering the affairs of the kingdom (D&C 46:2). If we do our part in preparation and work and have the Spirit of the Lord, we can be led, though we do not know beforehand what needs to be done (1 Ne. 4:6; Alma 17:3). Therefore, we should always pray, especially prior to commencing the work of the Lord (2 Ne. 32:9)” (Benson, p. 433).

Inspiration comes from the Lord and may be received in various ways. It comes from prayer (D&C 63:64), from a personal manifestation of the spirit of the Lord (D&C 20:11), from reading and following the commandments, and from studying and pondering the scriptures. Women and men may also be inspired by good causes, such as protection of home, family, and personal freedoms (Alma 43:45). President Spencer W. KIMBALL explained, “We pray for enlightenment, then go to with all our might and our books and our thoughts and righteousness to get the inspiration” (Kimball, p. 122). Much of the world’s fine music, art, and literature can inspire, as can the role models provided by noble people living in the past or present, because “every thing which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and to serve him, is inspired of God" (Moro. 7:13).

The fruits of inspiration are many: inspiration from the Lord gives understanding (Job 32:8); those who call upon God may write by the spirit of inspiration (Moses 6:5); and those who believe in the words of the PROPHETS may speak as they are inspired by the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST (D&C 20:26). Individuals may be inspired to take specific action, as the Prophet Joseph Smith was inspired to lay the foundation of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (D&C 21:2,7). The Constitution of the United States "was given by inspiration of God" (MFP 3:12).

When called to specific Church duties, members have the right to receive inspiration from God in fulfilling them. They can also expect their leaders to serve with inspiration. "When you read the Book of Mormon, you know you are reading the truth. Why? Because God directed men to write events as they occurred, and he gave them the wisdom and inspiration to do this" (DS 2:202).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Kimball, Spencer W. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1982.

CAROL L. CLARK

---

INSTITUTES OF RELIGION

Institutes of religion in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints refer to weekday religious instruction for students attending colleges, universities, and other postsecondary institutions where sufficient LDS students are enrolled. Together with the SEMINARIES for high school students, institutes provide those students an opportunity for organized religious study in connection with their secular studies. The Church funds and administers the institutes of religion as part of its comprehensive CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM (CES).

The institute program offers courses in the scriptures and related religious topics such as marriage, Church history, and world religions. Institutes also provide opportunities for students to associate socially, spiritually, and culturally with others who have similar ideals through the Latter-day Saint Student Association (LDSSA), which provides LDS student activities on and off campus.

The Church has established a general regulation that all full-time institute instructors should hold at least a master's degree. A majority hold a doctorate degree. Such degrees are generally not in religion, but in related fields such as education, counseling, or history. The Church expects institute faculty to possess scholarly competence in religion and related fields comparable to that of teachers at adjacent academic institutions, and to be exemplary in all aspects of their lives.

In 1989–1990, there were 317 full-time and several hundred part-time and volunteer instructors in LDS institutes throughout the world, with many full-time instructors serving more than one institute. In the same year, 125,534 students were enrolled in 1,273 institutes serving 1,711 non-LDS college and university campuses internationally.

Historically the rise of public higher education in the United States led to the elimination of religious education from most university and college curriculums. Beginning in 1894, in response to the need for religious education on these campuses, various student organizations were established, including the Roman Catholic Newman Club, full-time Baptist ministries by campus chaplains, the Jewish B'nai B'rith Hillel, and others. LDS leaders addressed the need for weekday religious education for their college students as early as 1912. As the Church's junior colleges closed (see ACADEMIES; SCHOOLS), requests came to establish weekday religious education for LDS students on non-LDS college campuses.

To meet this need, in 1926 the Church initiated a program for LDS students attending the University of Idaho at Moscow, Idaho. University officials welcomed the institute adjacent to the campus. Initially called a college "seminary," the program was renamed the "institute of religion," which established a precedent for subsequent institutes.

In 1935, John A. Widtsoe of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles outlined the purposes of the institutes of religion:

During University years students meeting much new knowledge frequently have difficulty, unaided, in reconciling their religious beliefs . . . with their academic studies. . . . LDS Institutes have been established to meet this situation. They offer studies to do good, and to love God, and to serve him, is inspired of God" (Moro. 7:13).

The fruits of inspiration are many: inspiration from the Lord gives understanding (Job 32:8); those who call upon God may write by the spirit of inspiration (Moses 6:5); and those who believe in the words of the PROPHETS may speak as they are inspired by the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST (D&C 20:26). Individuals may be inspired to take specific action, as the Prophet Joseph Smith was inspired to lay the foundation of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (D&C 21:2,7). The Constitution of the United States "was given by inspiration of God" (MFP 3:12).

When called to specific Church duties, members have the right to receive inspiration from God in fulfilling them. They can also expect their leaders to serve with inspiration. "When you read the Book of Mormon, you know you are reading the truth. Why? Because God directed men to write events as they occurred, and he gave them the wisdom and inspiration to do this" (DS 2:202).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Kimball, Spencer W. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1982.

CAROL L. CLARK

---

INSTITUTES OF RELIGION

Institutes of religion in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints refer to weekday religious instruction for students attending colleges, universities, and other postsecondary institutions where sufficient LDS students are enrolled. Together with the SEMINARIES for high school students, institutes provide those students an opportunity for organized religious study in connection with their secular studies. The Church funds and administers the institutes of religion as part of its comprehensive CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM (CES).

The institute program offers courses in the scriptures and related religious topics such as marriage, Church history, and world religions. Institutes also provide opportunities for students to associate socially, spiritually, and culturally with others who have similar ideals through the Latter-day Saint Student Association (LDSSA), which provides LDS student activities on and off campus.

The Church has established a general regulation that all full-time institute instructors should hold at least a master's degree. A majority hold a doctorate degree. Such degrees are generally not in religion, but in related fields such as education, counseling, or history. The Church expects institute faculty to possess scholarly competence in religion and related fields comparable to that of teachers at adjacent academic institutions, and to be exemplary in all aspects of their lives.

In 1989–1990, there were 317 full-time and several hundred part-time and volunteer instructors in LDS institutes throughout the world, with many full-time instructors serving more than one institute. In the same year, 125,534 students were enrolled in 1,273 institutes serving 1,711 non-LDS college and university campuses internationally.

Historically the rise of public higher education in the United States led to the elimination of religious education from most university and college curriculums. Beginning in 1894, in response to the need for religious education on these campuses, various student organizations were established, including the Roman Catholic Newman Club, full-time Baptist ministries by campus chaplains, the Jewish B'nai B'rith Hillel, and others. LDS leaders addressed the need for weekday religious education for their college students as early as 1912. As the Church's junior colleges closed (see ACADEMIES; SCHOOLS), requests came to establish weekday religious education for LDS students on non-LDS college campuses.

To meet this need, in 1926 the Church initiated a program for LDS students attending the University of Idaho at Moscow, Idaho. University officials welcomed the institute adjacent to the campus. Initially called a college "seminary," the program was renamed the "institute of religion," which established a precedent for subsequent institutes.

In 1935, John A. Widtsoe of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles outlined the purposes of the institutes of religion:

During University years students meeting much new knowledge frequently have difficulty, unaided, in reconciling their religious beliefs . . . with their academic studies. . . . LDS Institutes have been established to meet this situation. They offer studies in religion on the college level, in college terms, dealing with the profound questions which every thinking individual has a right to ask. At the Institute students discuss these questions freely and frankly with the Institute Directors, either in classes or in private consultation ["Why Institutes," Announcement of the LDS Institutes: 1935-1936, Department of Education, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints].

The Church soon constructed a building adjacent to the University of Idaho that became the headquarters for LDS students at the university. The principle of separation of church and state guided the development of the project and the direction of institute activities. The institute developed a cultural and social activities program providing fellowship for LDS students in the area. This fellowship extended beyond LDS students to faculty and other students on campus.

Institutes in Logan, Utah, at Utah State Agricultural College and in Salt Lake City at the University of Utah soon followed the Moscow institute. Shortly thereafter, the Church established institutes at other universities and colleges in Utah, Arizona, and Washington.

Before there were enough students to establish full-time institute programs on southern California campuses, Desert Clubs were organized. These became the prototype for small LDS student organizations. These clubs continued until 1971, when the Church formally established the LDSSA as the official LDS student group on university and college campuses.

The first international LDS institute program was established in 1969 in Australia and was soon duplicated in New Zealand and Great Britain. The Church has since established institutes in sixty additional countries. These have become a source of support and training for new Church leadership in those areas.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, A. Gary. "A Historical Survey of the Full-Time Institutes of Religion of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1926-1966." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1968.
- Arrington, Leonard J. "The Founding of the LDS Institutes of Religion." Dialogue 2 (Summer 1967):137-47.
- Berrett, William E. A Miracle in Weekday Religious Education. Salt Lake City, 1988.

STANLEY A. PETERSON

INSTRUCTOR, THE

The Instructor was originally published as JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR, from 1866 to 1929. At first a children's magazine, it became the official publication of the SUNDAY SCHOOL of the Church in January 1901. As its pages gradually filled with articles on teaching methods and gospel subjects to be used by the several Church AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS, especially the Sunday School, its name was changed to The Instructor in November 1929, better to reflect its content.

The Presidents of the Church were identified as editors of the magazine from 1901 through 1970, but coeditors were often largely responsible for its contents.

The Instructor ceased publication in December 1970, when the Church consolidated its English language magazines into three: ENSIGN, for adults; NEW ERA, for youth; FRIEND, for children. Some of the instructional materials for teachers previously published in The Instructor are now published in the lesson manuals of the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McKay, David L. "Goodbye, the Instructor." Ensign 1 (Dec. 1970):444-48.

RUEL A. ALLRED

INTELLECTUAL HISTORY

The Church encourages its members to be learned in gospel principles and in every edifying branch of knowledge that supports a life of Christian service. Latter-day Saints value intellectual activity because it can develop and enrich life and faith, beautify the earth and ameliorate mankind's temporal suffering, and further the growth of the kingdom of God on earth. LDS theology takes with utmost seriousness the divine injunction to learn to know, to love, and to serve God with all one's heart, might, mind, and strength (Deut. 6:5; 1 Chr. 28:9; Matt. 22:37; D&C 4:2; cf. John 17:3). In this sense, intellectual activity can be an act of worship.

One of the divinely ordained purposes of life is to gain spiritual and intellectual experience in mind and spirit (see REASON AND REVELATION). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that "by proving contraries, truth is made manifest" (HC 6:248). To in religion on the college level, in college terms, dealing with the profound questions which every thinking individual has a right to ask. At the Institute students discuss these questions freely and frankly with the Institute Directors, either in classes or in private consultation ["Why Institutes," Announcement of the LDS Institutes: 1935-1936, Department of Education, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints].

The Church soon constructed a building adjacent to the University of Idaho that became the headquarters for LDS students at the university. The principle of separation of church and state guided the development of the project and the direction of institute activities. The institute developed a cultural and social activities program providing fellowship for LDS students in the area. This fellowship extended beyond LDS students to faculty and other students on campus.

Institutes in Logan, Utah, at Utah State Agricultural College and in Salt Lake City at the University of Utah soon followed the Moscow institute. Shortly thereafter, the Church established institutes at other universities and colleges in Utah, Arizona, and Washington.

Before there were enough students to establish full-time institute programs on southern California campuses, Desert Clubs were organized. These became the prototype for small LDS student organizations. These clubs continued until 1971, when the Church formally established the LDSSA as the official LDS student group on university and college campuses.

The first international LDS institute program was established in 1969 in Australia and was soon duplicated in New Zealand and Great Britain. The Church has since established institutes in sixty additional countries. These have become a source of support and training for new Church leadership in those areas.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, A. Gary. "A Historical Survey of the Full-Time Institutes of Religion of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1926-1966." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1968.
- Arrington, Leonard J. "The Founding of the LDS Institutes of Religion." Dialogue 2 (Summer 1967):137-47.
- Berrett, William E. A Miracle in Weekday Religious Education. Salt Lake City, 1988.

STANLEY A. PETERSON

INSTRUCTOR, THE

The Instructor was originally published as JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR, from 1866 to 1929. At first a children's magazine, it became the official publication of the SUNDAY SCHOOL of the Church in January 1901. As its pages gradually filled with articles on teaching methods and gospel subjects to be used by the several Church AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS, especially the Sunday School, its name was changed to The Instructor in November 1929, better to reflect its content.

The Presidents of the Church were identified as editors of the magazine from 1901 through 1970, but coeditors were often largely responsible for its contents.

The Instructor ceased publication in December 1970, when the Church consolidated its English language magazines into three: ENSIGN, for adults; NEW ERA, for youth; FRIEND, for children. Some of the instructional materials for teachers previously published in The Instructor are now published in the lesson manuals of the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McKay, David L. "Goodbye, the Instructor." Ensign 1 (Dec. 1970):444-48.

RUEL A. ALLRED

INTELLECTUAL HISTORY

The Church encourages its members to be learned in gospel principles and in every edifying branch of knowledge that supports a life of Christian service. Latter-day Saints value intellectual activity because it can develop and enrich life and faith, beautify the earth and ameliorate mankind's temporal suffering, and further the growth of the kingdom of God on earth. LDS theology takes with utmost seriousness the divine injunction to learn to know, to love, and to serve God with all one's heart, might, mind, and strength (Deut. 6:5; 1 Chr. 28:9; Matt. 22:37; D&C 4:2; cf. John 17:3). In this sense, intellectual activity can be an act of worship.

One of the divinely ordained purposes of life is to gain spiritual and intellectual experience in mind and spirit (see REASON AND REVELATION). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that "by proving contraries, truth is made manifest" (HC 6:248). To in religion on the college level, in college terms, dealing with the profound questions which every thinking individual has a right to ask. At the Institute students discuss these questions freely and frankly with the Institute Directors, either in classes or in private consultation ["Why Institutes," Announcement of the LDS Institutes: 1935-1936, Department of Education, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints].

The Church soon constructed a building adjacent to the University of Idaho that became the headquarters for LDS students at the university. The principle of separation of church and state guided the development of the project and the direction of institute activities. The institute developed a cultural and social activities program providing fellowship for LDS students in the area. This fellowship extended beyond LDS students to faculty and other students on campus.

Institutes in Logan, Utah, at Utah State Agricultural College and in Salt Lake City at the University of Utah soon followed the Moscow institute. Shortly thereafter, the Church established institutes at other universities and colleges in Utah, Arizona, and Washington.

Before there were enough students to establish full-time institute programs on southern California campuses, Desert Clubs were organized. These became the prototype for small LDS student organizations. These clubs continued until 1971, when the Church formally established the LDSSA as the official LDS student group on university and college campuses.

The first international LDS institute program was established in 1969 in Australia and was soon duplicated in New Zealand and Great Britain. The Church has since established institutes in sixty additional countries. These have become a source of support and training for new Church leadership in those areas.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, A. Gary. "A Historical Survey of the Full-Time Institutes of Religion of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1926-1966." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1968.
- Arrington, Leonard J. "The Founding of the LDS Institutes of Religion." Dialogue 2 (Summer 1967):137-47.
- Berrett, William E. A Miracle in Weekday Religious Education. Salt Lake City, 1988.

STANLEY A. PETERSON

INSTRUCTOR, THE

The Instructor was originally published as JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR, from 1866 to 1929. At first a children's magazine, it became the official publication of the SUNDAY SCHOOL of the Church in January 1901. As its pages gradually filled with articles on teaching methods and gospel subjects to be used by the several Church AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS, especially the Sunday School, its name was changed to The Instructor in November 1929, better to reflect its content.

The Presidents of the Church were identified as editors of the magazine from 1901 through 1970, but coeditors were often largely responsible for its contents.

The Instructor ceased publication in December 1970, when the Church consolidated its English language magazines into three: ENSIGN, for adults; NEW ERA, for youth; FRIEND, for children. Some of the instructional materials for teachers previously published in The Instructor are now published in the lesson manuals of the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McKay, David L. "Goodbye, the Instructor." Ensign 1 (Dec. 1970):444-48.

RUEL A. ALLRED

INTELLECTUAL HISTORY

The Church encourages its members to be learned in gospel principles and in every edifying branch of knowledge that supports a life of Christian service. Latter-day Saints value intellectual activity because it can develop and enrich life and faith, beautify the earth and ameliorate mankind's temporal suffering, and further the growth of the kingdom of God on earth. LDS theology takes with utmost seriousness the divine injunction to learn to know, to love, and to serve God with all one's heart, might, mind, and strength (Deut. 6:5; 1 Chr. 28:9; Matt. 22:37; D&C 4:2; cf. John 17:3). In this sense, intellectual activity can be an act of worship.

One of the divinely ordained purposes of life is to gain spiritual and intellectual experience in mind and spirit (see REASON AND REVELATION). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that "by proving contraries, truth is made manifest" (HC 6:248). To “study it out in your mind” is often a prerequisite to heavenly assistance (D&C 9:8), and communication from God may sometimes be recognized by its effect on the mind. Latter-day Saints were enjoined early to seek knowledge out of the best books (D&C 88:118) and to establish schools (see SCHOOLS OF THE PROPHETS) for instruction in both sacred and secular matters.

FLOW OF IDEAS. In LDS theology, REVELATION from God to his appointed PROPHETS is the source of DOCTRINE and of “knowledge of the things of God” (TPJS, p. 217). Thus, there is no formalized mechanism in the Church for achieving scholarly consensus on theological principles. But there is no doubt of the need for diligent inquiry after truth: Joseph Smith taught that “a man is saved no faster than he gets knowledge” (TPJS, p. 217) and that “if a person acquires more knowledge and intelligence in this life through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come” (D&C 130:19; see EDUCATION: ATTITUDES TOWARD).

The earliest written explorations of LDS beliefs by Church leaders were motivated primarily by missionary activities to teach the gospel. Orson PRATT wrote the two influential series, The Kingdom of God (four parts, 1848–1849) and Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon (six parts, 1850–1851), as well as scientific investigations related to theological speculations. Parley P. PRATT, Orson Spencer, and Lorenzo SNOW also published significant missionary tracts. Parley Pratt’s synthetic work Key to the Science of Theology captured the free-ranging spirit of LDS thought during the formative years of the Church.

The voluminous output of the missionary press was severely curtailed after 1857 for several reasons; scarce resources were required to bring Saints to Zion and to build TEMPLES. However, the Journal of Discourses recorded public addresses of Church leaders, particularly Brigham YOUNG, during this era on topics ranging from agriculture and politics to theology; and presentations of LDS history, doctrine, and philosophy continued in forums ranging from PRAYER CIRCLES to various Church magazines to pioneer lyceums.

With the urbanization of the Church in the twentieth century, Church periodicals, FIRESIDES broadcast from Temple Square, and books published by Church-owned and semi-official presses were widely supplemented by unofficial activities and publications. Pioneer lyceums gave way to various informal activities, including firesides, study groups, or gatherings held in homes. New periodicals, most unsanctioned by the Church and with varying editorial policies (see SOCIETIES AND ORGANIZATIONS), investigated issues and ideas too controversial or too academic for the formal Church CURRICULUM. Increasingly in recent years, scholarly publications from university presses, both in Utah and elsewhere, have been written on LDS topics by scholars inside and outside the Church.

INTELLECTUAL PROLOGUE TO THE RESTORATION. Latter-day Saints believe that God prepared the intellectual, political, and spiritual environment prior to the RESTORATION of the gospel through such cultural and religious movements as the Renaissance and the Reformation, particularly as these were manifested in Puritanism and the English Enlightenment.

Orson Pratt (1811–1881), an apostle, was an eloquent preacher and expounder of the gospel. With a scientific background, he shaped positive answers and rational explanations for many religious questions and LDS concepts. Photograph, c. 1878, Charles W. Carter.

The Puritan critique of the Church of England stressed morality for its leaders, education for its members, and a vital relationship between individuals and God. The Puritan ideal of a covenant community imbued with a sense of divine mission sustained their first two generations in America; but by the early eighteenth century, the Puritan movement was shattered by its collision with Enlightenment ideas, in spite of periodic revivals of faith and devotion. Where Puritanism had stressed the magnificence of God and the depravity of fallen man in a sinful world, the Enlightenment emphasized the goodness of man and the beauty of the natural world and linked a natural theology to emerging scientific models.

The conflict between these paradigms polarized American society: Puritan ministers were replaced by patrician aristocrats and lay scientists as leaders of American society. Puritanism continued in a diluted form: Evangelical Methodist and Baptist ministers emerged with new followers after the Great Awakening of 1740. Stressing the "heart" over the "head," these religious movements swept through newly independent America after 1800, while the rationalism of the Enlightenment continued through the Unitarian and Universalist societies.

Joseph Smith grew up in this setting, both directions being represented by his parents. His mother stressed the emotionalism of the revivals to which she regularly took her children. His father, who helped found a Universalist society in Vermont, stressed the rational dimensions of religion. This polarization, in his family and in the larger culture, helped to impel young Joseph to ask God directly for guidance in a "silent grove" in the spring of 1820 (see FIRST VISION). In subsequent visions and revelations, Joseph Smith received knowledge and authority from God to restore the Church of Jesus Christ, whose doctrines and practices are not limited by the former approaches but generate a dynamic interplay between both mind and spirit.

RESTORATION PERIOD (1830–1844). The key intellectual and spiritual figure in the early years of the Church was clearly Joseph Smith. The conceptual framework of the Restoration stems from his prophetic utterances on many key topics (see SMITH, JOSEPH: TEACHINGS OF JOSEPH SMITH). He translated the Book of Mormon; received and published additional revelations; gave doctrinal instructions; provided glimpses into former gospel dispensations; explicated and amended the biblical text in many places throughout the Old and New Testaments (see JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE [JST]); and stimulated interest in previously neglected texts (see APOCRYPHA AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHA).

The central focus of Joseph Smith's teaching is the literal and infinite atonement of Jesus Christ and the restoration of the eternal gospel and its ordinances. In this expansive view (popularized under the label of "eternalism" by B. H. Roberts) men and women are eternal beings procreated by a Heavenly Father and Mother (see MOTHER IN HEAVEN), a concept elaborated by Lorenzo Snow and his sister Eliza R. SNOW. Men and women are tested by choices between good and evil in mortal life as preparation for the eternities. The universe, filled with a myriad of worlds inhabited by sons and daughters of God, exists for the purpose of allowing individuals to progress toward becoming gods and goddesses (see GODHOOD). The divine potential in each individual is actualized by voluntarily obeying the FIRST PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL and receiving all the ordinances of salvation, culminating in the ordinances of the temple, a place dedicated as a house of prayer, fasting, faith, and learning, "a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God" (D&C 88:119). Each temple is a meeting place of heaven and earth, where eternal relationships are formed by covenants; it is also a school, where eternal concepts are taught (see TEMPLES: TEMPLE WORSHIP AND ACTIVITY).

COMMUNITY, RENEWED CONSECRATION, AND RESPONSE (1844–1896). The exodus to the Salt Lake Valley and the drive to colonize the Great Basin saw the development of key ideas about economic, political, and social needs in the community and nation. Latter-day Saints rejected the temporal-spiritual separation in politics and economics and viewed the Mormon village as a covenant community based on the concept of gathering. Missionaries taught the gospel to those who would listen; converts gathered out of spiritual Babylon by changing their lives and removing to Utah to build ZION. This literal "gathering of scattered Israel" brought converts into communities that practiced principles of CONSECRATION and STEWARDSHIP, in social settings hospitable to the making of Saints (see ECONOMIC HISTORY OF THE CHURCH).

The LDS economic order, based on the premise that the earth is the Lord's, holds that men are stewards over the property they hold and are responsible for consecrating their time, energy, and talents to the establishment of Zion. Dominion over the earth is not a license to plunder, but a sacred trust to conserve life and protect the environment. LDS cosmology teaches that all living things will be resurrected, that the earth itself has a celestial destiny, and that all people are accountable to God for their earthly stewardship.

Out of this sense of community, combined with living in a barren land, ideals of frugality, cooperation, and equality were nurtured. The earth exists that man "might have in abundance"; poverty exists because some "possess that which is above another" and waste flesh when they have "no need" (D&C 49:19–21). The divine standard mandates temporal and spiritual unity and equality based on individual needs, desires, and varying talents (D&C 78:6). Periodic reformations in the Brigham YOUNG era sought to reach these ideals; analogous concepts motivate the WELFARE programs in the wards of the contemporary Church, now extended well beyond its historic population centers in the western United States.

In the late pioneer period (1869–1896), the Church felt the need to teach its rising generation more systematically than before. In the 1880s, for instance, George Q. Cannon, a member of the First Presidency, published a "Faith-Promoting Series" of journals, biographies, and a periodical, The Juvenile Instructor, to instruct young men and women. President Cannon insisted that:

Latter-day Saints are ardent friends of learning, true seekers after knowledge. They recognize in a good education the best of fortunes; it broadens the mind, creates liberal and noble sentiments, and fits the possessor for a more successful struggle with the obstacles of life. . . . The possession of knowledge is of itself the highest pleasure [Juvenile Instructor 27 (1892):210].

Cannon's works filled a significant need, but the fact that these writings addressed primarily the youth of the Church limited their topics and approaches. During this same time President Young established academies throughout LDS-dominated areas. BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY, now the largest private university in the United States, began as such an academy in 1875.

President Young had attempted to insulate the LDS community from the influx of non-Mormons after completion of the transcontinental railroad in 1869. This economic move by Brigham Young, focusing on establishing ZCMI and the cooperative movement, reinforced a trend to isolate Church members from outside ideas, especially as persecution intensified. A contemporary reaction to many of Brigham Young's economic policies led some LDS intellectuals to oppose the Church. This group, known as the Godbeites (see SCHISMATIC GROUPS), became the prime illustration in Church circles of intellect unchecked that rejected prophetic leadership and the larger needs of the LDS community.

George Q. Cannon (1827–1901), served in the First Presidency from 1873 to 1901 as counselor to Presidents Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff and Lorenzo Snow. With his publications aimed mainly at the youth, Cannon was an important bridge between the first generation of Church leaders and late nineteenth-century Church membership. Photographer: Charles Ellis Johnson. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

Few LDS students journeyed "East" to attend non-Mormon schools before the 1880s, and few LDS authors before 1900 addressed the critical issues being debated in the larger society. An important exception was the issue of women's rights, which found an outlet in the Woman's Exponent edited by LDS women.

ENCOUNTER WITH SCHOLARLY SECULARISM (1896–1918). The transformation of Mormon village life began as the first generation of Latter-day Saints started to pursue advanced studies of geology, agricultural science, chemistry, and engineering. Such studies brought the Saints face to face with a secular and skeptical society. James E. Talmage studied geology at Lehigh and Johns Hopkins universities and returned to Utah in 1885 to teach and write about many topics, including evolution and the age of the earth. As president of the University of Utah and later as an apostle, he exerted an enormous influence by systematizing LDS theology in two seminal works, The Articles of Faith and Jesus the Christ. John A. Widtsoe, later an apostle, studied biochemistry at Harvard and Göttingen; he returned to Utah in 1900 and became president of Utah State University in 1907, playing a pivotal role first in agricultural education and research and later as an educational administrator and writer on intellectual issues facing Church members.

The Mutual Improvement Association (see YOUNG MEN; YOUNG WOMEN) chose as its study manual for 1909 Widtsoe's book Joseph Smith as Scientist, and the Improvement Era frequently ran articles by LDS scientists discussing Latter-day Saint doctrines in light of current scientific theories. Utah universities also began to invite the scholarly luminaries of the day to campus as guest lecturers. However, concerns were raised by the Church's educational administrators when some faculty members advanced evolutionary treatments of the creation accounts in Genesis. By 1911 these concerns led to a policy that temporarily discouraged discussions in Brigham Young University classrooms of such theories.

ADAPTATION AND CONFRONTATION (1918–1945). With worldwide industrialization and the ravages of World War I and the Bolshevik Revolution, agrarian idealism in America and the old order in Europe gave way before new political, economic, and social theories. For both Church leaders and lay members, deeply ingrained concepts of stewardship, cooperation, and individual moral responsibility clashed sharply with the militance of organized labor, the totalitarian excesses of fascism and communism, and the greediness of unregulated capitalism.

The need for teachers in Church schools and institutes of religion swelled to a small stream what had been only a trickle of Latter-day Saints sent "East" for professional training. The "Divinity School" group of Saints at the University of Chicago (see R. Swenson, "Mormons at the University of Chicago Divinity School," Dialogue 7 [Summer, 1972]:37–47) drew on their experience of LDS group life to write scholarly articles suggesting answers to the pressing social and economic problems of their day. In this academic setting, these LDS graduate students were also confronted with "higher criticism" of the Bible (see BIBLE SCHOLARSHIP), stimulating some to take a moderate, conciliatory approach to scriptural interpretation, analogous to the neo-orthodox movement among Protestant theologians.

During this era, the Church and its members were recognized as a major force in American religious life. The Encyclopedia Americana commissioned a lengthy article by Elder B. H. Roberts for the centennial of the Church. Latter-day Saints who were influential outside the Great Basin included Harvey Fletcher in physics, E. E. Erickson in philosophy, J. Reuben Clark, Jr. in international affairs, Franklin S. Harris in agricultural science; and Henry Eyring in chemistry.

URBANIZATION AND GLOBAL MISSION (1945–1990). After World War II, a technocracy based on the positivist view of physical and social sciences dominated the intellectual landscape. Molecular biologists, armed with the tools of physics, seemed to be on the verge of controlling life itself; social scientists, bolstered by mathematics and computers, explained human behavior without reference to man's divine nature.

While existentialist theologians alternately despaired of or embraced the "secular city," LDS leaders again sounded the call to heed revelation as the source of ultimate truth while using science and technology to spread the gospel and alleviate human suffering. LDS emphasis on individual and group guidance through revelation created significant intellectual stresses for the increasing numbers of Church members being trained in the professions. A number of scholars wrote cogently to this generation of Latter-day Saint students about the historical, philosophical, and theological foundations of Church doctrines and advocated integrating intellectual pursuits with the spiritual need to love, to serve, and to have faith in Jesus Christ.

B. H. Roberts (1857–1933), a member of the First Council of Seventy, was one of the most eloquent orators and penetrating writers in the Church's history. An inveterate seeker, he grappled with many historical and scriptural issues as a "defender of the faith." Courtesy Special Collections Department, University of Utah Libraries.

The horrors of world war had challenged conventional Christian ideologies. President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., warned that the alliance forged in wartime between science and governments had created a military-industrial complex. Some Church members were troubled by the issues of war and peace in the Korean and Vietnam conflicts and by the quasi-permanent state of war that endangered the world peace on which the missionary work of the Church depended (see WAR AND PEACE).

As mission fields expanded, Zion, "the pure in heart" (D&C 97:21), was gathered into STAKES in locations around the world. President Harold B.

LEE foresaw that the demography and cultural uniformity of the Church would be significantly altered by the immense influx of converts. Scholars and lay leaders in the Church were challenged to differentiate between Church practices derived from fundamental universal gospel principles and those that could be treated as merely cultural practices of members.

The historic LDS affirmation of man as created literally in the image of God—with a Heavenly Mother as well as a Heavenly Father—led to a reinterpretation by Latter-day Saints of many conflicts felt in the larger society about the roles of men and women as individuals and as members of families and the Church. It also produced both a dramatic collision with fundamentalist Protestants and, to some extent, a reconciliation with Catholic and Protestant theologians who have rediscovered such ideas in the theology of the ancient Church.

In the Church, as in society, key roles were played by bureaucratic entities deriving their ex-

James E. Talmage (1862–1933), served as the president of the University of Utah from 1894 to 1897 and as an apostle from 1911 until his death in 1933. A noted geologist, lecturer and author, he was influential in shaping a mainstream statement of LDS teachings consistent with traditional biblical authorities. Courtesy the Utah State Historical Society.

Bruce R. McConkie (1915–1985), an apostle from 1972 to 1985, wrote extensively on Mormon doctrine. He drew heavily upon words of Joseph Smith and latter-day scripture to interpret the Bible and to propound specific answers to gospel questions.

pertise from the study of human behavior. Knowledge of the social sciences, for example, stimulated the founding of a Church Social Services organization, using social science expertise consistent with Church norms. As the Church expands outside the Intermountain West, adapting Church programs to local cultures without sacrificing the essential core of gospel teaching is a matter of increasing urgency. Here the growing worldwide reservoir of LDS professionals is an increasingly valuable asset. This is particularly true in view of the primacy of the family and home as the center of Christ-centered learning and service.

During this period, some turned to engaging metaphors from the Book of Mormon as expressions for LDS thought. In some cases, the symbol of their moral and intellectual response was the iron rod that guided those who obediently held on to revealed truths through the mists of darkness; in other cases the Liahona, a divinely fashioned compass that gave direction in proportion to one's faith, symbolized the faithful search for divine guidance (see 1 Ne. 8, 16; R. Poll, pp. 107–118). In Latter-day Saint life, such approaches are not mutually exclusive.

LDS theology has consistently seen the mind in the service of and as a companion to the spirit. The two remain creatively engaged: The intellect tends to notice problems and to ask questions, while the spirit is drawn toward finding answers and receiving assurance (see Alma 32:21–34); the intellect is often solitary and introspective, while the life of the spirit fosters charitable service and yearns for the collective building of the kingdom of God. Pride is a threat to all: It can cause the intellectual to substitute human judgment for revelation in matters of doctrine and revealed truth or can cause people to “hearken not unto the counsel of God, for they set it aside, supposing they know of themselves” (2 Ne. 9:28; cf. 1 Cor. 2:5–7); pride can also transform faith and trust into overconfidence and dogmatism. The scripture states: “To be learned is good if they hearken unto the counsels of God” (2 Ne. 9:29).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The history of ideas arises from revealed teachings of the prophets and the ongoing dialogue in which members of the Church seek to understand those teachings, to incorporate them into their daily life, and to teach them to others. Its history is largely unwritten. A useful introduction is Leonard J. Arrington, “The Intellectual Tradition of the Latter-day Saints,” Dialogue 4 (Spring 1969):13–26. Other important sources include Leonard J. Arrington and Davis Bitton, The Mormon Experience, New York, 1979, chaps. 13 and 16; Philip L. Barlow, ed., A Thoughtful Faith: Essays on Belief by Mormon Scholars, Centerville, Utah, 1986; Maureen Ursenbach [Beecher], “Three Women and the Life of the Mind,” Utah Historical Quarterly 43 (Winter 1974):26–40; Lowell L. Bennion, “The Uses of the Mind in Religion,” BYU Studies 14 (Autumn 1973):47–55; Davis Bitton, “Anti-Intellectualism in Mormon History,” Dialogue 1 (Autumn 1966):111–34, and response by James B. Allen; Marvin S. Hill, “The Shaping of the Mormon Mind in New England and New York,” BYU Studies 9 (Spring 1969):351–72; Paul R. Green, comp., Science and Your Faith in God, Salt Lake City, 1958 (essays by Henry Eyring, et al.); Duane E. Jeffrey, “Seers, Savants and Evolution: The Uncomfortable Interface,” Dialogue 8 (Autumn/Winter 1973):41–75; Sterling M. McMurrin, The Theological Foundations of Mormon Religion, Salt Lake City, 1965; Hugh W. Nibley, The World and the Prophets, in CWHN 3; Erich Robert Paul, Science, Religion, and Mormon Cosmology, Urbana, Ill., 1991; Richard D. Poll, “What the Church Means to People Like Me,” Dialogue 2 (Winter 1967):107–18; Charles S. Peterson, “The Limits of Learning in Pioneer Utah,” Journal of Mormon History 10 (1983):65–78; John L. Sorenson, “Mormon World View and American Culture,” Dialogue 8 (Spring 1973):17–29.

RICHARD F. HAGLUND, JR.

DAVID J. WHITTAKER

INTELLIGENCE

According to latter-day scripture, “The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth” (D&C 93:36). Mankind, too, may be glorified by gaining intelligence (D&C 93:28–30). As Christ did not receive a fulness of intelligence at first but continued from “grace to grace” until he received a fulness (D&C 93:11–13, 27–28), so it is with all persons. Whatever principles of intelligence they gain in mortality will rise with them in the Resurrection (D&C 130:18–19).

To gain increased intelligence, individuals must be agents to act for themselves (D&C 93:30), which means that they must be tried and tempted (D&C 29:39), and at the same time, the works of the Lord must be plainly manifest to them (D&C 93:31) so that they will have choice. In PREMORTAL LIFE, men and women were intelligent beings (Abr. 3:21–22) who were given AGENCY by God (Moses 4:3; D&C 29:36). In mortality, they are also given agency by God (D&C 101:78), to gain knowledge of good and evil (Moses 5:11). Intelligence increases as individuals forsake evil and come to the Lord, calling on his name, obeying his voice, and keeping his commandments (D&C 93:1–2, 28, 37). Intelligence is lost through disobedience, hardening of hearts, and clinging to false traditions (Mark 8:21; D&C 93:39).

Intelligence, however defined, is not created or made (D&C 93:29); it is coeternal with God (TPJS, pp. 353–54). Some LDS leaders have interpreted this to mean that intelligent beings—called intelligences—existed before and after they were given spirit bodies in the premortal existence. Others have interpreted it to mean that intelligent beings were organized as spirits out of eternal intelligent matter, that they did not exist as individuals before they were organized as spirit beings in the premortal existence (Abr. 3:22; JD 7:57; 2:124). The Church has taken no official position on this issue.

[See also Intelligences.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Roberts, B. H. “Immortality of Man.” IE 20 (Apr. 1907):401–423.

DENNIS J. PACKARD

INTELLIGENCES

The word “intelligences” (plural) occurs frequently in LDS literature, having reference to the period of the premortal existence of mankind. The term has received two interpretations by writers within the Church: as the literal spirit children of Heavenly Parents and as individual entities existing prior to their spirit birth. Because latter-day revelation has not clarified the meaning of the term, a more precise interpretation is not possible at present.

The scriptural source for the word “intelligences” is the BOOK OF ABRAHAM 3:21–22. The Lord instructed the patriarch Abraham regarding the premortal experiences of all who have been or ever will be upon the earth. Among those events was the COUNCIL IN HEAVEN, at which the Father’s PLAN OF SALVATION for his children was discussed. Abraham wrote of this, “Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was; . . . for he stood among those that were spirits, and he saw that they were good; and he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them” (Abr. 3:22–23). The Prophet Joseph SMITH spoke of intelligences as follows: “God himself, finding he was in the midst of spirits and glory, because he was more intelligent, saw proper to institute laws whereby the rest could have a privilege to advance like himself. The relationship we have with God places us in a situation to advance in knowledge. He has power to institute laws to instruct the weaker intelligences, that they may be exalted with himself, so that they might have one glory upon another, and all that knowledge, power, glory, and intelligence, which is requisite in order to save them” (TPJS, p. 354).

Concerning man’s premortal existence, the Lord revealed to Joseph Smith, “Man was also in the beginning with God. Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be” (D&C 93:29). “Intelligence,” as used here, is singular, and it is not clear from this passage if it refers to individual, conscious identity. As noted, Abraham referred to the spirit offspring of God as organized intelligences, apparently using the word “intelligences” to mean “spirits.” Church authorities have indicated that spirit birth was not the beginning. Spencer W. KIMBALL, then a member of the Quorum of the Twelve, wrote, “Our spirit matter was eternal and co-existent with God, but it was organized into spirit bodies by our Heavenly

INTELLIGENCE

According to latter-day scripture, “The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth” (D&C 93:36). Mankind, too, may be glorified by gaining intelligence (D&C 93:28–30). As Christ did not receive a fulness of intelligence at first but continued from “grace to grace” until he received a fulness (D&C 93:11–13, 27–28), so it is with all persons. Whatever principles of intelligence they gain in mortality will rise with them in the Resurrection (D&C 130:18–19).

To gain increased intelligence, individuals must be agents to act for themselves (D&C 93:30), which means that they must be tried and tempted (D&C 29:39), and at the same time, the works of the Lord must be plainly manifest to them (D&C 93:31) so that they will have choice. In PREMORTAL LIFE, men and women were intelligent beings (Abr. 3:21–22) who were given AGENCY by God (Moses 4:3; D&C 29:36). In mortality, they are also given agency by God (D&C 101:78), to gain knowledge of good and evil (Moses 5:11). Intelligence increases as individuals forsake evil and come to the Lord, calling on his name, obeying his voice, and keeping his commandments (D&C 93:1–2, 28, 37). Intelligence is lost through disobedience, hardening of hearts, and clinging to false traditions (Mark 8:21; D&C 93:39).

Intelligence, however defined, is not created or made (D&C 93:29); it is coeternal with God (TPJS, pp. 353–54). Some LDS leaders have interpreted this to mean that intelligent beings—called intelligences—existed before and after they were given spirit bodies in the premortal existence. Others have interpreted it to mean that intelligent beings were organized as spirits out of eternal intelligent matter, that they did not exist as individuals before they were organized as spirit beings in the premortal existence (Abr. 3:22; JD 7:57; 2:124). The Church has taken no official position on this issue.

[See also Intelligences.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Roberts, B. H. “Immortality of Man.” IE 20 (Apr. 1907):401–423.

DENNIS J. PACKARD

INTELLIGENCES

The word “intelligences” (plural) occurs frequently in LDS literature, having reference to the period of the premortal existence of mankind. The term has received two interpretations by writers within the Church: as the literal spirit children of Heavenly Parents and as individual entities existing prior to their spirit birth. Because latter-day revelation has not clarified the meaning of the term, a more precise interpretation is not possible at present.

The scriptural source for the word “intelligences” is the BOOK OF ABRAHAM 3:21–22. The Lord instructed the patriarch Abraham regarding the premortal experiences of all who have been or ever will be upon the earth. Among those events was the COUNCIL IN HEAVEN, at which the Father’s PLAN OF SALVATION for his children was discussed. Abraham wrote of this, “Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was; . . . for he stood among those that were spirits, and he saw that they were good; and he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them” (Abr. 3:22–23). The Prophet Joseph SMITH spoke of intelligences as follows: “God himself, finding he was in the midst of spirits and glory, because he was more intelligent, saw proper to institute laws whereby the rest could have a privilege to advance like himself. The relationship we have with God places us in a situation to advance in knowledge. He has power to institute laws to instruct the weaker intelligences, that they may be exalted with himself, so that they might have one glory upon another, and all that knowledge, power, glory, and intelligence, which is requisite in order to save them” (TPJS, p. 354).

Concerning man’s premortal existence, the Lord revealed to Joseph Smith, “Man was also in the beginning with God. Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be” (D&C 93:29). “Intelligence,” as used here, is singular, and it is not clear from this passage if it refers to individual, conscious identity. As noted, Abraham referred to the spirit offspring of God as organized intelligences, apparently using the word “intelligences” to mean “spirits.” Church authorities have indicated that spirit birth was not the beginning. Spencer W. KIMBALL, then a member of the Quorum of the Twelve, wrote, “Our spirit matter was eternal and co-existent with God, but it was organized into spirit bodies by our Heavenly Father" (The Miracle of Forgiveness, p. 5, Salt Lake City, 1969). Marion G. Romney, of the First Presidency, speaking of people's divine origin as children of God, stated, "Through that birth process, self-existing intelligence was organized into individual spirit beings" (Ensign 8 [Nov. 1978]:14). Bruce R. McConkie, an apostle, wrote:

Abraham used the name intelligences to apply to the spirit children of the Eternal Father. The intelligence or spirit element became intelligences after the spirits were born as individual entities (Abr. 3:22–24). Use of this name designates both the primal element from which the spirit offspring were created and also their inherited capacity to grow in grace, knowledge, power, and intelligence itself, until such intelligences, gaining the fulness of all things, become like their Father, the Supreme Intelligence [MD, p. 387].

While the revelations leave no doubt as to the existence of intelligent matter prior to its being organized as spirits, speculation sometimes arises regarding the nature of premortal existence and whether there was individual identity and consciousness prior to birth as a spirit. Some hold that the terms "intelligence" and "intelligences" have reference to a form of prespirit conscious self-existence, which included individual identity, variety, and agency (so reasoned B. H. Roberts, pp. 401–423). Others maintain that while these characteristics, attributes, and conditions are eternal, they essentially came together for each individual at the spirit birth. The question of whether prespirit intelligence had individual identity and consciousness remains unanswered. Elder Joseph Fielding SMITH gave this caution in 1936:

Some of our writers have endeavored to explain what an intelligence is, but to do so is futile, for we have never been given any insight into this matter beyond what the Lord has fragmentarily revealed. We know, however, that there is something called intelligence which always existed. It is the real eternal part of man, which was not created or made. This intelligence combined with the spirit constitutes a spiritual identity or individual [p. 10].

No formal pronouncements have been made by the leading councils of the Church to clarify what additional meanings and attributes may be assigned to the word "intelligences," beyond that which identifies intelligences as spirit children of God.

[See also First Estate; Intelligence; Premortal Life; Spirit Body.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. Mormon Doctrine, pp. 386–87. Salt Lake City, 1966.

Roberts, B. H. "Immortality of Man." IE 10 (Apr. 1907):401–423.

Smith, Joseph Fielding. Progress of Man. Salt Lake City, 1936.

PAUL NOLAN HYDE

---

INTERFAITH RELATIONSHIPS

[This entry has three articles:

Christian
Jewish
Other Faiths

The articles focus on the efforts of the Church to relate, assist, understand, and cooperate with other faiths in common social, ethical, and religious quests.]

CHRISTIAN

The Church has never existed in isolation or insulation from other Christian faiths. Its roots and its nurture are in, and remain in, the Christian heritage. But its claim that the heavens have opened anew, that a restoration of the lost radiance and power of the full gospel of Jesus Christ is under way at divine initiative, and its rejection of many long-standing traditions have generated misunderstanding and ill will. In the first generation in the United States, the solidarity of the Latter-day Saints was thought to be inimical to pluralism and at the same time aroused the ire of sectarians. Missionary efforts through personal contact more than through mass media and image making sometimes compounded the problem. In certain times and circumstances, there has been no will, or at least no lasting resolve by either side, for outreach and cooperation.

In three ways these tensions are being reduced:

1. Institutionally. Church officers now participate with leaders of other faiths in Christian interchange. LDS leaders in many countries are welcomed to interfaith devotionals with their Protestant, Catholic, and Orthodox counterparts. This has been in keeping with the precept and example of early Church authorities (see TOLERANCE). For mutual support, they likewise meet and organize, across varied lines and programs, for example, the chaplaincies of many na-

Father" (The Miracle of Forgiveness, p. 5, Salt Lake City, 1969). Marion G. Romney, of the First Presidency, speaking of people's divine origin as children of God, stated, "Through that birth process, self-existing intelligence was organized into individual spirit beings" (Ensign 8 [Nov. 1978]:14). Bruce R. McConkie, an apostle, wrote:

Abraham used the name intelligences to apply to the spirit children of the Eternal Father. The intelligence or spirit element became intelligences after the spirits were born as individual entities (Abr. 3:22–24). Use of this name designates both the primal element from which the spirit offspring were created and also their inherited capacity to grow in grace, knowledge, power, and intelligence itself, until such intelligences, gaining the fulness of all things, become like their Father, the Supreme Intelligence [MD, p. 387].

While the revelations leave no doubt as to the existence of intelligent matter prior to its being organized as spirits, speculation sometimes arises regarding the nature of premortal existence and whether there was individual identity and consciousness prior to birth as a spirit. Some hold that the terms "intelligence" and "intelligences" have reference to a form of prespirit conscious self-existence, which included individual identity, variety, and agency (so reasoned B. H. Roberts, pp. 401–423). Others maintain that while these characteristics, attributes, and conditions are eternal, they essentially came together for each individual at the spirit birth. The question of whether prespirit intelligence had individual identity and consciousness remains unanswered. Elder Joseph Fielding SMITH gave this caution in 1936:

Some of our writers have endeavored to explain what an intelligence is, but to do so is futile, for we have never been given any insight into this matter beyond what the Lord has fragmentarily revealed. We know, however, that there is something called intelligence which always existed. It is the real eternal part of man, which was not created or made. This intelligence combined with the spirit constitutes a spiritual identity or individual [p. 10].

No formal pronouncements have been made by the leading councils of the Church to clarify what additional meanings and attributes may be assigned to the word "intelligences," beyond that which identifies intelligences as spirit children of God.

[See also First Estate; Intelligence; Premortal Life; Spirit Body.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. Mormon Doctrine, pp. 386–87. Salt Lake City, 1966.

Roberts, B. H. "Immortality of Man." IE 10 (Apr. 1907):401–423.

Smith, Joseph Fielding. Progress of Man. Salt Lake City, 1936.

PAUL NOLAN HYDE

---

INTERFAITH RELATIONSHIPS

[This entry has three articles:

Christian
Jewish
Other Faiths

The articles focus on the efforts of the Church to relate, assist, understand, and cooperate with other faiths in common social, ethical, and religious quests.]

CHRISTIAN

The Church has never existed in isolation or insulation from other Christian faiths. Its roots and its nurture are in, and remain in, the Christian heritage. But its claim that the heavens have opened anew, that a restoration of the lost radiance and power of the full gospel of Jesus Christ is under way at divine initiative, and its rejection of many long-standing traditions have generated misunderstanding and ill will. In the first generation in the United States, the solidarity of the Latter-day Saints was thought to be inimical to pluralism and at the same time aroused the ire of sectarians. Missionary efforts through personal contact more than through mass media and image making sometimes compounded the problem. In certain times and circumstances, there has been no will, or at least no lasting resolve by either side, for outreach and cooperation.

In three ways these tensions are being reduced:

1. Institutionally. Church officers now participate with leaders of other faiths in Christian interchange. LDS leaders in many countries are welcomed to interfaith devotionals with their Protestant, Catholic, and Orthodox counterparts. This has been in keeping with the precept and example of early Church authorities (see TOLERANCE). For mutual support, they likewise meet and organize, across varied lines and programs, for example, the chaplaincies of many nations of the free world, the Boy Scout movement, the National Council of Christians and Jews, and local and international service clubs concerned with social, ethical, and moral issues.

2. Educationally. The Church fosters the largest adult education curriculum in the world. Many of the courses are Bible-related, and some focus on Christian history and institutions. For high school and college-age students, who now exceed half a million, the Church provides similar courses in its seminaries and institutes adjacent to high schools and major universities. Teachers in the Church Educational System are given financial supplements to visit the Holy Land, to study the origins of the three great monotheistic religions, to become familiar with the vocabularies and worldviews of alternative Christian institutions, and to understand and recognize common ground in the lives of the youth they teach. LDS scholars of many disciplines are increasingly involved in the religious studies programs of academic and professional organizations.

The Church has opened its extensive broadcasting facilities to representative programming across the spectrum of Christian groups (see BONNEVILLE INTERNATIONAL; KSL, RADIO). It has also been a major participant in religious broadcasts in the VISN Religious Interfaith Cable Television Network, which represents most major denominations in the United States.

To establish two-way interchange, the Richard L. Evans Chair of Christian Understanding was established at Brigham Young University. Funded and advised by a variety of Christian groups (the initial commitment came from a Presbyterian), this endowment fosters religious studies symposia, lectures, forums, exchange programs, and visiting professorships. It also sponsors interfaith meetings where common as well as controversial theological issues are presented by representatives of each tradition, and where workshops help resolve tensions in an atmosphere of goodwill.

The Religious Studies Center at Brigham Young University produces distinguished volumes utilizing scholars of many faiths who represent interdisciplinary and comparative expertise. Although a literature of disparagement continues both from the left and from the right (see ANTI-MORMONISM), Church leaders continually remind the membership that whatever may be said of those who make a religion of anti-Mormonism, a retaliatory response is neither wise nor Christian.

3. Practically in Christian Humanitarianism. At its best the pattern of LDS life, institutionally and individually, has not been to demand rights but to merit them, not to clamor for fellowship and goodwill but to manifest them and to give energy and time beyond rhetoric. In a major address to regional Church leaders, former President Spencer W. KIMBALL set the tone:

We urge members to do their civic duty and to assume their responsibilities as individual citizens in seeking solutions to the problems which beset our cities and communities.

With our wide ranging mission, so far as mankind is concerned, Church members cannot ignore the many practical problems that require solution if our families are to live in an environment conducive to spirituality.

Where solutions to these practical problems require cooperative action with those not of our faith, members should not be reticent in doing their part in joining and leading in those efforts where they can make an individual contribution to those causes which are consistent with the standards of the Church [Kimball, Ensign 8 (May 1978):100].

Examples of recent Church-encouraged projects that reach across different affiliations include cooperative emergency assistance, support for homeless shelters in many cities, and linkage with the work of the Salvation Army. At BYU, students of other faiths are often elected to student offices, and various service clubs strive against intolerance and clannishness. In the same spirit, the Church was among the first to give aid, with other Christian bodies, to disaster areas in such places as China, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Los Angeles, Peru, Armenia, Japan, Iran, Chile, and Greece. Through two special fasts, the Church raised $11 million for the hungry in Africa and Ethiopia, and utilized Catholic services as a delivery system (see HUMANITARIAN SERVICE).

Because so much in contemporary society is dissonant, centrifugal, and divisive, interfaith understanding and mutuality seem indispensable. LDS history suggests that what appear to be intractable political, social, and economic clashes are often, at root, religious. To overcome needless divisions and to heal the wounds of modern life, including the religious life, are not just the commission of Latter-day Saints but of all who take seriously the message and ministry of Jesus Christ. Unless in some there is Christlike concern for all, there is little hope for any.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard. "Historical Development of International Mormonism." University of Alberta, Religious Studies and Theology 7 (1) Jan. 1987.
- Keller, Roger R. Reformed Christians and Mormon Christians: Let's Talk. Ann Arbor, Mich., 1986.
- Madsen, Truman G. "Are Christians Mormon?" BYU Studies 15 (Autumn 1974):73-94.

RICHARD P. LINDSAY

JEWISH

The chief nexus for interfaith relationships between Jews and Latter-day Saints has been Salt Lake City, Utah. A certain amount of contact has also occurred in the State of Israel as well as in cities in the United States with large Jewish populations, such as Los Angeles and New York. Generally, relations between members of the two groups have been characterized by mutual respect and goodwill. Exceptions include sharp differences between Mormons and some Jews on the issue of the purpose of the Brigham Young University Center for Near Eastern Studies in Jerusalem (dedicated 1989; see BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY: JERUSALEM CENTER FOR NEAR EASTERN STUDIES). However, a workable relationship prevails.

One of the earliest direct contacts between communities was initiated by Orson Hyde, an LDS apostle, who in 1841 traveled through Europe to reach the Holy Land. With rare exceptions, instead of seeking audience with European Jewish leaders to proselytize them, he warned them of difficulties that they would experience, and urged them to emigrate to Palestine. Orson Hyde continued on to the Holy Land, where, on October 24, 1841, he prayed on the Mount of Olives to "dedicate and consecrate this land . . . for the gathering together of Judah's scattered remnants" (HC 4:456-59).

Broader contacts began after 1853 with the arrival of the first Jewish family in Utah. While Jews tended to align themselves politically with non-Mormons, they enjoyed the goodwill of their LDS neighbors. Although some Jewish immigrants into Utah—particularly from eastern Europe and Russia—were ridiculed because of their language and their lack of acquaintance with frontier life, they found no cruelty, no restrictions of movement, and no ugly intolerance. While there were no handouts, charity, or dole, they discovered no restrictions on opportunity among the Latter-day Saints.

In 1900, when Utah Jewish leader Nathan Rosenblatt and his associates decided to build a synagogue for a second congregation, the principal help came from the LDS Church's First Presidency. When the building opened in 1903, Rosenblatt proclaimed his gratitude for the blessing and privilege of living in Utah with the tolerant, understanding men and women of the Mormon faith. He and his associates had always found them to be a people devoted to their own faith, yet a people who respected the Jewish Torah and knew what the noted teacher Hillel meant when he taught, "Do not do to your neighbor what you would not do to yourself."

Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, regularly offers courses that focus on the religion and history of Jews and Judaism. In addition, Jewish scholars have lectured and taught courses at the university, particularly in recent years. In 1921 President Heber J. GRANT offered clear counsel to Latter-day Saints against anti-Semitism: "There should be no ill-will . . . in the heart of any true Latter-day Saint, toward the Jewish people" (in Gospel Standards, Salt Lake City, 1941, p. 147).

An indicator of the reciprocal respect that has existed between Utah Jews and Mormons is the number of Jewish public officials elected to serve the state. These include the state's fourth governor (Simon Bamberger, 1917-1921), a district judge (Herbert M. Schiller, 1933-1939), a mayor of Salt Lake City (Louis Marcus, 1931-1935), and several legislators.

[See also World Religions (non-Christian) and Mormonism: Judaism; Zionism.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brooks, Juanita. History of the Jews in Utah and Idaho. Salt Lake City, 1973.
- Zucker, Louis C. Mormon and Jew: A Meeting on the American Frontier. Provo, Utah, 1961.
- . "Utah." Encyclopaedia Judaica, Vol. 16, pp. 33-34. Jerusalem, 1972.
- . "A Jew in Zion." Sunstone 6 (Sept.-Oct. 1981):35-44.

JOSEPH ROSENBLATT

OTHER FAITHS

In August 1852, while the Church was still struggling to establish itself in the western United States, President Brigham YOUNG issued a bold call for missionaries to go to China, India, Siam (Thailand), and Ceylon (Sri Lanka). The seventeen missionaries who were sent formed some of the earliest contacts that LDS members had with non-Christians (see ASIA, THE CHURCH IN). Because of civil wars, rejection, and language and cultural difficulties, the work in most countries lasted only months; however, work in India continued until 1856. Although some attempts were made in the early twentieth century, the Church did not undertake further significant efforts to establish itself in non-Christian nations, including Asia, until after World War II.

Stimulated by experiences of LDS servicemen in Asia during and after the war, the Church established missions in East Asia at the end of the 1940s. Since then, WARDS and STAKES led by local members have been established in Japan, South Korea, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and the Philippines; temples have been built in all these places except Hong Kong.

In the 1970s and 1980s, the Church expanded into such Southeast Asian nations as Singapore, Thailand, Indonesia, and Malaysia, and in the South Asian nations of India and Sri Lanka. Although small beginnings have been made in some Muslim countries, Church growth in such countries has been limited.

LDS health services programs in the Philippines and refugee assistance in Thailand have been favorably received. High-level contacts with government officials in many countries have elicited a positive response to the values of the Church and its members. Overall, the Church has made consistent efforts to remain sensitive to and abide by local laws and customs, including regulations based on religious sentiment.

Church growth in Africa has principally taken place in the last quarter of the twentieth century, particularly following the 1978 revelation allowing all worthy males to hold the priesthood (see AFRICA, THE CHURCH IN; DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: OFFICIAL DECLARATION—2). Congregations have been established in several countries, and Church membership is growing rapidly. In recent years, the Church has joined various charitable organizations in sending famine relief to stricken nations on the African continent (see ECONOMIC AID).

In an educational vein, MISSIONARY TRAINING CENTERS teach many foreign languages and courses on the religions and cultures of non-Western countries, and for educational purposes “culturegrams” have been developed that are now used by U.S. government agencies. In addition, courses on world religions are regularly taught in institutions of higher learning. Moreover, symposia on Islam and on the religions of Africa have been hosted at Brigham Young University, with a number of distinguished religious leaders and scholars participating.

In many countries, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is viewed as an American church. However, Church leaders have strongly emphasized that it is universal, a church for all people everywhere (see WORLD RELIGIONS [NON-CHRISTIAN] AND MORMONISM). A powerful presentation by President Spencer W. KIMBALL in 1974 stressed the responsibility of the Church to share the gospel with all of God’s children (Ensign 4 [Oct. 1974]:2–14). Consequently, in the last half of the twentieth century the Church has made its most significant efforts to establish itself throughout the world.

Generally the LDS outreach to non-Christians has had a positive, invigorating effect on members of the Church, has strengthened Church membership significantly, and has brought about increased awareness of cultural differences as well as a willingness to work within those differences.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Palmer, Spencer J. The Expanding Church. Salt Lake City, 1978.

———, ed. Mormons and Muslims. Provo, Utah, 1983.

SOREN F. COX

---

INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI)

The International Genealogical Index™ (IGI) is a vital records index, which at the beginning of 1990 contained more than 147 million names of deceased persons from the 1500s to about 1875. The IGI lists individuals alphabetically according to place of birth/christening or marriage, and clusters similarly spelled surnames under a standard spelling.

The Church publishes the IGI to assist genealogical research and help members determine

OTHER FAITHS

In August 1852, while the Church was still struggling to establish itself in the western United States, President Brigham YOUNG issued a bold call for missionaries to go to China, India, Siam (Thailand), and Ceylon (Sri Lanka). The seventeen missionaries who were sent formed some of the earliest contacts that LDS members had with non-Christians (see ASIA, THE CHURCH IN). Because of civil wars, rejection, and language and cultural difficulties, the work in most countries lasted only months; however, work in India continued until 1856. Although some attempts were made in the early twentieth century, the Church did not undertake further significant efforts to establish itself in non-Christian nations, including Asia, until after World War II.

Stimulated by experiences of LDS servicemen in Asia during and after the war, the Church established missions in East Asia at the end of the 1940s. Since then, WARDS and STAKES led by local members have been established in Japan, South Korea, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and the Philippines; temples have been built in all these places except Hong Kong.

In the 1970s and 1980s, the Church expanded into such Southeast Asian nations as Singapore, Thailand, Indonesia, and Malaysia, and in the South Asian nations of India and Sri Lanka. Although small beginnings have been made in some Muslim countries, Church growth in such countries has been limited.

LDS health services programs in the Philippines and refugee assistance in Thailand have been favorably received. High-level contacts with government officials in many countries have elicited a positive response to the values of the Church and its members. Overall, the Church has made consistent efforts to remain sensitive to and abide by local laws and customs, including regulations based on religious sentiment.

Church growth in Africa has principally taken place in the last quarter of the twentieth century, particularly following the 1978 revelation allowing all worthy males to hold the priesthood (see AFRICA, THE CHURCH IN; DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: OFFICIAL DECLARATION—2). Congregations have been established in several countries, and Church membership is growing rapidly. In recent years, the Church has joined various charitable organizations in sending famine relief to stricken nations on the African continent (see ECONOMIC AID).

In an educational vein, MISSIONARY TRAINING CENTERS teach many foreign languages and courses on the religions and cultures of non-Western countries, and for educational purposes “culturegrams” have been developed that are now used by U.S. government agencies. In addition, courses on world religions are regularly taught in institutions of higher learning. Moreover, symposia on Islam and on the religions of Africa have been hosted at Brigham Young University, with a number of distinguished religious leaders and scholars participating.

In many countries, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is viewed as an American church. However, Church leaders have strongly emphasized that it is universal, a church for all people everywhere (see WORLD RELIGIONS [NON-CHRISTIAN] AND MORMONISM). A powerful presentation by President Spencer W. KIMBALL in 1974 stressed the responsibility of the Church to share the gospel with all of God’s children (Ensign 4 [Oct. 1974]:2–14). Consequently, in the last half of the twentieth century the Church has made its most significant efforts to establish itself throughout the world.

Generally the LDS outreach to non-Christians has had a positive, invigorating effect on members of the Church, has strengthened Church membership significantly, and has brought about increased awareness of cultural differences as well as a willingness to work within those differences.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Palmer, Spencer J. The Expanding Church. Salt Lake City, 1978.

———, ed. Mormons and Muslims. Provo, Utah, 1983.

SOREN F. COX

---

INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI)

The International Genealogical Index™ (IGI) is a vital records index, which at the beginning of 1990 contained more than 147 million names of deceased persons from the 1500s to about 1875. The IGI lists individuals alphabetically according to place of birth/christening or marriage, and clusters similarly spelled surnames under a standard spelling.

The Church publishes the IGI to assist genealogical research and help members determine whether temple ordinances have been performed for deceased ancestors. Countries such as England (47,155,000 entries), Mexico 24,205,000, Germany (18,675,000), the United States (18,660,000), Scotland (10,745,000), and Finland (5,045,000), as well as more than ninety other nations are included.

Available on 9,200 microfiches and on compact disk, the IGI can be searched at the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY, Salt Lake City, or at any of the nearly 1,400 LDS FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS located in various parts of the world. Patrons can purchase copies of the microfiche in sets by region, state, or country from the Family History Department, LDS Church Headquarters, Salt Lake City, UT 84150, or copy up to 500 entries to a holding file that can be printed or copied to diskettes for home use.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Family History Library. Research Outline: International Genealogical Index (on microfiche). 1st ed., Aug. 1988, Series IGI, no. 1, 2nd ed., Mar. 1989, Series IGI, no. 5 (compact disk).

GERALD M. HASLAM

INTERNATIONAL MAGAZINES

In 1967 The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints began unifying the foreign language magazines that were being independently published to serve its Danish, Dutch, Finnish, French, German, Norwegian, Spanish, and Swedish-speaking missions to give its magazines similar editorial content and a general format. This unification of content greatly reduced redundant staff efforts in the various mission offices and provided Church-approved materials for all issues. The resulting Unified Magazine was renamed International Magazines in 1974, an umbrella title that in 1990 covered twenty different magazines, each with its own language-specific title. An editorial staff in Salt Lake City chooses materials from the Church's three English publications, Friend, New Era, and Ensign, that will appeal to international readers of all ages and prepares those and other original articles for international publication.

An English version, Tambuli, is prepared in Salt Lake City, and film of the completed layouts, containing both text and art is shipped for local printing in the Philippines. Similar print-ready film is prepared in Salt Lake City for other language editions and is then sent to various printing sites around the world. Some of the translations are prepared in Salt Lake City, but most in the local areas. The various editions contain from eight to sixteen pages of local Church news that is gathered, edited, and printed in the language areas.

The idea of publishing local, foreign-language magazines for Church members started in Wales in 1846, a year before the Mormon Pioneers moved into the Salt Lake Valley. Dan Jones edited and published thirty-two issues of Prophwyd y Jubili, Neu Seren y Saints (Prophet of Jubilee, New Star of Saints), filled with doctrinal and historical articles, messages from Church leaders, and replies to attacks from antagonists of the Church. Other magazines followed. The first issues of Skandinaviens Stjerne (Scandinavian Star) in Denmark, l'Etoile du Deseret (The Star of Deseret) in France, and Zions Panier (Zion's Banner) in Germany were all published in 1851. In subsequent years the Church has published magazines in other languages, with the larger number beginning in the twentieth century. In 1990 the Church is increasing the number of its foreign language periodicals.

For a fuller list of Church magazines and newspapers, see Church Periodicals chart in the Appendix.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Flake, Chad J. A Mormon Bibliography, 1830-1930. Salt Lake City, Utah, 1978.

BRIAN K. KELLY

INTERVIEWS

Church leaders conduct a variety of interviews essential to the administration of the Church and the nurturance of members. Interviews of Church members are conducted to determine personal worthiness, approve participation in religious ceremonies and ORDINANCES, assess needs, issue calls to service, listen to members' concerns, receive an accounting of performance in a Church assignment, and record a member's status regarding the payment of TITHING.

Worthiness is required of those who are to serve in Church CALLINGS, represent the Church as missionaries, and attend the temple (see TEMPLE RECOMMEND). An interview is used in each of these situations to determine the member's willingness to serve and worthiness to participate. For example, when a person prepares for BAPTISM whether temple ordinances have been performed for deceased ancestors. Countries such as England (47,155,000 entries), Mexico 24,205,000, Germany (18,675,000), the United States (18,660,000), Scotland (10,745,000), and Finland (5,045,000), as well as more than ninety other nations are included.

Available on 9,200 microfiches and on compact disk, the IGI can be searched at the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY, Salt Lake City, or at any of the nearly 1,400 LDS FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS located in various parts of the world. Patrons can purchase copies of the microfiche in sets by region, state, or country from the Family History Department, LDS Church Headquarters, Salt Lake City, UT 84150, or copy up to 500 entries to a holding file that can be printed or copied to diskettes for home use.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Family History Library. Research Outline: International Genealogical Index (on microfiche). 1st ed., Aug. 1988, Series IGI, no. 1, 2nd ed., Mar. 1989, Series IGI, no. 5 (compact disk).

GERALD M. HASLAM

INTERNATIONAL MAGAZINES

In 1967 The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints began unifying the foreign language magazines that were being independently published to serve its Danish, Dutch, Finnish, French, German, Norwegian, Spanish, and Swedish-speaking missions to give its magazines similar editorial content and a general format. This unification of content greatly reduced redundant staff efforts in the various mission offices and provided Church-approved materials for all issues. The resulting Unified Magazine was renamed International Magazines in 1974, an umbrella title that in 1990 covered twenty different magazines, each with its own language-specific title. An editorial staff in Salt Lake City chooses materials from the Church's three English publications, Friend, New Era, and Ensign, that will appeal to international readers of all ages and prepares those and other original articles for international publication.

An English version, Tambuli, is prepared in Salt Lake City, and film of the completed layouts, containing both text and art is shipped for local printing in the Philippines. Similar print-ready film is prepared in Salt Lake City for other language editions and is then sent to various printing sites around the world. Some of the translations are prepared in Salt Lake City, but most in the local areas. The various editions contain from eight to sixteen pages of local Church news that is gathered, edited, and printed in the language areas.

The idea of publishing local, foreign-language magazines for Church members started in Wales in 1846, a year before the Mormon Pioneers moved into the Salt Lake Valley. Dan Jones edited and published thirty-two issues of Prophwyd y Jubili, Neu Seren y Saints (Prophet of Jubilee, New Star of Saints), filled with doctrinal and historical articles, messages from Church leaders, and replies to attacks from antagonists of the Church. Other magazines followed. The first issues of Skandinavians Stjerne (Scandinavian Star) in Denmark, l'Etoile du Deseret (The Star of Deseret) in France, and Zions Panier (Zion's Banner) in Germany were all published in 1851. In subsequent years the Church has published magazines in other languages, with the larger number beginning in the twentieth century. In 1990 the Church is increasing the number of its foreign language periodicals.

For a fuller list of Church magazines and newspapers, see Church Periodicals chart in the Appendix.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Flake, Chad J. A Mormon Bibliography, 1830-1930. Salt Lake City, Utah, 1978.

BRIAN K. KELLY

INTERVIEWS

Church leaders conduct a variety of interviews essential to the administration of the Church and the nurturance of members. Interviews of Church members are conducted to determine personal worthiness, approve participation in religious ceremonies and ORDINANCES, assess needs, issue calls to service, listen to members' concerns, receive an accounting of performance in a Church assignment, and record a member's status regarding the payment of TITHING.

Worthiness is required of those who are to serve in Church CALLINGS, represent the Church as missionaries, and attend the temple (see TEMPLE RECOMMEND). An interview is used in each of these situations to determine the member's willingness to serve and worthiness to participate. For example, when a person prepares for BAPTISM whether temple ordinances have been performed for deceased ancestors. Countries such as England (47,155,000 entries), Mexico 24,205,000, Germany (18,675,000), the United States (18,660,000), Scotland (10,745,000), and Finland (5,045,000), as well as more than ninety other nations are included.

Available on 9,200 microfiches and on compact disk, the IGI can be searched at the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY, Salt Lake City, or at any of the nearly 1,400 LDS FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS located in various parts of the world. Patrons can purchase copies of the microfiche in sets by region, state, or country from the Family History Department, LDS Church Headquarters, Salt Lake City, UT 84150, or copy up to 500 entries to a holding file that can be printed or copied to diskettes for home use.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Family History Library. Research Outline: International Genealogical Index (on microfiche). 1st ed., Aug. 1988, Series IGI, no. 1, 2nd ed., Mar. 1989, Series IGI, no. 5 (compact disk).

GERALD M. HASLAM

INTERNATIONAL MAGAZINES

In 1967 The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints began unifying the foreign language magazines that were being independently published to serve its Danish, Dutch, Finnish, French, German, Norwegian, Spanish, and Swedish-speaking missions to give its magazines similar editorial content and a general format. This unification of content greatly reduced redundant staff efforts in the various mission offices and provided Church-approved materials for all issues. The resulting Unified Magazine was renamed International Magazines in 1974, an umbrella title that in 1990 covered twenty different magazines, each with its own language-specific title. An editorial staff in Salt Lake City chooses materials from the Church's three English publications, Friend, New Era, and Ensign, that will appeal to international readers of all ages and prepares those and other original articles for international publication.

An English version, Tambuli, is prepared in Salt Lake City, and film of the completed layouts, containing both text and art is shipped for local printing in the Philippines. Similar print-ready film is prepared in Salt Lake City for other language editions and is then sent to various printing sites around the world. Some of the translations are prepared in Salt Lake City, but most in the local areas. The various editions contain from eight to sixteen pages of local Church news that is gathered, edited, and printed in the language areas.

The idea of publishing local, foreign-language magazines for Church members started in Wales in 1846, a year before the Mormon Pioneers moved into the Salt Lake Valley. Dan Jones edited and published thirty-two issues of Prophwyd y Jubili, Neu Seren y Saints (Prophet of Jubilee, New Star of Saints), filled with doctrinal and historical articles, messages from Church leaders, and replies to attacks from antagonists of the Church. Other magazines followed. The first issues of Skandinaviens Stjerne (Scandinavian Star) in Denmark, l'Etoile du Deseret (The Star of Deseret) in France, and Zions Panier (Zion's Banner) in Germany were all published in 1851. In subsequent years the Church has published magazines in other languages, with the larger number beginning in the twentieth century. In 1990 the Church is increasing the number of its foreign language periodicals.

For a fuller list of Church magazines and newspapers, see Church Periodicals chart in the Appendix.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Flake, Chad J. A Mormon Bibliography, 1830-1930. Salt Lake City, Utah, 1978.

BRIAN K. KELLY

INTERVIEWS

Church leaders conduct a variety of interviews essential to the administration of the Church and the nurturance of members. Interviews of Church members are conducted to determine personal worthiness, approve participation in religious ceremonies and ORDINANCES, assess needs, issue calls to service, listen to members' concerns, receive an accounting of performance in a Church assignment, and record a member's status regarding the payment of TITHING.

Worthiness is required of those who are to serve in Church CALLINGS, represent the Church as missionaries, and attend the temple (see TEMPLE RECOMMEND). An interview is used in each of these situations to determine the member's willingness to serve and worthiness to participate. For example, when a person prepares for BAPTISM or an engaged couple seek permission to be married by priesthood authority in the temple, they first answer questions of a Church leader (usually a bishop or stake president) in a confidential worthiness interview regarding their honesty, integrity, moral cleanliness, and overall obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Church leaders are expected to seek inspiration as they determine worthiness, extend callings, and give counsel to members who are having difficulties. Members may seek an interview for counsel regarding matters of personal anguish, spiritual concerns, moral transgression, marital disharmony, financial welfare, and family functioning. They may come feeling anxious and bearing burdens of guilt. Although Church leaders are not given specific training in the techniques of interviewing, they are encouraged to be supportive and nonthreatening and to create an atmosphere in which the Spirit of the Lord can be present to provide guidance, comfort, and discernment. N. Eldon Tanner, counselor in the First Presidency of the Church, offered the following advice to Church interviewers: "It is important that those we interview realize that they are spirit children of God and that we love them . . . and are interested in their welfare and in helping them succeed in life" (p. 41).

Interviews are also used to issue callings and report service rendered. For example, most adult men and women accept calls to visit specific members of the congregation monthly (see HOME TEACHING; VISITING TEACHING) and then discuss these visits in an interview with their supervisor. Members in any calling report on their performance and provide their supervisors with nonconfidential information concerning those they are called to serve (see STEWARDSHIP). They report any confidential matters directly to the bishop.

Interviews are regularly scheduled to maintain lines of communication between Church leaders and members. Bishops and their counselors are asked to interview youth twelve to eighteen years of age frequently to encourage obedience to the gospel, the development of talents, the pursuit of education, and preparation for service in the Church and community. These interviews should support family goals and commitments and supplement parental guidance (which often includes appropriate father's and mother's interviews and counsel with their children).

Successful interviews invite unity and build faith. Leaders who conduct worthiness interviews are to remember that they are "representatives of the Lord and [therefore they] must conduct the interviews as the Lord himself would conduct them" (Tanner, p. 42).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Dyer, Alvin R. "How Oral Evaluation Can Help Home Teachers Keep Close to the Families They Visit." IE 72 (Dec. 1969):18-19.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "The Blessing of Church Interviews." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):41-42.

LARRY C. FARMER

---

IOWA, LDS COMMUNITIES IN

[LDS refugees first settled in southeastern Iowa along the Mississippi River in 1839, after their expulsion from Missouri (see Missouri Conflict). The towns of Montrose, Keokuk, and Augusta had numerous LDS settlers. Latter-day Saints established Ambrosia, about three miles west of Montrose; Nashville (now Calland), three miles south of Montrose; and Zarahemla, their principal settlement, immediately west of Montrose. Because of anti-Mormon feelings, questionable land titles, and the desire to live closer to Church headquarters, most members eventually moved across the Mississippi River to Nauvoo, Illinois. See generally History of the Church: c. 1831-1844.]

In 1846, Latter-day Saints moving west from Illinois established way-station settlements at Garden Grove and Mount Pisgah to raise crops for those who would follow. The Mormon Battalion was recruited first at Mount Pisgah. Also in 1846, numerous temporary settlements were established in the vicinity of Council Bluffs. In 1848 most Latter-day Saints remaining at the Missouri River withdrew from Winter Quarters, today part of Omaha, Nebraska, and settled across the river in present-day Council Bluffs, which they called Kanesville. LDS population in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, including Kanesville, may have reached as high as 8,000 in about forty settlements before the massive effort to move them to the Salt Lake Valley in 1852.

In 1856-1858, Iowa City was the outfitting point for church emigrants, including Handcart Companies. See Immigration and Emigration; Mormon Pioneer Trail; and, more generally, History of the Church: c. 1844-1877.]

---

ISAIAH

[It is the emphasis on Isaiah's words in LDS scripture that necessitates a treatment of his writings under four titles:

or an engaged couple seek permission to be married by priesthood authority in the temple, they first answer questions of a Church leader (usually a bishop or stake president) in a confidential worthiness interview regarding their honesty, integrity, moral cleanliness, and overall obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Church leaders are expected to seek inspiration as they determine worthiness, extend callings, and give counsel to members who are having difficulties. Members may seek an interview for counsel regarding matters of personal anguish, spiritual concerns, moral transgression, marital disharmony, financial welfare, and family functioning. They may come feeling anxious and bearing burdens of guilt. Although Church leaders are not given specific training in the techniques of interviewing, they are encouraged to be supportive and nonthreatening and to create an atmosphere in which the Spirit of the Lord can be present to provide guidance, comfort, and discernment. N. Eldon Tanner, counselor in the First Presidency of the Church, offered the following advice to Church interviewers: "It is important that those we interview realize that they are spirit children of God and that we love them . . . and are interested in their welfare and in helping them succeed in life" (p. 41).

Interviews are also used to issue callings and report service rendered. For example, most adult men and women accept calls to visit specific members of the congregation monthly (see HOME TEACHING; VISITING TEACHING) and then discuss these visits in an interview with their supervisor. Members in any calling report on their performance and provide their supervisors with nonconfidential information concerning those they are called to serve (see STEWARDSHIP). They report any confidential matters directly to the bishop.

Interviews are regularly scheduled to maintain lines of communication between Church leaders and members. Bishops and their counselors are asked to interview youth twelve to eighteen years of age frequently to encourage obedience to the gospel, the development of talents, the pursuit of education, and preparation for service in the Church and community. These interviews should support family goals and commitments and supplement parental guidance (which often includes appropriate father's and mother's interviews and counsel with their children).

Successful interviews invite unity and build faith. Leaders who conduct worthiness interviews are to remember that they are "representatives of the Lord and [therefore they] must conduct the interviews as the Lord himself would conduct them" (Tanner, p. 42).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Dyer, Alvin R. "How Oral Evaluation Can Help Home Teachers Keep Close to the Families They Visit." IE 72 (Dec. 1969):18-19.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "The Blessing of Church Interviews." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):41-42.

LARRY C. FARMER

---

IOWA, LDS COMMUNITIES IN

[LDS refugees first settled in southeastern Iowa along the Mississippi River in 1839, after their expulsion from Missouri (see Missouri Conflict). The towns of Montrose, Keokuk, and Augusta had numerous LDS settlers. Latter-day Saints established Ambrosia, about three miles west of Montrose; Nashville (now Calland), three miles south of Montrose; and Zarahemla, their principal settlement, immediately west of Montrose. Because of anti-Mormon feelings, questionable land titles, and the desire to live closer to Church headquarters, most members eventually moved across the Mississippi River to Nauvoo, Illinois. See generally History of the Church: c. 1831-1844.]

In 1846, Latter-day Saints moving west from Illinois established way-station settlements at Garden Grove and Mount Pisgah to raise crops for those who would follow. The Mormon Battalion was recruited first at Mount Pisgah. Also in 1846, numerous temporary settlements were established in the vicinity of Council Bluffs. In 1848 most Latter-day Saints remaining at the Missouri River withdrew from Winter Quarters, today part of Omaha, Nebraska, and settled across the river in present-day Council Bluffs, which they called Kanesville. LDS population in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, including Kanesville, may have reached as high as 8,000 in about forty settlements before the massive effort to move them to the Salt Lake Valley in 1852.

In 1856-1858, Iowa City was the outfitting point for church emigrants, including Handcart Companies. See Immigration and Emigration; Mormon Pioneer Trail; and, more generally, History of the Church: c. 1844-1877.]

---

ISAIAH

[It is the emphasis on Isaiah's words in LDS scripture that necessitates a treatment of his writings under four titles:

or an engaged couple seek permission to be married by priesthood authority in the temple, they first answer questions of a Church leader (usually a bishop or stake president) in a confidential worthiness interview regarding their honesty, integrity, moral cleanliness, and overall obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Church leaders are expected to seek inspiration as they determine worthiness, extend callings, and give counsel to members who are having difficulties. Members may seek an interview for counsel regarding matters of personal anguish, spiritual concerns, moral transgression, marital disharmony, financial welfare, and family functioning. They may come feeling anxious and bearing burdens of guilt. Although Church leaders are not given specific training in the techniques of interviewing, they are encouraged to be supportive and nonthreatening and to create an atmosphere in which the Spirit of the Lord can be present to provide guidance, comfort, and discernment. N. Eldon Tanner, counselor in the First Presidency of the Church, offered the following advice to Church interviewers: "It is important that those we interview realize that they are spirit children of God and that we love them . . . and are interested in their welfare and in helping them succeed in life" (p. 41).

Interviews are also used to issue callings and report service rendered. For example, most adult men and women accept calls to visit specific members of the congregation monthly (see HOME TEACHING; VISITING TEACHING) and then discuss these visits in an interview with their supervisor. Members in any calling report on their performance and provide their supervisors with nonconfidential information concerning those they are called to serve (see STEWARDSHIP). They report any confidential matters directly to the bishop.

Interviews are regularly scheduled to maintain lines of communication between Church leaders and members. Bishops and their counselors are asked to interview youth twelve to eighteen years of age frequently to encourage obedience to the gospel, the development of talents, the pursuit of education, and preparation for service in the Church and community. These interviews should support family goals and commitments and supplement parental guidance (which often includes appropriate father's and mother's interviews and counsel with their children).

Successful interviews invite unity and build faith. Leaders who conduct worthiness interviews are to remember that they are "representatives of the Lord and [therefore they] must conduct the interviews as the Lord himself would conduct them" (Tanner, p. 42).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Dyer, Alvin R. "How Oral Evaluation Can Help Home Teachers Keep Close to the Families They Visit." IE 72 (Dec. 1969):18-19.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "The Blessing of Church Interviews." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):41-42.

LARRY C. FARMER

---

IOWA, LDS COMMUNITIES IN

[LDS refugees first settled in southeastern Iowa along the Mississippi River in 1839, after their expulsion from Missouri (see Missouri Conflict). The towns of Montrose, Keokuk, and Augusta had numerous LDS settlers. Latter-day Saints established Ambrosia, about three miles west of Montrose; Nashville (now Calland), three miles south of Montrose; and Zarahemla, their principal settlement, immediately west of Montrose. Because of anti-Mormon feelings, questionable land titles, and the desire to live closer to Church headquarters, most members eventually moved across the Mississippi River to Nauvoo, Illinois. See generally History of the Church: c. 1831-1844.]

In 1846, Latter-day Saints moving west from Illinois established way-station settlements at Garden Grove and Mount Pisgah to raise crops for those who would follow. The Mormon Battalion was recruited first at Mount Pisgah. Also in 1846, numerous temporary settlements were established in the vicinity of Council Bluffs. In 1848 most Latter-day Saints remaining at the Missouri River withdrew from Winter Quarters, today part of Omaha, Nebraska, and settled across the river in present-day Council Bluffs, which they called Kanesville. LDS population in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, including Kanesville, may have reached as high as 8,000 in about forty settlements before the massive effort to move them to the Salt Lake Valley in 1852.

In 1856-1858, Iowa City was the outfitting point for church emigrants, including Handcart Companies. See Immigration and Emigration; Mormon Pioneer Trail; and, more generally, History of the Church: c. 1844-1877.]

---

ISAIAH

[It is the emphasis on Isaiah's words in LDS scripture that necessitates a treatment of his writings under four titles:

Authorship
 Texts in the Book of Mormon
 Interpretations in Modern Scripture
 Commentaries on Isaiah

The article Authorship deals with the issue of the single authorship of the book of Isaiah in light of the existence of an Isaiah text possessed by Book of Mormon peoples as early as 600 B.C. The article Texts in the Book of Mormon focuses on the question of what can be learned about the history of the text of Isaiah's book from the portions preserved in the Book of Mormon. Many of Isaiah's words that are preserved and commented on in LDS scripture have to do with the latter days, a matter that is taken up in the article Interpretations in Modern Scripture. The resulting LDS interest in Isaiah has led to a number of studies that are treated in the article Commentaries on Isaiah.]

AUTHORSHIP

Of the writings in the Old Testament, the message of Isaiah enjoys high priority among Latter-day Saints. The attraction derives primarily from the extensive use of Isaiah in the Book of Mormon. Secondarily, chapter 11 of Isaiah was quoted to Joseph Smith in a vision in his earliest days as a prophet (JS—H 1:40) and became the subject of a section in the Doctrine and Covenants (D&C 113). In addition, Jesus Christ has given revelations about, and prophets and apostles of the latter days have frequently quoted from and commented upon Isaiah's words when instructing the Saints.

Traditionally, the book of Isaiah has been ascribed to a prophet living in the kingdom of Judah between 740 and 690 B.C. In Germany during the late 1700s, several scholars challenged this view, claiming that chapters 40–66 were written by one or more other individuals as late as 400 B.C. because of the specific references to events that occurred after Isaiah's death. This outlook now permeates many Bible commentaries and has led to the postulation of a second prophetic writer who is commonly called in scholarly literature "Deutero-Isaiah." Indeed, a wide variety of theories regarding the date and authorship of Isaiah now exist. However, LDS belief in revelation and the seership of prophets, along with the quotations from Isaiah in the Book of Mormon and its admonitions to study his writings, have reinforced Latter-day Saints in the traditional view concerning the date and authorship of Isaiah, in the following ways.

First, while some scholars argue that prophets could not see the future and that, therefore, the later chapters of Isaiah must have been written after Isaiah's time (e.g., Isa. 45 concerning Cyrus), Latter-day Saints recognize that prophets can see and prophesy about the future. In chapters 40–66, Isaiah prophesies of the future, just as the apostle John does in Revelation 4–22, and the prophet Nephi<sub>1</sub> in 2 Nephi 25–30.

Second, the Book of Mormon prophet Lehi and his family left Jerusalem about 600 B.C. and took with them scriptural writings on plates of brass that contained much of the Old Testament, including Isaiah (1 Ne. 5:13; 19:22–23). Book of Mormon prophets taught from the brass plate records, not only from chapters 1–39, which are usually assigned by scholars to the prophet Isaiah of the eighth century B.C., but also from the later chapters, the so-called Deutero-Isaiah. For example, Isaiah chapters 48–54 are all quoted in the Book of Mormon, with some passages mentioned a number of times (1 Ne. 20–21; 2 Ne. 6:16–8:25; Mosiah 12:21–24; 14; 15:29–31; 3 Ne. 16:18–20; 20:32–45; 22). Hence, the existence of a virtually complete Isaiah text in the late seventh century B.C., as witnessed by the Book of Mormon, negates arguments for later multiple authorship, whether those arguments be historical, theological, or literary.

Finally, other significant witnesses exist for the single authorship of Isaiah, including Jesus Christ in particular (cf. Matt. 13:14–15; 15:7–9; Luke 4:17–19; 3 Ne. 16, 20–22). Indeed, after quoting much from Isaiah 52 (3 Ne. 16:18–20; 20:32–45) and repeating Isaiah 54 in its entirety (3 Ne. 22), the resurrected Jesus Christ admonished his Book of Mormon disciples to study Isaiah's words and then said, "A commandment I give unto you that ye search these things diligently; for great are the words of Isaiah. For surely he spake as touching all things concerning my people which are of the house of Israel" (3 Ne. 23:1–2).

Jewish and Christian traditions from the earliest times have supported the single authorship of Isaiah. The Septuagint, the Dead Sea Scrolls, and other ancient texts also give no hint of multiple authorship. Latter-day Saints accept the words of the risen Jesus that Isaiah was a seer and revelator whose prophecies, as recorded throughout his book, will eventually all be fulfilled (3 Ne. 23:1–3). Particularly from Jesus' attribution of Isaiah 52 and 54 to the ancient prophet have Latter-day Saints concluded that the book of Isaiah is the inspired work of the eighth-century prophet Isaiah, son of Amoz.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Adams, Larry L., and Alvin C. Rencher. "A Computer Analysis of the Isaiah Authorship Problem." BYU Studies 15 (Autumn 1974):95-102.
- Anderson, Francis I. "Style and Authorship." The Tyndale Paper 21 (June 1976):2.
- Gileadi, Avraham. A Holistic Structure of the Book of Isaiah. Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1981.
- Kissane, E. J. The Book of Isaiah, 2 vols. Dublin, Ireland, 1941, 1943.
- Ludlow, Victor L. Isaiah: Prophet, Seer, and Poet. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Tvedtnes, John A. "Isaiah Variants in the Book of Mormon." In Isaiah and the Prophets, ed. M. Nyman. Provo, Utah, 1984.
- Young, Edward J. Introduction to the Old Testament. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1949.

VICTOR L. LUDLOW

TEXTS IN THE BOOK OF MORMON

The Isaiah texts quoted in the Book of Mormon are unique. They are the only extant Isaiah texts that have no "original" language source with which the translation can be textually compared. These English texts date to the translation and initial publication of the Book of Mormon (1829).

These Isaiah texts were quoted and paraphrased by many Book of Mormon prophets who had a copy of Isaiah on the PLATES of brass. Attempts to determine the authenticity of those Book of Mormon Isaiah texts by comparing them with Hebrew, Greek, and Latin texts of Isaiah hold interest, but such efforts are moot because the ancient texts behind the Book of Mormon Isaiah translation are not available for study. However, much can be learned by comparing the numerous ancient versions and translations of Isaiah with the Book of Mormon Isaiah texts. Such comparisons result in granting the Book of Mormon Isaiah full recensional status.

The Isaiah materials in the Book of Mormon exhibit many similarities to those in the King James translation of the Bible, which would seem to indicate that both share a Hebrew Masoretic origin. However, many other peculiarities in the Book of Mormon texts point to an origin related to texts similar to those from which the Greek Septuagint and the Latin Vulgate were derived. These peculiar readings are significant enough that they preclude relegating the Book of Mormon Isaiah texts to being a mere copy of the King James Version. The Isaiah texts found in English translation in the Book of Mormon possess a distinctive char-

CHART OF ISAIAH CITATIONS IN THE BOOK OF MORMON

Book of Mormon	Isaiah
1 Ne. 20-21	48-49
1 Ne. 22:6	49:22
1 Ne. 22:8	49:22-23; 29:14
1 Ne. 22:10-11	52:10
2 Ne. 6:6b-7	49:22-23
2 Ne. 6:15	29:6
2 Ne. 6:16-8:25	49:24-52:2
2 Ne. 9:50-51	55:1-2
2 Ne. 12-24	2-14
2 Ne. 25:17 (mixed)	11:11 and 29:14
2 Ne. 26:15-16, 18	29:3-5
2 Ne. 26:25	55:1
2 Ne. 27:2-5	29:6-10
2 Ne. 27:6-9	29:4, 11
2 Ne. 27:15-19	29:11-12
2 Ne. 27:25-35	29:13-24
2 Ne. 28:9b	29:15
2 Ne. 28:14b	29:13b
2 Ne. 28:16a	29:21
2 Ne. 28:30a	28:10, 13
2 Ne. 28:32	9:12-13
2 Ne. 29:1	29:14, 11:11
2 Ne. 30:9, 12-15	11:4-9
Mosiah 12:21-24	52:7-10
Mosiah 14:1-12	53
Mosiah 15:10	53:10
Mosiah 15:14-18	52:7
Mosiah 15:29-31	52:8-10
3 Ne. 16:18-20	52:8-10
3 Ne. 20:32-35	52:8-10
3 Ne. 20:36-46	52:1-3, 6-7, 11-15
3 Ne. 21:8b	52:15b
3 Ne. 21:29	52:12
3 Ne. 22:1b-17	54
Moro. 10:31	52:17; 54:2

acter that indicates a unique textual origin. The important question is not, "Are the Book of Mormon Isaiah texts authentic?" Rather, the issue is, "Do the Book of Mormon Isaiah texts provide clear evidence of variant texts besides those normally acknowledged?" Should they not be considered as valid as, say, the Dead Sea Isaiah texts?

One of the major criticisms of the Book of Mormon Isaiah texts is that they contain parts of what have come to be termed "First Isaiah" and "Deutero-Isaiah" by Bible scholars. It is evident that the Book of Mormon Isaiah texts provide evidence contravening modern theories of multiple authorship of Isaiah's book (see ISAAH: AUTHORSHIP); for if the origins of the Isaiah material in the Book of Mormon are accepted as stated by its authors, then by 600 B.C. the book of Isaiah was essentially as it is today. The chief value of textual criticism, in this case, is to help identify special themes and language patterns, that is, to provide a better understanding of the message, not a determination of authorship. The most viable and certainly the most productive option for determining the origin of the Book of Mormon Isaiah texts is therefore an internal examination.

The Book of Mormon indicates that in "the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah" (1 Ne. 1:4) the prophet NEPHI<sub>1</sub> and his brothers retrieved from Jerusalem a "record" written by their ancestors on plates of brass (1 Ne. 3-4), which they carried with them to the Western Hemisphere. Included in the record were prophecies of Isaiah (1 Ne. 19:22-23; cf. 5:13). All of the Isaiah texts in the Book of Mormon are quotations from that record, except perhaps those cited by the risen Jesus (cf. 1 Ne. 16, 21-22). Whether quoting directly or paraphrasing, Book of Mormon prophets were trying to do two things: "persuade [people] to believe in the Lord their Redeemer" (1 Ne. 19:23) and reveal the plans of God for his people, as noted by the prophet Isaiah (e.g., 2 Ne. 25:7; Hel. 8:18-20; 3 Ne. 23:1-2). These features give a singular quality to the Isaiah texts of the Book of Mormon, because it preserves almost exclusively the texts pertaining to salvation and saving principles and ignores Isaiah's historical material. The concerns of Book of Mormon prophets were doctrinal, and passages were utilized to expound their testimonies. Moreover, the passages that concern salvation from the later chapters of Isaiah are presented to show that Jesus was the promised Messiah (cf. Mosiah 13:33-15:31, which cites Isa. 53; 52:7, 8-10). While nineteenth-century biblical scholarship held that the concept of a "saving Messiah" arose after the Babylonian exile (587-538 B.C.) and therefore the later chapters of Isaiah are to be dated to the end of the sixth century or later, the Book of Mormon texts obviously undermine that theory.

Minor changes in the Book of Mormon Isaiah texts have been made since the publication of the work in 1830. These changes in recent editions have attempted to correct early errors in printing and to bring the Isaiah texts of the present edition into "conformity with prepublication manuscripts and early editions edited by the Prophet Joseph Smith" ("A Brief Explanation About the Book of Mormon," 1981 edition of the Book of Mormon). None of these changes has been substantive.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Eissfeldt, Otto. The Old Testament: An Introduction, pp. 303-346. New York, 1965.
- Nibley, Hugh. Since Cumorah, pp. 111-34. In CWHN 7.
- Sperry, Sidney B. Answers to Book of Mormon Questions. Salt Lake City, 1967.
- Tvedtnes, John A. "The Isaiah Variants in the Book of Mormon." F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1981.

LEGRANDE DAVIES

INTERPRETATIONS IN MODERN SCRIPTURE

Isaiah was one of the most important prophetic writers in the Old Testament. The Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, modern LDS scriptures, confirm this assessment and contain extensive commentaries on his writings. The Book of Mormon quotes 425 verses and paraphrases many others from the book of Isaiah, taken from the PLATES of brass, a record brought to the Western Hemisphere by the prophet LEHI and his family (c. 600 B.C.). The Book of Mormon quotations from Isaiah are accompanied by the interpretations of Nephite prophets and the resurrected Jesus Christ. The Doctrine and Covenants likewise contains quotations and paraphrases of Isaiah, many illuminating the setting for and relevance of the fulfillment of his prophecies.

THE BOOK OF MORMON. The prophets in the Book of Mormon explicitly praise the writings of Isaiah and provide a thorough commentary thereon. Besides three early NEPHITE prophets, NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, JACOB, and ABINADI, who quoted extensively from and explained the meanings of Isaiah, the resurrected Jesus Christ, when he visited the Nephites (A.D. 34), commanded his hearers to "search these things diligently; for great are the words of Isaiah" (3 Ne. 23:1). Most Book of Mormon citations of Isaiah concern two themes: (1) the testimony that Jesus Christ would come into the world to save it (1 Ne. 19:23; cf. 2 Ne. 9:5-12), and (2) pronouncements that even though the Lord would scatter Israel, he would gather and restore them, fulfilling the covenants that he made with Abraham and Israel (2 Ne. 6:5; cf. 9:1-2).

Concerning the house of Israel, Nephi's earliest citation of Isaiah (chaps. 48–49) emphasized two types of scattering: that of large segments of the tribes of Israel, and that of small groups among the nations of the earth (1 Ne. 22:3–5; cf. Isa. 49: 1–13). Scattered Israelites of both types would be nursed temporally and spiritually among the GENTILES. The temporal assistance to Israelites would lead to a dependency on Gentiles for survival. The spiritual nursing would come through a “marvelous work” that would gather Israel out of obscurity and darkness and bring them to the knowledge of their Redeemer (1 Ne. 22:6–12).

Nephi presented his longest quotation of Isaiah 2–14 (2 Ne. 12–24) as a third witness of Israel's Redeemer. Nephi, his brother Jacob, and Isaiah had each seen the Redeemer (as the premortal Jesus Christ) face to face (2 Ne. 11:2–3; cf. 2 Ne. 16:1–7). Nephi's own vision (1 Ne. 11:13–20) clarified Isaiah's words pointing to the coming of Christ (cf. 2 Ne. 17:14; 19:6–7 [i.e., Isa. 7:14; 9:6–7]).

Nephi's commentary on Isaiah 2–14 describes what was to happen to the Jews (2 Ne. 25:9–21; cf. Isa. 3:1–15; 5:1–7), to Nephi's own people (2 Ne. 25:22–26:11; cf. Isa. 29:1–4), and among the Gentiles (2 Ne. 26:12–28:32; cf. Isa. 3:16–4:1). Nephi knew by revelation that when the Book of Mormon would come forth among Gentiles, churches would be lifted up in pride and learning, SECRET COMBINATIONS would prevail, and priestcraft would flourish (2 Ne. 26:14–33; cf. Isa. 3:16–4:1; 2 Ne. 13:16–14:1). By contrast, he foresaw that beautiful branches of Israel would be cleansed and grow in both ZION and JERUSALEM and that they would be protected by the Lord (Isa. 4:2–6; 2 Ne. 14:2–6). Expanding Isaiah's prophecy, Nephi prophesied that Gentiles who repented would be numbered with the house of Israel and become heirs of the promised blessings (2 Ne. 30:1–3). He affirmed that his own people would again receive the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST and become a pure and delightful people (2 Ne. 30:4–6). He foretold the gathering of Jews to Jerusalem, as they would begin to believe in Christ, and also as a delightful people (2 Ne. 30:7).

The prophet Abinadi (c. 150 B.C.) said that all the prophets had spoken concerning Christ's coming (Mosiah 13:33–35), and he quoted Isaiah 53 as an example (cf. Mosiah 14). In one of the most lucid explanations of the ministry and atonement of Christ, Abinadi explained that chapter 53 of Isaiah underscored that “God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people,” and that, because of his redemption, he would stand “betwixt them and justice; having broken the bands of death, taken upon himself their iniquity and their transgressions, . . . and satisfied the demands of [God's] justice” (Mosiah 15:1–9).

During his first visit among Book of Mormon peoples, the resurrected Jesus cited Isaiah 52 and 54 among his principal texts. He declared that when the words of Isaiah were fulfilled, the covenants made to the house of Israel would be fulfilled (3 Ne. 20:11–12). The gospel will be taught to Jews in their scattered locations and, after they accept it, they will return to Jerusalem and teach their own people (3 Ne. 20:29–35; cf. Isa. 52:8–10). Jesus gave his hearers a sign that the restoration of Jews to Jerusalem would indicate that the restoration had already begun among other Israelites in ZION, the Americas (3 Ne. 21:1–7; Isa. 52:1–3, 6–7, 11–12). In a reference to the “marred” servant of Isaiah 52:13–15, he spoke of the servant's “marvelous work.” While the marred servant was clearly the mortal Jesus (Mosiah 15:1–9), Isaiah's words form a dual prophecy because the resurrected Jesus said that it also referred to a latter-day servant. Latter-day Saints believe that this servant was the Prophet Joseph Smith, and the marvelous work referred to was the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the restoration of the gospel (3 Ne. 21:8–11).

While expanding on Isaiah's words, Jesus foretold the building of the NEW JERUSALEM in the Western Hemisphere by a remnant of the house of Israel, assisted by converted Gentiles (3 Ne. 21:22–25; cf. 20:22). The gospel is to be preached among the various groups of the house of Israel, including the Lamanites and the lost tribes (3 Ne. 21:26).

THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS. Also a rich source for interpreting and applying the prophecies of Isaiah, the Doctrine and Covenants has over seventy quotations from or paraphrases of Isaiah. Two themes are prevalent: the gospel will be restored, and Israel will be gathered. For example, the “marvelous work and a wonder” (Isa. 29:14) is the coming forth of the Book of Mormon (D&C 6:1); God's “strange act” (Isa. 28:21) refers to the RESTORATION of the Church and its temple ORDINANCES (D&C 95:4); the “good tidings” published “upon the mountains” (Isa. 52:7) consist of the preaching of the gospel to all nations (D&C 19:29); and the restoration of the tribes of Jacob

CHART OF ISALAH CITATIONS IN THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS

The following lists offer a sampling of Isaiah passages that are either quoted, paraphrased, or interpreted in the Doctrine and Covenants.

Isaiah	Doctrine and Covenants
1:2	76:1
1:18	45:10; 50:10–12
1:19	64:34
2:2–3	133:12–13
4:5	45:63–75; 84:5
4:6	115:6
5:1–7	101:43–62
8:16	88:84; 133:72
11:1–5	113:1–4
11:4	19:15
11:10	113:5–6
11:16	133:26–29
13:1	133:14
13:10	29:14; 34:9; 45:42; 88:87; 133:49
13:13	21:6; 35:24
14:12	76:26
24:5	1:15
24:20	49:23; 88:87
25:6	58:8
28:10	98:12; 128:21
28:15, 18	45:31; 5:19; 97:23
28:21	95:4; 101:95
29:14	4:1; 6:1; 11:1; 12:1; 14:1; 18:44; 76:9
33:22	1:13
34:5	38:22
35:1–2	49:24–25; 117:7
35:3	81:5
35:7–10	133:27–33
35:10	45:71; 66:11
40:3	33:10; 45:9; 65:1; 84:28
40:4	88:66
40:5	49:23; 133:22
40:6	101:23 124:7–8
40:31	89:20; 124:99
42:7	128:22
43:11	76:1
45:17	35:25; 38:33
45:23	76:110; 88:104
49:1	1:1
49:2	6:2; 11:2; 12:2; 14:2; 15:2; 16:2; 33:1; 86:9
49:6	86:11
49:22	45:9; 115:5
50:2–3	35:8; 133:66–69
50:11	133:70
51:9–11	101:18

52:1	82:14; 113:7–8
52:2	113:9–10
52:7	19:29; 31:3; 113:10
52:8	39:13; 84:98–99; 133:10
52:10	113:10; 133:3
52:11	38:42; 133:5
52:12	49:27; 58:56; 101:68, 72; 133:15
52:15	101:94
54:2	82:14; 133:9
54:17	71:9; 109:25
55:6	88:62–63
59:17	27:15–18
60:1–4	64:41–42
60:2	112:23
60:22	133:58
61:1	128:22
62:4	133:23–24
62:10	45:9; 115:5
63:1–2	133:46–48
63:3–6	76:107; 88:106; 133:50–52
63:7–9	133:52–53
64:1–2	34:8; 133:40–42
64:3–5	76:10; 133:43–45
65:17	29:23
65:20	63:51; 101:30
65:21–22	101:101
66:1	38:17
66:24	76:44

from among the nations (Isa. 49:6) means the return of scattered Israel to their lands of promise (D&C 133:26–33).

Other themes include the building of the latter-day Zion and her stakes (Isa. 54:1–2; D&C 82:14) as well as the old Jerusalem (Isa. 52:1–2; D&C 113:7–10); verification that Jesus is the only Savior of the world (Isa. 43:11; D&C 76:1); and details of his SECOND COMING (Isa. 63:3–6; 64:1–5; D&C 133:37–52). Finally, many anticipated events are interpreted to be millennial occurrences (Isa. 65; D&C 101:30–31).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ludlow, Victor L. Isaiah: Prophet, Seer, and Poet. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Nyman, Monte S. Great Are the Words of Isaiah. Salt Lake City, 1980.

MONTE S. NYMAN

COMMENTARIES ON ISAAH

The book of Isaaah is one of the most frequently cited prophetic works within LDS scripture. When the Book of Mormon people left Jerusalem, they carried records on PLATES of brass that contained many Old Testament books predating 600 B.C., including Isaaah. Early in their narratives, NEPHI<sub>1</sub> and his brother, JACOB, quoted extensively from Isaaah. Later, the resurrected Jesus admonished his hearers in the Americas to search the words of Isaaah diligently, for “great are the words of Isaaah” (3 Ne. 23:1).

Latter-day Saints see many of Isaaah’s prophecies fulfilled in contemporary events. When the angel Moroni appeared to the Prophet Joseph SMITH on September 21–22, 1823, he quoted Isaaah 11 and said it was “about to be fulfilled” (JS—H 1:40). Isaaah 29 is also seen as a prophecy anticipating the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Joseph Smith’s teachings contain many references to Isaaah, especially about the LAST DAYS before the second coming of Christ. Additionally, Isaaah is often quoted in the Doctrine and Covenants (e.g., 45:10; 50:10–12; 64:34–35; 133), and in some cases interpretations are added (e.g., D&C 113).

Several books written by LDS authors since 1950 have sought to assist Church members and others to understand Isaaah’s words. Some of these commentaries addressed a scholarly audience and others were written for general readers.

In 1952 Sidney B. Sperry commented on Isaaah in the first ten chapters of his book The Voice of Israel’s Prophets (Salt Lake City). Its chief purpose was to offer commentary from an LDS perspective, including Joseph Smith’s views, and to analyze the entire book of Isaaah historically and philologically. Sperry included Book of Mormon interpretations of various passages and a discussion of a unified authorship. He also utilized the Septuagint and his mastery of Hebrew to explain and sometimes retranslate passages. Although the earliest such study, it remains a classic of its kind.

In 1982 Avraham Gileadi published The Apocalyptic Book of Isaaah (Provo, Utah), a fresh translation of the Hebrew text with interpretive keys for general readers. The book’s contributions include his translation and his Jewish-Mormon perspective. In 1988 he published a second volume, The Book of Isaaah (Salt Lake City), which included his earlier translation and an enlarged introduction containing four interpretive keys that he derived from the Book of Mormon. This work notes alternate readings in the DEAD SEA SCROLL Isaaah text and the Septuagint.

Two volumes have served as textbooks. In 1980 Monte S. Nyman published Great Are the Words of Isaaah (Salt Lake City) as a commentary and study guide. The book’s most distinctive contribution is a collection of references to Isaaah from Joseph Smith’s writings, the New Testament, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and LDS GENERAL AUTHORITIES. In 1982 Victor L. Ludlow authored Isaaah: Prophet, Seer, and Poet (Salt Lake City). Important features are his chapter-by-chapter commentary, suggested multiple interpretations of some passages in the text, helpful maps and historical notes, and LDS doctrinal discussions using various translations of the text.

Other books were written for nonscholarly LDS audiences. L. LaMar Adams’s The Living Message of Isaaah (Salt Lake City, 1981) aimed at helping his readers appreciate Isaaah’s prophecies. Its distinctive contribution is its appendix on the apocryphal Ascension of Isaaah.

In 1984 W. Cleon Skousen published Isaaah Speaks to Modern Times (Salt Lake City) with the intent of assisting an LDS audience to understand Isaaah as one who saw and spoke of the modern era.

Elder Mark E. Petersen is the only General Authority who has written a book on Isaaah, Isaaah for Today (Salt Lake City, 1981). His purpose was to help a nonscholarly LDS audience relate Isaaah’s prophecies to present-day events.

ANN N. MADSEN

ISHMAEL

Little is known of the Book of Mormon Ishmael. An Ephraimite from Jerusalem (cf. JD 23:184), he cooperated in fulfilling God’s command (brought to him from the wilderness by Lehi’s son) that he, his wife, five daughters, two sons, and their households travel into the wilderness to join the exodus of the prophet LEHI from Jerusalem about 600 B.C. (1 Ne. 7:2–5).

While en route to Lehi’s camp, a division arose in which four of Ishmael’s children collaborated with LAMAN and Lemuel, the older sons of Lehi, against the others of their party. A reprimand by NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, the fourth son of Lehi, provoked

COMMENTARIES ON ISAAH

The book of Isaaah is one of the most frequently cited prophetic works within LDS scripture. When the Book of Mormon people left Jerusalem, they carried records on PLATES of brass that contained many Old Testament books predating 600 B.C., including Isaaah. Early in their narratives, NEPHI<sub>1</sub> and his brother, JACOB, quoted extensively from Isaaah. Later, the resurrected Jesus admonished his hearers in the Americas to search the words of Isaaah diligently, for “great are the words of Isaaah” (3 Ne. 23:1).

Latter-day Saints see many of Isaaah’s prophecies fulfilled in contemporary events. When the angel Moroni appeared to the Prophet Joseph SMITH on September 21–22, 1823, he quoted Isaaah 11 and said it was “about to be fulfilled” (JS—H 1:40). Isaaah 29 is also seen as a prophecy anticipating the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Joseph Smith’s teachings contain many references to Isaaah, especially about the LAST DAYS before the second coming of Christ. Additionally, Isaaah is often quoted in the Doctrine and Covenants (e.g., 45:10; 50:10–12; 64:34–35; 133), and in some cases interpretations are added (e.g., D&C 113).

Several books written by LDS authors since 1950 have sought to assist Church members and others to understand Isaaah’s words. Some of these commentaries addressed a scholarly audience and others were written for general readers.

In 1952 Sidney B. Sperry commented on Isaaah in the first ten chapters of his book The Voice of Israel’s Prophets (Salt Lake City). Its chief purpose was to offer commentary from an LDS perspective, including Joseph Smith’s views, and to analyze the entire book of Isaaah historically and philologically. Sperry included Book of Mormon interpretations of various passages and a discussion of a unified authorship. He also utilized the Septuagint and his mastery of Hebrew to explain and sometimes retranslate passages. Although the earliest such study, it remains a classic of its kind.

In 1982 Avraham Gileadi published The Apocalyptic Book of Isaaah (Provo, Utah), a fresh translation of the Hebrew text with interpretive keys for general readers. The book’s contributions include his translation and his Jewish-Mormon perspective. In 1988 he published a second volume, The Book of Isaaah (Salt Lake City), which included his earlier translation and an enlarged introduction containing four interpretive keys that he derived from the Book of Mormon. This work notes alternate readings in the DEAD SEA SCROLL Isaaah text and the Septuagint.

Two volumes have served as textbooks. In 1980 Monte S. Nyman published Great Are the Words of Isaaah (Salt Lake City) as a commentary and study guide. The book’s most distinctive contribution is a collection of references to Isaaah from Joseph Smith’s writings, the New Testament, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and LDS GENERAL AUTHORITIES. In 1982 Victor L. Ludlow authored Isaaah: Prophet, Seer, and Poet (Salt Lake City). Important features are his chapter-by-chapter commentary, suggested multiple interpretations of some passages in the text, helpful maps and historical notes, and LDS doctrinal discussions using various translations of the text.

Other books were written for nonscholarly LDS audiences. L. LaMar Adams’s The Living Message of Isaaah (Salt Lake City, 1981) aimed at helping his readers appreciate Isaaah’s prophecies. Its distinctive contribution is its appendix on the apocryphal Ascension of Isaaah.

In 1984 W. Cleon Skousen published Isaaah Speaks to Modern Times (Salt Lake City) with the intent of assisting an LDS audience to understand Isaaah as one who saw and spoke of the modern era.

Elder Mark E. Petersen is the only General Authority who has written a book on Isaaah, Isaaah for Today (Salt Lake City, 1981). His purpose was to help a nonscholarly LDS audience relate Isaaah’s prophecies to present-day events.

ANN N. MADSEN

ISHMAEL

Little is known of the Book of Mormon Ishmael. An Ephraimite from Jerusalem (cf. JD 23:184), he cooperated in fulfilling God’s command (brought to him from the wilderness by Lehi’s son) that he, his wife, five daughters, two sons, and their households travel into the wilderness to join the exodus of the prophet LEHI from Jerusalem about 600 B.C. (1 Ne. 7:2–5).

While en route to Lehi’s camp, a division arose in which four of Ishmael’s children collaborated with LAMAN and Lemuel, the older sons of Lehi, against the others of their party. A reprimand by NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, the fourth son of Lehi, provoked them to bind him and threaten to leave him to die. Their hearts were softened toward him only when other members of Ishmael's family pleaded for Nephi's safety (1 Ne. 7:6–21).

After joining with Lehi in the valley of Lemuel, Nephi, his brothers, and ZORAM married the daughters of Ishmael (1 Ne. 16:7). As the journey continued Ishmael died and “was buried in the place which was called Nahom” (16:34). Ishmael's death and the combination of other adversities caused such grieving among his children that they again complained against Lehi and Nephi, repenting only after the voice of the Lord chastened them (16:34–39).

CHRISTINE PURVES BAKER

ISRAEL

[Four articles are clustered under this entry:

- Overview
- Scattering of Israel
- Lost Tribes of Israel
- Gathering of Israel

The first article is a general introduction of the distinctive LDS concept of Israel. The second article is a review of the scriptural scattering of Israel. The third article treats the scriptural promises of the restoration of the tribes to their homelands. The fourth article constitutes a review of the scriptural promises concerning the latter-day gathering of Israel. They reflect the breadth of interest in the topic among Latter-day Saints and the doctrinal and historical foundations of this interest. Other articles with a related historical component are Abraham's Covenant; Covenant Israel; Ephraim; Jerusalem; Moses; Promised Land; and Zionism. Articles that incorporate doctrinal aspects of LDS interest are Allegory of Zenos; Law of Adoption; New and Everlasting Covenant; and New Jerusalem.]

OVERVIEW

The name Israel (Hebrew for “God rules” or “God shines”) has two particularly distinctive modern applications to Latter-day Saints. First, it refers to members of the Church. Second, it points to modern descendants of ancient Israelite stock, who, because of God's fidelity to ancient covenants made with their forebears, are to become recipients of his blessings in the latter days.

HISTORY OF THE NAME. The name Israel first appears in the Bible as the divinely bestowed second name of Jacob (Gen. 32:28; 35:10). “Sons of Israel” or “children of Israel” initially meant Jacob's sons and their families (Gen. 50:25; Ex. 1:1) and, more distantly, all of Jacob's descendants (e.g., Ex. 1:7, 9). After Jacob's posterity settled in the land of Canaan, the name Israel referred to the league of tribes bound together by a covenant with the Lord (Josh. 24). Later, the united monarchy of Saul, David, and Solomon was known as Israel (e.g., 1 Sam. 9:16; 13:13; 2 Sam. 5:3). After the breach following Solomon's death, the name Israel denoted the northern kingdom (1 Kgs. 11:34–39; 12:3, 16), while the name Judah designated the southern realm (1 Kgs. 12:23, 27). After the northern kingdom fell to the Assyrians in 722 B.C., the name Israel became a spiritual designation for the southern kingdom (e.g., Isa. 5:7; Micah 3:1; Zech. 12:1; 1 Macc. 1:11, 62). The term “Jew” was first applied by outsiders to those living in the kingdom of Judah and first appears in 2 Kings 16:6.

In the New Testament, the name Israel refers to the people of God, not usually in a nationalistic sense but designating those who are, or will be, gathered to Jesus Christ by obeying the word of God (e.g., Matt. 10:6–7; Luke 24:21; John 1:31, 49; Acts 2:22, 36). It also refers to Christ's kingdom (Matt. 27:42; Mark 15:32), into which Gentiles will be grafted as if into an olive tree (Rom. 11:17–21). Two passages in Galatians clearly equate Israel with the early Christian church (Gal. 3:27–29; 6:15–16), and the connection is also affirmed by Jesus' statement that his apostles will judge the tribes of Israel (Matt. 19:28; cf. 1 Ne. 12:9; D&C 29:12).

In the Book of Mormon, several phrases appear with distinctive applications. The phrase “children of Israel” regularly refers back to Jacob's descendants in the Mosaic era, echoing the language of the Exodus account (e.g., Ex. 19:1; 1 Ne. 17:23; Jacob 1:7; Mosiah 7:19; cf. 3 Ne. 29:1–2). God's title Holy One of Israel, drawn from Isaiah (e.g., 48:17; 1 Ne. 20:17), appears in discussions of God's covenants, affirming him to be the faithful God who made covenants with ancient Israel (e.g., 1 Ne. 19:14–17). This title also appears in prophecies concerning God's future “reign in dominion, and might, and power, and great glory” (1 Ne. 22:24–25). The Holy One of Israel is identified as Jesus Christ (2 Ne. 25:29). “House of Israel” refers to the lineal posterity of Jacob and is frequently used in prophetic utterances that have to do with their scattering or latter-day gathering. Moreover, them to bind him and threaten to leave him to die. Their hearts were softened toward him only when other members of Ishmael's family pleaded for Nephi's safety (1 Ne. 7:6–21).

After joining with Lehi in the valley of Lemuel, Nephi, his brothers, and ZORAM married the daughters of Ishmael (1 Ne. 16:7). As the journey continued Ishmael died and "was buried in the place which was called Nahom" (16:34). Ishmael's death and the combination of other adversities caused such grieving among his children that they again complained against Lehi and Nephi, repenting only after the voice of the Lord chastened them (16:34–39).

CHRISTINE PURVES BAKER

ISRAEL

[Four articles are clustered under this entry:

- Overview
- Scattering of Israel
- Lost Tribes of Israel
- Gathering of Israel

The first article is a general introduction of the distinctive LDS concept of Israel. The second article is a review of the scriptural scattering of Israel. The third article treats the scriptural promises of the restoration of the tribes to their homelands. The fourth article constitutes a review of the scriptural promises concerning the latter-day gathering of Israel. They reflect the breadth of interest in the topic among Latter-day Saints and the doctrinal and historical foundations of this interest. Other articles with a related historical component are Abraham's Covenant; Covenant Israel; Ephraim; Jerusalem; Moses; Promised Land; and Zionism. Articles that incorporate doctrinal aspects of LDS interest are Allegory of Zenos; Law of Adoption; New and Everlasting Covenant; and New Jerusalem.]

OVERVIEW

The name Israel (Hebrew for "God rules" or "God shines") has two particularly distinctive modern applications to Latter-day Saints. First, it refers to members of the Church. Second, it points to modern descendants of ancient Israelite stock, who, because of God's fidelity to ancient covenants made with their forebears, are to become recipients of his blessings in the latter days.

HISTORY OF THE NAME. The name Israel first appears in the Bible as the divinely bestowed second name of Jacob (Gen. 32:28; 35:10). "Sons of Israel" or "children of Israel" initially meant Jacob's sons and their families (Gen. 50:25; Ex. 1:1) and, more distantly, all of Jacob's descendants (e.g., Ex. 1:7, 9). After Jacob's posterity settled in the land of Canaan, the name Israel referred to the league of tribes bound together by a covenant with the Lord (Josh. 24). Later, the united monarchy of Saul, David, and Solomon was known as Israel (e.g., 1 Sam. 9:16; 13:13; 2 Sam. 5:3). After the breach following Solomon's death, the name Israel denoted the northern kingdom (1 Kgs. 11:34–39; 12:3, 16), while the name Judah designated the southern realm (1 Kgs. 12:23, 27). After the northern kingdom fell to the Assyrians in 722 B.C., the name Israel became a spiritual designation for the southern kingdom (e.g., Isa. 5:7; Micah 3:1; Zech. 12:1; 1 Macc. 1:11, 62). The term "Jew" was first applied by outsiders to those living in the kingdom of Judah and first appears in 2 Kings 16:6.

In the New Testament, the name Israel refers to the people of God, not usually in a nationalistic sense but designating those who are, or will be, gathered to Jesus Christ by obeying the word of God (e.g., Matt. 10:6–7; Luke 24:21; John 1:31, 49; Acts 2:22, 36). It also refers to Christ's kingdom (Matt. 27:42; Mark 15:32), into which Gentiles will be grafted as if into an olive tree (Rom. 11:17–21). Two passages in Galatians clearly equate Israel with the early Christian church (Gal. 3:27–29; 6:15–16), and the connection is also affirmed by Jesus' statement that his apostles will judge the tribes of Israel (Matt. 19:28; cf. 1 Ne. 12:9; D&C 29:12).

In the Book of Mormon, several phrases appear with distinctive applications. The phrase "children of Israel" regularly refers back to Jacob's descendants in the Mosaic era, echoing the language of the Exodus account (e.g., Ex. 19:1; 1 Ne. 17:23; Jacob 1:7; Mosiah 7:19; cf. 3 Ne. 29:1–2). God's title Holy One of Israel, drawn from Isaiah (e.g., 48:17; 1 Ne. 20:17), appears in discussions of God's covenants, affirming him to be the faithful God who made covenants with ancient Israel (e.g., 1 Ne. 19:14–17). This title also appears in prophecies concerning God's future "reign in dominion, and might, and power, and great glory" (1 Ne. 22:24–25). The Holy One of Israel is identified as Jesus Christ (2 Ne. 25:29). "House of Israel" refers to the lineal posterity of Jacob and is frequently used in prophetic utterances that have to do with their scattering or latter-day gathering. Moreover,

Book of Mormon people saw themselves as a “remnant” or “branch” of the house of Israel whose descendants would receive the blessings promised to Israel in the latter days (1 Ne. 19:24; 3 Ne. 20:16).

For two major reasons, Latter-day Saints today apply the name Israel to themselves. First, Moses appeared to Joseph SMITH, and Oliver COWDERY in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE on April 3, 1836, and conferred on them the KEYS, or authorization, for “the gathering of Israel” (D&C 110:11; cf. PWJS, pp. 145–46). This gathering consists not only in restoring people of Israelite ancestry “to the lands of their inheritance” but also in bringing them “out of obscurity and out of darkness; and they shall know that the Lord is . . . the Mighty One of Israel” (1 Ne. 22:12). This action means bringing them into the Church. Second, Latter-day Saints have often learned from their PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS that they are literally of the lineage of Israel (D&C 86:8–9), primarily the tribes of EPHRAIM and Manasseh. The Lord has revealed that it is the particular responsibility of Israel to carry the message of the restored gospel to the world, and Ephraim has the responsibility of directing this work (D&C 133:26–34; cf. TPJS, p. 163). Those who are not of Israel’s lineage become such through adoption at the time of their baptism and reception of the Holy Ghost (TPJS, pp. 149–50; Rom. 8:15–17; Gal. 4:5–7; Abr. 2:10; see also LAW OF ADOPTION).

LINEAL ISRAEL. Israel’s consciousness of lineal distinction was related at least in part to God’s formal adoption of it by covenant at the holy mount. “Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people . . . and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation” (Ex. 19:5–6). As the chosen people of God, Israel was under a divine obligation to bear the covenant and its promises to others, an obligation established earlier with Abraham and his seed (Abr. 2:9–11; see also ABRAHAMIC COVENANT).

The Book of Mormon peoples were literally of Israel. Those who journeyed to the Western Hemisphere from Jerusalem with LEHI around 600 B.C. were descended from JOSEPH OF EGYPT through his sons Manasseh and Ephraim (Alma 10:3; cf. 1 Ne. 5:14–16; JD 23:184–85). A second group had links to the royal house of Judah through MULEK, son of Zedekiah (Hel. 6:10; Omni 1:14–16). Several prophecies deal with the eventual restoration of God’s covenant among the descendants of these peoples (e.g., 1 Ne. 22:3–12; 3 Ne. 20:22–27; 21:1–7). As a natural corollary, several prophecies focus on the scattering and eventual return of many of the Jews to Jerusalem and the blessings that await them there (e.g., 2 Ne. 6:10–14; 3 Ne. 20:29–46; Ether 13:5). As with other covenants, promises are fulfilled only when people—whether Gentiles or Israelites—obey the commandments of God (e.g., 1 Ne. 14:5–6; 22:17–22).

Today, members of the Church—latter-day Israel, largely Joseph’s descendants either by blood or adoption—are to seek out the other descendants of Israel and those who would become Israelites through adoption by baptism. The Prophet Joseph Smith observed that “as the Holy Ghost falls upon one of the literal seed of Abraham, it is calm and serene; . . . while the effect of the Holy Ghost upon a Gentile, is to purge out the old blood, and make him actually of the seed of Abraham. That man that has none of the blood of Abraham (naturally) must have a new creation by the Holy Ghost” (TPJS, pp. 149–50; cf. Rom. 6:4; 12:2).

SPIRITUAL ISRAEL. In both ancient and modern times, keeping God’s covenants has been the heart of becoming and remaining the people of God (e.g., Ex. 19:5–6; Deut. 4:32–40; D&C 100:15–16). At the physical center of Israel, so to speak, stood the house of God’s spiritual blessings, where covenants were made and remade, first the tabernacle in the camp and later the temple in Jerusalem. Almost immediately after giving the Ten Commandments and other terms of the covenant (Ex. 20–23), God gave directions for fashioning the tabernacle (Ex. 24–27), the most sacred structure of Moses’ Israel, “that I [God] may dwell among them” (Ex. 25:8). Latter-day Saints have also been commanded by the God of Israel to build temples for worship and for making covenants, so that the lives of men and women will be enriched through eternal family sealings (D&C 110:6–10; cf. TPJS, p. 186; WJS, p. 212; see also TEMPLES).

In the New Testament era Gentiles were offered a broad opportunity to become full partakers of Israel’s blessings. While Jesus limited his personal ministry to Israelites (Matt. 15:24; cf. 3 Ne. 15:23) and told the Twelve to proselytize only among Israel (Matt. 10:5), he visited Gentiles in the Decapolis, near Galilee (Matt. 8:28–34), and sent his seventy disciples into areas where there were many Gentiles (Luke 10:1–17). He prophesied that many “shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven” (Matt. 8:11). John the Baptist proclaimed that “God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham” (Matt. 3:9), evidently referring to the adoption of Gentiles into the house of Israel (TPJS, p. 319). Peter learned that the righteous in “every nation” who hearken to God are “accepted with him” (Acts 10:35). Even so, Paul reminded readers to “boast not against the branches” of the tree of Israel when they falter because “all Israel shall be saved” (Rom. 11:18, 26).

The Book of Mormon preserves a prophecy of Joseph of Egypt (2 Ne. 3:5–21) wherein the Lord promised Joseph that “a choice seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins . . . [to bring] them to the knowledge of the covenants which I have made with thy fathers” (2 Ne. 3:7). The “work” of this seer includes bringing forth a record written by Joseph’s descendants that will be joined to a record from the tribe of Judah, to bring Israelites “to the knowledge of their fathers in the latter days, and also to the knowledge of my covenants, saith the Lord” (2 Ne. 3:11–12). The record from Joseph’s lineage is the Book of Mormon and that from Judah’s is the Bible (cf. Ezek. 37:15–23; see also BOOK OF MORMON, BIBLICAL PROPHECIES ABOUT). The prophecy states that the seer “shall be called after me [Joseph]; and it shall be after the name of his father. And he shall be like unto me” (2 Ne. 3:15). For Latter-day Saints, this seer is Joseph Smith. Moreover, the Book of Mormon is an instrument for bringing about the restoration of gospel covenants and Israel’s gathering. About 600 B.C. the Lord spoke to NEPHI<sup>1</sup> concerning both the Gentiles and Nephi’s posterity: “I will manifest myself unto thy seed, that they shall write many things which I shall minister unto them, which shall be plain and precious; . . . behold, these things shall be hid up, to come forth unto the Gentiles, by the gift and power of the Lamb. And in them shall be written my gospel, saith the Lamb” (1 Ne. 13:35–36). On the title page of the Book of Mormon, one finds these words written about A.D. 400 stating the purpose of the work: “Which is to show unto the remnant of the House of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever” (see BOOK OF MORMON: TITLE PAGE).

The gathering of Israel could not proceed until the restoration of the keys or authorization for this effort. On April 3, 1836 (Passover time), both Moses and Elijah appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in the Kirtland Temple, Elijah restoring the sealing powers for turning the hearts of the children to the promises made to their ancestors (cf. Mal. 4:5–6; D&C 2:1–3; JS—H 1:38–39) and Moses the keys for gathering Israel (D&C 110:11, 13–16; cf. TPJS, pp. 337–38; PWJS, pp. 186–87).

LAND OF ISRAEL. While the phrase “land of Israel” is used relatively infrequently in the earlier parts of the Old Testament and is likely the work of a later hand (e.g., 1 Sam. 13:19; 2 Kgs. 5:2), the concept of a definable land given to Israel as an inheritance is at least as old as Abraham (e.g., Gen. 12:7; Abr. 2:6; see also PROMISED LAND). Furthermore, it is clear that continued obedience was required for retaining possession of it. For the Lord promised Abraham—with a caution—that his descendants would receive a “land which I will give unto thy seed after thee for an everlasting possession, when they hearken to my voice” (Abr. 2:6; cf. also Lev. 18:25–28; Jer. 16:12–13).

The concept of multiple lands of inheritance is taught in the Book of Mormon. This plurality of territories is joined to the notion of inheritance, as expressed by Isaiah. In most cases, the Book of Mormon writer cites Isaiah about the gathering of Israel to its lands. For instance, Jacob predicted that the house of Israel “shall be gathered home to the lands of their inheritance, and shall be established in all their lands of promise” (2 Ne. 9:2, after quoting Isa. 49:24–52:2; cf. 2 Ne. 6:11; 10:7–8). Significantly, in each instance a spiritual transformation of Israel is to accompany the gathering to lands: “And they shall be brought out of obscurity and out of darkness; and they shall know that the Lord is their Savior and their Redeemer, the Mighty One of Israel” (1 Ne. 22:12). Again, God “has spoken unto the Jews, by the mouth of his holy prophets, even from the beginning [and will continue] . . . until the time comes that they shall be restored to the true church and fold of God” (2 Ne. 9:2; cf. 30:2; 3 Ne. 16:4; 20:13, 31).

The resurrected Jesus stated that there are at least two lands to which descendants of the house of Israel are to be gathered. To hearers of the lineage of Joseph in the Western Hemisphere, he declared that “the Father hath commanded me that I should give unto you this land, for your inheritance" (3 Ne. 20:14; cf. 20:22; Ether 13:6–10). Concerning the Jews, the risen Jesus said, "I will remember the covenant which I have made with my people . . . [that] I would give unto them again the land of their fathers for their inheritance, which is the land of Jerusalem, which is the promised land unto them forever, saith the Father" (3 Ne. 20:29; cf. Ether 13:5, 11). Latter-day scripture indicates that the ten tribes will come first to the Americas, where they will "be crowned with glory, even in Zion" (D&C 133:26–34) and then will inherit the land of their ancestors (3 Ne. 20–21).

STATE OF ISRAEL. LDS leaders have viewed the creation of the modern state of Israel in the Middle East as a consequential world event but not as the complete fulfillment of prophecy. After noting the glory of God's work yet to be done among all branches of Israel and after discussing the redemption promised to Judah, Bruce R. McConkie, an apostle, wrote of the present immigration of a few million Jewish people to the Holy Land, "Is this the latter-day gathering of which the scriptures speak? No! It is not. . . . [It] is nonetheless part of divine plan" of a more complete gathering yet to occur (p. 229).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hunter, Howard W. "All Are Alike unto God." Ensign 9 (June 1979):72–74.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Millennial Messiah, pp. 182–329. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Nelson, Russell M. "Thanks for the Covenant." Devotional and Fireside Speeches [BYU], 1988–89, pp. 53–61. Provo, Utah, 1989.

S. KENT BROWN

SCATTERING OF ISRAEL

The scattering of Israel, as foretold throughout the Bible and the Book of Mormon, is evidence of fulfilled prophecy. On the one hand, Abraham received promises that his children would possess a dwelling place as long as they remained faithful to God's commands (Abr. 2:6); on the other, prophets from Moses on warned that spiritual rebellion would lead to their removal from the promised land (Lev. 18:26–28; 26:21–33). During the divided monarchy, Israelite prophets pled for a return to neglected covenants to assure the Lord's promised protection (e.g., Hosea 6:1–3; Amos 5:4–9; Isa. 49; 50:1–3; 51–52; Jer. 3:12–19; 18:11). After they rejected prophetic warnings, both Israel and Judah were scattered.

The scattering occurred in three primary phases: (1) the Assyrian captivity of the northern kingdom of ten of the tribes of Israel (c. 722 B.C.); (2) the Babylonian captivity of the kingdom of Judah (c. 587 B.C.); and (3) the destruction of the Judean state and second temple by Rome (A.D. 66–70). While other cases of scattering occurred, these phases accomplished the Lord's purposes of punishing his covenant people by scattering them; but he mercifully made preparation for gathering their descendants in the latter years when they "come to the knowledge of their Redeemer" (2 Ne. 6:8–14).

Numerous references to Israel's scattering appear in scripture. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, NEPHI, and others wrote much concerning it (e.g., Isa. 50–53; Jer. 3; 18; Ezek. 6:8–10; 11–12; 36; 2 Ne. 10). Perhaps the most notable of these is the prophecy of ZENOS given "unto the house of Israel" and cited in the Book of Mormon by JACOB, son of LEHI (Jacob 5). In language similar to Isaiah 5:1–7 and echoed in Romans 11:17–24, Zenos compared the history of the house of Israel to an olive tree planted in a vineyard, likening it to a "tame olive tree" that begins to decay. GENTILES, represented in Zenos' allegory as branches from a wild olive tree, were grafted onto the tame tree to preserve its natural fruit. Servants assisted the lord of the vineyard in providing the best conditions for growth—digging, pruning, fertilizing, and finally transplanting, grafting, and pruning. Meanwhile, they planted branches of the mother tree in remote parts of the orchard. In three "visits" to the vineyard (Jacob 5:4, 16, 30), the lord and his servants labored to produce desirable olives that could be stored for "the season, which speedily cometh" (5:76). Finally, the desired fruit appeared, which greatly pleased the lord of the vineyard (5:38–75).

Joseph Fielding SMITH, a modern APOSTLE, summed up this allegory thus: "It records the history of Israel down through the ages, the scattering of the tribes to all parts of the earth; . . . or in other words the mixing of the blood of Israel among the Gentiles by which the great blessings and promises of the Lord to Abraham are fulfilled" (Answers to Gospel Questions, Salt Lake City, 1963, Vol. 4, pp. 141–42).

Book of Mormon prophets and the resurrected Savior also spoke of the scattering. Reflecting on his people's situation in a new land, Nephi<sup>1</sup> noted that they were part of scattered Israel that would one day be gathered (1 Ne. 22:3–5, 7–12). Jacob observed, "We have been driven out of the land of our inheritance; but we have been led to a better land" (2 Ne. 10:20–22). The resurrected Jesus told hearers in the Americas that though the prophesied scattering was not yet complete, the promised gathering was certainly forthcoming (3 Ne. 20:11–18, 29–46; 21:1–9, 26–29).

The scattering of Israel interests Latter-day Saints because of the promise of the latter-day gathering, which began in 1829 when the Lord restored the PRIESTHOOD through the Prophet Joseph Smith. Then, on April 3, 1836, Moses appeared and gave the keys, or authorization, of gathering to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY in the Kirtland Temple. Today, commissioned by those with priesthood authority, missionaries gather latter-day Israel back to the covenant, to acceptance of their Redeemer, teaching them in the nations to which their ancestors were long ago dispersed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jackson, Kent P. "Nourished by the Good Word of God." In Studies in Scripture, ed. K. Jackson, Vol. 7, pp. 185–95. Salt Lake City, 1987.

Richards, LeGrand. Israel, Do You Know? Salt Lake City, 1982.

DOUGLAS A. STEWART

LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL

Events leading to the separation of the ten tribes of Israel—later known as the ten lost tribes—are linked to the division of the Israelite monarchy (c. 930 B.C.). Following their upstart king, Jeroboam, the northern kingdom of Israel apostatized from COVENANTS they had made with the Lord (1 Kgs. 12:26–30). ISAIAH warned that the Assyrian army would become "the rod of [God's] anger" (Isa. 10:5); the PROPHECY was fulfilled when the Assyrians took most of the people in the northern tribes into captivity (2 Kgs. 17:23). For LATTER-DAY SAINTS, the lost tribes are Israelites other than either the Jewish people or the LAMANITES of the Book of Mormon (2 Ne. 29:13). LDS sources provide some information about their situation and announce that descendants of these lost tribes will be vitally involved in events of the LAST DAYS.

The Lord revealed through Old Testament PROPHETS that the ten tribes would return and receive promised blessings. Isaiah prophesied "that the Lord shall set his hand again . . . to recover the remnant of his people" (Isa. 11:11). JEREMIAH declared that "remnants" would come from "the land of the north" (Jer. 3:18; 16:14–15; cf. 23:7–8; 31:8) and that the Lord would "make a new covenant" with them (Jer. 31:31).

Book of Mormon prophets affirmed that the Lord had not forgotten the ten tribes, and that they are keeping records that will yet be revealed (2 Ne. 29:12–14). When the resurrected Jesus Christ appeared in the Americas, he spoke of being commanded of the Father to minister unto the lost tribes, "for they are not lost unto the Father" (3 Ne. 17:4). Jesus also promised that the Lord's redemptive work in the last days would include "the tribes which have been lost" (3 Ne. 21:26).

For the lost tribes to receive their promised blessings in the last days, priesthood KEYS or authorization had to be restored. On April 3, 1836, MOSES appeared to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE and committed to them the "keys of the gathering of Israel . . . and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north" (D&C 110:11). These keys still rest with the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH. In time, the ten tribes are to be "crowned with glory . . . by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim" (D&C 133:26–34). Elder James E. Talmage also affirmed that "the tribes shall come; they are not lost unto the Lord; they shall be brought forth as hath been predicted" (CR [Oct. 1916]:76). Plainly, according to scripture and teachings of LDS leaders, descendants of the lost tribes—wherever they may be—have continued to receive divine attention and will receive future blessings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. The Way to Perfection, chap. 20. Salt Lake City, 1968.

Talmage, James E. "The Dispersion of Israel." In AF, pp. 314–29.

DAVID L. BOLLIGER

GATHERING OF ISRAEL

Latter-day Saints "believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; [and] that Zion (the New Jerusalem) will be built upon the American continent" (A of F 10). In the LDS perspective, gathering Israel in the latter days consists of the following: (1) the spiritual gathering, which includes coming to know that Jesus is the Christ and joining The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; (2) the assembling of Church members to organized STAKES; and (3) the gathering of the descendants of Jacob's twelve sons—including the lost ten tribes (D&C 110:11)—to the lands of their inheritance. These gatherings are necessary because of ancient apostasies that resulted in the dispersion of Israel into all nations (Deut. 4:27; 28:64; Jer. 16:13; Hosea 9:17).

Israelite PROPHETS, foreseeing Israel's scattering, also foretold her gathering in the LAST DAYS (1 Kgs. 22:17; Jer. 31:7–12; 32:37–40; Ezek. 36:24; etc.). According to ISAIAH, Israel will come to know that the Lord is Savior, be gathered again, direct her own affairs, and rebuild JERUSALEM (Isa. 52:1–2; D&C 113:7–10). Anciently, the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, and Isaiah prophesied a future recovery of Israel from many lands (Isa. 11:11–13; cf. 2 Ne. 6:14; TPJS, pp. 14–15; Benson, 1977, pp. 137–38).

The spiritual gathering of Israel through CONVERSION to the restored GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST is to be accomplished by the elders of the Church (D&C 133:8) who are set apart and sent out as "fishers" and "hunters" to "hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks" (Jer. 16:16) and to call them to ZION and her stakes (D&C 133:4–9; Isa. 54).

The Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are seen as tools "to gather out mine elect" from all the earth (Moses 7:62; Benson, Ensign 16 [Nov. 1986]:78–80). The risen Jesus declared "that when the words of Isaiah should be fulfilled . . . then is the fulfilling of the covenant" that the Father made to gather Israel (3 Ne. 20:11–13). Further, he proclaimed that the Book of Mormon would come forth as a sign that scattered Israel was about to be gathered (3 Ne. 20–21). NEPHI<sub>1</sub> quoted Isaiah 48 and 49, which he regarded as a herald of Israel's future gathering and glory (1 Ne. 20–22).

The priesthood KEYS, or authorization, to gather Israel were restored to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY on April 3, 1836, in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE. "Moses appeared before us, and committed unto us the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north" (D&C 110:11). This authority is now held by the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH. That portion of Israel known as the Ten Tribes will yet be led from the north. Their gathering will be accomplished in part as they are converted to the Lord, receive the blessings of the gospel, and return to "the land of their ancient inheritance" (McConkie, 1982, pp. 321, 324–26).

Both the spiritual and the literal characteristics of gathering were emphasized by the Lord in the following interpretation of the PARABLE of the wheat and tares: "I must gather together my people, according to the parable of the wheat and the tares, that the wheat may be secured in the garners to possess eternal life, and be crowned with celestial glory" (D&C 101:65; also 86:7–10). Joseph Smith declared that in all ages the divine purpose of gathering is to build TEMPLES so that the Lord's children can receive the highest ORDINANCES and thereby gain ETERNAL LIFE (TPJS, pp. 307–308, 314).

The gathering of Israel continues in the post-earthly SPIRIT WORLD where Christ "organized his forces and appointed messengers . . . and commissioned them to go forth and carry the light of the gospel to them that were in darkness, even to all the spirits of men" so that they too may be gathered (D&C 138:30, 34; cf. 1 Pet. 3:18–19). In the implementation of this gathering, ordinances such as BAPTISM and CONFIRMATION are performed in latter-day temples by Church members on behalf of the dead (cf. 1 Cor. 15:29).

The physical gathering of Israel is a concomitant of the spiritual gathering. The Lord's servants are to unite and "come forth to Zion, or to her stakes, the places of thine appointment" (D&C 109:39). In 1830 the Lord commanded the Saints to gather into "one place" (D&C 29:8), the first place being in OHIO. In July of 1831 he revealed that "the land of Missouri" was "appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints" and INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, was established as the "center place" (D&C 57:1–3). In 1838, after the Church had expanded, the Lord spoke of "gathering together upon the land of Zion, and upon her stakes" (D&C 115:6; cf. Isa. 54:2–3; D&C 101:21–22).

MISSIONARIES were sent out after the Church was organized (1830) to gather both spiritual and bloodline Israel. In the spirit of gathering, many converts immigrated from the eastern states, Canada, Britain, and Western Europe, first to Ohio, then Missouri, Illinois, and eventually the Great Basin. Between 1840 and 1890, more than eighty thousand converts came from continental Europe and fifty-five thousand from Great Britain (P. A. M. Taylor, Expectations Westward [Edinburgh, 1965], p. 144).

At the turn of the century and thereafter, converts were no longer asked to immigrate to America and the West. As Spencer W. KIMBALL reemphasized, converts were to remain in their own lands, where stakes of Zion would be established and temples built, allowing members all the privileges of the gospel in their native countries. He urged the Saints to establish "multiple Zions" and to gather together in their own "culture and nation" (Kimball, pp. 438–40; cf. Palmer, pp. 33–42).

The gathering of Israel includes the LAMANITES. To their ancestors in the Americas, the resurrected Jesus promised: "This people will I establish in this land, unto the fulfilling of the covenant which I made with your father Jacob" (3 Ne. 20:22, 25; 21:1–7).

The gathering of Jews to the state of Israel will continue. Joseph Smith's associates and successors predicted that their initial gathering would be in unbelief (JD 4:232; 11:245; 18:64–66; cf. 16:352; 18:225). Elder Bruce R. McConkie calls this a "gathering of the unconverted to Palestine . . . a political gathering" (1982, pp. 229–30). This "preliminary gathering" is to precede Christ's coming to the Jews on the Mount of Olives, when he will personally manifest himself to them (2 Ne. 6:14; cf. Zech. 13:6; D&C 45:48–53; JS—M 1:37).

The land of Canaan was promised to ABRAHAM and his posterity on condition of their RIGHTEOUSNESS (Abr. 2:6), a promise later reiterated to Isaac and Jacob (Gen. 12:7; 26:3; 35:12). Of the descendants of Jacob, the Jews have maintained their identity throughout the ages. As descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the people of Judah are to return to their ancestral lands (D&C 109:64). At the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, Joseph Smith pled with the Lord that "the children of Judah may begin to return to the lands which thou didst give to Abraham, their father" (D&C 109:62–64). Orson HYDE, an early apostle, was called and ordained by Joseph Smith to dedicate Palestine for the return of the Jews. On October 24, 1841, Hyde climbed the Mount of Olives, prayed to "dedicate and consecrate this land . . . for the gathering together of Judah's scattered remnants," and erected a mound of stones to commemorate the event (HC 4:456–59).

The Book of Mormon states that the Jews "shall be gathered in from their long dispersion, from the isles of the sea, and from the four parts of the earth" (2 Ne. 10:8; cf. 25:15–17). Moreover, MORMON, editor and compiler of the Book of Mormon, declared that "ye need not any longer hiss, nor spurn, nor make game of the Jews, nor any of the remnant of the house of Israel; for behold, the Lord remembereth his covenant unto them, and he will do unto them according to that which he hath sworn" (3 Ne. 29:8).

[See also Zionism.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. "A Message to Judah from Joseph." Ensign 6 (Dec. 1976):67–72.
- . This Nation Shall Endure. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Kimball, Spencer W. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- McConkie, Bruce R. "Come: Let Israel Build Zion." Ensign 7 (May 1977):115–18.
- . The Millennial Messiah: The Second Coming of the Son of Man. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Palmer, Spencer J. The Expanding Church. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- Talmage, James E. "The Gathering of Israel." In AF, pp. 328–44.

TERRY L. NIEDERHAUSER

---

ISRAELITES

See: Covenant Israel, Latter-day

---

JACKSON COUNTY

See: Missouri; LDS Communities in Jackson and Clay Counties

---

JACOB, SON OF LEHI

Jacob was the fifth son of LEHI and Sariah and the elder of the two sons born during the days of his parents' wilderness tribulation. His birth apparently occurred soon after the family left JERUSALEM (c. 599 B.C.). Jacob's life demonstrated him to be a spiritual leader: He was a defender of the faith, keeper of the sacred records, visionary, doctrinal teacher, expressive writer, and plainspoken servant of Christ.

From birth, Jacob was a child of affliction. As Lehi's firstborn in the wilderness, he never knew the family's earlier life in Jerusalem or indeed any period of sustained family harmony. Rather, he grew up knowing only the hardships of a nomadic life, coupled with deepening dissensions between his two oldest brothers and the rest of the family—conflicts that would erupt into open violence before Jacob was forty years old (2 Ne. 5:34). This bitter family strife, which nearly killed his parents from grief on the sea voyage from the Near East to the Western Hemisphere, deeply distressed young

Jacob as well. Nephi records that Jacob and his younger brother, Joseph, "grieved because of the afflictions of their mother" while on the ship (1 Ne. 18:19). Lehi told young Jacob in a farewell blessing, "Thou hast suffered afflictions and much sorrow, because of the rudeness of thy brethren" (2 Ne. 2:1). Nevertheless, Lehi assured him that God "shall consecrate thine afflictions for thy gain" (2 Ne. 2:2).

Long affliction seems to have rendered Jacob all the more spiritually sensitive, and he became one of the most profound doctrinal teachers in the Book of Mormon. Near the time of his death, he summarized the harsh, melancholic conditions of his life in words of haunting beauty and deep humanity: "Our lives passed away like as it were unto us a dream, we being a lonesome and a solemn people, wanderers, cast out from Jerusalem, born in tribulation, in a wilderness, and hated of our brethren, which caused wars and contentions; wherefore, we did mourn out our days" (Jacob 7:26).

Lehi blessed Jacob to spend his days in the service of God and to live safely with NEPHI<sub>1</sub> (2 Ne. 2:3). From his youth to his death, Jacob indeed labored in the Lord's service (2 Ne. 5:26; Jacob 1:18), working closely with Nephi for many years. Nephi consecrated him a priest and a teacher (Jacob 1:18; 2 Ne. 5:26; 6:2), recorded one of his sermons (2 Ne. 6–10), and gave him a stewardship over the records on the small PLATES and other sacred objects (Jacob 1:2). This latter fact had notable consequences for the Book of Mormon, for all subsequent authors of the small plates were direct descendants of Jacob (see BOOK OF MORMON: BOOK OF ENOS; BOOK OF JAROM; BOOK OF OMNI).

Jacob was a powerful personal witness of the anticipated Redeemer, which was his most prominent theme. Nephi noted that "Jacob also has seen him [the premortal Christ] as I have seen him" (2 Ne. 11:3), and Lehi indicated that it was in his youth that Jacob had beheld the glory of the Lord (2 Ne. 2:4). So firm was Jacob's faith in Christ that Sherem, an anti-Christ, could not shake him by subtle argument, for, declared Jacob, "I truly had seen angels, and they had ministered unto me. And also, I had heard the voice of the Lord speaking unto me in very word, from time to time" (Jacob 7:5; cf. 7:12). Jacob was the first Nephite prophet to reveal that the Savior would be called Christ, having received that information from an angel (2 Ne. 10:3). He characterized his ministry as persuading his people to come unto Christ (Jacob 1:7). Likewise, he explained that he wrote on the plates so that future generations "may know that we knew of Christ, and we had a hope of his glory many hundred years before his coming" (Jacob 4:1-4). (Note: "Christ" is a Greek-English title, equivalent to Hebrew "Messiah," and it means "anointed," that is, divinely appointed as the Savior of mankind.)

A second prominent theme in the book of Jacob is the scattering and subsequent gathering of ISRAEL. Jacob spoke often and longingly of the Lord's promises to scattered Israel. In his first sermon in the Book of Mormon, Jacob quoted and commented extensively on Isaiah 50 about Israel's restoration (2 Ne. 6-8), assuring his people that "the Lord remembereth all them who have been broken off, wherefore he remembereth us also" (2 Ne. 10:22). Likewise, Jacob quoted the words of a prophet named ZENOS, in which God's love for the scattered branches of Israel was depicted through an allegory of the olive trees. "How merciful is our God unto us," exclaimed Jacob as he explained the allegory to his people, "for he remembereth the house of Israel, both roots and branches" (Jacob 6:4).

Jacob employed a unique style, the distinctive features of which are conspicuous in an exhortation in which he condemned the pride, materialism, and unchastity of his people. He began his sermon by confessing his "anxiety" over his people and over his painful duty to rebuke them for their sins (Jacob 2:3). In like fashion, Jacob prefaced his two other discourses by alluding to his "anxiety" (2 Ne. 6:3; Jacob 4:18). No other Book of Mormon prophet so begins a sermon; indeed, half the references to "anxiety" in the Book of Mormon occur in his writing.

Jacob's stylistic stamp is also evident in other features throughout his writings, which are replete with a vivid, intimate vocabulary either unique to him or disproportionally present. Two-thirds of the uses of "grieve" and "tender" (or their derivatives) are attributable to Jacob. Likewise, he is the only Book of Mormon author to use "delicate," "contempt," "lonesome," "sobblings," "dread," and "daggers." He deploys this last term in a metaphor about spiritual anguish: "daggers placed to pierce their souls and wound their delicate minds" (Jacob 2:9). Similarly, Jacob alone uses "wound" in reference to emotions, and never uses it (as do many others) to describe a physical injury. Jacob uses "pierce" or its variants four of nine instances in the Book of Mormon, and he alone uses it in a spiritual sense.

Such stylistic evidence suggests that Jacob lived close to his feelings and was gifted in expressing them. Moreover, the complex consistency of his style, linking as it does widely separated passages from two different books (2 Nephi and Jacob), bears out the portrait of the man that emerges from the narrative. Story, style, and subject matter all reveal Jacob, Lehi's child of tribulation, to have become a sensitive and effective poet-prophet, preacher, writer, and powerful witness of Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Matthews, Robert J. "Jacob: Prophet, Theologian, Historian." In The Book of Mormon: Jacob through Words of Mormon, To Learn With Joy, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 33-53. Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Tanner, John S. "Literary Reflections on Jacob and His Descendants." In The Book of Mormon: Jacob through Words of Mormon, To Learn With Joy, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 251-69.
- Warner, C. Terry. "Jacob." Ensign 6 (Oct. 1976):24-30.

JOHN S. TANNER

JAMES, EPISTLE OF

The Epistle of James has great prominence for Latter-day Saints. They believe that it was composed by James, the brother of the Lord (Gal. 1:19); that it was written to all the house of Israel, but particularly to those in this dispensation or era; and that it directly inspired Joseph SMITH to begin to seek answers from God in prayer. Several teachings from James, including those concerning “pure religion and undefiled,” bridling the tongue and controlling anger, the interdependence of faith and works, and blessing the sick, are frequently cited in general conferences and in other Church talks.

That James addresses the lost tribes of ISRAEL (James 1:1) is significant, since Latter-day Saints believe that the ten tribes will be literally gathered in the latter days (A of F 10) and that the tribe of Ephraim, strongly represented in the Church, has the responsibility of carrying the PRIESTHOOD blessings of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph to the ten tribes (cf. D&C 133:20–35). The President of the Church holds the KEYS of the gathering of Israel (cf. D&C 110:11). Since the RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL through Joseph Smith will effect the gathering, it is notable that Joseph Smith, while reading James 1:5, was deeply moved to prayer, which led to his FIRST VISION in 1820, an event that opened the way for the latter-day gathering of Israel (see ISRAEL: GATHERING OF ISRAEL). James’s statement about not doubting also characterized Joseph Smith. Quoting James 1:5–6 and Hebrews 11:6, President David O. MCKAY stated, “In this scripture lies the secret of Joseph Smith’s emergence from obscurity to world-wide renown. His belief in God was absolute, his faith in divine guidance unwavering” (IE 65 [Mar. 1962]:149). Many conference talks and presentations apply James 1:5 and Joseph Smith’s First Vision to the potentials of prayer in solving life’s problems.

Another passage often quoted is James 1:22–24, together with 2:14–18 and 24–26, on the relation between faith and works. Latter-day Saints believe in the “infinite and eternal” power of the ATONEMENT, that it will bring to all mankind an end to the basic effects of the FALL OF ADAM: it automatically forgives the sins of those who are without the law (e.g., children under the age of eight, mentally handicapped, and those who have not known the gospel), provides a universal RESURRECTION (cf. Mosiah 15), and restores mankind back to the presence of God for judgment. However, when individuals willfully rebel against the law that they know, they must repent, be obedient, and prove by their good works that they accept the grace of the Atonement for their personal sins. For such, forgiveness of personal sins through the Atonement is conditional upon their “works,” as Latter-day Saints understand the word—faith, repentance, obedience, and serving others in many ways, including performing vicarious temple ordinances (see GRACE).

To underscore the need to serve others, Church leaders often cite James 1:27 on “pure religion and undefiled,” relating it to Mosiah 2 in the Book of Mormon, wherein King BENJAMIN exhorts his people to serve selflessly and without concern for the recipient’s social or economic status. By so living, people show the pure religion or charity of heart that is manifested in helping others without seeking personal credit. Much of this service is directed toward the young and the elderly, particularly when the traditional support of a nuclear family is not available. Thus, COMPASSIONATE SERVICE becomes a major component of “pure religion and undefiled.”

A fourth principle from the Epistle of James appreciated by Latter-day Saints is the admonition to control one’s temper and tongue (James 1:26; 3:3–10) and be patient in affliction (James 5). These extensions of the SERMON ON THE MOUNT are principles enunciated frequently by Church leaders.

Of special prominence in Church sermons is James 4:17, regarding sins of omission. Latter-day Saints are encouraged to perform service and good works, and they are reminded that while God judges the intent of the heart, he also requires his people to do every good thing, “for of him unto whom much is given much is required” (D&C 82:3). Further, this scripture is linked with D&C 58:26–29, in which members are encouraged to “be anxiously engaged in a good cause of their own free will.”

Latter-day Saints hold a deep and firm belief in healing by faith through blessings by priesthood holders. Concerning this ordinance, D&C 42:43–44 corresponds to James 5:14–16 (see SICK, BLESSING THE). Olive oil is consecrated for the purpose of anointing the sick. Then in the healing ordinance one Melchizedek Priesthood bearer anoints, and another “seals” the anointing through prayer and blesses the sick person as inspired. Many can attest to miracles of healing through faith and the power of the priesthood; they consider them private and sacred. Far from being an “epistle of straw,” as Luther called it, the Epistle of James is profound and very relevant for LDS theology.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dahl, Larry E. “A String of Gospel Pearls (James).” In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millett, Vol. 6, pp. 207–224. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, Vol. 3, pp. 243–79. Salt Lake City, 1973.
- Swensen, Russel B. The New Testament: The Acts and the Epistles, pp. 270–76. Salt Lake City, 1955.

THOMAS W. MACKAY

JAMES THE APOSTLE

James, the son of Zebedee and one of the original apostles of Jesus Christ, played an important part in the restoration of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST when he and his brother John appeared with Peter as heavenly messengers to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY and conferred on them the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD and the apostolic office, including the KEYS, or authority, of presidency. This ordination had been promised as forthcoming by John the Baptist on May 15, 1829, when he bestowed the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD on Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery (D&C 13; JS—H 1:68–73). In a revelation dated August 1830, the Lord refers to the restoration of the Melchizedek Priesthood and notes the participation of James: “Peter, and James, and John, whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles, and especial witnesses of my name” (D&C 27:12). In a later epistle to the Church (D&C 128:20), Joseph Smith, reviewing the major events of the restoration, mentions this event and locates its happening near the Susquehanna River between Harmony, Pennsylvania, and Colesville, New York (see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF).

In the twenty-two references to him in the New Testament, James is never mentioned apart from either his brother John or Peter. In the lists of the apostles, he is always given precedence after Peter except on two occasions when Andrew’s name follows Peter’s, where it is clear that this order is due to his family connection (Matt. 10:2; Luke 6:14). James’ importance is due to his membership in what may be called a presiding council. This idea is borne out by the fact that Peter, James, and John were members of a select circle and were privileged to be present with Jesus on special occasions from which other apostles were excluded, including the raising of the daughter of Jairus (Mark 5:22–23, 35–43), the TRANSFIGURATION on the mountain (Mark 9:2–9), and the agony in GETHISEMANE (Mark 14:32–42).

According to Joseph Smith and later presidents of the Church, James, with Peter and John, received special authority and keys from Jesus, Moses, and Elijah on the MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION. This was in addition to other keys received during their ordination as apostles that endowed them with power for their ministry as the prayer and blesses the sick person as inspired. Many can attest to miracles of healing through faith and the power of the priesthood; they consider them private and sacred. Far from being an “epistle of straw,” as Luther called it, the Epistle of James is profound and very relevant for LDS theology.

Joseph Smith Seeks Wisdom from the Bible, by Harold T. (Dale) Kilbourn (1970s, oil on canvas, 21" × 22"). While reading James 1:5, Joseph Smith was inspired to ask God which church was right. Pondering this scripture, Joseph went to pray in a grove of trees near his home. There, God the Father and his son Jesus Christ appeared and instructed him (JS—H 1:11–20).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dahl, Larry E. “A String of Gospel Pearls (James).” In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millett, Vol. 6, pp. 207–224. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, Vol. 3, pp. 243–79. Salt Lake City, 1973.
- Swensen, Russel B. The New Testament: The Acts and the Epistles, pp. 270–76. Salt Lake City, 1955.

THOMAS W. MACKAY

JAMES THE APOSTLE

James, the son of Zebedee and one of the original apostles of Jesus Christ, played an important part in the restoration of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST when he and his brother John appeared with Peter as heavenly messengers to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY and conferred on them the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD and the apostolic office, including the KEYS, or authority, of presidency. This ordination had been promised as forthcoming by John the Baptist on May 15, 1829, when he bestowed the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD on Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery (D&C 13; JS—H 1:68–73). In a revelation dated August 1830, the Lord refers to the restoration of the Melchizedek Priesthood and notes the participation of James: “Peter, and James, and John, whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles, and especial witnesses of my name” (D&C 27:12). In a later epistle to the Church (D&C 128:20), Joseph Smith, reviewing the major events of the restoration, mentions this event and locates its happening near the Susquehanna River between Harmony, Pennsylvania, and Colesville, New York (see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF).

In the twenty-two references to him in the New Testament, James is never mentioned apart from either his brother John or Peter. In the lists of the apostles, he is always given precedence after Peter except on two occasions when Andrew’s name follows Peter’s, where it is clear that this order is due to his family connection (Matt. 10:2; Luke 6:14). James’ importance is due to his membership in what may be called a presiding council. This idea is borne out by the fact that Peter, James, and John were members of a select circle and were privileged to be present with Jesus on special occasions from which other apostles were excluded, including the raising of the daughter of Jairus (Mark 5:22–23, 35–43), the TRANSFIGURATION on the mountain (Mark 9:2–9), and the agony in GETHISEMANE (Mark 14:32–42).

According to Joseph Smith and later presidents of the Church, James, with Peter and John, received special authority and keys from Jesus, Moses, and Elijah on the MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION. This was in addition to other keys received during their ordination as apostles that endowed them with power for their ministry as the

Joseph Smith Seeks Wisdom from the Bible, by Harold T. (Dale) Kilbourn (1970s, oil on canvas, 21" × 22"). While reading James 1:5, Joseph Smith was inspired to ask God which church was right. Pondering this scripture, Joseph went to pray in a grove of trees near his home. There, God the Father and his son Jesus Christ appeared and instructed him (JS—H 1:11–20).

Presidency of the Twelve and the Church (HC 3:386–87; DS 2:165).

If their mother, Salome, was a sister of Mary, the mother of Jesus, as is generally believed, then James and John were cousins of Jesus. This may account for Salome's presuming to importune Jesus to grant her sons a special position in his kingdom (Matt. 20:20–23). It may also explain their impetuous zeal against the Samaritan village that denied Jesus' party entry, for which they were called Boanerges ("Sons of Thunder") (Luke 9:52–56; Mark 3:17). James was present with the other apostles in Jerusalem and was a witness of the RESURRECTION of Christ. He was the first of the apostles to be slain, being beheaded by Herod Agrippa I in A.D. 44 (Acts 12:2).

R. DOUGLAS PHILLIPS

JARED

See: Book of Mormon: Book of Ether

JAREDITES

The Jaredites are a people described in the book of Ether (see BOOK OF MORMON: BOOK OF ETHER) whose name derives from their first leader, Jared. The Jaredites date to the time of the "great tower" mentioned in the Old Testament (Gen. 11:1–9), which was built in or around Mesopotamia. Led by God, the Jaredites left their homeland for a new land somewhere in the Americas, and there they established a kingdom. They grew to be a numerous population with kings and prophets, and, like the Nephites after them, were eventually annihilated by internecine war evidently sometime between 600 and 300 B.C. Their story was recorded by their last prophet, Ether. Around A.D. 400, the last Nephite survivor, MORONI<sub>2</sub>, abridged the record of Ether and appended his summary to the account of the Nephites that had been prepared by his father, MORMON. Although the record is brief, it hints at an epic genre rooted in the ancient Near East.

The Jaredite origin in the Old World probably dates to the third millennium B.C., which due to the scarcity of historical material presents obstacles to the use of comparative literature or archaeology. Parallels with the ancient Near East can only be described in general forms, and no artifacts or writings identifiable as Jaredite have ever been found outside the Book of Mormon. But while parallels may be nebulous, certain Jaredite terms and names refer to practices, objects, or places in the ancient Near East. Several types, and a few specifics, may be analyzed in order to better understand the Jaredites and their civilization.

The principal theme of the Jaredite story is familiar in the genre of the ancient Near East. God calls a man to lead his people to a new and a promised land. Once settled in the land, the people alternate between stages of good and evil, relying on their king for guidance. When the king is good, the people tend to be good and follow God; when the king is evil, so too are the people. While parallels to the literature of the ancient Near East, especially the Old Testament, are apparent, the Jaredite narrative is unique in that the first leader, Jared, was not the one who received the call from God, but his brother (see BROTHER OF JARED). The roles of the two men differ, as do the roles of king and prophet in the Old Testament. From the earliest days after arriving in America, the Jaredites had a monarchical government apparently patterned after Bronze Age Mesopotamian society.

The story of the Jaredites has an epic flavor. Stories of heroes, kings, and princes who perform great deeds dominate the book of Ether. The heroes are great warriors who win decisive battles. Accounts dealing with cycles of life and death, good and evil, prosperity and hardship are the types of things that were done and written about in the epics in the book of Ether and the epics of the ancient Near East (CWHN 5:283–443).

The book of Ether begins with a genealogy spanning at least thirty generations, from the final prophet and historian Ether back to Jared. The list is reminiscent of genealogies in Old Testament or king lists common to antiquity. The thirty listed by name are:

Name	Number
Jared	1
Orihah	2
Kib	3
Shule	4
Omer	5
Emer	6
Coriantum	7
Com	8
Heth	9

Presidency of the Twelve and the Church (HC 3:386–87; DS 2:165).

If their mother, Salome, was a sister of Mary, the mother of Jesus, as is generally believed, then James and John were cousins of Jesus. This may account for Salome's presuming to importune Jesus to grant her sons a special position in his kingdom (Matt. 20:20–23). It may also explain their impetuous zeal against the Samaritan village that denied Jesus' party entry, for which they were called Boanerges ("Sons of Thunder") (Luke 9:52–56; Mark 3:17). James was present with the other apostles in Jerusalem and was a witness of the RESURRECTION of Christ. He was the first of the apostles to be slain, being beheaded by Herod Agrippa I in A.D. 44 (Acts 12:2).

R. DOUGLAS PHILLIPS

JARED

See: Book of Mormon: Book of Ether

JAREDITES

The Jaredites are a people described in the book of Ether (see BOOK OF MORMON: BOOK OF ETHER) whose name derives from their first leader, Jared. The Jaredites date to the time of the "great tower" mentioned in the Old Testament (Gen. 11:1–9), which was built in or around Mesopotamia. Led by God, the Jaredites left their homeland for a new land somewhere in the Americas, and there they established a kingdom. They grew to be a numerous population with kings and prophets, and, like the Nephites after them, were eventually annihilated by internecine war evidently sometime between 600 and 300 B.C. Their story was recorded by their last prophet, Ether. Around A.D. 400, the last Nephite survivor, MORONI<sub>2</sub>, abridged the record of Ether and appended his summary to the account of the Nephites that had been prepared by his father, MORMON. Although the record is brief, it hints at an epic genre rooted in the ancient Near East.

The Jaredite origin in the Old World probably dates to the third millennium B.C., which due to the scarcity of historical material presents obstacles to the use of comparative literature or archaeology. Parallels with the ancient Near East can only be described in general forms, and no artifacts or writings identifiable as Jaredite have ever been found outside the Book of Mormon. But while parallels may be nebulous, certain Jaredite terms and names refer to practices, objects, or places in the ancient Near East. Several types, and a few specifics, may be analyzed in order to better understand the Jaredites and their civilization.

The principal theme of the Jaredite story is familiar in the genre of the ancient Near East. God calls a man to lead his people to a new and a promised land. Once settled in the land, the people alternate between stages of good and evil, relying on their king for guidance. When the king is good, the people tend to be good and follow God; when the king is evil, so too are the people. While parallels to the literature of the ancient Near East, especially the Old Testament, are apparent, the Jaredite narrative is unique in that the first leader, Jared, was not the one who received the call from God, but his brother (see BROTHER OF JARED). The roles of the two men differ, as do the roles of king and prophet in the Old Testament. From the earliest days after arriving in America, the Jaredites had a monarchical government apparently patterned after Bronze Age Mesopotamian society.

The story of the Jaredites has an epic flavor. Stories of heroes, kings, and princes who perform great deeds dominate the book of Ether. The heroes are great warriors who win decisive battles. Accounts dealing with cycles of life and death, good and evil, prosperity and hardship are the types of things that were done and written about in the epics in the book of Ether and the epics of the ancient Near East (CWHN 5:283–443).

The book of Ether begins with a genealogy spanning at least thirty generations, from the final prophet and historian Ether back to Jared. The list is reminiscent of genealogies in Old Testament or king lists common to antiquity. The thirty listed by name are:

Name	Number
Jared	1
Orihah	2
Kib	3
Shule	4
Omer	5
Emer	6
Coriantum	7
Com	8
Heth	9

Name	Number
Shez	10
Riplakish	11
Morianton	12
Kim	13
Levi	14
Corom	15
Kish	16
Lib	17
Hearthom	18
Heth	19
Aaron	20
Amnigaddah	21
Coriantum	22
Com	23
Shiblon(m)	24
Seth	25
Ahah	26
Ethem	27
Moron	28
Coriantor	29
Ether	30

Except for the lengthy accounts concerning the first and the last of these figures, all information about the people in this lineage is found in Ether, chapters 7–11. This dynasty endured for many centuries, always passing directly from father to son, except possibly in the case of Morianton, who was “a descendant of Riplakish,” following him by an interval of “many years” (Ether 10:9).

The Jaredites crossed the sea to the New World in eight “barges” in 344 days, driven by currents and winds. Their route is unknown. Perhaps coincidentally, the North Pacific current takes about the same time to cross from Japan to Mexico (Sorenson, p. 111). The question of ancient long-distance sea travel has been much debated, but extensive indications have been found of pre-Columbian transoceanic voyaging (Sorenson and Raish). The Bering land bridge “is no longer recognized as the only scientifically acceptable theory to explain the means and timing of human entry into the New World” (Dixon, p. 27).

The design of the Jaredite barges is unclear. They were built according to instructions given by God. Ether described them as being “light upon the water” like a fowl (Ether 2:16). They were “tight like unto a dish; and the ends thereof were peaked.” To allow light and air inside they had some sort of a “hole in the top, and also in the bottom” (Ether 2:17, 20). Ether also compared the barges with Noah’s ark (Ether 6:7). Thus it may be relevant that Utnapishtim, the Sumerian Noah in the Epic of Gilgamesh, similarly is said to have built his boat with a ceiling and water plugs, and to have waterproofed the entire inside with bitumen. Utnapishtim’s story also recounts the raging winds that slammed water into the mountains and people, vividly paralleling the Jaredites’ experience of being driven by a furious wind (Ether 6:6).

Stones were made to shine by the touch of God’s finger to light these barges. Shining stones are not unique to the book of Ether. One reference to a shining stone in Noah’s ark appears in the Jerusalem Talmud, stating that a stone in the ark shone brighter in the night than in the day so that Noah could distinguish the times of day (Pesachim 1, 1; discussed in CWHN 6:337–38, 349). Shining stones were also said to be present in the Syrian temple of the goddess Aphek (see CWHN 5:373) and are mentioned several times in the pseudepigraphic Pseudo-Philo (e.g., 25:12).

Little original detail remains about the culture of the Jaredite people. Some of them were obviously literate. While their royalty was strictly hereditary, sons sometimes deposed their fathers or were rivals to their brothers. Kings held their opponents in captivity for long periods, entered into SECRET COMBINATIONS, and waged battles. The record indicates that some of these kings were “anointed” (e.g., Ether 6:27; 9:4; 10:10), sat upon beautiful thrones (Ether 10:6), and had concubines (Ether 10:5–6). Their economy was basically agrarian. They were settled people, the ruling lines living most of their long history in a single land called Moron, somewhere near and north of what would later be called the Nephite “narrow neck of land.” In some eras, the Jaredites built many cities and buildings (Ether 9:23; 10:5–12). One of their kings “saw the Son of Righteousness” (Ether 9:22). They once fought off a plague of poisonous snakes that came upon the land as a curse (Ether 10:19). At times they mined several ores (e.g. gold, silver, iron, copper) and made metal weapons and tools (Ether 7:9; 10:23–25; see BOOK OF MORMON ECONOMY AND TECHNOLOGY). “Elephants” were useful to them (Ether 9:19). This may refer to the mastodon or mammoth, but it is not possible to date the final disappearance of these animals in the New World. A section in the book of Ether talks of the hunt (10:19–21), a common pattern known in the Near East of the king who is also hunter. In this passage, the Jaredite king Lib designated the land to the south as a hunting preserve. An early Mesopotamian example of a royal hunter is Nimrod, who comes from about the same period as Jared. Other Jaredite parallels are of interest. The dance of Jared's daughter for the life of Omer (Ether 8:10) has been compared with similar incidents from ancient lore (CWHN 5:213).

The theophany of the brother of Jared, in which he sees the finger of the Lord, parallels the story of MOSES. The brother of Jared goes up a mountain to pray (Ether 3:1; cf. Ex. 3:1–3); sees the finger of the Lord (Ether 3:6; cf. Ex. 31:18); fears the Lord (also meaning "held in awe"; Ether 3:6; cf. Ex. 3:6); sees the whole spirit body of the Lord (Ether 3:13, 16–18; cf. Ex. 33:11); learns the name of the Lord (Ether 3:14; cf. Ex. 3:14); and, finally, receives a symbol of power and authority (Ether 3:23; cf. Ex. 4:1–5). The unique aspect of the story of the brother of Jared is his extended revelation concerning the nature of God, who appeared to him in a spirit body "like unto flesh and blood" (Ether 3:6).

Some Jaredite prophets were apparently similar to the prophets in biblical Israel. They condemned idolatry and wickedness, and foretold the annihilation of the society and destruction of the people unless they repented. Although some prophets received the protection of the government, most were rejected by the people, and, like Ether, were forced to hide for fear of their lives. Ether's prophecies looked beyond the despair of the final destruction of his people toward the future destiny of the Jaredite land. He foresaw it as the place of "the New Jerusalem, which should come down out of heaven, and the holy sanctuary of the Lord" (Ether 13:3).

The final battle reported by Ether took place at the hill Ramah, the same place where Mormon later buried the sacred Nephite records (Ether 15:11). The war involved two vast armies, and hostilities continued several days until all the soldiers and one of the kings were slain. An exhausted Coriantumr culminated his victory over Shiz by decapitating him. Near Eastern examples of decapitation of enemies are evident in early art and literature, as on the Narmer palette; and decapitation of captured kings is represented in ancient Mesoamerica (Warren, pp. 230–33). Coriantumr was later discovered by the people of Zarahemla (Mulekites), with whom he lived for "nine moons" (Omni 1:21). Ether's plates (historical records), together with the decayed remains from the final Jaredite battle were later found by a group of lost Nephites who were searching for the city of Zarahemla (Mosiah 8:8–11).

Ether writes of the annihilation of his people, but this was not necessarily an extermination of the entire population. One may assume that many of the commoners were not in the two armies and thus survived after these wars. The Jaredite people were crushed and dispersed, but probably not exterminated, since explicit features of Jaredite culture (especially personal names) were later evident in the Nephite culture (CWHN 5:237–41; Sorenson, p. 119).

The similarity between the Jaredite and Nephite histories is striking. But the similarity may be chiefly one of literary convention, which Moroni used to compare the two peoples. Other than possessing similar epic tales of people who were led across the sea to build kingdoms that eventually fell, the underlying cultures were probably quite different; for example, the Jaredite laws and government predate the LAW OF MOSES, and thus their system of justice was different from that of the Israelites and Nephites.

The message drawn by Moroni from the histories of the Jaredites and the Nephites is, however, the same: God revealed himself to both peoples. He gave both a land of promise, where their prosperity was conditioned on righteousness. Both met their demise because of wickedness and secret combinations, and both endings are included in the Book of Mormon to teach this hard-learned lesson. Concerning this, Moroni states: "The Lord worketh not in secret combinations, neither doth he will that man should shed blood, but in all things hath forbidden it, from the beginning of man" (Ether 8:19).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hugh Nibley provides material on the Jaredites in The World of the Jaredites and There Were Jaredites, in Vol. 5 of CWHN; see also CWHN 6:329–58; reviewed and updated by D. Honey, "Ecological Nomadism Versus Epic Heroism in Ether," Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 2 (1990):143–63.

On the epic genre, see H. Munro Chadwick, The Growth of Literature, 3 vols. (Cambridge, England, 1932–1940), especially Vol. 1; Samuel Noah Kramer, "New Light on the Early History of the Ancient Near East," American Journal of Archaeology 52 (1948):156–64; David M. Knipe, "Epics," in Encyclopedia of Religion, Vol. 5, pp. 127–32, and T. G. Patches, "Heroes and Hero-Gods (Babylonian)," in James Hastings, ed., Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, Vol. 6, pp. 642–46 (New York, 1951).

Concerning kingship in the ancient Near East, see Henri Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods (Chicago, 1948). An English translation of the story of Noah's lighted stones may be found in Louis Ginzberg, ed., The Legends of the Jews, Vol. 1, pp. 162–63 (Philadelphia, 1937).

On possible ancient connections between the Old World and the New, see John L. Sorenson and Martin H. Raish, Pre-Columbian Contact with the Americas Across the Oceans: An Annotated Bibliography (Provo, Utah, 1990). See also Cyrus H. Gordon, Before Columbus: Links Between the Old World and Ancient America (New York, 1971); Carroll L. Riley, et al., eds., Man Across the Sea: Problems of Pre-Columbian Contacts (Austin, 1971), especially the chapter by Sorenson. See also E. James Dixon, "The Origins of the First Americans," Archaeology 38, no. 2 (1985):22–27; Thor Heyerdahl, Early Man and the Ocean (Garden City, N.Y., 1979); and Bruce W. Warren, "Secret Combinations, Warfare, and Captive Sacrifice in Mesoamerica and the Book of Mormon," in S. Ricks and W. Hamblin, eds., Warfare in the Book of Mormon, pp. 225–36 (Salt Lake City, 1990).

John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon (Salt Lake City, 1985), guides the reader through the archaeology of Mesoamerica and proposes possible Jaredite locations in areas occupied at comparable times, during the early and middle preclassic periods in Mexico, which include the Olmec civilization.

MORGAN W. TANNER

JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST

The GODHEAD consists of three separate and distinct beings: the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost (D&C 130:22; A of F 1). While some Christians do not equate Jesus Christ and Jehovah in their theologies, biblical passages indicate that relationship, and latter-day scriptures often refer to Jesus Christ, the Son, as Jehovah (e.g., D&C 110:3–4; Moro. 10:34).

The name Jehovah is an anglicized rendering of the tetragrammaton YHWH, a proper noun in biblical Hebrew that identifies God. Following a Jewish tradition that avoided pronouncing God's name, translators of the King James Version rendered almost all occurrences of YHWH as "LORD." Latter-day Saints view many other occurrences of "Lord" as references to Jehovah, both in the New Testament and in LDS scripture.

Since his PREMORTAL LIFE, Jesus Christ has functioned as the constant associate of the Father working under his direction. In 1916 the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles issued a doctrinal statement on the relationship between the Father and the Son: "Jesus the Son has represented and yet represents Elohim

His Father in power and authority. This is true of Christ in His preexistent, antemortal, or unembodied state, in the which He was known as Jehovah; also during His embodiment in the flesh; . . . and since that period in His resurrected state" (MFP 5:31–32).

Throughout scripture, several roles of Jehovah-Jesus Christ are specifically identified.

CREATOR. Jehovah as Creator is attested throughout the Old Testament (e.g., Ps. 24:1–2). Speaking to Moses, God said, "Worlds without number have I created; . . . and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten" (Moses 1:33). John and others acknowledged Jesus as the Word, the Creator: "In the beginning was the Word; . . . all things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made" (John 1:1–3, 14; cf. Eph. 3:9; Col. 1:16). Similarly, the Book of Mormon teaches, "The Lord Omnipotent who reigneth, who was, and is from all eternity to all eternity, shall come down from heaven among the children of men. . . . And he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things from the beginning" (Mosiah 3:5–8; cf. 2 Ne. 9:5; 3 Ne. 9:15).

LAWGIVER. To Moses, Jehovah identified himself by the title "I AM THAT I AM"—a variation on the verbal root of YHWH (Ex. 3:14). This title was claimed by Jesus in mortality: "Before Abraham was, I am" (John 8:58; cf. John 4:26). After his resurrection, Jesus told hearers in the Americas, "Behold, I am he that gave the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel; therefore, the law in me is fulfilled, for I have come to fulfil the law" (3 Ne. 15:5; cf. Matt. 5:17).

REDEEMER, DELIVERER, AND ADVOCATE. Jehovah delivered the children of Israel from Egypt. Paul taught that this same being would redeem mankind from sin and death (cf. 1 Cor. 10:1–4). This point is made clear in the Book of Mormon: "The God of our fathers, who were led out of Egypt, . . . yea, the God of Abraham . . . yieldeth himself . . . as a man, into the hands of wicked men . . . to be crucified" (1 Ne. 19:10; cf. 2 Ne. 9:1–26; Mosiah 13:33–35). When the Savior appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the Kirtland Temple on April 3, 1836, "his voice was as the sound of the rushing of great waters, even the voice of Jehovah, saying: I am the first and the last; I am he who liveth, I am he who was slain; I am your advocate with the Father" (D&C 110:3–4).

Concerning kingship in the ancient Near East, see Henri Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods (Chicago, 1948). An English translation of the story of Noah's lighted stones may be found in Louis Ginzberg, ed., The Legends of the Jews, Vol. 1, pp. 162–63 (Philadelphia, 1937).

On possible ancient connections between the Old World and the New, see John L. Sorenson and Martin H. Raish, Pre-Columbian Contact with the Americas Across the Oceans: An Annotated Bibliography (Provo, Utah, 1990). See also Cyrus H. Gordon, Before Columbus: Links Between the Old World and Ancient America (New York, 1971); Carroll L. Riley, et al., eds., Man Across the Sea: Problems of Pre-Columbian Contacts (Austin, 1971), especially the chapter by Sorenson. See also E. James Dixon, "The Origins of the First Americans," Archaeology 38, no. 2 (1985):22–27; Thor Heyerdahl, Early Man and the Ocean (Garden City, N.Y., 1979); and Bruce W. Warren, "Secret Combinations, Warfare, and Captive Sacrifice in Mesoamerica and the Book of Mormon," in S. Ricks and W. Hamblin, eds., Warfare in the Book of Mormon, pp. 225–36 (Salt Lake City, 1990).

John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon (Salt Lake City, 1985), guides the reader through the archaeology of Mesoamerica and proposes possible Jaredite locations in areas occupied at comparable times, during the early and middle preclassic periods in Mexico, which include the Olmec civilization.

MORGAN W. TANNER

JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST

The GODHEAD consists of three separate and distinct beings: the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost (D&C 130:22; A of F 1). While some Christians do not equate Jesus Christ and Jehovah in their theologies, biblical passages indicate that relationship, and latter-day scriptures often refer to Jesus Christ, the Son, as Jehovah (e.g., D&C 110:3–4; Moro. 10:34).

The name Jehovah is an anglicized rendering of the tetragrammaton YHWH, a proper noun in biblical Hebrew that identifies God. Following a Jewish tradition that avoided pronouncing God's name, translators of the King James Version rendered almost all occurrences of YHWH as "LORD." Latter-day Saints view many other occurrences of "Lord" as references to Jehovah, both in the New Testament and in LDS scripture.

Since his PREMORTAL LIFE, Jesus Christ has functioned as the constant associate of the Father working under his direction. In 1916 the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles issued a doctrinal statement on the relationship between the Father and the Son: "Jesus the Son has represented and yet represents Elohim

His Father in power and authority. This is true of Christ in His preexistent, antemortal, or unembodied state, in the which He was known as Jehovah; also during His embodiment in the flesh; . . . and since that period in His resurrected state" (MFP 5:31–32).

Throughout scripture, several roles of Jehovah-Jesus Christ are specifically identified.

CREATOR. Jehovah as Creator is attested throughout the Old Testament (e.g., Ps. 24:1–2). Speaking to Moses, God said, "Worlds without number have I created; . . . and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten" (Moses 1:33). John and others acknowledged Jesus as the Word, the Creator: "In the beginning was the Word; . . . all things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made" (John 1:1–3, 14; cf. Eph. 3:9; Col. 1:16). Similarly, the Book of Mormon teaches, "The Lord Omnipotent who reigneth, who was, and is from all eternity to all eternity, shall come down from heaven among the children of men. . . . And he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things from the beginning" (Mosiah 3:5–8; cf. 2 Ne. 9:5; 3 Ne. 9:15).

LAWGIVER. To Moses, Jehovah identified himself by the title "I AM THAT I AM"—a variation on the verbal root of YHWH (Ex. 3:14). This title was claimed by Jesus in mortality: "Before Abraham was, I am" (John 8:58; cf. John 4:26). After his resurrection, Jesus told hearers in the Americas, "Behold, I am he that gave the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel; therefore, the law in me is fulfilled, for I have come to fulfil the law" (3 Ne. 15:5; cf. Matt. 5:17).

REDEEMER, DELIVERER, AND ADVOCATE. Jehovah delivered the children of Israel from Egypt. Paul taught that this same being would redeem mankind from sin and death (cf. 1 Cor. 10:1–4). This point is made clear in the Book of Mormon: "The God of our fathers, who were led out of Egypt, . . . yea, the God of Abraham . . . yieldeth himself . . . as a man, into the hands of wicked men . . . to be crucified" (1 Ne. 19:10; cf. 2 Ne. 9:1–26; Mosiah 13:33–35). When the Savior appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the Kirtland Temple on April 3, 1836, "his voice was as the sound of the rushing of great waters, even the voice of Jehovah, saying: I am the first and the last; I am he who liveth, I am he who was slain; I am your advocate with the Father" (D&C 110:3–4).

JUDGE. The Book of Mormon prophet Moroni<sup>2</sup> drew attention to “the great Jehovah, the Eternal Judge” (Moro. 10:34), reaffirming what the Psalmist and others had said (e.g., Ps. 9:7–8; Isa. 33:22). Jesus Christ proclaimed that he was the judge: “For the Father . . . hath committed all judgment unto the Son” (John 5:22, 27; cf. Acts 10:42).

IN HIS NAME. In the beginning, men began “to call upon the name of the LORD” (Gen. 4:25, 26; cf. Moses 5:8; 6:4). In Moses’s time Jehovah instructed the priests to “put my name upon the children of Israel” (Num. 6:27; cf. Deut. 28:10). Before the coming of Christ, Book of Mormon people took upon themselves his name (Mosiah 5:8–12; Alma 34:38; see JESUS CHRIST, TAKING THE NAME OF UPON ONESELF). In all dispensations, the name of Christ is the only name “whereby salvation can come unto the children of men” (Isa. 43:3, 11; Mosiah 3:17; Acts 4:12; cf. Moses 5:7–9).

Divine names and titles, especially in the Bible, are occasionally ambiguous. The distinction between the Father and the Son is sometimes unclear. For example, the Hebrew term ELOHIM—a title usually applied to the Father by Latter-day Saints—often refers to Jehovah in the Bible (e.g., Isa. 12:2). Furthermore, people prayed to Jehovah as if he were the Father. In some cases, ambiguity may be due to the transmission of the text; in others, it may be explained by divine investiture wherein Christ is given the authority of the Father: “Thus the Father placed His name upon the Son; and Jesus Christ spoke and ministered in and through the Father’s name; and so far as power, authority, and Godship are concerned His words and acts were and are those of the Father” (MFP 5:32).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Talmage, James E. JC, pp. 32–41.

DAVID R. SEELY

JEREMIAH, PROPHECIES OF

The book of Jeremiah presents a number of elements that are significant for Latter-day Saints. Such features range from important doctrinal teachings connected with Jeremiah’s call to his prophecies of the latter days. Notably, his work reveals more about him as a person than most other prophetic works do about their authors. Moreover, his definition of a TESTIMONY, hard won through years of persecution, is a classic: The word of God “was in mine heart as a burning fire” (Jer. 20:9).

In calling Jeremiah to be a PROPHET, the Lord explained that he had known Jeremiah and ordained him to be a prophet before his conception and birth (Jer. 1:4–10). LATTER-DAY SAINTS believe this refers to Jeremiah’s PREMORTAL LIFE, during which the Lord ordained him and others to special assignments. Though foreordained to be a prophet, Jeremiah was not compelled to serve, and his first reaction was to object (1:6). However, it is apparent that, as Jeremiah exercised his AGENCY, he chose to accept the responsibilities conveyed by his FOREORDINATION and subsequent earthly calling to be a prophet.

A choice feature of Jeremiah’s work is his portrait of the Lord’s tender responses to people. Although through Jeremiah he denounced the behavior of his people and allowed them to be taken captive, the Lord still affirmed his affection for them. This attribute is seen in the divine laments recorded in Jeremiah 4:19–22, 8:18–9:3, and possibly 10:19–22. In Jeremiah 8:19, for example, the Lord says: “Behold the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people because of them that dwell in a far country: Is not the LORD in Zion? is not her king in her?” The Lord then responds to his own question: “For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt” (8:21).

Another doctrinal contribution is Jeremiah’s revelation of the Lord’s foreknowledge of future events. Latter-day Saints see in Jeremiah’s work evidence that the Lord knows the future and can reveal its relevant dimensions to his prophets. When Jeremiah was first called (627/6 B.C.), the ruling power in the Near East was Assyria. But he accurately predicted that Babylon would become dominant (Jer. 27:2–11), and warned his people that the Babylonian kings would conquer Jerusalem (32:28), take many captive (32:31–32), and then fall to another power (25:12) that would subsequently allow the Jews to return and rebuild Jerusalem (29:10).

Under inspiration, Jeremiah also saw the latter days, referring to them as “the days [to] come” (Jer. 30:3). In those days, he declared, the Lord would establish a “new” and “everlasting covenant” (31:31; 32:40). A significant feature of this new COVENANT would be the divinely autho-

JUDGE. The Book of Mormon prophet Moroni<sup>2</sup> drew attention to “the great Jehovah, the Eternal Judge” (Moro. 10:34), reaffirming what the Psalmist and others had said (e.g., Ps. 9:7–8; Isa. 33:22). Jesus Christ proclaimed that he was the judge: “For the Father . . . hath committed all judgment unto the Son” (John 5:22, 27; cf. Acts 10:42).

IN HIS NAME. In the beginning, men began “to call upon the name of the LORD” (Gen. 4:25, 26; cf. Moses 5:8; 6:4). In Moses’s time Jehovah instructed the priests to “put my name upon the children of Israel” (Num. 6:27; cf. Deut. 28:10). Before the coming of Christ, Book of Mormon people took upon themselves his name (Mosiah 5:8–12; Alma 34:38; see JESUS CHRIST, TAKING THE NAME OF UPON ONESELF). In all dispensations, the name of Christ is the only name “whereby salvation can come unto the children of men” (Isa. 43:3, 11; Mosiah 3:17; Acts 4:12; cf. Moses 5:7–9).

Divine names and titles, especially in the Bible, are occasionally ambiguous. The distinction between the Father and the Son is sometimes unclear. For example, the Hebrew term ELOHIM—a title usually applied to the Father by Latter-day Saints—often refers to Jehovah in the Bible (e.g., Isa. 12:2). Furthermore, people prayed to Jehovah as if he were the Father. In some cases, ambiguity may be due to the transmission of the text; in others, it may be explained by divine investiture wherein Christ is given the authority of the Father: “Thus the Father placed His name upon the Son; and Jesus Christ spoke and ministered in and through the Father’s name; and so far as power, authority, and Godship are concerned His words and acts were and are those of the Father” (MFP 5:32).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Talmage, James E. JC, pp. 32–41.

DAVID R. SEELY

JEREMIAH, PROPHECIES OF

The book of Jeremiah presents a number of elements that are significant for Latter-day Saints. Such features range from important doctrinal teachings connected with Jeremiah’s call to his prophecies of the latter days. Notably, his work reveals more about him as a person than most other prophetic works do about their authors. Moreover, his definition of a TESTIMONY, hard won through years of persecution, is a classic: The word of God “was in mine heart as a burning fire” (Jer. 20:9).

In calling Jeremiah to be a PROPHET, the Lord explained that he had known Jeremiah and ordained him to be a prophet before his conception and birth (Jer. 1:4–10). LATTER-DAY SAINTS believe this refers to Jeremiah’s PREMORTAL LIFE, during which the Lord ordained him and others to special assignments. Though foreordained to be a prophet, Jeremiah was not compelled to serve, and his first reaction was to object (1:6). However, it is apparent that, as Jeremiah exercised his AGENCY, he chose to accept the responsibilities conveyed by his FOREORDINATION and subsequent earthly calling to be a prophet.

A choice feature of Jeremiah’s work is his portrait of the Lord’s tender responses to people. Although through Jeremiah he denounced the behavior of his people and allowed them to be taken captive, the Lord still affirmed his affection for them. This attribute is seen in the divine laments recorded in Jeremiah 4:19–22, 8:18–9:3, and possibly 10:19–22. In Jeremiah 8:19, for example, the Lord says: “Behold the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people because of them that dwell in a far country: Is not the LORD in Zion? is not her king in her?” The Lord then responds to his own question: “For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt” (8:21).

Another doctrinal contribution is Jeremiah’s revelation of the Lord’s foreknowledge of future events. Latter-day Saints see in Jeremiah’s work evidence that the Lord knows the future and can reveal its relevant dimensions to his prophets. When Jeremiah was first called (627/6 B.C.), the ruling power in the Near East was Assyria. But he accurately predicted that Babylon would become dominant (Jer. 27:2–11), and warned his people that the Babylonian kings would conquer Jerusalem (32:28), take many captive (32:31–32), and then fall to another power (25:12) that would subsequently allow the Jews to return and rebuild Jerusalem (29:10).

Under inspiration, Jeremiah also saw the latter days, referring to them as “the days [to] come” (Jer. 30:3). In those days, he declared, the Lord would establish a “new” and “everlasting covenant” (31:31; 32:40). A significant feature of this new COVENANT would be the divinely authorized gathering of ISRAEL to former inheritances (23:5–8).

An element of interest in Jeremiah's prophetic work is the manner in which he taught object lessons (see TEACHER; TEACHER DEVELOPMENT). For instance, Jeremiah called attention to the impending fall of Jerusalem and captivity of her inhabitants by wearing the yoke of an ox (Jer. 27:2). He showed his faith in the eventual restoration of Israel to her homeland by buying a piece of land (32:1–15). He conveyed some of his messages with parables. In Jeremiah 18:1–10, the Lord inspired him to ask his listeners to observe a potter who had to rework some "marred" clay. He noted that the potter represented the Lord and the marred clay the inhabitants of Jerusalem. So poignantly disturbing was this parable that some of Jeremiah's listeners began to plot against his life (18:18–23). In Jeremiah 24:1–10 he declared that the Lord showed him two baskets of figs, one good and one inedible. The good figs represented those taken captive whom the Lord would "acknowledge." The inedible figs, which the Lord would discard, or have "removed," represented king Zedekiah, his princes, and those Judeans who had fled to Egypt.

Jeremiah and his writings were well respected by his contemporary, LEHI, and later Book of Mormon prophets who possessed a copy of some of Jeremiah's prophecies on the PLATES of brass (cf. 1 Ne. 5:13; 7:14). A later Book of Mormon prophet, NEPHI<sub>2</sub>, indicates that Jeremiah had prophesied of the MESSIAH's first coming (Hel. 8:13–20). However, current texts of Jeremiah do not have clear references to this event, underscoring the observation that in the transmission of the biblical text parts may have been lost, or that Lehi may have possessed a fuller version. This is not surprising since ancient evidence both from Dead Sea fragments and from the Septuagint version of Jeremiah suggests that the text of his book has not been well preserved.

The book of Jeremiah presents rich insights into the attributes of God, the nature of prophets and prophecy, and varied teaching techniques. The available text of Jeremiah, however, suggests that scribes or others have allowed some parts that were "plain and precious" (cf. 1 Ne. 13:20–42) to be omitted.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For Mormon thought on Jeremiah, see Sidney B. Sperry, The Spirit of the Old Testament (Salt Lake City, 1970), and S. Kent

Brown, "History and Jeremiah's Crisis of Faith," in Isaiah and the Prophets, M. Nyman, ed. (Provo, Utah, 1984). For textual transmission, see William J. Adams, Jr., "Some Ways in which the 'Plain and Precious Parts' Became Lost (1 Ne. 13:20–42)," Newsletter and Proceedings of the Society for Early Historic Archaeology (No. 159 [July 1985]:1–6), and Ernst Würthwein, The Text of the Old Testament (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1979). For current views of Jeremiah, see Alexander Rofé, "Jeremiah, the book of," in Harper's Bible Dictionary, ed. P. J. Achtemeier (San Francisco, 1985), and John Bright, Jeremiah, The Anchor Bible (Garden City, N.Y., 1965).

WILLIAM J. ADAMS, JR.

JERUSALEM

Latter-day Saints view Jerusalem as a holy city, as do other Christians, Jews, and Muslims. The existence of Jerusalem as a unique holy place stems from at least the time that DAVID captured the city and made it his capital. With Solomon's efforts, the temple stood in Jerusalem as God's dwelling place (1 Kgs. 6). For a millennium, JEHOVAH was worshiped there, and his people looked for redemption in Jerusalem (Luke 2:38). Tradition holds that its former name was Salem (Gen. 14:18; Ps. 76:2), where MELCHIZEDEK reigned and ABRAHAM went to sacrifice Isaac. Later, Jesus Christ died there to atone for the sins of mankind. Concerning Jerusalem's future importance, latter-day scripture affirms biblical prophecies that Jerusalem is to be the scene of important events in the LAST DAYS.

Old Testament prophets spoke of the rise and demise of Jerusalem (c.g., 1 Kgs. 9:3; Micah 3:12). About 600 B.C., the future Book of Mormon prophet LEHI lived in the land of Jerusalem and encountered opposition when he called its inhabitants to repentance and prophesied the coming of the MESSIAH. He and his family were subsequently commanded by the Lord to flee the city, eventually journeying to the Western Hemisphere, where his descendants became two rival Book of Mormon peoples, the NEPHITES and the LAMANITES. Thus, from Jerusalem sprang the Book of Mormon saga.

Jerusalem was the scene of important events in Jesus' ministry. He taught and performed miracles there. No place was more holy to his followers than the temple, which Jesus considered the legitimate sanctuary of God, calling it "my Father's house" (John 2:16) and "my house" (Matt. 21:13). In an upper room of a house in Jerusalem, Jesus celebrated the Passover with his apostles, instituted the SACRAMENT, gave special meaning to the rized gathering of ISRAEL to former inheritances (23:5–8).

An element of interest in Jeremiah's prophetic work is the manner in which he taught object lessons (see TEACHER; TEACHER DEVELOPMENT). For instance, Jeremiah called attention to the impending fall of Jerusalem and captivity of her inhabitants by wearing the yoke of an ox (Jer. 27:2). He showed his faith in the eventual restoration of Israel to her homeland by buying a piece of land (32:1–15). He conveyed some of his messages with parables. In Jeremiah 18:1–10, the Lord inspired him to ask his listeners to observe a potter who had to rework some "marred" clay. He noted that the potter represented the Lord and the marred clay the inhabitants of Jerusalem. So poignantly disturbing was this parable that some of Jeremiah's listeners began to plot against his life (18:18–23). In Jeremiah 24:1–10 he declared that the Lord showed him two baskets of figs, one good and one inedible. The good figs represented those taken captive whom the Lord would "acknowledge." The inedible figs, which the Lord would discard, or have "removed," represented king Zedekiah, his princes, and those Judeans who had fled to Egypt.

Jeremiah and his writings were well respected by his contemporary, LEHI, and later Book of Mormon prophets who possessed a copy of some of Jeremiah's prophecies on the PLATES of brass (cf. 1 Ne. 5:13; 7:14). A later Book of Mormon prophet, NEPHI<sub>2</sub>, indicates that Jeremiah had prophesied of the MESSIAH's first coming (Hel. 8:13–20). However, current texts of Jeremiah do not have clear references to this event, underscoring the observation that in the transmission of the biblical text parts may have been lost, or that Lehi may have possessed a fuller version. This is not surprising since ancient evidence both from Dead Sea fragments and from the Septuagint version of Jeremiah suggests that the text of his book has not been well preserved.

The book of Jeremiah presents rich insights into the attributes of God, the nature of prophets and prophecy, and varied teaching techniques. The available text of Jeremiah, however, suggests that scribes or others have allowed some parts that were "plain and precious" (cf. 1 Ne. 13:20–42) to be omitted.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For Mormon thought on Jeremiah, see Sidney B. Sperry, The Spirit of the Old Testament (Salt Lake City, 1970), and S. Kent

Brown, "History and Jeremiah's Crisis of Faith," in Isaiah and the Prophets, M. Nyman, ed. (Provo, Utah, 1984). For textual transmission, see William J. Adams, Jr., "Some Ways in which the 'Plain and Precious Parts' Became Lost (1 Ne. 13:20–42)," Newsletter and Proceedings of the Society for Early Historic Archaeology (No. 159 [July 1985]:1–6), and Ernst Würthwein, The Text of the Old Testament (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1979). For current views of Jeremiah, see Alexander Rofé, "Jeremiah, the book of," in Harper's Bible Dictionary, ed. P. J. Achtemeier (San Francisco, 1985), and John Bright, Jeremiah, The Anchor Bible (Garden City, N.Y., 1965).

WILLIAM J. ADAMS, JR.

JERUSALEM

Latter-day Saints view Jerusalem as a holy city, as do other Christians, Jews, and Muslims. The existence of Jerusalem as a unique holy place stems from at least the time that DAVID captured the city and made it his capital. With Solomon's efforts, the temple stood in Jerusalem as God's dwelling place (1 Kgs. 6). For a millennium, JEHOVAH was worshiped there, and his people looked for redemption in Jerusalem (Luke 2:38). Tradition holds that its former name was Salem (Gen. 14:18; Ps. 76:2), where MELCHIZEDEK reigned and ABRAHAM went to sacrifice Isaac. Later, Jesus Christ died there to atone for the sins of mankind. Concerning Jerusalem's future importance, latter-day scripture affirms biblical prophecies that Jerusalem is to be the scene of important events in the LAST DAYS.

Old Testament prophets spoke of the rise and demise of Jerusalem (c.g., 1 Kgs. 9:3; Micah 3:12). About 600 B.C., the future Book of Mormon prophet LEHI lived in the land of Jerusalem and encountered opposition when he called its inhabitants to repentance and prophesied the coming of the MESSIAH. He and his family were subsequently commanded by the Lord to flee the city, eventually journeying to the Western Hemisphere, where his descendants became two rival Book of Mormon peoples, the NEPHITES and the LAMANITES. Thus, from Jerusalem sprang the Book of Mormon saga.

Jerusalem was the scene of important events in Jesus' ministry. He taught and performed miracles there. No place was more holy to his followers than the temple, which Jesus considered the legitimate sanctuary of God, calling it "my Father's house" (John 2:16) and "my house" (Matt. 21:13). In an upper room of a house in Jerusalem, Jesus celebrated the Passover with his apostles, instituted the SACRAMENT, gave special meaning to the washing of feet, and revealed who would betray him. In GETTISEMANE and on Golgotha, Jesus accomplished the most selfless suffering in history, leading to his atoning sacrifice and resurrection.

Jesus mourned over the city as he recalled its past and envisioned its future (Matt. 23:37–39; Luke 19:41–44; 13:34–35). Like Jesus, Jerusalem would suffer indignities, anguish, and death (JS—M 1:18–22). But as Jesus lives again, so will Jerusalem (Isa. 52:1–2, 9; D&C 109:62). As part of the RESTORATION of all things, the holy city must be restored. The Prophet Joseph SMITH said, “Judah must return, Jerusalem must be rebuilt, and the temple, . . . and all this must be done before the Son of Man will make His appearance” (HC 5:337).

Jerusalem will be restored in its former place, be sanctified, and become a city of holiness, graced with a new temple (Zech. 2:12; 12:6; Ether 13:5, 11; 3 Ne. 20:29–36; D&C 77:15). Elder Orson Hyde, an apostle, journeyed to Jerusalem in 1841 to dedicate the land “for the building up of Jerusalem again . . . and for rearing a Temple in honor of [the Lord’s] name” (HC 4:456).

Other events are yet to occur in Jerusalem: a major struggle will yet rage in Jerusalem’s streets, that of Armageddon (Zech. 14); an earthquake will divide the Mount of Olives; and the Savior will appear to the Jews (D&C 45:48–53).

Two separate Jerusalems, the old and the new, will serve as headquarters of the millennial KINGDOM OF GOD from which Jesus will rule. Old Jerusalem will be built up by Judah. The NEW JERUSALEM, also to be known as ZION (D&C 45:66–67), will be built up in Jackson County, Missouri, by EPHRAIM, whose descendants largely make up The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Isaiah foresaw the day when this second Jerusalem or Zion would be established: “For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem” (Isa. 2:3; cf. 64:10). MORONI<sub>2</sub>, the last Book of Mormon prophet, first described the Jerusalem of old, then quoted the prophecy of Ether that “a New Jerusalem should be built up upon the land, unto the remnant of the seed of Joseph,” and finally mentioned the “New Jerusalem, which should come down out of heaven” (Ether 13:3–12). John the Revelator also envisioned this final “Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven” (Rev. 21:2, 10). From this new Jerusalem, the city of Zion, God and the Lamb will reign over a celestialized earth (Moses 7:62–63; cf. DS 3:55–79).

This inscribed stone stands in the Orson Hyde Memorial Garden in Jerusalem (dedicated October 24, 1979). The text is repeated in Hebrew, Arabic, and English. The garden, on the slopes of the Mount of Olives across from Mt. Moriah, commemorates Orson Hyde’s dedication of Palestine on October 24, 1841. Courtesy LaMar C. Berrett.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Burton, Alma P. Toward the New Jerusalem. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Nibley, Hugh. “Jerusalem: In Early Christianity.” In CWHN, Vol. 4, pp. 323–54.

D. KELLY OGDEN

JESUS CHRIST

[This entry consists of twelve articles:

- Overview
- Prophecies About Jesus Christ
- Firstborn in the Spirit
- Only Begotten in the Flesh
- Birth of Jesus Christ
- Baptism of Jesus Christ
- Ministry of Jesus Christ
- Crucifixion of Jesus Christ
- Resurrection of Jesus Christ
- Forty-Day Ministry and other Post-Resurrection Appearances of Jesus Christ
- Latter-day Appearances of Jesus Christ
- Second Coming of Jesus Christ

washing of feet, and revealed who would betray him. In GETTISEMANE and on Golgotha, Jesus accomplished the most selfless suffering in history, leading to his atoning sacrifice and resurrection.

Jesus mourned over the city as he recalled its past and envisioned its future (Matt. 23:37–39; Luke 19:41–44; 13:34–35). Like Jesus, Jerusalem would suffer indignities, anguish, and death (JS—M 1:18–22). But as Jesus lives again, so will Jerusalem (Isa. 52:1–2, 9; D&C 109:62). As part of the RESTORATION of all things, the holy city must be restored. The Prophet Joseph SMITH said, “Judah must return, Jerusalem must be rebuilt, and the temple, . . . and all this must be done before the Son of Man will make His appearance” (HC 5:337).

Jerusalem will be restored in its former place, be sanctified, and become a city of holiness, graced with a new temple (Zech. 2:12; 12:6; Ether 13:5, 11; 3 Ne. 20:29–36; D&C 77:15). Elder Orson Hyde, an apostle, journeyed to Jerusalem in 1841 to dedicate the land “for the building up of Jerusalem again . . . and for rearing a Temple in honor of [the Lord’s] name” (HC 4:456).

Other events are yet to occur in Jerusalem: a major struggle will yet rage in Jerusalem’s streets, that of Armageddon (Zech. 14); an earthquake will divide the Mount of Olives; and the Savior will appear to the Jews (D&C 45:48–53).

Two separate Jerusalems, the old and the new, will serve as headquarters of the millennial KINGDOM OF GOD from which Jesus will rule. Old Jerusalem will be built up by Judah. The NEW JERUSALEM, also to be known as ZION (D&C 45:66–67), will be built up in Jackson County, Missouri, by EPHRAIM, whose descendants largely make up The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Isaiah foresaw the day when this second Jerusalem or Zion would be established: “For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem” (Isa. 2:3; cf. 64:10). MORONI<sub>2</sub>, the last Book of Mormon prophet, first described the Jerusalem of old, then quoted the prophecy of Ether that “a New Jerusalem should be built up upon the land, unto the remnant of the seed of Joseph,” and finally mentioned the “New Jerusalem, which should come down out of heaven” (Ether 13:3–12). John the Revelator also envisioned this final “Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven” (Rev. 21:2, 10). From this new Jerusalem, the city of Zion, God and the Lamb will reign over a celestialized earth (Moses 7:62–63; cf. DS 3:55–79).

This inscribed stone stands in the Orson Hyde Memorial Garden in Jerusalem (dedicated October 24, 1979). The text is repeated in Hebrew, Arabic, and English. The garden, on the slopes of the Mount of Olives across from Mt. Moriah, commemorates Orson Hyde’s dedication of Palestine on October 24, 1841. Courtesy LaMar C. Berrett.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Burton, Alma P. Toward the New Jerusalem. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Nibley, Hugh. “Jerusalem: In Early Christianity.” In CWHN, Vol. 4, pp. 323–54.

D. KELLY OGDEN

JESUS CHRIST

[This entry consists of twelve articles:

- Overview
- Prophecies About Jesus Christ
- Firstborn in the Spirit
- Only Begotten in the Flesh
- Birth of Jesus Christ
- Baptism of Jesus Christ
- Ministry of Jesus Christ
- Crucifixion of Jesus Christ
- Resurrection of Jesus Christ
- Forty-Day Ministry and other Post-Resurrection Appearances of Jesus Christ
- Latter-day Appearances of Jesus Christ
- Second Coming of Jesus Christ

These titles are self-explanatory and each emphasizes a major feature about Jesus Christ. The long list of topics illustrates his importance in the doctrines of the Church, and the large amount of information available through the scriptures and the teachings of latter-day prophets.]

OVERVIEW

Jesus Christ is the central figure in the doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained that “the fundamental principles of our religion are the testimony of the Apostles and Prophets, concerning Jesus Christ, that He died, was buried, and rose again the third day, and ascended into heaven; and all other things which pertain to our religion are only appendages to it” (TPJS, p. 121). Latter-day Saints believe that complete salvation is possible only through the life, death, resurrection, doctrines, and ordinances of Jesus Christ and in no other way.

Christ’s relationship to mankind is defined in terms of his divine roles in the three phases of existence—premortal, mortal, and postmortal.

The Lord Jesus Christ, by Del Parson (1983, oil on canvas, 49 cm × 61 cm). Jesus Christ is the literal son of God the Father, Creator of all things from the beginning, and the Redeemer of mankind.

PREMORTAL JESUS. In the PREMORTAL LIFE, Jesus Christ, whose main title was JEHOVAH, was the firstborn spirit child of God the Father and thus the eldest brother and preeminent above all other spirit children of God. In that FIRST ESTATE, he came to be more intelligent than all other spirits, one “like unto God” (Abr. 3:19, 24), and served as the representative of the Father in the creation of “worlds without number” (Heb. 1:1–3; D&C 76:24; Moses 1:33; 7:30). LDS leaders have declared that all REVELATION since the FALL OF ADAM has been by, and through, Jehovah (Jesus Christ) and that whenever the Father has appeared unto man, it has been to introduce and bear record of the Son (JST John 1:19; DS 1:27). He was known to Adam, and the patriarchs from Adam to Noah worshiped him in humble reverence. He was the Almighty God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the God-Lawgiver on Sinai, the Holy One of Israel. Scriptural records affirm that all the prophets from the beginning spoke or wrote of the time when Jehovah would come to earth in the form of man, in the role of a MESSIAH. Peter said, “to him give all the prophets witness” (Acts 2:25–31; 10:43). Jacob taught that “none of the prophets have written, nor prophesied, save they have spoken concerning this Christ” (Jacob 7:11; cf. Mosiah 3:5–10; 13:33; 3 Ne. 20:24).

MORTAL JESUS. Jehovah was born into this life in Bethlehem of Judea and grew up as Jesus of Nazareth. He came in condescension—leaving his station as the Lord Omnipotent to undertake a mission of pain and humiliation, having everlasting consequences for mankind (see 1 Ne. 11; Mosiah 3:5–10; see also CONDESCENSION OF GOD). His life was one of moral perfection—he was sinless and completely submissive to the will of the Father (John 5:30; 2 Cor. 5:21; Heb. 4:15; 1 Pet. 2:22; Mosiah 15:2). Jesus is the model and exemplar of all who seek to acquire the divine nature. As taught by Joseph Smith, the Savior “suffered greater sufferings, and was exposed to more powerful contradictions than any man can be.” Through all of this, “he kept the law of God, and remained without sin” (Lectures on Faith, Lecture 5, paragraph 2). The risen Lord asked the Nephites, “What manner of men ought ye to be? Verily I say unto you, even as I am” (3 Ne. 27:27; cf. 12:48).

Jesus was more, however, than sinlessness, goodness, and love. He was more than a model and teacher, more than the embodiment of compassion. He was able to accomplish his unique ministry—a ministry of reconciliation and salvation—because of who and what he was. President Ezra Taft BENSON stated, “The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints proclaims that Jesus Christ is the Son of God in the most literal sense. The body in which He performed His mission in the flesh was fathered by that same Holy Being we worship as God, our Eternal Father. Jesus was not the son of Joseph, nor was He begotten by the Holy Ghost. He is the Son of the Eternal Father!” (Benson, p. 4). From MARY, a mortal woman, Jesus inherited mortality, including the capacity to die. From his exalted Father he inherited immortality, the capacity to live forever. The Savior’s dual nature—man and God—enabled him to make an infinite atonement, an accomplishment that no other person, no matter how capable or gifted, could do (cf. Alma 34:9–12). First, he was able, in GETHSEMANE, in some majestic but incomprehensible manner, to assume the burdens and effects of the sins of all mankind and, in doing so, to engage suffering and anguish beyond what a mere mortal could endure (2 Ne. 9:21; Mosiah 3:7; D&C 18:11; 19:16; Taylor, p. 148). Second, he was able to submit to physical death, to willingly lay down his life and then take up his body again in the RESURRECTION (John 5:26; 10:17, 18; 2 Ne. 2:8).

POSTMORTAL JESUS. Latter-day Saints believe that between his death on the cross at Calvary and his resurrection, Jesus’ spirit entered the SPIRIT WORLD, a postmortal place of the disembodied, those awaiting and preparing for the reunion of their bodies and spirits. Peter taught that Christ went into this realm to preach to the spirits in prison (1 Pet. 3:18–20; 4:6). A modern revelation explains that Jesus did not go himself among the wicked and disobedient who had rejected the truth. Rather, he ministered to the righteous in PARADISE and organized and empowered them to teach those spirits who remained in darkness under the bondage of sin and ignorance (see D&C 138:29–32). Thus, the Messiah’s mission to “preach good tidings unto the meek,” to “bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound” (Isa. 61:1; Luke 4:18–19) extended after death into the life beyond (see SALVATION OF THE DEAD; SPIRIT PRISON).

Jesus “broke the bands of death”; he was the

Jesus at the Home of Mary and Martha, by Minerva K. Teichert (c. 1935, oil on canvas, 46" × 70"). Jesus ministered to people of every class and station in life. LDS artist Minerva Teichert shows him here expounding the holy scriptures in the home of two women, Mary and Martha. Mary “sat at Jesus’ feet, and heard his word,” while her sister “was cumbered about much serving” (Luke 10:39–40). Courtesy Museum of Fine Arts, Brigham Young University.

“first fruits of them that slept” (1 Cor. 15:20; Alma 11:40–41). He rose from the tomb with an immortal, glorified body and initiated the first resurrection or the resurrection of the just, the raising of the righteous dead who had lived from the days of Adam to the time of Christ (Matt. 27:52–53; Mosiah 15:21–25; Hel. 14:25–26; 3 Ne. 23:7–13). Jesus Christ will come again to earth in power and glory. The first resurrection, begun at the time of Christ’s resurrection, will resume as the righteous dead from the MERIDIAN OF TIME to his second coming return with him in resurrected and immortal glory. This second advent will also signal the beginning of the MILLENNIUM, a thousand years of earthly peace during which Satan will be bound and have no power over the hearts of those who remain on earth (Rev. 20:1–2; 1 Ne. 22:26). Joseph Smith taught that “Christ and the resurrected Saints will reign over the earth during the thousand years. They will not probably dwell upon the earth [constantly], but will visit it when they please, or when it is necessary to govern it” (TPJS, p. 268). During this era, Jesus will reveal himself, and, in the words of Isaiah, “the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea” (Isa. 11:9; Heb. 2:14).

Jesus Christ is the God of the whole earth and invites all nations and people to come unto him.

His mortal ministry, as described in the New Testament, was primarily among the Jews. Following his death and resurrection he appeared to his "other sheep," groups of scattered Israelites. First, as described in the Book of Mormon, he ministered to the NEPHITES in America. He taught them his gospel and authorized them to officiate in his name. He then visited the lost tribes, the ten northern tribes of Israel, which were scattered at the time of the Assyrian captivity in 721 B.C. (John 10:16; 3 Ne. 15:12–16; 17:4). In addition to the appearances recorded in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, which are ancient scriptural witnesses of the Redeemer, Joseph Smith testified that Jesus Christ, in company with his Eternal Father, appeared to him near Palmyra, New York, in the spring of 1820 to open the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES (JS—H 1:1–20; see FIRST VISION). On subsequent occasions the risen Savior has visited and revealed himself to his latter-day prophets and continues to direct his latter-day Church and kingdom (see JESUS CHRIST: LATTER-DAY APPEARANCES OF).

Latter-day Saints center their worship in, and direct their prayers to, God the Eternal Father. This, as with all things—sermons, testimonies, prayers, and sacraments or ordinances—they do in the name of Jesus Christ (2 Ne. 25:16; Jacob 4:4–5; 3 Ne. 18:19; D&C 20:29; Moses 5:8). The Saints also worship Christ the Son as they acknowledge him as the source of truth and redemption, as the light and life of the world, as the way to the Father (John 14:6; 2 Ne. 25:29; 3 Ne. 11:11). They look to him for deliverance and seek to be like him (see D&C 93:12–20; McConkie, 1978, pp. 568–69). In emphasizing the transforming power of Christ's example, President David O. MCKAY observed that "no man can sincerely resolve to apply to his daily life the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth without sensing a change in his own nature" (IE 65 [June 1962]:405).

Jesus Christ brought to pass the bodily resurrection of all who have lived or who will yet live upon the earth (1 Cor. 15:21–22; Alma 11:40–42). Because he overcame the world, all men and women may—by exercising faith in him, trusting in his merits, and receiving his grace—repent of their sins and know the peace of personal purity and spiritual wholeness (John 14:27; Phil. 4:7; 2 Ne. 2:8; 25:23; Enos 1:1–8; Mosiah 4:1–3). Those who have learned to rely on the Lord and lean upon his tender mercies "sing the song of redeeming love" (Alma 5:26). NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, the Book of Mormon prophet-leader, exulted, "I glory in my Jesus, for he hath redeemed my soul from hell" (2 Ne. 33:6). "We talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, we prophesy of Christ, . . . that our children may know to what source they may look for a remission of their sins" (2 Ne. 25:26). A latter-day apostle has written:

I believe in Christ;
He stands supreme!
From him I'll gain my fondest dream;
And while I strive through grief and pain,
His voice is heard: Ye shall obtain.
I believe in Christ; so come what may,
With him I'll stand in that great day
When on this earth he comes again
To rule among the sons of men.
[Bruce R. McConkie, "I Believe in Christ," no. 134, Hymns, 1985]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. Come Unto Christ. Salt Lake City, 1983.
Dahl, Larry E., and Charles D. Tate, eds. The Lectures on Faith in Historical Perspective. Provo, Utah, 1990.
McConkie, Bruce R. The Promised Messiah. Salt Lake City, 1978.
———. The Mortal Messiah, 4 vols. Salt Lake City, 1979–1981.
———. The Millennial Messiah. Salt Lake City, 1982.
Talmage, James E. Jesus the Christ. Salt Lake City, 1972.
Taylor, John. The Mediation and Atonement of Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Salt Lake City, 1882.

ROBERT L. MILLET

PROPHECIES ABOUT JESUS CHRIST

Prophecies concerning the birth, mortal ministry, and post-Resurrection ministry of Jesus Christ permeate the Bible. Moreover, the latter-day scriptures used by members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—the Book of Mormon, which bears the modern subtitle "Another Testament of Jesus Christ," the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price—contain numerous prophetic utterances about the MESSIAH that in general are clearer than those in the Bible. For Latter-day Saints, these four volumes of scripture constitute the principal sources for the prophecies about Jesus' life and mission. This article reviews the prophecies concerning Jesus most often referred to by Latter-day Saints.

The New Testament teaches that the divinity of Jesus Christ was recognized by some during his own lifetime, as well as by God's ancient prophets. For example, Andrew announced to his brother Simon PETER that he had found the Messiah (John 1:41). The Book of Mormon prophets ABINADI and NEPHI<sub>2</sub>, son of HELAMAN<sub>2</sub>, taught that all of God's prophets, including Moses and Abraham, "have testified of the coming of Christ" (Mosiah 13:33; Hel. 8:16–22; cf. Jacob 4:4).

The scriptures are rich in prophetic detail concerning the birth of Jesus. Isaiah declared, "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel" (Isa. 7:14), a passage that Matthew cited as having reference to Jesus (Matt. 1:22–23). Micah poetically pronounced, "Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting" (Micah 5:2). Among Book of Mormon people, NEPHI<sub>1</sub> foretold that "even six hundred years from the time that my father [Lehi] left Jerusalem," the Savior would be raised up (1 Ne. 10:4; 19:8). SAMUEL THE LAMANITE (c. 6 B.C.) told a doubting generation of the signs to be given in the Western Hemisphere that would accompany the birth of Christ (Hel. 14:2–8). These included the appearance of a new star and two days and one night without darkness (Hel. 14:4–5).

Some prophecies of the Messiah's birth were fulfilled when the angel of the Lord announced to shepherds near Bethlehem: "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:11). On the other side of the world, the day before his birth, the Lord announced to his prophet Nephi<sub>3</sub> that he should be of "good cheer; for behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world, to show unto the world that I will fulfill all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets" (3 Ne. 1:13).

Latter-day Saints believe that the mission of Jesus Christ has been known since earliest times. The angel of the Lord declared to Adam that the Son was "the Only Begotten of the Father from the beginning," and that Adam would "be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will," if they "repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore" (Moses 5:8–9). The message that Jesus Christ is the Advocate, the Redeemer, and the Intercessor, and that "There is no other way nor means whereby man can be saved, only through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ" (Hel.

5:9), has been repeated by God's representatives in all ages (see Moses 5:14–15; Isa. 53:4–5; Acts 4:12; 2 Ne. 2:9–10; 9:6–7; Mosiah 4:8; 5:8; Alma 11:40; D&C 45:3).

Events of Jesus' mortal life and ministry are found in numerous prophecies. In the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST), an insightful passage states "that Jesus grew up with his brethren, and waxed strong, and waited upon the Lord for the time of his ministry to come . . . [and] needed not that any man should teach him" (JST Matt. 3:24–25). Nephi<sub>1</sub> saw in a vision, and King BENJAMIN learned from an angel, that the Savior would perform healings, cast out devils, and raise the dead (1 Ne. 11:31; Mosiah 3:5–6). According to New Testament writers, Jesus' triumphal ride into Jerusalem on a beast of burden was foreknown by Zechariah (Zech. 9:9; Matt. 21:5; John 12:14–15), as was his betrayal for thirty pieces of silver (Zech. 11:12–13; Matt. 27:9–10). From the angel, King Benjamin learned that blood would come "from every pore, so great shall be his [Jesus'] anguish for the wickedness and the abominations of his people" (Mosiah 3:7). Christ's rejection by his own people was prophesied both by himself and by others (e.g., Ps. 69:8; Mosiah 15:5; 3 Ne. 9:16; John 1:11).

Many years before the event, prophets such as ENOCH and Nephi<sub>1</sub> saw the Lord lifted up on the cross (Moses 7:47, 55; 1 Ne. 11:33). Isaiah prophesied that the suffering servant would make "his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death" (Isa. 53:9). The Book of Mormon prophet Abinadi (c. 150 B.C.) associated that passage in Isaiah with Jesus (Mosiah 15), and its fulfillment was recorded by Luke (23:32–33). Matthew tells of the physical disturbances that occurred at the moment Jesus gave up his life (Matt. 27:50–54), events that ZENOS saw in a vision hundreds of years earlier (1 Ne. 19:10–12).

Christ foretold his own death and resurrection when he answered a demand for a sign: "Destroy this temple [physical body], and in three days I will raise it up" (John 2:19). Jesus' eventual victory over death was known by the ancients, for God told Enoch that "righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of mine Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men" (Moses 7:62). Later, inspired men in the Americas learned of this event. Nephi<sub>1</sub>, JACOB, Benjamin, and Samuel proclaimed the time when Christ "layeth down his life according to the flesh, and taketh it again by the power of the Spirit, that he may bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, being the first that should rise" (2 Ne. 2:8; cf. 1 Ne. 10:11; Mosiah 3:10; Hel. 14:15–17).

Jesus Christ's ministry to the SPIRIT PRISON (1 Pet. 3:18–19) was anticipated by Isaiah when he recorded that "after many days shall [the prisoners gathered in the pit] be visited" (Isa. 24:22). Section 138 of the Doctrine and Covenants records a vision of this event, received by a modern prophet, President Joseph F. SMITH, when he saw "the hosts of the dead, both small and great . . . awaiting the advent of the Son of God into the spirit world, to declare their redemption from the bands of death" (D&C 138:11, 16).

The righteous of earlier ages have looked forward to the second coming of Jesus Christ. Jesus told his disciples to "watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh" (Matt. 25:13; cf. D&C 49:6–7), and indicated that he would come "as a thief" in the night (1 Thess. 5:2; Rev. 3:3; 16:15). He revealed to Joseph Smith that a universal revelation would be given so that "all flesh shall see me together" (D&C 101:23; cf. Isa. 40:5). Isaiah foresaw events of the second coming (Isa. 63–66), as did Daniel, Micah, Zechariah, and Malachi (Dan. 7:13; Micah 1:3; Zech. 12:10; 13:6; Mal. 3:12). When the resurrected Lord appeared among the Nephites, he spoke about his eventual triumphant return to earth, quoting Malachi, chapters 3 and 4 (3 Ne. 24–25).

The Prophet Joseph Smith clarified and added to prophecies of the events surrounding Jesus' second coming, including the RESTORATION of the gospel (D&C 133:36–37), the resurrection of the dead (D&C 88:95–102), the beginning of the Millennium (D&C 43:30–31), and the binding of Satan for a thousand years (D&C 45:55). Both ancient and modern prophets foretold that, at the end of a thousand years of peace, Satan would be loosed and the final battle between good and evil would be waged (Rev. 20:7–8; D&C 43:31). JOHN the Revelator and the ancient prophet ETHER, who both saw in vision all of these events, beheld the renewal of the earth and the establishment of the NEW JERUSALEM (Rev. 21; Ether 13:1–10). This city will have "no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof" (Rev. 21:23).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Jackson, Kent P. "The Beginnings of Christianity in the Book of Mormon." In The Book of Mormon: The Keystone Scripture, ed. P. Chessman. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Matthews, Robert J. "The Doctrine of the Atonement—The Revelation of the Gospel to Adam." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 2, pp. 111–29. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- . A Bible! A Bible! Salt Lake City, 1990.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Promised Messiah. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- . The Millennial Messiah. Salt Lake City, 1982.

GARY LEE WALKER

FIRSTBORN IN THE SPIRIT

Fundamental to the teachings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the concept that all human beings were born as spirit sons and daughters of heavenly parents before any were born as mortals to earthly parents. Latter-day Saints believe that the eldest and firstborn spirit child of God is Jehovah and that it was he who was later born with a physical body to MARY as Jesus Christ. That is, Jehovah of the Old Testament became Jesus Christ of the New Testament when he was born into mortality. The Psalmist refers to the Messiah as the firstborn (Ps. 89:27), and the apostle Paul speaks of Jesus as the "firstborn among many brethren" (Rom. 8:29; cf. Heb. 2:17) and as the "firstborn of every creature" (Col. 1:15). Perhaps the most authoritative statement on the subject is from the Savior himself, who declared to the Prophet Joseph SMITH, "I was in the beginning with the Father, and am the Firstborn" (D&C 93:21; see also CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN). In 1909 the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church declared:

The Father of Jesus is our Father also. Jesus Himself taught this truth, when He instructed His disciples how to pray: "Our Father which art in heaven," etc. Jesus, however, is the firstborn among all the sons of God—the first begotten in the spirit, and the only begotten in the flesh. He is our elder brother, and we, like Him, are in the image of God. All men and women are in the similitude of the universal Father and Mother, and are literally the sons and daughters of Deity [MFP 4:203].

[See also "Origin of Man," included in Doctrinal Expositions of the First Presidency in Appendix.]

JERRY C. GILES

ONLY BEGOTTEN IN THE FLESH

Ancient and modern scriptures use the title Only Begotten to emphasize the divine nature of Jesus Christ. Latter-day Saints recognize Jesus as literally the Only Begotten Son of God the Father in the flesh (John 3:16; D&C 93:11; Moses 6:52). This title signifies that Jesus' physical body was the offspring of a mortal mother and of the eternal Father (Luke 1:35, 1 Ne. 11:18). It is LDS doctrine that Jesus Christ is the child of MARY and GOD THE FATHER, "not in violation of natural law but in accordance with a higher manifestation thereof" (JC, p. 81).

The fact of Jesus' being the literal Son of God in the flesh is crucial to the ATONEMENT, which could not have been accomplished by an ordinary man. Because of the FALL OF ADAM, all mankind are subject to physical death and are shut out from the presence of God. The human family is unable to save itself. Divine law required the sacrifice of a sinless, infinite, and eternal being—a God—someone not dominated by the Fall, to redeem mankind from their lost and fallen condition (Alma 34:9–14; cf. 42:15). This price of redemption was more than any mortal person could pay, and included the spiritual sufferings and physical agony in GETHESEMANE (Luke 22:44; Mosiah 3:7; D&C 19:18). To complete the Atonement by physical death and RESURRECTION, it was necessary that Jesus be able to lay down his physical body and also be able to take it up again. He could do this only because he had life in himself, which he inherited from God his Father (John 5:26; 10:17–18). Christ inherited the ability to die from his mortal mother and the power to resurrect himself from his immortal Father. Dying was for him a voluntary, deliberate act for mankind, made possible only because he was the Only Begotten of the Father (D&C 20:18–26).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. The Promised Messiah, pp. 467–73. Salt Lake City, 1978.

GERALD HANSEN, JR.

BIRTH OF JESUS CHRIST

Latter-day Saint scripture affirms unequivocally that the birth of Jesus Christ was the mortal advent on earth of an actual God, a second and distinct member of the GODHEAD. Adam was assured redemption through the Only Begotten of the Father, and every true prophet had a hope of Christ's glory (Moses 5:6–10; Jacob 4:4).

Biblical prophecies and accounts of Jesus' birth are confirmed and enlarged in latter-day scripture. While Matthew's birth narrative emphasizes Christ's kingship (drawing attention to the magi, King Herod, and Bethlehem, the city of King David) and Luke's account accents Jesus' humility and holiness (mentioning the lowly manger, the shepherds, and the heavenly choirs), the Book of Mormon focuses on his coming as a fulfillment of a loving God's plan that was established from before the foundation of the world.

The time of Jesus' birth, along with the purposes of his mortal ministry, were established in the PREMORTAL LIFE (see COUNCIL IN HEAVEN; Moses 4:1–4; 1 Ne. 10:2–4; Mosiah 3:5–10). A detailed vision of the anticipated Savior's birth was recorded by NEPHI<sup>1</sup>, a Book of Mormon prophet, shortly after 600 B.C. (1 Ne. 11:7–24). He foresaw a virgin in the city of Nazareth who was carried away in the spirit, and then saw the virgin again with a child in her arms, whom an angel identified as the Son of God. Nephi described Christ's coming as the CONDESCENSION OF GOD, which may be understood in two respects: first, in that God the Father, a perfected and glorified personage of flesh and bones, condescended to become the father of a mortal offspring, born of Mary; and second, in that Jesus (JEHOVAH), the God who created worlds without number (Moses 1:32–33; John 1:1–4, 14; Heb. 1:1–2), willingly submitted himself to all the trials and pains of mortality (Mosiah 3:5–8; MD, p. 155).

For Latter-day Saints, the paternity of Jesus is not obscure. He was the literal, biological son of an immortal, tangible Father and Mary, a mortal woman (see VIRGIN BIRTH). Jesus is the only person born who deserves the title "the Only Begotten Son of God" (John 3:16; Benson, p. 3; see JESUS CHRIST: ONLY BEGOTTEN IN THE FLESH). He was not the son of the HOLY GHOST; it was only through the Holy Ghost that the power of the Highest overshadowed Mary (Luke 1:35; 1 Ne. 11:19).

The place where the nativity should occur was a point of public controversy in Jesus' day (John 7:40–43). The Book of Mormon prophet ALMA<sup>2</sup>, about 83 B.C., foretold that Christ's birthplace would be "at Jerusalem which is the land of our forefathers" (Alma 7:10), referring to the region surrounding the city itself: "Christ was born in a village some six miles from the city of Jerusalem . . . in what we now know the ancients themselves designated as 'the land of Jerusalem'" (CWHN 6:102).

The Bible and the Book of Mormon report the appearance of great signs in the Western Hemisphere at the time of the birth of the Messiah for the benefit of the faithful. For example, about 6 B.C. SAMUEL THE LAMANITE prophesied that lights would appear in heaven and that there would be no darkness during the night when Christ was born (Hel. 14:3–7). On the day when Samuel's five-year prophecy was about to expire and the unbelievers were accordingly about to execute those who had believed his words, Samuel's prophecies of the Savior's birth were fulfilled (3 Ne. 1:4–23). In the New World, as in the Old, "angels did appear unto men, wise men, and did declare unto them glad tidings of great joy" (Hel. 16:14).

[See also April 6; Book of Mormon Chronology; Christmas.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. Come Unto Christ. Salt Lake City, 1983.
Brown, Raymond E. The Birth of the Messiah. Garden City, N.Y., 1977.
McConkie, Bruce R. The Mortal Messiah, Vol. 1, pp. 313–66. Salt Lake City, 1981.

ANDREW C. SKINNER

BAPTISM OF JESUS CHRIST

At the commencement of his public ministry, Jesus went from Galilee to the Jordan, where he was baptized by JOHN THE BAPTIST. He did thereby "humble himself before the Father" and witness to him "that he would be obedient to him" (2 Ne. 31:7). For Latter-day Saints this event shows that Jesus by his own example taught that all people must be baptized by immersion by one having AUTHORITY. All persons must also receive the HOLY GHOST in order to obtain the testimony of Jesus (see John 1:32–34; Rev. 1:2; 19:10) and enter into the KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

Jesus was baptized by immersion by John, who was ordained when eight days old by an angel of God to "make straight the way of the Lord" (D&C 84:28). As Jesus came up out of the water, John saw the heavens open and the spirit of God descending upon Jesus (see DOVE, SIGN OF), and the voice of GOD THE FATHER declared to John,

"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 3:17). Thereafter John bore record that Jesus was the Son of God (John 1:33–34; D&C 93:15–17). At the baptism of Jesus all three members of the GODHEAD were manifest, thus revealing the separate identities of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

Many have wondered why Jesus needed baptism, since he was without SIN. Some have seen this as "an act of simple submissive obedience on the part of the Perfect One" (A. Edersheim, Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah [reprinted, Grand Rapids, Mich., 1971], p. 280); others have suggested that Jesus still faced "a possibility of a subtle sin: the sin of shrinking from what might lie ahead" and thus was baptized to fortify himself with "utter consecration" and to express to his nation "the urgency of commitment" (Interpreter's Bible, Vol. 8, p. 78).

However, Latter-day Saints understand from the Bible and the Book of Mormon that Jesus was baptized "to fulfill all righteousness," which means that Jesus humbled himself before the Father, witnessed to the Father that he would obey him, and thereby showed mankind the narrowness of the gate leading to ETERNAL LIFE (2 Ne. 31:6–9). In submitting to baptism Jesus "set the example" for all mankind, for if Jesus, being holy, was baptized "to fulfil all righteousness . . . how much more need have we, being unholy, to be baptized?" (2 Ne. 31:5; see also AF, chap. 6). Those who follow his example and his gospel with full purpose of heart, with honesty before God, and "with real intent, repenting of [their] sins," are promised that they will receive the BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST, and be able to "speak with the tongue of angels, and shout praises" to God (2 Ne. 31:13).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Farley, S. Brent. "The Baptism and Temptation of Jesus." In Studies in Scripture, ed. K. Jackson and R. Millett, Vol. 5, pp. 175–87. Salt Lake City, 1986.
McConkie, Bruce R. The Mortal Messiah, Vol. 1, pp. 399–404. Salt Lake City, 1979.

J. PHILIP SCHAELLING

MINISTRY OF JESUS CHRIST

The central role played by Jesus' mortal ministry in Latter-day Saint doctrine and belief is well expressed in Joseph Smith's statement that "the fundamental principles of our religion are the testimony of the Apostles and Prophets, concerning Jesus Christ, that He died, was buried, and rose again the third day, and ascended into heaven; and all other things which pertain to our religion are only appendages to it" (TPJS, p. 121; HC 3:30).

Latter-day Saints share with many other Christians the acceptance of the four New Testament gospels and Acts 1:1–11 as essentially accurate historical accounts of the earthly ministry of Jesus Christ. While not biblical inerrantists, their confidence in the biblical record is strengthened in two unique ways: First, they believe specific elements of Christ's earthly ministry to have been revealed beforehand to pre-Christian PROPHETS. These REVELATIONS agree with subsequent accounts in the gospels. Second, they believe that the risen Jesus himself has affirmed many details of that biblical account. Thus, the Book of Mormon and other texts of the specifically Latter-day Saint canon are regarded as "proving to the world that the holy scriptures are true" (D&C 20:11; cf. 1 Ne. 13:39).

That God's Son would come to earth and take upon himself a physical body, for example, was foreknown by many prophets (1 Ne. 13:42; Enos 1:8; Mosiah 3:5; Hel. 8:13–22; Ether 3:15–17). The approximate date of his coming was also known (1 Ne. 10:4; 19:8; 2 Ne. 25:19; Hel. 14:2). Several ancient believers were privileged to see him before his mortal advent (2 Ne. 2:4; 11:2; Alma 19:13; Ether 3:14; 9:22; D&C 107:49, 54; Moses 1:2; 7:4; Abr. 2:6–11; cf. Isa. 6:1–3). His name-title, Jesus Christ, (i.e., "Savior Anointed") was known long beforehand, as were the name and virginity of his mother and the place of his birth (1 Ne. 11:13–14, 18–20; 2 Ne. 25:19; Mosiah 3:8; Alma 7:10; Ether 3:14; Moses 6:52, 57; 7:50; cf. Micah 5:2). Ancient prophets foresaw his baptism, predicting even its location and specific details of the mission of JOHN THE BAPTIST (1 Ne. 10:8–10). NEPHI<sub>1</sub> knew that the Savior would call twelve apostles to assist in his ministry (1 Ne. 11:34–36; 12:9; 13:26, 40–41; 14:20, 24, 27), and King Benjamin prophesied of his many miracles (Mosiah 3:5–6). Jesus' atoning death by crucifixion was well known to pre-Christian prophets, who understood that it would be accompanied by three days of darkness preceding his resurrection (1 Ne. 10:11; 11:33; 19:10; 2 Ne. 25:14; Mosiah 3:9–10; Alma 7:11; Hel. 14:14, 20, 27; Moses 7:55). Indeed, sacrificial practices from Adam onward, including the rituals of the law of Moses, prefigured Christ and, furthermore, were recognized as doing so by many who performed them (Jacob 4:5; Moses 5:5–7).

Later LDS scriptures, including the words of the risen Jesus himself, confirm such details of the New Testament record as the unity of the SERMON ON THE MOUNT (3 Ne. 12–14) and the authenticity of some of his separate sayings (3 Ne. 15:12–24). His pain in the garden of GETHSEMANE is attested (D&C 19:18; cf. Mosiah 3:7), as are his crucifixion (D&C 20:23; 21:9; 35:2; 45:52; 46:13; 53:2), his resurrection on the third day (Morm. 7:5; D&C 18:12; 20:23), and his identity as the long-awaited suffering Savior (3 Ne. 11:10–11). His earthly agonies are said to qualify him as an intercessor between God and man (D&C 45:4; cf. Isa. 53:12). In such texts as Doctrine and Covenants section 7 and the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST), Latter-day Saints believe that they have been granted more complete information on Jesus' Palestinian ministry. (Interestingly, the JST anticipates modern scholarly emphasis on the individual character of the New Testament gospels by labeling each one as the “testimony” of its respective author. This same view seems to underlie Doctrine and Covenants 88:141.)

Christ Calling Peter and Andrew, by James T. Harwood (1928, oil on canvas, 41" × 51"). An important part of Jesus' ministry was the calling of apostles to lead his Church on earth. Latter-day Saints believe that apostles and prophets form a necessary foundation for Christ's Church.

Gospel accounts inform and underscore LDS understanding of the earthly ministry of Jesus, in whom Latter-day Saints see God physically present among his people. Not only did Jesus perform miracles, expressing thereby his power over both demons and natural elements, but he explicitly affirmed his unity of purpose with the Father (John 14:8–10; 17:21) and his identity as the Jehovah of the Old Testament (John 8:56–59). While Moses ascended the mountain to receive the old law, Jesus ascended a mount to proclaim a new one (cf. 3 Ne. 15:4–5). Moses himself was present at the TRANSFIGURATION (Matt. 17:1–8). LDS scriptures further affirm the New Testament gospels’ warm portrait of Jesus’ compassion for sinners, his concern for the poor, and his love for children. They portray him as a popular teacher who taught with parables, preached in synagogues, confronted hypocrisy, and won the love and admiration of many of his hearers.

Latter-day Saints recall, too, the reaction of Jesus’ hearers to the Sermon on the Mount: “For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes” (Matt. 7:29). Just as he did not call upon the power of others to perform miracles, Jesus needed no precedents to justify his teachings. In himself he had power over death—both over the death of others (as in the healing of Lazarus, the daughter of Jairus, and the son of the widow of Nain) and his own death (John 5:26; 10:17–18). Thus, Latter-day Saints join with other Christians in an acceptance of Jesus of Nazareth as their redeemer from death. But he is also the source of PRIESTHOOD authority, who called and empowered ordinary, untrained men to serve him in a newly organized church and, acting for him in his capacity as “the good Shepherd,” to “feed his sheep” (John 21:15–17) through both teaching and priesthood ORDINANCES. They reject claims of a dichotomy between the priestly and the prophetic in his ministry. They note that he taught the necessity of baptism and submitted to that requirement himself (John 3:1–5; Matt. 3:15). They recall that he revered the temple of his day and expected others to do likewise (Luke 2:41–50; John 2:13–17).

LDS understanding of the role of faith and works in salvation is grounded in the insistence of Jesus that love for him will express itself in OBEDIENCE to his COMMANDMENTS (John 14:15; cf. John 15:14; Matt. 5–7). His call for his followers to be perfect (Matt. 5:48) is rendered plausible by the fact that he overcame the same temptations that beset them (Heb. 4:15–16; Matt. 4:1–11; Luke 4:1–13) and that he suffered for their transgressions (Mosiah 3:7; Isa. 53:3–12). Indeed, Latter-day Saints are informed by their scriptures that it is at least partially because of the experience gained and the empathy achieved during his earthly sojourn that Jesus knows how to minister to the needs of those who trust in him (Alma 7:12; D&C 62:1; 88:6).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. The Mortal Messiah, 4 vols. Salt Lake City, 1979–1981.
- Talmage, James E. JC. Salt Lake City, 1915.
- Taylor, John. The Mediation and Atonement of Jesus Christ. Salt Lake City, 1882; repr. 1964.

DANIEL C. PETERSON

CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS CHRIST

Crucifixion was the form of execution suffered by Jesus Christ on Calvary as the necessary conclusion to his voluntary infinite atoning sacrifice begun in GETHSEMANE (see ATONEMENT). Many people supported and followed Jesus, but a small group of influential Judean leaders, who disagreed with his doctrines and felt threatened by his popularity, succeeded in having the Roman governor, Pontius Pilate, condemn him to death.

LDS scriptures give prophetic witness that crucifixion would be the method of the Savior’s death (e.g., 1 Ne. 19:10–13; 2 Ne. 10:3–5; Mosiah 3:9; 15:7; Moses 7:55). Israelites did not crucify. They did hang executed bodies ignominiously “on a tree” for part of a day (Deut. 21:22–23; cf. Acts 5:30), but for crucifixion it was necessary to invoke Roman law and practice.

Crucifixion was a form of execution probably begun by the Persians and used in Egypt and Carthage. The Romans perfected it as a torture designed to produce maximum pain and a slow death. Reserved for the vilest of criminals and rarely administered to Roman citizens, crucifixion was customarily preceded by flogging the back, buttocks, and legs with a short whip consisting of leather thongs with small iron balls or sharp pieces of sheep bone attached. The weakened victim was then made to carry at least a portion of the cross to the site of crucifixion. Romans commonly used large nails to fix the wrists and palms to the cross bar and the feet to the vertical portion of the cross. The nails inflicted terrible pain but caused no immediate life-threatening injury. A person could live in agony for hours or even days. The body's position made breathing difficult since hanging by the arms kept the chest expanded so that exhaling required the active use of the diaphragm. If the sufferer pushed with his feet, he elevated his body, placing the chest in a more natural position and making it easier to breathe. Soldiers sometimes hastened death by breaking the legs of the victim, making it almost impossible to push the body high enough to breathe.

Palm Sunday, by Robert L. Marshall (1983, oil on canvas, 4' × 5'). This painting uses dead hanging palms to represent the time when life was gone from the body of Christ and then rose on the third day. It is one of the few LDS paintings to treat the crucifixion theme. The bottom of the painting depicts a sacrament table. Courtesy John W. Welch.

After Jesus had hung on the cross for several hours, he forgave the soldiers who had crucified him (Luke 23:34; JST Luke 23:35) and voluntarily gave up his life (cf. John 10:18), commending his spirit into his Father's hands. The Romans broke the legs of the two who were crucified with Jesus, but believing that he was already dead, they merely thrust a spear into his side (John 19:33–34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Edwards, William D.; Wesley J. Gabel; and Floyd E. Hosmer. "On the Physical Death of Jesus Christ." Journal of the American Medical Association, 255 (1986):1455–63.
Hengel, Martin. Crucifixion. Philadelphia, 1977.

MERRILL C. OAKS

RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST

Latter-day Saints view the resurrection of Jesus Christ as the most glorious event of all time. Having the power to lay down his body and to "take it again" (John 10:18), the Savior conquered death for himself and all mankind (1 Cor. 15:22). LDS faith in the literal and physical resurrection of Jesus is greatly strengthened by ancient and modern testimonies of many witnesses.

The Book of Mormon contains prophecies of the resurrection of Jesus years before the actual event. The prophet Nephi<sup>1</sup> declared, "Behold, they will crucify him; and . . . he shall rise from the dead" (2 Ne. 25:13; also 1 Ne. 19:10). In the Bible Jesus himself prophesied that on "the third day he shall be raised again" (Matt. 17:23).

The third day did come, and Jesus became the "firstfruits of them that slept" (1 Cor. 15:20), his spirit permanently reuniting with his body in a glorified, immortal state. His resurrected body was not subject to pain, disease, or death. It could pass through walls; it could defy the earthly laws of gravity; but it was a tangible "glorious body" (Phil. 3:21) composed of flesh and bones. Jesus said to his disciples, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have" (Luke 24:39). He then ate broiled fish and honeycomb in their presence as a further witness of his corporeal nature.

Latter-day Saints firmly distinguish themselves from those who deny the physical resurrection of Jesus or claim that his divine nature is solely spiritual, with his postmortal appearances being merely temporary physical or mystical manifestations (Nibley, pp. 156–59). They find such doctrine inconsistent with the words of Paul, who taught that the resurrected Christ “dieth no more” (Rom. 6:9), meaning that his resurrected body would never again be separated from his spirit (James 2:26; Alma 11:45).

The Doubtful Thomas, by Carl Heinrich Bloch (1834–1890). Thomas, one of the original apostles, kneels at the feet of the resurrected Jesus. The Lord said, “Behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing” (John 20:27). Courtesy Frederiksborg Museum, Hillerød, Denmark.

In his resurrected state, Jesus retained the prints of nails in his hands and feet as a special manifestation to the world. Such marks, however, are only temporary. After all have confessed that he is the Christ, his resurrected body will, like those of all mankind, be restored to its “proper and perfect frame” (Alma 40:23).

Once resurrected, Jesus “gained the keys . . . to open the graves for all men” (DS 1:128), and with those keys he opened the gates of the resurrection: The “graves were opened” and “many saints did arise and appear unto many” (Matt. 27:52; 3 Ne. 23:11).

Christ’s resurrection was not hidden. Witnesses of this event were both legion and varied: the women at the tomb (Luke 24:1–10); Mary in the garden (John 20:11–18); ten apostles together (Luke 24:36–43); eleven apostles, including doubting Thomas (John 20:24–29); two disciples on the road to Emmaus (Luke 24:13–24); “above five hundred brethren at once” (1 Cor. 15:6); and Paul on the road to Damascus (Acts 9:3–9). Of all these records, none is more profound than that of his appearance to the Nephites, where, one by one, 2,500 men, women, and children “did see with their eyes and did feel with their hands, and did know of a surety . . . that it was he” (3 Ne. 11:15). To these accounts, Latter-day Saints add modern appearances of the resurrected Lord to Joseph SMITH and others (e.g., JS—H 1:17; D&C 76:22–23).

Jesus Christ will yet appear in the latter days and testify, “These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends” (D&C 45:52; cf. Zech. 13:6), visiting all kingdoms over which he is creator (D&C 88:51–61). Honest and credible witnesses of all ages have testified, and will yet testify, as did the angelic messengers of old, “He is risen” (Matt. 28:6).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Nibley, Hugh W. “Easter and the Prophets.” The World and the Prophets, in CWHN 3:154–62.
- Romney, Marion G. “The Resurrection of Jesus.” Ensign 12 (May 1982):6–9.

TAD R. CALLISTER

FORTY-DAY MINISTRY AND OTHER POST-RESURRECTION APPEARANCES OF JESUS CHRIST

After his RESURRECTION, Jesus spent much of the next forty days with his disciples, “speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God” (Acts 1:3) and opening “their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures,” namely, what is “in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms concerning [him]” (Luke 24:44–45). As part of Jesus’ ministry, these forty days are important to Latter-day Saints. In addition, a major section of the Book of Mormon is devoted to his post-resurrection ministry in the Western Hemisphere.

The NEW TESTAMENT mentions the forty-day ministry but provides only limited detail. For example, during this time Jesus appeared to the

Go Ye Therefore, and Teach All Nations, by Grant Romney Clawson, after a work by Harry Anderson (1974; mural, oil on canvas; 16' × 66'). During his forty-day ministry, the resurrected Jesus instructed his apostles to preach the gospel to all nations (Matt. 28:19–20). The Lord repeated this instruction to Joseph Smith (see D&C 42:58).

Twelve with Thomas present (John 20:26–29), spoke of “things pertaining to the kingdom of God” (Acts 1:3), “and many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book” (John 20:30). Paul mentions that on one occasion Jesus “was seen of above five hundred brethren at once” (1 Cor. 15:6). Finally, before his ascension Jesus commanded the APOSTLES to go “into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature” (Mark 16:15–16; cf. Matt. 28:18–20; Luke 24:47–48; John 21:15–17; Acts 1:4–5).

Over forty accounts outside scripture claim to tell what Jesus said and did during his forty-day ministry. Latter-day Saints believe that some of these accounts, like the APOCRYPHA, contain things “therein that are true,” but in addition contain “many things . . . that are not true” (D&C 91).

These accounts report the following: Jesus teaches the apostles the gospel they should preach to the world. He tells of a PREMORTAL LIFE and the creation of the world, adding that this life is a probationary state of choosing between good and evil, and that those who choose good might return to the glory of God. He foretells events of the LAST DAYS, including the return of ELIJAH. He also tells the disciples that the primitive church will be perverted after one generation, and teaches them to prepare for tribulation. These apocryphal accounts state that Christ’s resurrection gives his followers hope for their own resurrection in glory. Besides salvation for the living, SALVATION OF THE DEAD is a major theme, as are the ordinances: BAPTISM, the SACRAMENT or eucharist, ordination of the apostles to authority, their being blessed one by one, and an initiation or ENDOWMENT (cf. Luke 24:49; usually called “mysteries”), with an emphasis on GARMENTS, MARRIAGE, and PRAYER CIRCLES. These accounts, usually called secret (Greek, apokryphon; Coptic, hep), are often connected somehow to the TEMPLE, or compared to the MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION. Sometimes the apostles are said to ascend to heaven where they see marvelous things. Whether everything in such accounts is true or not, the actions of the apostles after the post-resurrection visits of Jesus contrast sharply with those before.

Many people dismiss accounts outside the New Testament with the labels apocrypha, pseudepigrapha, fiction, or myth. Some ascribe them to psychological hallucinations that the trauma of Jesus’ death brought on the disciples. Others discard such traditions because sects later branded as “heresies” championed them. Most ignore them. Latter-day Saints generally tend to give thoughtful consideration to them, primarily because of the long, detailed account in the Book of Mormon of Christ’s post-resurrection ministry among the Nephites and Lamanites “who had been spared” (3 Ne. 11–28).

Many elements found in the Old World forty-day literature also appear in 3 Nephi in the Book of Mormon. This account tells how his Father announced Jesus to some of the surviving Nephites and Lamanites, and how he descended from heaven to the temple at Bountiful to minister to the multitude there for three days. The people “did see with their eyes and did feel with their hands, and did know of a surety and did bear record” that Jesus had risen from the dead (3 Ne. 11:13–17). Jesus chose twelve disciples, gave them authority to perform ordinances, and commanded them to teach all the people (3 Ne. 11:18–41; 18:36–39; 19:4–13; Moro. 2). He declared his doctrine, forbidding disputation about it: “The Father commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent and believe in me. And whoso believeth in me, and is baptized, the same shall be saved” (3 Ne. 11:32–33). Jesus’ teachings, including a version of the SERMON ON THE MOUNT very similar to the one contained in the New Testament, comprise “the law and the commandments” for the people (3 Ne. 12:19). Jesus healed their sick, blessed their children, and prayed for the multitude (3 Ne. 17:2–25; 19:5–36). Many were transfigured when ANGELS descended to minister to them (3 Ne. 17:22–25; 19:14–16). Jesus instituted the ordinances of baptism and the sacrament of bread and wine (3 Ne. 11:22–29; 18:1–14, 26–35; 19:10–13; 20:3–9), and taught the multitude how to live their lives free from sin (3 Ne. 18:12–25). He also taught that sin prevents participation in the ordinances, but no one is forbidden to attend the synagogue or to repent and come to him (3 Ne. 18:25–33). He described the future in terms of COVENANTS made with the house of Israel, quoting Old Testament prophecies of MOSES (Deut. 18:15–19 = 3 Ne. 20:36–38; Gen. 12:3; 22:18 = 3 Ne. 20:25, 27), ISAIAH (Isa. 52:1–3, 6–8, 9–10, 11–15 = 3 Ne. 20:36–40, 32, 34–35, 41–45; Isa. 52:8–10 = 3 Ne. 16:18–20; Isa. 52:12, 15 = 3 Ne. 21:29, 8; Isa. 54 = 3 Ne. 22), Micah (Micah 4:12–13; 5:8–15 = 3 Ne. 20:18–19, 16–17; 21:12–18), and Habakkuk (Hab. 1:5 = 3 Ne. 21:9), that the remnants of Israel will be gathered when the prophecies of Isaiah begin to be fulfilled and when the remnants begin to believe in Christ, the Book of Mormon itself being a sign of the beginning of these events (3 Ne. 16:4–20; 20:10–23:6; 26:3–5). After inspecting their records, Jesus gave them additional prophecies that they had not had (Mal. 3–4 = 3 Ne. 24–25), and “did expound all things” to their understanding (3 Ne. 20:10–26:11).

Even more sacred things said and done by Jesus during his three-day visit to the Western Hemisphere were not included in the present record (3 Ne. 26:6–12). His post-resurrection ministries to the people of Nephi and to the Old World disciples were only two of several he performed and of which records were made (3 Ne. 15:11–16:3; cf. D&C 88:51–61; TPJS, p. 191). Latter-day Saints hope to prepare themselves to receive the fuller accounts that are yet to come (2 Ne. 29:11–14; D&C 25:9; 101:32–35; 121:26–33; A of F 9).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Brown, S. Kent, and C. Wilfred Griggs. “The Forty-Day Ministry of Christ.” Ensign 5 (Aug. 1975):6–11, also in Studies in Scripture, ed. K. Jackson, Vol. 6, pp. 12–23. Salt Lake City, 1987.

Nibley, Hugh W. “Evangelium Quadraginta Dierum.” Vigiliae Christianae 20 (1966):1–24, reprinted in CWHN 4:10–44.

For comparisons with the Book of Mormon, see H. Nibley, “Christ Among the Ruins,” Ensign 13 (June 1983):14–19, in CWHN 8:407–34; and Since Cumorah, CWHN 7. Specialized studies include H. Nibley, “The Early Christian Prayer Circle,” BYU Studies 19 (1978):41–78, in CWHN 4:45–99.

For the primary sources, see the references in the preceding works; English translations of many are found in Edgar Hennecke and Wilhelm Schneemelcher, New Testament Apocrypha, 2 vols., Philadelphia, 1965, and James M. Robinson, The Nag Hammadi Library, San Francisco, 1978, rev. ed. 1988.

JOHN GEE

LATTER-DAY APPEARANCES OF JESUS CHRIST

As shown in the New Testament and the Book of Mormon, after his resurrection, Jesus Christ can, and also does, appear to people in this latter-day DISPENSATION OF THE GOSPEL. When these sacred manifestations are for personal instruction, they are not spoken of openly. However, when it is appropriate, the divine communication is made public. It is a principle of the gospel that the Lord Jesus Christ can, and will, manifest himself to his people, including individual members, “in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will” (D&C 88:68).

The most important appearance of the Savior in this dispensation occurred when he and the Father came to Joseph SMITH in the spring of 1820. This theophany, commonly called the FIRST

VISION, revealed the separate nature of these two members of the GODHEAD and ushered in the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES and the RESTORATION OF ALL THINGS.

In 1832, Jesus Christ again appeared in a vision to Joseph Smith and Sidney RIGDON. Both men saw and conversed with him (D&C 76:14) and also witnessed a vision of the kingdoms to which mankind will be assigned in the life hereafter. The Lord also appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY in April 1836 in the Kirtland Temple shortly after its dedication and manifested his acceptance of this first latter-day temple (D&C 110:1–10).

A revelation pertaining to the salvation of the dead was given to Joseph Smith in an earlier appearance of Jesus Christ and the Father in the Kirtland Temple on January 21, 1836: “The heavens were opened upon us, and I beheld . . . the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the

Jesus Christ Appearing to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in the Kirtland Temple, by Gary E. Smith (1980, oil on canvas, 36" × 42"). Regarding the Savior's appearance in the Kirtland Temple on April 3, 1836, Joseph Smith wrote: "We saw the Lord standing upon the breastwork of the pulpit" (D&C 110:2). Courtesy Blaine T. Hudson.

Father and the Son" (D&C 137:1, 3). Joseph Smith said that visions were given to many in the meeting and that "some of them saw the face of the Savior" (HC 2:382).

Joseph Smith also recorded other occasions when Church members beheld the Savior. On March 18, 1833, he wrote of a significant meeting of the SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS: "Many of the brethren saw a heavenly vision of the Savior, and concourses of angels, and many other things, of which each one has a record of what he saw" (HC 1:335). He wrote of a similar experience of Zebdee Coltrin (HC 2:387), and on another occasion he reported that "the Savior made His appearance unto some" at a meeting the week after the dedication of the Kirtland Temple (HC 2:432).

Appearances of Jesus Christ have not been restricted to the early days of the Church. In 1898 the Savior appeared to Lorenzo SNOW, the fifth President of the Church, and gave him important instructions regarding the Church (My Kingdom Shall Roll Forth, pp. 68–70, Salt Lake City, 1980). The sixth President of the Church, Joseph F. SMITH, saw the Savior in a vision in 1918, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants section 138. This vision showed the Savior's visit to the spirits of the dead while his body was in the tomb between the time of his crucifixion and resurrection. In 1985, Ezra Taft BENSON, the thirteenth President of the Church, said, "Today in Christ's restored church, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, He is revealing Himself and His will—from the first prophet of the Restoration, even Joseph Smith, to the present" (p. 4).

It is a teaching of latter-day revelation that individual members can have a personal visit from the Savior, and see his face, and receive instruction from him, when they are prepared, and when the Lord chooses to grant such an experience (D&C 93:1; see JESUS CHRIST: SECOND COMFORTER).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. "Joy in Christ." Ensign 16 (Mar. 1986):4.

JOEL A. FLAKE

SECOND COMING OF JESUS CHRIST

In Jewish and Christian thought there are two basic ways of viewing the coming of the MESSIAH. Some consider promises of a Messiah and a millennial era symbolic of a time when men will finally learn to live in peace and harmony and the world will enter a new age of enlightenment and progress; no one individual nor any one specific event will usher in this age. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints opposes this view and agrees with the many other Jewish and Christian groups who affirm that there is an actual Messiah, that he will come at some future time to the earth, and that only through his coming and the events associated therewith will a millennial age of peace, harmony, and joy begin. Jews look for the first coming of the Messiah; Latter-day Saints and other Christians for the second coming of Jesus Christ.

The SCRIPTURES, both biblical and modern, abundantly testify that the era just preceding the second advent of the Savior will be “perilous” (2 Tim. 3:1) and filled with “tribulation” (Matt. 24:29). At that time “the devil shall have power over his own dominion” (D&C 1:35). The resulting judgments upon the wicked are part of the preparations for the MILLENNIUM.

The righteous as well as the unenlightened will experience these times of tribulation. LDS sources teach that the Lord will gather the righteous together in “holy places” (D&C 101:22), which include ZION and her STAKES (D&C 115:6). These places are described in terms of “peace,” “refuge,” and “safety for the saints of the Most High God” (D&C 45:66). The promise is that God “will not suffer that the wicked shall destroy the righteous. Wherefore, he will preserve the righteous by his power . . . Wherefore, the righteous need not fear” (1 Ne. 22:16–17).

Attempts to predict the time of the coming of the Messiah are legion in both Jewish and Christian traditions. Latter-day Saints consider the second coming “near, even at the doors” (D&C 110:16). But they also accept the decree of scripture that “the hour and the day [of Christ’s coming] no man knoweth, neither the angels in heaven, nor shall they know until he comes” (D&C 49:7 [italics added]; cf. Matt. 24:36).

With many other Christians, Mormons believe the second coming will be preceded by the battle of Armageddon and by Christ’s appearance on the Mount of Olives (see LAST DAYS). Of this event the Doctrine and Covenants says:

And then shall the Jews look upon me and say: What are these wounds in thine hands and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them: These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their king [D&C 45:51–53; cf. Zech. 13:6].

“From that day forward,” it has been proclaimed, “the Jews as a nation become holy and their city and sanctuary become holy. There also the Messiah establishes his throne and seat of government” (Clark, p. 258).

Before Christ’s coming in glory, “there shall be silence in the heaven for the space of half an hour; and immediately after shall the curtain of heaven be unfolded . . . and the face of the Lord shall be unveiled” (D&C 88:95). This apparently is the time when “all flesh shall see me together” (D&C 101:23; Rev. 1:7).

The Doctrine and Covenants declares that “the earth shall pass away so as by fire” (D&C 43:32). Some have conjectured that this could occur through a nuclear holocaust. Though certain apocalyptic passages may seem to describe the effects of nuclear warfare (e.g., Isa. 34:1–10), a modern REVELATION teaches that the “fire” of the Second Coming is the actual presence of the Savior, a celestial glory comparable to the glory of the sun (D&C 76:70) or a “consuming fire” (Heb. 12:29; cf. Mal. 3:2; 4:1). “So great shall be the glory of his presence that the sun shall hide his face in shame” (D&C 133:49). “The presence of the Lord shall be as the melting fire that burneth, and as the fire which causeth the waters to boil” (D&C 133:41; cf. Isa. 64:2; JS—H 1:37). “Element shall melt with fervent heat” (D&C 101:25) and “the mountains shall flow down at thy presence” (D&C 133:44). The Doctrine and Covenants repeats Isaiah’s declaration that “the Lord shall be red in his apparel, and his garments like him that treadeth in the wine-vat” (D&C 133:48; cf. Isa. 63:2).

The apostle PAUL wrote to the Thessalonian Saints that those living on the earth at the time of Christ’s appearing would be caught up to meet him (1 Thess. 4:16–17). The Doctrine and Covenants, using similar language, adds that these righteous saints will be “quickened” and will join those “who have slept in their graves,” who will also “be caught up to meet him in the midst of the pillar of heaven” (D&C 88:96–97; see RESURRECTION). Christ will descend to earth “in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven” (Acts 1:11).

With the coming of Christ, the millennial era of peace, harmony, and RIGHTEOUSNESS will begin. Satan will then have “no power over the hearts of the people, for they dwell in righteousness, and the Holy One of Israel reigneth” (1 Ne. 22:26; see also MILLENNIUM).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clark, James R., comp. “Proclamation of the Twelve.” In Messages of the First Presidency, Vol. 1, p. 258. Salt Lake City, 1965.
- Lund, Gerald N. The Coming of the Lord. Salt Lake City, 1971.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Millennial Messiah: The Second Coming of the Son of Man. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. The Signs of the Times. Salt Lake City, 1964.

GERALD N. LUND

JESUS CHRIST, FATHERHOOD AND SONSHIP OF

Latter-day Saint scriptures refer to Jesus Christ as both the Father and the Son. Most notably in the Book of Mormon, Christ introduced himself to the BROTHER OF JARED saying, “I am the Father and the Son” (Ether 3:14); NEPHI<sub>1</sub> referred to the Lamb of God as “the Eternal Father” (1 Ne. 11:21, 1830 ed.), and the prophet ABINADI said that the Messiah would be “the Father . . . and the Son” (Mosiah 15:3). Such usage has been explained in several ways consistent with the fundamental LDS understanding of the Godhead as three distinct beings.

There is no lack of clarity about Christ’s sonship. Jesus is the Son of God in at least three ways. First, he is the firstborn spirit child of God the Father and thereby the elder brother of the spirits of all men and women as God the Father, known also by the exalted name-title Elohim, is the father of the spirits of all mankind (Num. 16:22; Heb. 12:9; John 20:17). Thus, when Christ is called the Firstborn (e.g., Rom. 8:29; Col. 1:15; D&C 93:21), Latter-day Saints accept this as a possible reference to Christ’s spiritual birth. Second, he is the literal physical son of God, the Only Begotten in the Flesh (e.g., John 1:14; 3:16; 2 Ne. 25:12; Jacob 4:11; D&C 29:42; 93:11; Moses 1:6; 2:26). Third, spiritually he is also a son by virtue of his submission unto the will of the Father (Heb. 5:8).

Jesus Christ is also known by the title of Father. The meaning of scriptures using this nomenclature is not always immediately clear, primarily owing to the fact that Christ and his Father are virtually inseparable in purpose, testimony, glory, and power. In most cases, however, the scriptural usage can be explained in several ways:

Christ is sometimes called Father because of his role as Creator from the beginning (see CREATION). Before his mortal birth, and acting under the direction of the Father, Jesus was JEHOVAH, the Lord Omnipotent, through whom God created worlds without number (Moses 1:33; 7:30; John 1:1–3; Heb. 1:2). Because of his creative role, Christ-Jehovah is called “the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things from the beginning” in the Book of Mormon (Mosiah 3:8; see also 2 Ne. 25:16; Alma 11:39; 3 Ne. 9:15). Jesus’ role as Creator is similarly attested in the Bible (e.g., John 1:3; Eph. 3:9; Col. 1:16) and the Doctrine and Covenants (e.g., D&C 38:1–3; 45:1; 76:24; 93:9).

Jesus Christ is also known as Father through the spiritual rebirth of mankind (see BORN OF GOD). As the foreordained Redeemer, he became the “author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him” (Heb. 5:9). He is the Savior. No person will come unto the Father except through him and by his name (John 14:6; Acts 4:12; Mosiah 3:17). Those who accept the gospel of Jesus Christ and receive its saving covenantal ordinances, living worthy of its sanctifying and enlightening powers, are “born again” unto Christ and become known as the children of Christ, “his sons and daughters,” his “seed” (Mosiah 5:5–8; 15:10–13; 27:25–26; Alma 5:14). Christ thus becomes the Father of their salvation, the Father of life in the Spirit, the Father of the new birth. In a related sense, he is also the Father of all mankind in that the RESURRECTION of the entire human family comes through him (Sperry, p. 35).

Furthermore, Jesus is called Father because of the AUTHORITY God gave him to act for the Father. He explained in Jerusalem: “I can of mine own self do nothing . . . I am come in my Father’s name” (John 5:30, 43). An LDS leader has clarified this: “All revelation since the fall has come through Jesus Christ, who is the Jehovah of the Old Testament. . . . The Father has never dealt with man directly and personally since the fall, and he has never appeared except to introduce and bear record of the Son” (DS 1:27). Latter-day Saints understand this to mean that, except when introducing the Son, God always acts and speaks to mankind through Jesus Christ. Accordingly, the Father has placed his name upon the Son, authorized and empowered him to speak even in the first person begin. Satan will then have "no power over the hearts of the people, for they dwell in righteousness, and the Holy One of Israel reigneth" (1 Ne. 22:26; see also MILLENNIUM).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clark, James R., comp. "Proclamation of the Twelve." In Messages of the First Presidency, Vol. 1, p. 258. Salt Lake City, 1965.
- Lund, Gerald N. The Coming of the Lord. Salt Lake City, 1971.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Millennial Messiah: The Second Coming of the Son of Man. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. The Signs of the Times. Salt Lake City, 1964.

GERALD N. LUND

JESUS CHRIST, FATHERHOOD AND SONSHIP OF

Latter-day Saint scriptures refer to Jesus Christ as both the Father and the Son. Most notably in the Book of Mormon, Christ introduced himself to the BROTHER OF JARED saying, "I am the Father and the Son" (Ether 3:14); NEPHI<sub>1</sub> referred to the Lamb of God as "the Eternal Father" (1 Ne. 11:21, 1830 ed.), and the prophet ABINADI said that the Messiah would be "the Father . . . and the Son" (Mosiah 15:3). Such usage has been explained in several ways consistent with the fundamental LDS understanding of the Godhead as three distinct beings.

There is no lack of clarity about Christ's sonship. Jesus is the Son of God in at least three ways. First, he is the firstborn spirit child of God the Father and thereby the elder brother of the spirits of all men and women as God the Father, known also by the exalted name-title Elohim, is the father of the spirits of all mankind (Num. 16:22; Heb. 12:9; John 20:17). Thus, when Christ is called the Firstborn (e.g., Rom. 8:29; Col. 1:15; D&C 93:21), Latter-day Saints accept this as a possible reference to Christ's spiritual birth. Second, he is the literal physical son of God, the Only Begotten in the Flesh (e.g., John 1:14; 3:16; 2 Ne. 25:12; Jacob 4:11; D&C 29:42; 93:11; Moses 1:6; 2:26). Third, spiritually he is also a son by virtue of his submission unto the will of the Father (Heb. 5:8).

Jesus Christ is also known by the title of Father. The meaning of scriptures using this nomenclature is not always immediately clear, primarily owing to the fact that Christ and his Father are virtually inseparable in purpose, testimony, glory, and power. In most cases, however, the scriptural usage can be explained in several ways:

Christ is sometimes called Father because of his role as Creator from the beginning (see CREATION). Before his mortal birth, and acting under the direction of the Father, Jesus was JEHOVAH, the Lord Omnipotent, through whom God created worlds without number (Moses 1:33; 7:30; John 1:1-3; Heb. 1:2). Because of his creative role, Christ-Jehovah is called "the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things from the beginning" in the Book of Mormon (Mosiah 3:8; see also 2 Ne. 25:16; Alma 11:39; 3 Ne. 9:15). Jesus' role as Creator is similarly attested in the Bible (e.g., John 1:3; Eph. 3:9; Col. 1:16) and the Doctrine and Covenants (e.g., D&C 38:1-3; 45:1; 76:24; 93:9).

Jesus Christ is also known as Father through the spiritual rebirth of mankind (see BORN OF GOD). As the foreordained Redeemer, he became the "author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" (Heb. 5:9). He is the Savior. No person will come unto the Father except through him and by his name (John 14:6; Acts 4:12; Mosiah 3:17). Those who accept the gospel of Jesus Christ and receive its saving covenantal ordinances, living worthy of its sanctifying and enlightening powers, are "born again" unto Christ and become known as the children of Christ, "his sons and daughters," his "seed" (Mosiah 5:5-8; 15:10-13; 27:25-26; Alma 5:14). Christ thus becomes the Father of their salvation, the Father of life in the Spirit, the Father of the new birth. In a related sense, he is also the Father of all mankind in that the RESURRECTION of the entire human family comes through him (Sperry, p. 35).

Furthermore, Jesus is called Father because of the AUTHORITY God gave him to act for the Father. He explained in Jerusalem: "I can of mine own self do nothing . . . I am come in my Father's name" (John 5:30, 43). An LDS leader has clarified this: "All revelation since the fall has come through Jesus Christ, who is the Jehovah of the Old Testament. . . . The Father has never dealt with man directly and personally since the fall, and he has never appeared except to introduce and bear record of the Son" (DS 1:27). Latter-day Saints understand this to mean that, except when introducing the Son, God always acts and speaks to mankind through Jesus Christ. Accordingly, the Father has placed his name upon the Son, authorized and empowered him to speak even in the first person for him, as though he were the Father. An example of this is when the Lord Jehovah (who would later come to earth as Jesus of Nazareth) spoke to Moses: "Moses, my son; . . . thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten; and mine Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior" (Moses 1:6). Sometimes the Savior has spoken both as the Father (Elohim) and as the Son (Jesus) in the same revelation (e.g., D&C 29:1 and 42; 49:5 and 28).

In addition, Christ is Father in that he literally inherited attributes and powers from his Father (Elohim). From Mary, his mother, Jesus inherited MORTALITY, the capacity to die. From God, his Father, Jesus inherited IMMORTALITY, the capacity to live forever: "As the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself" (John 5:26; cf. Hel. 5:11). Christ is "the Father because he was conceived by the power of God" (Mosiah 15:3). "This is a matter of his Eternal Parent investing him with power from on high so that he becomes the Father because he exercises the power of that Eternal Being" (McConkie, p. 371).

Christ is also Father in that he spiritually received all that the Father has. "I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one—the Father because he gave me of his fulness, and the Son because I was in the world" (D&C 93:3–4).

Other explanations are likewise possible. All persons have multiple roles in life. A man can be a father, son, and brother; a woman can be a mother, daughter, and sister. These titles describe roles or functions at a given time, as well as relationships to others. For Latter-day Saints, this is so with the Christ. He has many names and titles. He ministers as both the Father and the Son. After explaining that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob would come to earth, take a body, and minister as both Father and Son, Abinadi summarized: "And they are one God, yea, the very Eternal Father of heaven and earth" (Mosiah 15:4; see also Mosiah 7:26–27; D&C 93:14). The Father and the Son, the Spirit and the flesh, the God and the man—these titles, roles, and attributes are blended wondrously in one being, Jesus Christ, in whom "dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. 2:9).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"The Father and the Son": A Doctrinal Exposition of the First Presidency and the Twelve," June 30, 1916. In MFP 5:26–34. Salt Lake City, 1971.

McConkie, Bruce R. The Promised Messiah, chaps. 4, 9, 20. Salt Lake City, 1978.

Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS 1:26–34. Salt Lake City, 1954.

Sperry, Sidney B. Answers to Book of Mormon Questions, pp. 31–38. Salt Lake City, 1967.

ROBERT L. MILLET

---

JESUS CHRIST, NAMES AND TITLES OF

Since Jesus Christ is the central focus both in Church devotion and in scripture, he is naturally known under many names and titles, including the following:

JESUS. The Hebrew yeshua' or yehoshua', meaning "Jehovah saves," is transliterated into English as the name Joshua. In Greek, it became Iesous, thence Iesus in Latin and Jesus in English. Since Jesus was actually Jehovah performing saving work, his name yeshua', "Jehovah saves," coincides precisely.

MESSIAH. This title comes from the Hebrew meshiach, "anointed one." Among the Israelites, prophets, priests and kings were anointed, designating them as rightful successors. Commonly, "messiah" referred to a figure awaited by ISRAEL to be her king. Applied to Jesus, the title retains its full sense of "anointed" prophet, priest, and king.

CHRIST. Greek for Messiah (anointed one) is Christos, Christ in English. Thus, "Jesus Christ" joins a name and a title, and means Jesus the Messiah.

SON OF GOD. Jesus was not the son of any mortal man. His biological father was God, the Father. As Son of God, Jesus represents the Father and acts as his agent in all things.

SON OF MAN. From his mother Jesus inherited mortality. Hebrew ben 'adam denotes "a son of Adam," that is, any mortal man (Dan. 8:17). Thus, as a son of Adam, Jesus represents Adam's children, acting as their agent with the Father. As both Son of God and Son of Man, Jesus stands between God and man as mediator. With the definite article, the Son of Man described an expected apocalyptic heavenly figure, identified with the Messiah (Dan. 7:13). Jesus is the son of the archetypal Man, the perfect heavenly Man, the Eternal Father (Moses 6:57; 7:35). In this sense, "Son of Man" equals "Son of God" and conveys an inten-for him, as though he were the Father. An example of this is when the Lord Jehovah (who would later come to earth as Jesus of Nazareth) spoke to Moses: "Moses, my son; . . . thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten; and mine Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior" (Moses 1:6). Sometimes the Savior has spoken both as the Father (Elohim) and as the Son (Jesus) in the same revelation (e.g., D&C 29:1 and 42; 49:5 and 28).

In addition, Christ is Father in that he literally inherited attributes and powers from his Father (Elohim). From Mary, his mother, Jesus inherited MORTALITY, the capacity to die. From God, his Father, Jesus inherited IMMORTALITY, the capacity to live forever: "As the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself" (John 5:26; cf. Hel. 5:11). Christ is "the Father because he was conceived by the power of God" (Mosiah 15:3). "This is a matter of his Eternal Parent investing him with power from on high so that he becomes the Father because he exercises the power of that Eternal Being" (McConkie, p. 371).

Christ is also Father in that he spiritually received all that the Father has. "I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one—the Father because he gave me of his fulness, and the Son because I was in the world" (D&C 93:3–4).

Other explanations are likewise possible. All persons have multiple roles in life. A man can be a father, son, and brother; a woman can be a mother, daughter, and sister. These titles describe roles or functions at a given time, as well as relationships to others. For Latter-day Saints, this is so with the Christ. He has many names and titles. He ministers as both the Father and the Son. After explaining that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob would come to earth, take a body, and minister as both Father and Son, Abinadi summarized: "And they are one God, yea, the very Eternal Father of heaven and earth" (Mosiah 15:4; see also Mosiah 7:26–27; D&C 93:14). The Father and the Son, the Spirit and the flesh, the God and the man—these titles, roles, and attributes are blended wondrously in one being, Jesus Christ, in whom "dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. 2:9).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"The Father and the Son": A Doctrinal Exposition of the First Presidency and the Twelve," June 30, 1916. In MFP 5:26–34. Salt Lake City, 1971.

McConkie, Bruce R. The Promised Messiah, chaps. 4, 9, 20. Salt Lake City, 1978.

Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS 1:26–34. Salt Lake City, 1954.

Sperry, Sidney B. Answers to Book of Mormon Questions, pp. 31–38. Salt Lake City, 1967.

ROBERT L. MILLET

---

JESUS CHRIST, NAMES AND TITLES OF

Since Jesus Christ is the central focus both in Church devotion and in scripture, he is naturally known under many names and titles, including the following:

JESUS. The Hebrew yeshua' or yehoshua', meaning "Jehovah saves," is transliterated into English as the name Joshua. In Greek, it became Iesous, thence Iesus in Latin and Jesus in English. Since Jesus was actually Jehovah performing saving work, his name yeshua', "Jehovah saves," coincides precisely.

MESSIAH. This title comes from the Hebrew meshiach, "anointed one." Among the Israelites, prophets, priests and kings were anointed, designating them as rightful successors. Commonly, "messiah" referred to a figure awaited by ISRAEL to be her king. Applied to Jesus, the title retains its full sense of "anointed" prophet, priest, and king.

CHRIST. Greek for Messiah (anointed one) is Christos, Christ in English. Thus, "Jesus Christ" joins a name and a title, and means Jesus the Messiah.

SON OF GOD. Jesus was not the son of any mortal man. His biological father was God, the Father. As Son of God, Jesus represents the Father and acts as his agent in all things.

SON OF MAN. From his mother Jesus inherited mortality. Hebrew ben 'adam denotes "a son of Adam," that is, any mortal man (Dan. 8:17). Thus, as a son of Adam, Jesus represents Adam's children, acting as their agent with the Father. As both Son of God and Son of Man, Jesus stands between God and man as mediator. With the definite article, the Son of Man described an expected apocalyptic heavenly figure, identified with the Messiah (Dan. 7:13). Jesus is the son of the archetypal Man, the perfect heavenly Man, the Eternal Father (Moses 6:57; 7:35). In this sense, "Son of Man" equals "Son of God" and conveys an intentional ambiguity, reflecting both Jesus' mortal and immortal parentage.

SON OF DAVID. Jews expected the Messiah to belong to David's lineage. Prophets had foretold that a son (descendant) of David would restore Israel's kingdom to its former zenith (see Isa. 11:1–9; Jer. 23:5–6). According to Matthew 1:1–16, Jesus was descended from David. "Son of David" refers particularly to Jesus' messiahship in its political aspect as Davidic king.

JEHOVAH. Latter-day Saints believe that Jesus was Jehovah himself, God of Israel, not son of Jehovah (Isa. 41:14; 43:11, 14; Mosiah 3:5; 3 Ne. 11:14; 15:5). The name Jehovah vocalized thus is not found in ancient texts, but is a modern convention. In ancient times, the Hebrew text had no vowels; thus the consonants in God's name were yhw. Jews avoided pronouncing these consonants when reading aloud, substituting 'adonai, a word meaning "the Lord." Following this practice, King James translators usually rendered yhw as "the LORD." In medieval Hebrew texts, the vowels from 'adonai were added to the consonants yhw to remind Jewish readers to say "'adonai." English translators adopted this convention, creating the artificial form "Jehovah." Latter-day Saints accept Jehovah as a name for the premortal Christ because this is the common English form for yhw.

EL. 'El is not a name, but is the common noun for God in Hebrew (plural, 'elohim). Latter-day Saints often use ELOHIM for the Father, allowing a distinction between members of the GODHEAD. Nevertheless, in the Old Testament, El and its cognates, such as Elohim and El Shaddai (God Almighty), usually refer to the premortal Jesus, the god ('el) of the Old Testament.

EMMANUEL. Since Jesus was the ancient El, the angel (Matt. 1:23) correctly called his name Emmanuel (Hebrew, 'immanu'el), meaning El (god) with us.

THE LORD. Since Jews uttered 'adonai (Lord) instead of the divine name, the Greek Bible (c. 200 B.C.) usually translated yhw as ho kurios, "the Lord." Thus, "the Lord," whether 'adonai or kurios, equaled "Jehovah." Not surprisingly, "the Lord" is Jesus' most common title in the New Testament. The confession of the early Church, "Jesus is Lord" could only mean Jesus is Jehovah.

I AM. In Exodus 3:14, Jehovah (Jesus Christ) identified himself as "I AM," perhaps affirming

Jesus as the creator who exists independently of his creation. Scholars see connections between this Old Testament title and Jesus' many "I am" statements in the New Testament, for example, "I am the good Shepherd" (John 10:11, 14), or "Before Abraham was I am" (John 8:58).

FATHER. In at least three senses Jesus is Father: (1) he is the creator of the physical universe; (2) he is the Father's agent in everything pertaining to this creation and its inhabitants; and (3) he is Father of all eternal, resurrected human beings. Jesus Christ begets spiritually and gives ETERNAL LIFE to one "born again," who thus becomes Christ's son or daughter (Mosiah 27:25). Moreover, Latter-day Saints call Christ "elder brother." In the premortal context this is correct, for there Jesus was "the Firstborn" of all spirit children of the Father (D&C 93:21). Nevertheless, "Father" best describes Christ's present and future relationship to mortals who have been spiritually reborn.

SECOND COMFORTER. The Holy Ghost, the Comforter, comforts the faithful with the assurance of inheriting the KINGDOM OF GOD. However, through faith in Christ one can receive a second comforter, an appearance of Jesus himself, who assures the individual of his or her place in the kingdom. After a witness from the Spirit, the Second Comforter is a personal witness from the risen Lord (John 14:16–23).

SAVIOR. The most sublime of titles, Savior underscores Jesus' role in the divine plan. Both Old and New Testaments specify that the Savior is God (Isa. 45:21–23; Luke 1:47; etc.). Through agony and death suffered for others, Jesus is able to erase imperfections and bestow worthiness, on condition of repentance. Since imperfect beings cannot reside in God's presence (D&C 1:31), Jesus saves believers from their imperfection, their sins, and their worst selves. (See also, above, the definition of his name, "Jesus.")

THE WORD. As words carry the thoughts of one mind to the minds of others, so Jesus communicates the mind and will of the Father to mortals. Moreover, as words are agents for expression, so from the beginning (John 1:1–3) Jesus is the agent for expressing and accomplishing the Father's will. Christ is both the messenger and the message.

ALPHA AND OMEGA. Equivalent to the Old Testament term "the first and the last" (e.g., Isa. 44:6), alpha and omega are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet. Just as no letters stand before alpha or after omega, so there are no other gods in this creation other than that represented in Jesus Christ. He encompasses all, from beginning to end; he extends beyond all extremities and categories.

ONLY BEGOTTEN. Jesus Christ is the only being begotten by the Father in MORTALITY. His full title is “the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh.” Since Mormons believe all humans were spiritually begotten by the Father before creation, “Only Begotten” is understood as being limited to mortality.

LAMB OF GOD. In the first Passover, a slain lamb’s blood was daubed on Israelites’ houses to avert the destroyer. In the New Testament, Jesus is understood as a Passover lamb supplied by God, and Passover stands as a type for the death of Jesus, the Lamb of God, whose blood, through BAPTISM and the SACRAMENT of the Lord’s Supper, protects Christians from the destroyer, Satan. According to Moses 5:6–8, animal sacrifices were to be “a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father.”

STEPHEN E. ROBINSON

---

JESUS CHRIST, SECOND COMFORTER

The term “Second Comforter” refers to Jesus Christ in his role of ministering personally to his faithful followers (John 14:21–23; D&C 93:1; 130:3). Jesus taught his disciples that the Holy Ghost was a comforter (John 14:26), but he also spoke of a second comforter (John 14:16–21). Latter-day Saints have been given additional understanding about the Second Comforter by the Prophet Joseph SMITH:

After a person has faith in Christ, repents of his sins, and is baptized for the remission of his sins and receives the Holy Ghost (by the laying on of hands), which is the first Comforter, then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and living by every word of God, and the Lord will soon say unto him, Son, thou shalt be exalted. When the Lord has thoroughly proved him, and finds that the man is determined to serve Him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and his election made sure, then it will be his privilege to receive the other Comforter, which the Lord hath promised the Saints, as is recorded in the testimony of St. John, in the 14th chapter, from the 12th to the 27th verses. . . .

Now what is this other Comforter? It is no more nor less than the Lord Jesus Christ Himself; . . . when any man obtains this last Comforter, he will have the personage of Jesus Christ to attend him, or appear unto him from time to time, and even He will manifest the Father unto him, and they will take up their abode with him, and the visions of the heavens will be opened unto him, and the Lord will teach him face to face, and he may have a perfect knowledge of the mysteries of the Kingdom of God; and this is the state and place the ancient Saints arrived at when they had such glorious visions—Isaiah, Ezekiel, John upon the Isle of Patmos, St. Paul in the three heavens, and all the Saints who held communion with the general assembly and Church of the First Born [TPJS, pp. 150–51].

The Lord has counseled his Saints to “seek his face” (D&C 101:37–38). No sinful person can endure his presence, and hence will not obtain the blessing (D&C 67:10–13; JST Ex. 33:11, 20). In God’s wisdom, some faithful individuals are blessed with the Second Comforter while remaining in mortality.

[See also Calling and Election; Jesus Christ: Latter-day Appearances of.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 492–99, 549. Salt Lake City, 1985.

THOMAS E. SHERRY

---

JESUS CHRIST, SOURCES FOR WORDS OF

For followers of Jesus Christ, nothing has more authority or significance than his very words. Called ipsissima verba or logia, they are not colored by paraphrase or interpretation, but represent his exact instructions, whether spoken by Jesus himself in the first person or by another commissioned by him, speaking in the first person—as if God—through the power of the HOLY GHOST (2 Ne. 32:3; 33:10–11; D&C 1:38; cf. Rev. 19:1–10).

The status given Jesus’ words goes back to early Christianity. Much current interest in New Testament APOCRYPHA rests in the hope of recovering authentic sayings of Jesus. For example, in of the Greek alphabet. Just as no letters stand before alpha or after omega, so there are no other gods in this creation other than that represented in Jesus Christ. He encompasses all, from beginning to end; he extends beyond all extremities and categories.

ONLY BEGOTTEN. Jesus Christ is the only being begotten by the Father in MORTALITY. His full title is “the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh.” Since Mormons believe all humans were spiritually begotten by the Father before creation, “Only Begotten” is understood as being limited to mortality.

LAMB OF GOD. In the first Passover, a slain lamb’s blood was daubed on Israelites’ houses to avert the destroyer. In the New Testament, Jesus is understood as a Passover lamb supplied by God, and Passover stands as a type for the death of Jesus, the Lamb of God, whose blood, through BAPTISM and the SACRAMENT of the Lord’s Supper, protects Christians from the destroyer, Satan. According to Moses 5:6–8, animal sacrifices were to be “a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father.”

STEPHEN E. ROBINSON

---

JESUS CHRIST, SECOND COMFORTER

The term “Second Comforter” refers to Jesus Christ in his role of ministering personally to his faithful followers (John 14:21–23; D&C 93:1; 130:3). Jesus taught his disciples that the Holy Ghost was a comforter (John 14:26), but he also spoke of a second comforter (John 14:16–21). Latter-day Saints have been given additional understanding about the Second Comforter by the Prophet Joseph SMITH:

After a person has faith in Christ, repents of his sins, and is baptized for the remission of his sins and receives the Holy Ghost (by the laying on of hands), which is the first Comforter, then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and living by every word of God, and the Lord will soon say unto him, Son, thou shalt be exalted. When the Lord has thoroughly proved him, and finds that the man is determined to serve Him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and his election made sure, then it will be his privilege to receive the other Comforter, which the Lord hath promised the Saints, as is recorded in the testimony of St. John, in the 14th chapter, from the 12th to the 27th verses. . . .

Now what is this other Comforter? It is no more nor less than the Lord Jesus Christ Himself; . . . when any man obtains this last Comforter, he will have the personage of Jesus Christ to attend him, or appear unto him from time to time, and even He will manifest the Father unto him, and they will take up their abode with him, and the visions of the heavens will be opened unto him, and the Lord will teach him face to face, and he may have a perfect knowledge of the mysteries of the Kingdom of God; and this is the state and place the ancient Saints arrived at when they had such glorious visions—Isaiah, Ezekiel, John upon the Isle of Patmos, St. Paul in the three heavens, and all the Saints who held communion with the general assembly and Church of the First Born [TPJS, pp. 150–51].

The Lord has counseled his Saints to “seek his face” (D&C 101:37–38). No sinful person can endure his presence, and hence will not obtain the blessing (D&C 67:10–13; JST Ex. 33:11, 20). In God’s wisdom, some faithful individuals are blessed with the Second Comforter while remaining in mortality.

[See also Calling and Election; Jesus Christ: Latter-day Appearances of.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 492–99, 549. Salt Lake City, 1985.

THOMAS E. SHERRY

---

JESUS CHRIST, SOURCES FOR WORDS OF

For followers of Jesus Christ, nothing has more authority or significance than his very words. Called ipsissima verba or logia, they are not colored by paraphrase or interpretation, but represent his exact instructions, whether spoken by Jesus himself in the first person or by another commissioned by him, speaking in the first person—as if God—through the power of the HOLY GHOST (2 Ne. 32:3; 33:10–11; D&C 1:38; cf. Rev. 19:1–10).

The status given Jesus’ words goes back to early Christianity. Much current interest in New Testament APOCRYPHA rests in the hope of recovering authentic sayings of Jesus. For example, in of the Greek alphabet. Just as no letters stand before alpha or after omega, so there are no other gods in this creation other than that represented in Jesus Christ. He encompasses all, from beginning to end; he extends beyond all extremities and categories.

ONLY BEGOTTEN. Jesus Christ is the only being begotten by the Father in MORTALITY. His full title is “the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh.” Since Mormons believe all humans were spiritually begotten by the Father before creation, “Only Begotten” is understood as being limited to mortality.

LAMB OF GOD. In the first Passover, a slain lamb’s blood was daubed on Israelites’ houses to avert the destroyer. In the New Testament, Jesus is understood as a Passover lamb supplied by God, and Passover stands as a type for the death of Jesus, the Lamb of God, whose blood, through BAPTISM and the SACRAMENT of the Lord’s Supper, protects Christians from the destroyer, Satan. According to Moses 5:6–8, animal sacrifices were to be “a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father.”

STEPHEN E. ROBINSON

---

JESUS CHRIST, SECOND COMFORTER

The term “Second Comforter” refers to Jesus Christ in his role of ministering personally to his faithful followers (John 14:21–23; D&C 93:1; 130:3). Jesus taught his disciples that the Holy Ghost was a comforter (John 14:26), but he also spoke of a second comforter (John 14:16–21). Latter-day Saints have been given additional understanding about the Second Comforter by the Prophet Joseph SMITH:

After a person has faith in Christ, repents of his sins, and is baptized for the remission of his sins and receives the Holy Ghost (by the laying on of hands), which is the first Comforter, then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and living by every word of God, and the Lord will soon say unto him, Son, thou shalt be exalted. When the Lord has thoroughly proved him, and finds that the man is determined to serve Him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and his election made sure, then it will be his privilege to receive the other Comforter, which the Lord hath promised the Saints, as is recorded in the testimony of St. John, in the 14th chapter, from the 12th to the 27th verses. . . .

Now what is this other Comforter? It is no more nor less than the Lord Jesus Christ Himself; . . . when any man obtains this last Comforter, he will have the personage of Jesus Christ to attend him, or appear unto him from time to time, and even He will manifest the Father unto him, and they will take up their abode with him, and the visions of the heavens will be opened unto him, and the Lord will teach him face to face, and he may have a perfect knowledge of the mysteries of the Kingdom of God; and this is the state and place the ancient Saints arrived at when they had such glorious visions—Isaiah, Ezekiel, John upon the Isle of Patmos, St. Paul in the three heavens, and all the Saints who held communion with the general assembly and Church of the First Born [TPJS, pp. 150–51].

The Lord has counseled his Saints to “seek his face” (D&C 101:37–38). No sinful person can endure his presence, and hence will not obtain the blessing (D&C 67:10–13; JST Ex. 33:11, 20). In God’s wisdom, some faithful individuals are blessed with the Second Comforter while remaining in mortality.

[See also Calling and Election; Jesus Christ: Latter-day Appearances of.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 492–99, 549. Salt Lake City, 1985.

THOMAS E. SHERRY

---

JESUS CHRIST, SOURCES FOR WORDS OF

For followers of Jesus Christ, nothing has more authority or significance than his very words. Called ipsissima verba or logia, they are not colored by paraphrase or interpretation, but represent his exact instructions, whether spoken by Jesus himself in the first person or by another commissioned by him, speaking in the first person—as if God—through the power of the HOLY GHOST (2 Ne. 32:3; 33:10–11; D&C 1:38; cf. Rev. 19:1–10).

The status given Jesus’ words goes back to early Christianity. Much current interest in New Testament APOCRYPHA rests in the hope of recovering authentic sayings of Jesus. For example, in the words of a modern editor, "The Gospel of Thomas is not a 'gospel' in the proper sense. . . . it is no other and no less than a collection of 114 logia, the most extensive collection of sayings of Jesus, or sayings attributed to Jesus, that has yet come down to us independently of the New Testament tradition" (Puech, pp. 284–85).

Some ancient and contemporary sources unique to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints augment the known body of Jesus' words. The Church teaches that Jesus Christ is both the God of the Old Testament and the New Testament. Therefore, it views quotes attributed to God in the Old Testament as ipsissima verba of Jesus. For example, God's command to Moses to "stretch out thine hand over the sea, and divide it" is considered to be from Jesus Christ (Ex. 14:16; cf. 1 Cor. 10:1–4). Moreover, when ancient prophets quote God in the first person, such as "I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering" (Isa. 61:8), these words are reckoned as Jesus' ipsissima verba (see JESUS CHRIST: FIRSTBORN IN THE SPIRIT and JESUS CHRIST, NAMES AND TITLES OF).

As the Prophet Joseph SMITH produced under inspiration the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST), many logia were recorded. For instance, after Moses broke the first set of tablets with the Ten Commandments, the Lord commanded him to make another. In current Hebrew manuscripts, God says that he will rewrite what was on the first. But in the JST, the Lord adds, "It shall not be according to the first [tablets], for I will take away the priesthood out of their midst; therefore my holy order, and the ordinances thereof, shall not go before them" (JST Ex. 34:11–12; Deut. 10:1–2; cf. D&C 84:18–27).

The JST also adds logia to the New Testament. As background to Jesus' illustration of not putting new wine into old bottles, the JST adds, "Then said the Pharisees unto him, Why will ye not receive us with our baptism, seeing we keep the whole law? But Jesus said unto them, Ye keep not the law. If ye had kept the law, ye would have received me, for I am he who gave the law. I receive not you with your baptism, because it profiteth you nothing. For when that which is new is come, the old is ready to be put away" (JST Matt. 9:18–21). Such passages, although not in any extant Greek text, are accepted by Latter-day Saints as true sayings of Jesus.

In addition to accepting biblical scripture, the Church has canonized other scriptures which preserve ipsissima verba of Jesus Christ: the Pearl of Great Price, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants.

In the Pearl of Great Price, the BOOK OF MOSES—an excerpt from the JST—preserves the declaration well known among Latter-day Saints, "For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man" (Moses 1:39). The BOOK OF ABRAHAM also contains teachings of Jehovah, or Christ. In chapter 3, Jehovah compares the nature of the universe to the variety of spirits, or intelligences, that inhabit the universe. Recounting God's dealings with people inhabiting the American continent, the Book of Mormon also preserves sayings given to their prophets. In addition to specific words from "the Son" recorded by NEPHI<sub>1</sub> (2 Ne. 31:12, 14) and others (e.g., MORONI<sub>2</sub> in Ether 12:26–28), Jesus' words spoken to the people of the Western Hemisphere soon after his resurrection also appear. Besides a discourse similar to the Sermon on the Mount recorded in Matthew 5–7 (3 Ne. 12–14), the risen Jesus spoke of baptism (3 Ne. 11), the sacrament (chap. 18), the gathering of Israel, and the helping role of the GENTILES (chaps. 16, 20–21).

The Doctrine and Covenants records sayings of Christ directed to people of the contemporary world: "Hearken, O ye people of my church, . . . verily I say: Hearken ye people from afar; and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together," are words spoken in 1831 (D&C 1:1). This volume comprises an extensive collection of the words of Jesus Christ as a VOICE OF WARNING and instruction on how to prepare both the earth and one's own heart for his second coming.

An additional contemporary source for the words of Christ resides in statements of the PRESIDENTS OF THE CHURCH. The Lord has declared that "his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth" (D&C 1:38; 21:5). Thus, whenever the President of the Church speaks officially within his office and CALLING, his words are considered by Latter-day Saints to have the same authority as words of the Lord himself.

[See also Jesus Christ in the Scriptures.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Millet, Robert L. "The Formation of the Canonical Gospels." In Apocryphal Writings and the Latter-day Saints, ed. W. Griggs. Provo, Utah, 1986.

Puech, Henri-Charles. "Gnostic Gospels and Related Documents." In New Testament Apocrypha, ed. Edgar Hennecke and Wilhelm Schneemelcher, Vol. 1, pp. 231–362. Philadelphia, 1963.

J. PHILIP SCHIAELLING

JESUS CHRIST, TAKING THE NAME OF, UPON ONESELF

It is a doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that the only way to obtain salvation is to take the name of Jesus Christ upon oneself. This is categorically stated in several latter-day revelations. Although not specifically stated in the Bible, the concept is implied in Paul's declaration to "put on Christ" (Rom. 13:14; Gal. 3:27); Peter's statement that Jesus Christ is the only name given "among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12; Ex. 15:2; 1 Sam. 2:1; Ps. 27:1); and the Lord's instruction to Moses to "put my name upon the children of Israel" (Num. 6:27; cf. Jer. 15:16). The taking of the name of Christ upon oneself in this dispensation begins with being baptized into his Church and keeping the commandments.

The Lord declared to the Prophet Joseph SMITH that all persons desiring a place in the kingdom of the Father must take upon themselves the name of Christ (D&C 18:24–25, 27). Amulek, in the Book of Mormon, counseled the wayward Zoramites to "take upon you the name of Christ" (Alma 34:38). The resurrected Jesus promised, "Whoso taketh upon him my name, and endureth to the end, the same shall be saved at the last day" (3 Ne. 27:5–6; cf. Mosiah 25:23; 26:18). Abraham was told by the Lord, "I will take thee, to put upon thee my name" (Abr. 1:18).

Sacred covenant making is associated with taking the name of Jesus upon oneself. King BENJAMIN said, "There is no other name given whereby salvation cometh; therefore, I would that ye should take upon you the name of Christ, all you that have entered into the covenant with God that ye should be obedient unto the end of your lives" (Mosiah 5:8; cf. 18:8–12; Alma 46:15). The covenants of BAPTISM (D&C 20:37; cf. 2 Ne. 31:13) and of the Lord's Supper (D&C 20:77; Moro. 4:3) require taking the name of Jesus Christ upon oneself. Bruce R. McConkie, a latter-day APOSTLE, stated, "We have taken upon ourselves his name in the waters of baptism. We renew the covenant therein made when we partake of the sacrament [Lord's Supper]. If we have been born again, we have become the sons and daughters of the Lord Jesus Christ" (McConkie, p. 393).

Dallin H. Oaks, also an apostle, further explained that "we take upon us the name of Christ when we are baptized in his name, when we belong to his Church and profess our belief in him, and when we do the work of his kingdom. There are other meanings as well, deeper meanings that the more mature members of the Church should understand and ponder" (Oaks, p. 80). The "deeper meanings" are identified as inheriting the fulness of God's glory and obtaining EXALTATION in the celestial kingdom (Oaks, pp. 81–83).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. "Jesus Christ and Him Crucified." In BYU Devotional Speeches of the Year, pp. 391–405. Provo, Utah, 1976.

Oaks, Dallin H. "Taking Upon Us the Name of Jesus Christ," Ensign 15 (May 1985):80–83.

PAUL R. WARNER

JESUS CHRIST, TYPES AND SHADOWS OF

Latter-day Saints believe that many events, persons, and objects in the Old Testament and other scriptures were "types" or foreshadowings of Jesus Christ. Jesus taught, for instance, that manna had anticipated him, the true heavenly bread (John 6:30–35), and that Jonah's three days in the fish signified his death and burial (Matt. 12:38–41).

Paul affirmed that the water produced from a rock by Moses pointed to the spiritual nourishment to come through Jesus (Ex. 17:6; 1 Cor. 10:4); furthermore, he asserted that the first Adam prefigured Jesus, the second Adam, who brought life to his spiritual offspring in contrast to Adam who brought death (Rom. 5:12–21; 1 Cor. 15:45). Similarly, the inheritances of Ishmael and Isaac foreshadowed differences between the old covenant and the new (Gal. 4:22–31).

According to Hebrews 7:15, the Messiah came "after the similitude of Melchizedek," (Hebrew, "King of Righteousness") who prefigured the roles of priest and king. The genealogy of Jesus in Matthew 1:2–17 was written to prove that Jesus was both descended from and foreshadowed by David as king over Israel. Some LDS leaders have taught that the lives of many prophets have served as types of Christ (McConkie, pp. 448–53).

Puech, Henri-Charles. "Gnostic Gospels and Related Documents." In New Testament Apocrypha, ed. Edgar Hennecke and Wilhelm Schneemelcher, Vol. 1, pp. 231–362. Philadelphia, 1963.

J. PHILIP SCHIAELLING

JESUS CHRIST, TAKING THE NAME OF, UPON ONESELF

It is a doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that the only way to obtain salvation is to take the name of Jesus Christ upon oneself. This is categorically stated in several latter-day revelations. Although not specifically stated in the Bible, the concept is implied in Paul's declaration to "put on Christ" (Rom. 13:14; Gal. 3:27); Peter's statement that Jesus Christ is the only name given "among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12; Ex. 15:2; 1 Sam. 2:1; Ps. 27:1); and the Lord's instruction to Moses to "put my name upon the children of Israel" (Num. 6:27; cf. Jer. 15:16). The taking of the name of Christ upon oneself in this dispensation begins with being baptized into his Church and keeping the commandments.

The Lord declared to the Prophet Joseph SMITH that all persons desiring a place in the kingdom of the Father must take upon themselves the name of Christ (D&C 18:24–25, 27). Amulek, in the Book of Mormon, counseled the wayward Zoramites to "take upon you the name of Christ" (Alma 34:38). The resurrected Jesus promised, "Whoso taketh upon him my name, and endureth to the end, the same shall be saved at the last day" (3 Ne. 27:5–6; cf. Mosiah 25:23; 26:18). Abraham was told by the Lord, "I will take thee, to put upon thee my name" (Abr. 1:18).

Sacred covenant making is associated with taking the name of Jesus upon oneself. King BENJAMIN said, "There is no other name given whereby salvation cometh; therefore, I would that ye should take upon you the name of Christ, all you that have entered into the covenant with God that ye should be obedient unto the end of your lives" (Mosiah 5:8; cf. 18:8–12; Alma 46:15). The covenants of BAPTISM (D&C 20:37; cf. 2 Ne. 31:13) and of the Lord's Supper (D&C 20:77; Moro. 4:3) require taking the name of Jesus Christ upon oneself. Bruce R. McConkie, a latter-day APOSTLE, stated, "We have taken upon ourselves his name in the waters of baptism. We renew the covenant therein made when we partake of the sacrament [Lord's Supper]. If we have been born again, we have become the sons and daughters of the Lord Jesus Christ" (McConkie, p. 393).

Dallin H. Oaks, also an apostle, further explained that "we take upon us the name of Christ when we are baptized in his name, when we belong to his Church and profess our belief in him, and when we do the work of his kingdom. There are other meanings as well, deeper meanings that the more mature members of the Church should understand and ponder" (Oaks, p. 80). The "deeper meanings" are identified as inheriting the fulness of God's glory and obtaining EXALTATION in the celestial kingdom (Oaks, pp. 81–83).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. "Jesus Christ and Him Crucified." In BYU Devotional Speeches of the Year, pp. 391–405. Provo, Utah, 1976.

Oaks, Dallin H. "Taking Upon Us the Name of Jesus Christ," Ensign 15 (May 1985):80–83.

PAUL R. WARNER

JESUS CHRIST, TYPES AND SHADOWS OF

Latter-day Saints believe that many events, persons, and objects in the Old Testament and other scriptures were "types" or foreshadowings of Jesus Christ. Jesus taught, for instance, that manna had anticipated him, the true heavenly bread (John 6:30–35), and that Jonah's three days in the fish signified his death and burial (Matt. 12:38–41).

Paul affirmed that the water produced from a rock by Moses pointed to the spiritual nourishment to come through Jesus (Ex. 17:6; 1 Cor. 10:4); furthermore, he asserted that the first Adam prefigured Jesus, the second Adam, who brought life to his spiritual offspring in contrast to Adam who brought death (Rom. 5:12–21; 1 Cor. 15:45). Similarly, the inheritances of Ishmael and Isaac foreshadowed differences between the old covenant and the new (Gal. 4:22–31).

According to Hebrews 7:15, the Messiah came "after the similitude of Melchizedek," (Hebrew, "King of Righteousness") who prefigured the roles of priest and king. The genealogy of Jesus in Matthew 1:2–17 was written to prove that Jesus was both descended from and foreshadowed by David as king over Israel. Some LDS leaders have taught that the lives of many prophets have served as types of Christ (McConkie, pp. 448–53).

Puech, Henri-Charles. "Gnostic Gospels and Related Documents." In New Testament Apocrypha, ed. Edgar Hennecke and Wilhelm Schneemelcher, Vol. 1, pp. 231–362. Philadelphia, 1963.

J. PHILIP SCHIAELLING

JESUS CHRIST, TAKING THE NAME OF, UPON ONESELF

It is a doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that the only way to obtain salvation is to take the name of Jesus Christ upon oneself. This is categorically stated in several latter-day revelations. Although not specifically stated in the Bible, the concept is implied in Paul's declaration to "put on Christ" (Rom. 13:14; Gal. 3:27); Peter's statement that Jesus Christ is the only name given "among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12; Ex. 15:2; 1 Sam. 2:1; Ps. 27:1); and the Lord's instruction to Moses to "put my name upon the children of Israel" (Num. 6:27; cf. Jer. 15:16). The taking of the name of Christ upon oneself in this dispensation begins with being baptized into his Church and keeping the commandments.

The Lord declared to the Prophet Joseph SMITH that all persons desiring a place in the kingdom of the Father must take upon themselves the name of Christ (D&C 18:24–25, 27). Amulek, in the Book of Mormon, counseled the wayward Zoramites to "take upon you the name of Christ" (Alma 34:38). The resurrected Jesus promised, "Whoso taketh upon him my name, and endureth to the end, the same shall be saved at the last day" (3 Ne. 27:5–6; cf. Mosiah 25:23; 26:18). Abraham was told by the Lord, "I will take thee, to put upon thee my name" (Abr. 1:18).

Sacred covenant making is associated with taking the name of Jesus upon oneself. King BENJAMIN said, "There is no other name given whereby salvation cometh; therefore, I would that ye should take upon you the name of Christ, all you that have entered into the covenant with God that ye should be obedient unto the end of your lives" (Mosiah 5:8; cf. 18:8–12; Alma 46:15). The covenants of BAPTISM (D&C 20:37; cf. 2 Ne. 31:13) and of the Lord's Supper (D&C 20:77; Moro. 4:3) require taking the name of Jesus Christ upon oneself. Bruce R. McConkie, a latter-day APOSTLE, stated, "We have taken upon ourselves his name in the waters of baptism. We renew the covenant therein made when we partake of the sacrament [Lord's Supper]. If we have been born again, we have become the sons and daughters of the Lord Jesus Christ" (McConkie, p. 393).

Dallin H. Oaks, also an apostle, further explained that "we take upon us the name of Christ when we are baptized in his name, when we belong to his Church and profess our belief in him, and when we do the work of his kingdom. There are other meanings as well, deeper meanings that the more mature members of the Church should understand and ponder" (Oaks, p. 80). The "deeper meanings" are identified as inheriting the fulness of God's glory and obtaining EXALTATION in the celestial kingdom (Oaks, pp. 81–83).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. "Jesus Christ and Him Crucified." In BYU Devotional Speeches of the Year, pp. 391–405. Provo, Utah, 1976.

Oaks, Dallin H. "Taking Upon Us the Name of Jesus Christ," Ensign 15 (May 1985):80–83.

PAUL R. WARNER

JESUS CHRIST, TYPES AND SHADOWS OF

Latter-day Saints believe that many events, persons, and objects in the Old Testament and other scriptures were "types" or foreshadowings of Jesus Christ. Jesus taught, for instance, that manna had anticipated him, the true heavenly bread (John 6:30–35), and that Jonah's three days in the fish signified his death and burial (Matt. 12:38–41).

Paul affirmed that the water produced from a rock by Moses pointed to the spiritual nourishment to come through Jesus (Ex. 17:6; 1 Cor. 10:4); furthermore, he asserted that the first Adam prefigured Jesus, the second Adam, who brought life to his spiritual offspring in contrast to Adam who brought death (Rom. 5:12–21; 1 Cor. 15:45). Similarly, the inheritances of Ishmael and Isaac foreshadowed differences between the old covenant and the new (Gal. 4:22–31).

According to Hebrews 7:15, the Messiah came "after the similitude of Melchizedek," (Hebrew, "King of Righteousness") who prefigured the roles of priest and king. The genealogy of Jesus in Matthew 1:2–17 was written to prove that Jesus was both descended from and foreshadowed by David as king over Israel. Some LDS leaders have taught that the lives of many prophets have served as types of Christ (McConkie, pp. 448–53).

Prototypes and intimations can also be found in the symbolism of ancient Israel's sacred ceremonies. For example, the scapegoat and purification rites of the Day of Atonement signify Christ's salvation wrought by suffering and death (Heb. 9:7–14). Further, the Feast of Tabernacles, with its harvest and light associations, teaches of the Messianic reign (2 Bar. 29:4–8; John 8:12).

Book of Mormon passages add impetus to the notion of scriptural types. Amulek observed that “the whole meaning of the [Mosaic] law . . . point[ed] to that great and last sacrifice . . . [of] the Son of God” (Alma 34:14). Moreover, Abraham's offering of Isaac was called a “similitude of God and [the sacrifice of] his Only Begotten Son” (Jacob 4:5). God showed to ancient Israel “many signs, and wonders, and types, and shadows . . . concerning [Christ's] coming” (Mosiah 3:15). The prophet Alma called the LIAHONA a God-given compass, a “type” of Christ, who guides toward eternal life (Alma 37:38–46). In the broad sense, “all things . . . given of God . . . unto man, are the typifying of [Christ]” (2 Ne. 11:4).

The Pearl of Great Price also teaches that all creation bears record of Christ (Moses 6:63). This includes the sun, which points to him, the light of the world (see D&C 88:5–13). Similarly, every revealed ordinance exhibits a symbolic linkage to one element or another of Jesus' ministry. For example, just as the daily sacrifices of Jerusalem's temple foreshadowed Christ's sacrifice (Heb. 7:26–28), so Latter-day Saints see gospel ORDINANCES as pointing to him and to the way back into his presence.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. The Promised Messiah, pp. 374–453. Salt Lake City, 1978.

Read, Lenet H. “Symbols of the Harvest: Old Testament Holy Days and the Lord's Ministry.” Ensign (Jan. 1975):32–36.

LENET HADLEY READ

JESUS CHRIST IN THE SCRIPTURES

[This entry consists of four articles:

- Jesus Christ in the Bible
- Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon
- Jesus Christ in the Doctrine and Covenants
- Jesus Christ in the Pearl of Great Price

Jesus Christ is the central focus in all scriptures accepted by Latter-day Saints. Jesus Christ in the Bible details how Jesus is seen as the central figure—both in prophecy and in its fulfillment—in the Old and New Testaments. The article Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon treats the pivotal prophetic interest in Christ manifested in the Book of Mormon, including his post-resurrection appearance to people in the Western Hemisphere. Jesus Christ in the Doctrine and Covenants illuminates the fundamental dominance of the person of Jesus in latter-day revelation. The article Jesus Christ in the Pearl of Great Price summarizes Jesus' place both in ancient prophetic expectation and in its latter-day fruition.]

JESUS CHRIST IN THE BIBLE

Latter-day Saints view Jesus Christ as the central figure of the entire Bible. The Old and New Testaments are divinely inspired records that reveal the mission of Jesus as Creator, God of Israel, Messiah, Son of God, Redeemer, and eternal King. The Bible contains history, doctrinal teachings, and prophecy of future events, with Jesus Christ as the main subject in every category.

The Old Testament contains an account of the Creation, and of the dealings of God with the human family from Adam to about 400 B.C. The promise of a messiah is a generally pervading theme. The New Testament chronicles principal events in the earth life of Jesus the Messiah from his birth through death, resurrection, and ascension into heaven, with a promise that he will return to earth to judge the world and then reign as king. Latter-day Saints identify Jesus as Jehovah, the Creator, the God of Adam, of Abraham, of Moses, and of Israel. Jesus is Jehovah come to earth as the promised Messiah (see JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST). Hence, the dealings of God with the human family throughout the Old Testament and New Testament periods form a record of the premortal and the mortal Jesus Christ.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS. Latter-day Saints take the biblical message about Jesus literally (see JESUS CHRIST: MINISTRY OF). The historical Jesus is the Jesus of the Bible: the Only Begotten Son of God in the flesh, born of the Virgin MARY in Bethlehem, baptized by John the Baptist. He performed a variety of miracles, was a teacher of the gospel who occasionally spoke in parables, and “went about doing good” (Acts 10:38). He chose twelve apostles, organized a church, gathered many followers, and was rejected by the Jewish rulers. His attitudes toward Samaritans, women, political leaders (e.g., Herod, Caesar), ritual law, and prayer were rather revolutionary for his day. He Prototypes and intimations can also be found in the symbolism of ancient Israel's sacred ceremonies. For example, the scapegoat and purification rites of the Day of Atonement signify Christ's salvation wrought by suffering and death (Heb. 9:7–14). Further, the Feast of Tabernacles, with its harvest and light associations, teaches of the Messianic reign (2 Bar. 29:4–8; John 8:12).

Book of Mormon passages add impetus to the notion of scriptural types. Amulek observed that “the whole meaning of the [Mosaic] law . . . point[ed] to that great and last sacrifice . . . [of] the Son of God” (Alma 34:14). Moreover, Abraham's offering of Isaac was called a “similitude of God and [the sacrifice of] his Only Begotten Son” (Jacob 4:5). God showed to ancient Israel “many signs, and wonders, and types, and shadows . . . concerning [Christ's] coming” (Mosiah 3:15). The prophet Alma called the LIAHONA a God-given compass, a “type” of Christ, who guides toward eternal life (Alma 37:38–46). In the broad sense, “all things . . . given of God . . . unto man, are the typifying of [Christ]” (2 Ne. 11:4).

The Pearl of Great Price also teaches that all creation bears record of Christ (Moses 6:63). This includes the sun, which points to him, the light of the world (see D&C 88:5–13). Similarly, every revealed ordinance exhibits a symbolic linkage to one element or another of Jesus' ministry. For example, just as the daily sacrifices of Jerusalem's temple foreshadowed Christ's sacrifice (Heb. 7:26–28), so Latter-day Saints see gospel ORDINANCES as pointing to him and to the way back into his presence.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. The Promised Messiah, pp. 374–453. Salt Lake City, 1978.

Read, Lenet H. “Symbols of the Harvest: Old Testament Holy Days and the Lord's Ministry.” Ensign (Jan. 1975):32–36.

LENET HADLEY READ

JESUS CHRIST IN THE SCRIPTURES

[This entry consists of four articles:

- Jesus Christ in the Bible
- Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon
- Jesus Christ in the Doctrine and Covenants
- Jesus Christ in the Pearl of Great Price

Jesus Christ is the central focus in all scriptures accepted by Latter-day Saints. Jesus Christ in the Bible details how Jesus is seen as the central figure—both in prophecy and in its fulfillment—in the Old and New Testaments. The article Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon treats the pivotal prophetic interest in Christ manifested in the Book of Mormon, including his post-resurrection appearance to people in the Western Hemisphere. Jesus Christ in the Doctrine and Covenants illuminates the fundamental dominance of the person of Jesus in latter-day revelation. The article Jesus Christ in the Pearl of Great Price summarizes Jesus' place both in ancient prophetic expectation and in its latter-day fruition.]

JESUS CHRIST IN THE BIBLE

Latter-day Saints view Jesus Christ as the central figure of the entire Bible. The Old and New Testaments are divinely inspired records that reveal the mission of Jesus as Creator, God of Israel, Messiah, Son of God, Redeemer, and eternal King. The Bible contains history, doctrinal teachings, and prophecy of future events, with Jesus Christ as the main subject in every category.

The Old Testament contains an account of the Creation, and of the dealings of God with the human family from Adam to about 400 B.C. The promise of a messiah is a generally pervading theme. The New Testament chronicles principal events in the earth life of Jesus the Messiah from his birth through death, resurrection, and ascension into heaven, with a promise that he will return to earth to judge the world and then reign as king. Latter-day Saints identify Jesus as Jehovah, the Creator, the God of Adam, of Abraham, of Moses, and of Israel. Jesus is Jehovah come to earth as the promised Messiah (see JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST). Hence, the dealings of God with the human family throughout the Old Testament and New Testament periods form a record of the premortal and the mortal Jesus Christ.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS. Latter-day Saints take the biblical message about Jesus literally (see JESUS CHRIST: MINISTRY OF). The historical Jesus is the Jesus of the Bible: the Only Begotten Son of God in the flesh, born of the Virgin MARY in Bethlehem, baptized by John the Baptist. He performed a variety of miracles, was a teacher of the gospel who occasionally spoke in parables, and “went about doing good” (Acts 10:38). He chose twelve apostles, organized a church, gathered many followers, and was rejected by the Jewish rulers. His attitudes toward Samaritans, women, political leaders (e.g., Herod, Caesar), ritual law, and prayer were rather revolutionary for his day. He suffered at GETHSEMANE, bled at every pore, was crucified, died, was resurrected from the dead, and subsequently ascended into heaven from the Mount of Olives. Latter-day Saints consider both the historical portion of the record of the life of Jesus, and the prophetic portion, to be accurate. The promises that this same Jesus will come again in glory, in person to judge the world, then reign on the earth as King of Kings, are future realities that are taken literally.

PORTRAYAL OF JESUS THROUGH CEREMONY. Throughout the Bible, the mission of Jesus Christ is portrayed in ceremonies that are types and symbols of actual events. To the Old Testament prophets, animal sacrifices prefigured and typified the coming of Jesus to shed his blood and sacrifice his life for the sins of mankind. Because lambs were frequently offered, Jesus is spoken of in the New Testament as the Lamb of God (John 1:29, 36; cf. 1 Ne. 11:21).

For the animal sacrifice to symbolize Jesus' sacrifice, it had to be from among the firstlings of the flock (meaning the first male born to its mother) without blemish, offered without a bone being broken, and its blood had to be shed. Each of these points had a counterpart in Jesus' life on earth. Even details of the Passover service, requiring the blood of the lamb to be placed on the door post so that the angel of death might pass over that house (Ex. 12:3–24, 46), prefigured the mission and saving power of Jesus, the Lamb of God, who was crucified at the time of the annual Passover celebration. Paul, understanding this symbolism, exclaims, "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us" (1 Cor. 5:7).

The LAW OF MOSES is identified by Paul as "our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ" (Gal. 3:24). To do that, it foreshadowed and typified Christ. When he worked out the Atonement, Christ fulfilled all the law; therefore the law had an end in him, and was replaced by the fulness of the gospel (3 Ne. 9:17; cf. Matt. 5:17–18; Heb. 10:1). LDS understanding of the role of the law of Moses and of other Old Testament ordinances is clearly spoken by the Book of Mormon prophet Nephi about 600 B.C.:

Behold, my soul delighteth in proving unto my people the truth of the coming of Christ; for, for this end hath the law of Moses been given; and all things which have been given of God from the beginning of the world, unto man, are the typifying of him [2 Ne. 11:4; cf. Jacob 4:5].

When Jesus ate the Passover meal with the Twelve at the Last Supper, he gave them bread representing his flesh, which would be broken, and wine representing his blood, which would be shed. Believers were commanded to partake of this symbolic ceremony often: "This do in remembrance of me" (Luke 22:17–20; cf. 3 Ne. 18:3–13; 20:8–9).

OLD TESTAMENT FORESHADOWINGS. The writers of the four Gospels saw things in the Old Testament that foreshadowed the actual events in Jesus' life. Matthew (1:23) cites Isaiah 7:14: "A virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel," a name meaning "God with us." He likewise cites Hosea 11:1, "I . . . called my son out of Egypt" (Matt. 2:15).

John (13:8–11) notes that the betrayal of Jesus by a friend was spoken of in earlier scripture (Ps. 41:9). John (19:24) also cites the dealing of the soldiers for Jesus' robe as a fulfillment of Psalm 22:18, and the sponge with vinegar pressed to Jesus' lips (John 19:28–30) as having been alluded to in Psalm 69:21. John (19:33–36) also notes that Jesus' legs were not broken on the cross, in harmony with Exodus 12:46.

Isaiah prophesied that in Israel a son would be born of the lineage of David, who would be called the "mighty God," the "Prince of Peace" (Isa. 9:6–7). The Messiah's mission as redeemer, suffering for the sins of mankind, is portrayed in Isaiah 53 and 61.

THE GOD OF ISRAEL IS JESUS OF NAZARETH. Revelation to the Prophet Joseph SMITH shows that, beginning with Adam, there have been several gospel DISPENSATIONS on the earth. The prophets in each of these dispensations knew of Christ, taught his gospel (including the ceremonies and ordinances), and held the holy priesthood, which was called "the Holy Priesthood, after the Order of the Son of God" (D&C 107:3; cf. Alma 13:1–16). These ancient prophets not only knew of the future coming of Jesus as the Messiah, but they also knew that the God whom they worshiped, Jehovah, would come to earth and become that Messiah (cf. Mosiah 13:33–35). As noted earlier, in Isaiah 7:14 the name Immanuel identifies Jesus as God. New Testament passages illustrate this concept.

Jesus directed his listeners to search the scriptures, for "they are they which testify of me" (John 5:39). He told the Jewish rulers that Moses "wrote of me" (John 5:45–46; cf. John 1:45; 1 Cor. 10:1–4).

Later he informed them that “Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad” (John 8:56). When asked how he and Abraham could have known each other when their lives on earth were separated by so much time, Jesus replied, “Before Abraham was, I am” (John 8:58). The Greek term here translated “I am” is identical with the Septuagint phrase in Exodus 3:14 that identifies Jehovah as “I AM.”

That Jesus’ audience understood that he had plainly told them he was none other than Jehovah, also known as I AM, the God of Abraham and of Moses, is evident, for “then took they up stones to cast at him” (John 8:59) because they supposed that he had blasphemed. A further demonstration that they understood Jesus’ assertion that he was God come to earth is shown later when they “took up stones again to stone him,” and Jesus asked: “For which of [my] works do ye stone me?” Their reply was “for blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God” (John 10:31–33).

After his resurrection Jesus went through the passages of the Old Testament with his disciples, “beginning at Moses and all the prophets,” expounded to them “in all the scriptures the things concerning himself” (Luke 24:27), and showed them “in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms” the prophecies pertaining to his mission (Luke 24:44; see JESUS CHRIST: PROPHECIES ABOUT).

Peter wrote that the ancient prophets “searched diligently” and had the “Spirit of Christ,” which “testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ,” and that these prophets did “minister [in their day] the things, which are now reported” about Jesus Christ (1 Pet. 1:10–12). And Paul declared that in all his teachings about Jesus, he had said “none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come” (Acts 26:22).

Extensive prophecies that Jesus will come again to the earth as Judge and King are recorded in Matthew (16:27; 24:1–51) and Joseph Smith—Matthew (1:1–55) (see JESUS CHRIST: SECOND COMING OF JESUS CHRIST). Latter-day Saints believe that just as Old Testament foreshadowing and prophecies of Christ were fulfilled in his first coming, so will prophecies of his second coming be literally fulfilled.

CLARIFICATIONS FROM LATTER-DAY REVELATION. The foregoing items from the Bible, coupled with confirmatory and illuminating statements in latter-day revelation, lead members of the Church to see both the Old and the New Testaments as reliable records about the premortal, mortal, postmortal, and future millennial mission of Jesus Christ. Latter-day Saints fully accept the biblical message about Jesus Christ, and, in addition, because of other sacred scriptures that strengthen and supplement the biblical report (see STANDARD WORKS), they appreciate the mission of Jesus in a wider sense than is possible from the Bible alone. For example, Jesus spoke to Jewish hearers about “other sheep,” not of the Jews, whom he would visit and who would “hear my voice” (John 10:16). Many have supposed that these were the Gentiles. However, in the Book of Mormon the resurrected Jesus specifically identifies these other sheep as a branch of the house of Israel on the American continent whom he was visiting, personally showing them his body and vocally teaching them his gospel (3 Ne. 15:13–24). The Book of Mormon thus explains a passage about the Savior beyond what the Bible offers, and also enlarges the concept of Jesus’ ministry.

Latter-day revelation also provides a deeper appreciation for events that occurred on the MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION than is available in the Bible alone. That which the New Testament offers is accepted as historically correct, but incomplete. One learns from latter-day revelation that on the mount, Jesus, Moses, and Elijah gave the keys of the priesthood to Peter, James, and John in fulfillment of the Savior’s promise in Matthew 16:19 (TPJS, p. 158). The three apostles also saw a vision of the future glorification of the earth (D&C 63:2–21). These points are lacking in the biblical account. Moses and Elijah (called Elias) “appeared in glory, and spake of [Jesus’] decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem” (Luke 9:30–31), which shows that they knew him and knew of his mission.

Jesus’ ministry is also clarified in other instances in latter-day revelation. John 3:23 suggests that Jesus personally performed baptisms in water, but this is largely negated by John 4:2, which states that it was in fact not Jesus, but his disciples, who performed the baptisms. Through the Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible, the text of John 4:2–3 is clarified to assert that Jesus did indeed perform water baptisms, but not as many as did his disciples. (For other clarifications relating to Jesus’ earthly ministry, see JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE [JST].) Topics discussed in the latter work include Jesus at the temple at age twelve; his precocious childhood; his temptations in the wilderness; his parables; his ability to redeem little children; and his compassion for people.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1965, 1970, 1973.
- . The Promised Messiah; The Mortal Messiah; The Millennial Messiah, 6 vols. Salt Lake City, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982.
- Matthews, Robert J. "A Greater Portrayal of the Master." Ensign 13 (Mar. 1983):6–13.
- Talmage, James E. Jesus the Christ. Salt Lake City, 1963.

ROBERT J. MATTHEWS

JESUS CHRIST IN THE BOOK OF MORMON

The main purpose of the Book of Mormon is to convince all people "that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations" (title page). Through the spiritual experiences of its writers, many of whom were prophets and eyewitnesses of Christ's glory, the Book of Mormon communicates clear, personal knowledge that Jesus Christ lives. It explains his mission from the Creation to the Final Judgment, and expresses his pure and atoning love for all mankind.

Sketch of The Sacrament in the New World, by Minerva K. Teichert (c. 1952, oil on masonite, 36" × 48"). After his resurrection, Jesus Christ ministered to a group of people in the Americas. The Book of Mormon records that he taught them, blessed them, and instituted the sacrament among them as a remembrance of the body which he had shown them (3 Ne. 18:1–11). Courtesy Museum of Fine Arts, Brigham Young University.

The Book of Mormon is an intimate scripture. It exhorts each reader "to come unto Christ, and lay hold upon every good gift," mindful that "every good gift cometh of Christ" (Moro. 10:18, 30).

The book is singularly focused. In the words of Nephi<sup>1</sup>, "We talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, we prophesy of Christ" (2 Ne. 25:26). Only by Jesus' sacrifice can the repentant "answer the ends of the law" (2 Ne. 2:7). "There is no other head whereby ye can be made free. There is no other name given whereby salvation cometh" (Mosiah 5:8).

All Book of Mormon prophets proclaimed the same word of Jesus Christ (Jacob 4:5). In visions, public speeches, and personal statements they typically declared (1) that Jesus is the Son of God, the Creator, the Lord God Omnipotent, the Father of heaven and earth, and the Holy One of Israel, (2) who would come and did come down to earth to live as a mortal born of MARY, a virgin, (3) to heal the sick, cast out devils, and suffer temptation, (4) to take upon himself the sins of the world and redeem his people, (5) to be put to death by crucifixion and rise from the dead, (6) to bring to pass the resurrection of all mankind, and (7) to judge all people in the last day according to their works (1 Ne. 11–14; Mosiah 3:5–27; Alma 33:22; see CHRISTOLOGY).

The personality and attributes of Jesus are expressed in the Book of Mormon (see Black, pp. 49–64). He is a person who invites, comforts, answers, exhorts, loves, cries, is troubled over the sins of mankind, and is filled with joy. He welcomes all who will come unto him. He patiently pleads with the Father on behalf of all who have become saints through his atoning blood. He is a true and merciful friend. He visits those who believe in him. He heals those who weep at the thought of being separated from him. With hands still bearing the wounds of his death, he touches, is touched, and gives power. He remembers all his covenants and keeps all his promises. He is all-powerful, judging the world and vanquishing the wicked. He is "the light, and the life, and the truth of the world" (Ether 4:12).

Book of Mormon prophets who taught extensively of Christ before his birth include the BROTHER OF JARED (Ether 3); LEHI (1 Ne. 10; 2 Ne. 2); NEPHI<sup>1</sup> (1 Ne. 11, 19; 2 Ne. 25, 31–33); JACOB (2 Ne. 9); ABINADI (Mosiah 13–16); BENJAMIN (Mosiah 3–5); ALMA<sup>2</sup> (Alma 5, 7, 12–13, 33, 36, 42); AMULEK (Alma 34); SAMUEL THE LAMANITE (Hel. 14); and NEPHI<sub>3</sub> (3 Ne. 1). The apex of the Nephite record is the appearance of the resurrected Lord Jesus Christ to a congregation of 2,500 men, women, and children who had gathered at their temple in the land Bountiful. For three days, Jesus personally ministered among them (3 Ne. 11–28; see BOOK OF MORMON: THIRD NEPHI). The Book of Mormon ends with testimonies of Jesus by MORMON (Morm. 7; Moro. 7) and his son MORONI<sub>2</sub> (Ether 4; Moro. 10). Some 101 appellations for Jesus are found in the 3,925 references to Christ in the Book of Mormon's 6,607 verses (Black, pp. 16–30).

In addition to his visitations in 3 Nephi, Jesus appeared to Lehi (1 Ne. 1:9), Nephi<sub>1</sub>, Jacob (2 Ne. 11:2–3), King Lamoni (Alma 19:13), Mormon (Morm. 1:15), Moroni<sub>2</sub> (Ether 12:39), and the brother of Jared (Ether 3:14). Each bore personal testimony of Jesus Christ. Many others heard his voice.

From visions and revelations received before he left Jerusalem about 600 B.C., Lehi knew the tender mercies of the promised Messiah. To him the Messiah would be the Redeemer who would restore the fallen, lost, and displaced. In one vision, Lehi read a heavenly book that “manifested plainly of the coming of a Messiah, and also the redemption of the world” (1 Ne. 1:19). This knowledge focused all subsequent Nephite preaching and interpretation on the mission of the Savior. It was also revealed to Lehi that in six hundred years “a prophet would the Lord God raise up among the Jews—even a Messiah, or, in other words, a Savior of the world” (1 Ne. 10:4), the same pleading and merciful servant of whom other prophets had written, including ZENOS in his allegory of the Lord's olive tree representing Israel (Jacob 5). Being “grafted in” to that tree was interpreted by Lehi as “com[ing] to the knowledge of the true Messiah” (1 Ne. 10:14).

From the prophecies of ISAIAH as well as from his own visions, Lehi knew that a prophet would prepare the way of the Lord before his coming (1 Ne. 10:8; cf. Isa. 40:3) and that “after he had baptized the Messiah with water, he should behold and bear record that he had baptized the Lamb of God, who should take away the sins of the world” (1 Ne. 10:10; see JOHN THE BAPTIST). Furthermore, Isaiah spoke of the Lord's servant being “despised and rejected, . . . wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities, . . . brought as a lamb to the slaughter” (Isa. 53:3–7); and Lehi prophesied that the Jews would slay the Messiah, adding that the Redeemer would rise from the dead (1 Ne. 10:11).

Nephi<sub>1</sub> asked the Lord for a greater understanding of his father's visions, especially for a clearer understanding of the TREE OF LIFE. He acquired a love for the CONDESCENSION OF GOD that would bring the Son of God down to dwell in the flesh, born of a beautiful virgin. Christ's goodness stands in sharp contrast with his rejection and crucifixion (1 Ne. 11:13–33; 19:10; cf. Deut. 21:22). Nephi<sub>1</sub> (who himself knew what it meant to be persecuted for righteousness' sake) referred more than sixty times to the divine offering of this sacrificial Lamb of God (1 Ne. 11:21). As ruler and teacher of his people, Nephi emphasized that they should follow the rule of Christ, the only true Savior who would ever come, the sole source of their life and law, and the only one in whom all things would be fulfilled (2 Ne. 25:16–18, 25–27).

In connection with his calling as a priest and teacher, Jacob, the brother of Nephi<sub>1</sub>, expounded on the atonement of Christ. He told how Christ would suffer and die for all mankind so that they might become subject to him through his “infinite atonement,” which overcomes the Fall and brings resurrection and incorruptibility (2 Ne. 9:5–14).

Certain terms such as “Messiah” (anointed) and “Lamb of God” were used often by Lehi, Nephi<sub>1</sub> and Jacob as designations for Christ before it was revealed by an angel that the Messiah's “name shall be Jesus Christ, the Son of God” (2 Ne. 25:19; cf. 2 Ne. 10:3; Mosiah 3:8). The name Jesus, like Joshua, derives from the Hebrew root yasha', meaning “to deliver, rescue, or save”; and christos is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew mashiyach, meaning “anointed” or “Messiah” (see JESUS CHRIST, NAMES AND TITLES OF). Thus, the Nephites used the intimate yet freely spoken name of the mortal Jesus as their name for God, while the ineffable YHWH (see JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST) appears only twice in the book (2 Ne. 22:2; Moro. 10:34).

Some, such as Sherem, whose cultural roots lay in the monotheistic world of Jerusalem, resisted the worship of the Messiah, alleging that this violated the law of Moses (Ex. 20:3; Jacob 7:7; see ANTICHRISTS). Nephi had previously declared that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were “one God” (2 Ne. 31:21), but Nephite challengers continued to attack the proposition that Jesus was God, to deny that his atonement could be efficacious in advance of its occurrence, and to argue that there could not be many Gods who were still one God (e.g., Mosiah 17:8; Alma 11:28). Abinadi and others gave inspired explanations (Mosiah 14–16; see JESUS CHRIST: FATHERHOOD AND SONSHIP), but until the resurrected Jesus appeared, announced by and praying to the Father, such issues were not firmly put to rest.

About 124 B.C., King BENJAMIN received from an angel a succinct declaration of the atoning mission of Christ (Mosiah 3:2–27). It places central attention on the atoning blood of Christ and corroborates that Jesus would sweat blood from every pore in anguish for his people (Mosiah 3:7; see also Luke 22:43–44; D&C 19:18; Irenaeus, Against Heresies 22.2; see GETHESEMANE). Christ's blood will atone for the sins of all those who repent or have ignorantly sinned (see Mosiah 3:11, 15, 16, 18). When Benjamin's people passionately cried out in unison for God to "apply the atoning blood of Christ that we may receive forgiveness of our sins" (Mosiah 4:2), Benjamin gave them the name of Christ by covenant, the only name "whereby salvation cometh" (Mosiah 5:7–8).

Alma, the judicial and religious defender of the freedom of belief (c. 100–73 B.C.), taught faith in Jesus Christ as the master of personal CONVERSION. Alma had tasted the transforming joy that came when he called upon the name of Jesus Christ for mercy (Alma 36:18), and in his subsequent sermons he described how the "image of God" might be "engraven upon your countenances" (Alma 5:19), and how the word of God is to be planted in each convert's soul, where, if nourished, it will spring up as an everlasting tree of life (Alma 32:40; 33:22–23; for a similar image, see the early Christian Odes of Solomon 11:18).

About 30 B.C. a group of Lamanites were converted to Christ when God's light shone and his voice spoke out of an enveloping cloud of darkness (Hel. 5:33–43). Twenty-five years later, a prophet named Samuel the Lamanite foretold that more significant signs of light would appear at the time of Jesus' birth and that massive destruction and darkness would be seen at his death (Hel. 14:2–27). Five years after Samuel, Nephi<sub>3</sub> heard the voice of Jesus declaring that he would come into the world "on the morrow," and the signs of Jesus' birth were seen; thirty-three years and four days after that, all the land heard the voice of Christ speaking through the thick darkness on the Western Hemisphere that accompanied his crucifixion and death (3 Ne. 9).

Within that same year, they saw the resurrected Jesus Christ come down out of heaven (3 Ne. 11:8). The resurrected Christ appeared to a congregation of righteous Nephites at their temple and allowed them to feel the wounds in his hands and feet, and thrust their hands into his side (3 Ne. 11:15). They heard the voice of the Father saying, "Behold my Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name—hear ye him" (3 Ne. 11:7).

For three days, Jesus was with these people. He called and ordained twelve disciples, and taught his gospel of faith, repentance, baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost. As the one who had given and fulfilled the law of Moses, he gave the people commandments of obedience, sacrifice of a broken heart, brotherly love and reconciliation, faithfulness to one's spouse, chastity, integrity, charity, and consecration (see ENDOWMENT). He taught them to fast and pray, in secret and in their families. He healed the sick, and in the presence of angels and witnesses he blessed the parents and their children. They entered into a sacred covenant with him, and he promised that if they would do his will and keep his commandments they would always have his spirit to be with them (see SACRAMENT), would personally know the Lord and would be welcomed into his presence at the last day (3 Ne. 14:21–23; see Welch, pp. 34–83).

As revealed in the Book of Mormon, Jesus wants all people to become like him and their Father in Heaven. Jesus said, "Therefore, what manner of men ought ye to be? Verily I say unto you, even as I am" (3 Ne. 27:27). He invited all, saying, "I would that ye should be perfect even as I, or your Father who is in heaven is perfect" (3 Ne. 12:48). His constant and loving purpose was to make that possible.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Black, Susan E. Finding Christ Through the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Charlesworth, James H. "Messianism in the Pseudepigrapha and the Book of Mormon." In Reflections on Mormonism, ed. T. Madsen, pp. 99–137. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Roberts, B. H. "Christ in the Book of Mormon." IE 27 (1924):188–92.
- Scharffs, Stephen. "Unique Insights on Christ from the Book of Mormon." Ensign 18 (Dec. 1988):8–13.
- Welch, John W. The Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount. Salt Lake City, 1990.

JOHN W. WELCH

JESUS CHRIST IN THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS

The Doctrine and Covenants is a unique collection of revelations and inspired writings bearing witness to the modern world that Jesus Christ lives. Unlike the other STANDARD WORKS of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants were received in modern times by latter-day prophets and therefore are not translations of ancient documents. The central figure of the Doctrine and Covenants is indeed Jesus Christ. He identifies himself repeatedly throughout its pages with various titles expressing his Godhood and his redeeming power.

The Doctrine and Covenants presents more than sixty names or titles for Jesus. When referring to himself or his work, the Lord uses at least eighteen descriptive titles, including “Lord” (more than 300 times); “Jesus Christ” (81 times); “Redeemer” (24 times); “Savior” and “Jesus” (19 times each); “Alpha and Omega” and “Only Begotten” (13 times each); “the Beginning and the End” (12 times); “Eternal” (11 times); “Jehovah” (6 times); “Advocate,” “Endless,” and “Bridegroom” (5 times each); “Lawgiver” and “I AM” (3 times each). These titles invoke special respect for Jesus Christ. “Behold, I am from above . . . I am over all, and in all, and through all . . . and the day cometh that all things shall be subject unto me. Behold, I am Alpha and Omega, even Jesus Christ” (D&C 63:59–60; see also JESUS CHRIST, NAMES AND TITLES OF).

Jesus affirms his role as the Creator. “Thus saith the Lord your God, even Jesus Christ, the Great I AM, Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the same which looked upon the wide expanse of eternity, . . . before the world was made . . . I am the same which spake, and the world was made, and all things came by me” (D&C 38:1–3).

A unique reference is made to Jesus as the Son AHMAN. “Ahman” could be an expression in the ADAMIC LANGUAGE (D&C 78:20; 95:17; see also JD 2:342). Another unique passage identifies Christ as the Lord of Sabaoth, Hebrew for “hosts”—both of heaven and earth; therefore he is “creator of the first day, the beginning and the end” (D&C 95:7).

In one memorable passage Jesus describes his suffering as the Redeemer of mankind. The autobiographical details expressed here are found nowhere else in scripture: “Which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit—and would that I might not drink the bitter cup, and shrink” (D&C 19:18). He “suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer if they would repent” (19:16). True to his character, the Savior gives glory and honor to his Father in Heaven: “Nevertheless, glory be to the Father, and I partook and finished my preparations unto the children of men” (D&C 19:19; cf. 78:4). Because he made the sacrifice, Christ can intercede with the Father for the penitent: “I am Christ, and in mine own name, by the virtue of the blood which I have spilt, have I pleaded before the Father for them” (D&C 38:4; cf. 45:1–4).

Jesus refers to himself as the Bridegroom, drawing attention to his parable of the virgins recorded in Matthew 25, when he prophesied of his second coming: “Be faithful, praying always, having your lamps trimmed and burning, and oil with you, that you may be ready at the coming of the Bridegroom” (D&C 33:17).

In modern revelation the Lord also gives comfort: “Be of good cheer, and do not fear, for I the Lord am with you, and will stand by you” (D&C 68:6); and “Be thou humble; and the Lord thy God shall lead thee by the hand, and give thee answer to thy prayers (D&C 112:10). Jesus also warns mankind of the necessity to be humble, stating that “although a man may have many revelations, and have power to do many mighty works, yet if he boasts in his own strength, and sets at naught the counsels of God, and follows after the dictates of his own will and carnal desires, he must fall and incur the vengeance of a just God upon him” (D&C 3:4).

In several sections of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord testifies that he is the one who gives scripture through inspiration, and he commands that his words be studied (D&C 1:29; 3:16–20; 11:22; 20:8–9; 84:57). In summary he says, “Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled” (D&C 1:37).

The Lord explains perplexing scriptural passages and concepts in the Gospel of John, 1 Corinthians, Revelation, and Isaiah (D&C 7; 77; 86; 113). Scriptural concepts concerning sacred history, priesthood, and patriarchal lineage are emphasized by him in other revelations (D&C 84:6–28; 107:1–14, 40–57). He also restored fragments of lost scriptures (e.g., D&C 7; 93:7–17).

The Lord tells why he gives these revelations to mankind: "I give unto you these sayings that you may understand and know how to worship, and know what you worship, that you may come unto the Father in my name, and in due time receive of his fulness" (D&C 93:19).

The voice of Jesus Christ in the Doctrine and Covenants is the word of the Lord comforting and encouraging his Saints; testifying of his own divinity and sacred mission; warning the world of judgments to come; declaring his majesty and power; and promising forgiveness and mercy to the penitent. Latter-day Saints accept these revelations as latter-day proclamations of the mind and will of the Lord Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Maxwell, Neal A. "The Doctrine and Covenants: The Voice of the Lord." Ensign 8 (Dec. 1978):4-7.

CLARK V. JOHNSON

JESUS CHRIST IN THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE

The STANDARD WORK of scripture called the Pearl of Great Price contains selected materials ranging from the time of Adam to the present, including words of Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus Christ, and Joseph Smith. It presents some 300 references to Jesus Christ, including such names and titles as Beginning and the End, Beloved Son, Creator, God, Jehovah, Jesus, Jesus Christ, King of Zion, Lord, Lord God, Messiah, Only Begotten, Rock of Heaven, Savior, Son, and Son of Man. A particular contribution is the fact that Jesus Christ has been the focus of every DISPENSATION from Adam to Joseph SMITH.

JESUS THE CREATOR. Jesus is identified as the Creator under the aegis of God the Father in Moses, chapters 2 and 3. The book of Abraham adds the clarification that Jesus did not act alone but with a council of intelligent spirits, among whom was Abraham (Abr. 3:23).

SATAN'S REBELLION. In the premortal estate the Father chose Jesus to become the Only Begotten and Redeemer. Satan rebelled against the Father's choice and became the archenemy of Jesus and of all who follow him (Moses 4:1-4; also see FIRST ESTATE; WAR IN HEAVEN).

ADAM AND EVE AND THE PLAN OF SALVATION. Adam and Eve (Moses 1:34; 4:26; 5:5-9) were the first to be taught and to accept the Father's PLAN OF SALVATION on this earth. Adam was commanded by God to make an offering of the firstlings of his flocks. After many days, an angel of the Lord asked why he offered sacrifices. When Adam confessed his lack of understanding, the angelic visitor explained, "This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth. . . . In that day the Holy Ghost fell upon Adam, which beareth record of the Father and the Son, saying: I am the Only Begotten of the Father from the beginning, henceforth and forever, that as thou hast fallen thou mayest be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will" (Moses 5:7-9).

The ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ has applied to mankind from the beginning. Adam believed in the coming of Christ, was baptized in his name, and received the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST and the priesthood KEYS of a dispensation (Moses 6:51-68; D&C 107:41-42; see also ADAM: LDS SOURCES).

ENOCH, A WITNESS OF THE SON OF MAN. Enoch preached faith in Jesus Christ, repentance, baptism, receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost, growing in the knowledge of God, justification, and sanctification, all to be achieved through the atoning blood of Christ (Moses 6:46-62).

Enoch was a prophetic witness of the Lord Jesus Christ and knew that Jesus was the God of the ancient prophets, the Redeemer and Savior, the Son of the "Man of Holiness" who is God the Father. He saw, in vision, the coming of the Savior in the MERIDIAN OF TIME, his crucifixion, and his triumphal ascension unto the Father (Moses 7:47, 53, 55). Enoch the seer (Moses 6:36) saw also the coming of the "Son of Man, in the last days, to dwell on the earth in righteousness for the space of a thousand years" (Moses 7:65).

NOAH, PREACHER OF DELIVERANCE THROUGH CHRIST. Noah pleaded with the people saying, "Believe and repent of your sins and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, even as our fathers, and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost, that ye may have all things made manifest; and if ye do not this, the floods will come in upon you" (Moses 8:24).

ABRAHAM. Abraham was visited by Jehovah (Abr. 1:16) and knew him as the one “like unto God,” the Creator, the Son of Man, and the opponent of Satan (Abr. 3:24–28).

MOSES, DELIVERER, AND TYPE OF CHRIST. After Moses had been tried by a confrontation with the devil and had twice stood in the presence of God (Moses 1:2–39), he was told, “And now, Moses, my son, I will speak unto thee concerning this earth upon which thou standest; and thou shalt write the things which I shall speak” (Moses 1:40). Moses was also told that he was in the “similitude” of the Only Begotten, the Savior, who was full of grace and truth (Moses 1:6). When Moses was confronted by the powers of darkness, he called upon God for strength and in the name of the Only Begotten commanded Satan to depart (Moses 1:20–22). Moses served the God of Israel, whom he knew was the Messiah, the Only Begotten, the Savior, and the Creator of “worlds without number” (Moses 1:32–33).

MATTHEW, RECORDER OF THE LORD’S MINISTRY. In a discourse to his disciples three days before his crucifixion, Jesus counseled them on how to survive the forthcoming destruction of Jerusalem and how future disciples should survive a similar devastation to come in the latter days as a prelude to his second coming (Matt. 24). Joseph Smith’s translation of that discourse is presented as Joseph Smith—Matthew.

JOSEPH SMITH. The Prophet Joseph Smith learned by divine experience that there are both a Savior, who is Son, and a God who is Father. This he learned in his FIRST VISION when a pillar of light appeared “above the brightness of the sun” and fell upon him. In that light he saw “two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above [him] in the air. One of them spake unto [him], calling [him] by name and said, pointing to the other—This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!” In this vision, Joseph Smith talked to the Father and to the Lord Jesus Christ (JS—H 1:15–17). The Prophet later wrote, “I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two Personages, and they did in reality speak to me; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true (JS—H 1:25).

In the ARTICLES OF FAITH, Joseph Smith declared Jesus’ position as a member of the GODHEAD, outlined the first principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and affirmed that Christ will come again to reign personally upon the earth.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Peterson, H. Donl. The Pearl of Great Price: A History and Commentary, pp. 20, 74–75. Salt Lake City, 1987.

JAMES R. HARRIS

---

JEWES

[Articles that deal with the Jews highlight two general areas. The first group treats contacts between Jews and Latter-day Saints: Interfaith Relations, Jewish; Brigham Young University: Jerusalem Center for Near Eastern Studies; World Religions (Non-Christian) and Mormonism: Judaism and Mormonism. Other articles focus only indirectly on Jewish matters but indicate the place that Jews and elements of Judaica hold in LDS doctrine and prophecy: Aaronic Priesthood: Restoration of Aaronic Priesthood; Abraham; Abrahamic Covenant; Circumcision; Covenant Israel; Ephraim; Ezekiel; Gentiles, Fullness of; Hyde, Orson; Isaiah: Interpretation in Modern Scripture; Israel; Jerusalem; Law of Moses; Levitical Priesthood; Melchizedek Priesthood; Moses; New Jerusalem; Old Testament; Restoration of All Things; Sacrifice in Biblical Times; Ten Commandments; Zion; Zionism.]

---

JOHN, REVELATIONS OF

The apostle John, sometimes referred to as John the Beloved and John the Revelator, and scriptural texts linked to his name are esteemed highly by Latter-day Saints. Modern scripture adds to an understanding of the man and his writings in three important areas: John as a TRANSLATED BEING, an additional record of John, and clarification of the book of Revelation.

JOHN AS TRANSLATED BEING. In April 1829 the Prophet Joseph SMITH received a revelation (D&C 7) that clarified the Savior’s statement about John’s tarrying on earth until Jesus returned (John 21:22). This revelation teaches that John requested that he receive power over death so that he could bring more souls to Christ (3 Ne. 28:6–11); that the Lord promised him that he could tarry “until I come in my glory”; and that John is a translated being

ABRAHAM. Abraham was visited by Jehovah (Abr. 1:16) and knew him as the one “like unto God,” the Creator, the Son of Man, and the opponent of Satan (Abr. 3:24–28).

MOSES, DELIVERER, AND TYPE OF CHRIST. After Moses had been tried by a confrontation with the devil and had twice stood in the presence of God (Moses 1:2–39), he was told, “And now, Moses, my son, I will speak unto thee concerning this earth upon which thou standest; and thou shalt write the things which I shall speak” (Moses 1:40). Moses was also told that he was in the “similitude” of the Only Begotten, the Savior, who was full of grace and truth (Moses 1:6). When Moses was confronted by the powers of darkness, he called upon God for strength and in the name of the Only Begotten commanded Satan to depart (Moses 1:20–22). Moses served the God of Israel, whom he knew was the Messiah, the Only Begotten, the Savior, and the Creator of “worlds without number” (Moses 1:32–33).

MATTHEW, RECORDER OF THE LORD’S MINISTRY. In a discourse to his disciples three days before his crucifixion, Jesus counseled them on how to survive the forthcoming destruction of Jerusalem and how future disciples should survive a similar devastation to come in the latter days as a prelude to his second coming (Matt. 24). Joseph Smith’s translation of that discourse is presented as Joseph Smith—Matthew.

JOSEPH SMITH. The Prophet Joseph Smith learned by divine experience that there are both a Savior, who is Son, and a God who is Father. This he learned in his FIRST VISION when a pillar of light appeared “above the brightness of the sun” and fell upon him. In that light he saw “two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above [him] in the air. One of them spake unto [him], calling [him] by name and said, pointing to the other—This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!” In this vision, Joseph Smith talked to the Father and to the Lord Jesus Christ (JS—H 1:15–17). The Prophet later wrote, “I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two Personages, and they did in reality speak to me; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true (JS—H 1:25).

In the ARTICLES OF FAITH, Joseph Smith declared Jesus’ position as a member of the GODHEAD, outlined the first principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and affirmed that Christ will come again to reign personally upon the earth.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Peterson, H. Donl. The Pearl of Great Price: A History and Commentary, pp. 20, 74–75. Salt Lake City, 1987.

JAMES R. HARRIS

---

JEWES

[Articles that deal with the Jews highlight two general areas. The first group treats contacts between Jews and Latter-day Saints: Interfaith Relations, Jewish; Brigham Young University: Jerusalem Center for Near Eastern Studies; World Religions (Non-Christian) and Mormonism: Judaism and Mormonism. Other articles focus only indirectly on Jewish matters but indicate the place that Jews and elements of Judaica hold in LDS doctrine and prophecy: Aaronic Priesthood: Restoration of Aaronic Priesthood; Abraham; Abrahamic Covenant; Circumcision; Covenant Israel; Ephraim; Ezekiel; Gentiles, Fullness of; Hyde, Orson; Isaiah: Interpretation in Modern Scripture; Israel; Jerusalem; Law of Moses; Levitical Priesthood; Melchizedek Priesthood; Moses; New Jerusalem; Old Testament; Restoration of All Things; Sacrifice in Biblical Times; Ten Commandments; Zion; Zionism.]

---

JOHN, REVELATIONS OF

The apostle John, sometimes referred to as John the Beloved and John the Revelator, and scriptural texts linked to his name are esteemed highly by Latter-day Saints. Modern scripture adds to an understanding of the man and his writings in three important areas: John as a TRANSLATED BEING, an additional record of John, and clarification of the book of Revelation.

JOHN AS TRANSLATED BEING. In April 1829 the Prophet Joseph SMITH received a revelation (D&C 7) that clarified the Savior’s statement about John’s tarrying on earth until Jesus returned (John 21:22). This revelation teaches that John requested that he receive power over death so that he could bring more souls to Christ (3 Ne. 28:6–11); that the Lord promised him that he could tarry “until I come in my glory”; and that John is a translated being

ABRAHAM. Abraham was visited by Jehovah (Abr. 1:16) and knew him as the one “like unto God,” the Creator, the Son of Man, and the opponent of Satan (Abr. 3:24–28).

MOSES, DELIVERER, AND TYPE OF CHRIST. After Moses had been tried by a confrontation with the devil and had twice stood in the presence of God (Moses 1:2–39), he was told, “And now, Moses, my son, I will speak unto thee concerning this earth upon which thou standest; and thou shalt write the things which I shall speak” (Moses 1:40). Moses was also told that he was in the “similitude” of the Only Begotten, the Savior, who was full of grace and truth (Moses 1:6). When Moses was confronted by the powers of darkness, he called upon God for strength and in the name of the Only Begotten commanded Satan to depart (Moses 1:20–22). Moses served the God of Israel, whom he knew was the Messiah, the Only Begotten, the Savior, and the Creator of “worlds without number” (Moses 1:32–33).

MATTHEW, RECORDER OF THE LORD’S MINISTRY. In a discourse to his disciples three days before his crucifixion, Jesus counseled them on how to survive the forthcoming destruction of Jerusalem and how future disciples should survive a similar devastation to come in the latter days as a prelude to his second coming (Matt. 24). Joseph Smith’s translation of that discourse is presented as Joseph Smith—Matthew.

JOSEPH SMITH. The Prophet Joseph Smith learned by divine experience that there are both a Savior, who is Son, and a God who is Father. This he learned in his FIRST VISION when a pillar of light appeared “above the brightness of the sun” and fell upon him. In that light he saw “two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above [him] in the air. One of them spake unto [him], calling [him] by name and said, pointing to the other—This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!” In this vision, Joseph Smith talked to the Father and to the Lord Jesus Christ (JS—H 1:15–17). The Prophet later wrote, “I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two Personages, and they did in reality speak to me; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true (JS—H 1:25).

In the ARTICLES OF FAITH, Joseph Smith declared Jesus’ position as a member of the GODHEAD, outlined the first principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and affirmed that Christ will come again to reign personally upon the earth.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Peterson, H. Donl. The Pearl of Great Price: A History and Commentary, pp. 20, 74–75. Salt Lake City, 1987.

JAMES R. HARRIS

---

JEWES

[Articles that deal with the Jews highlight two general areas. The first group treats contacts between Jews and Latter-day Saints: Interfaith Relations, Jewish; Brigham Young University: Jerusalem Center for Near Eastern Studies; World Religions (Non-Christian) and Mormonism: Judaism and Mormonism. Other articles focus only indirectly on Jewish matters but indicate the place that Jews and elements of Judaica hold in LDS doctrine and prophecy: Aaronic Priesthood: Restoration of Aaronic Priesthood; Abraham; Abrahamic Covenant; Circumcision; Covenant Israel; Ephraim; Ezekiel; Gentiles, Fullness of; Hyde, Orson; Isaiah: Interpretation in Modern Scripture; Israel; Jerusalem; Law of Moses; Levitical Priesthood; Melchizedek Priesthood; Moses; New Jerusalem; Old Testament; Restoration of All Things; Sacrifice in Biblical Times; Ten Commandments; Zion; Zionism.]

---

JOHN, REVELATIONS OF

The apostle John, sometimes referred to as John the Beloved and John the Revelator, and scriptural texts linked to his name are esteemed highly by Latter-day Saints. Modern scripture adds to an understanding of the man and his writings in three important areas: John as a TRANSLATED BEING, an additional record of John, and clarification of the book of Revelation.

JOHN AS TRANSLATED BEING. In April 1829 the Prophet Joseph SMITH received a revelation (D&C 7) that clarified the Savior’s statement about John’s tarrying on earth until Jesus returned (John 21:22). This revelation teaches that John requested that he receive power over death so that he could bring more souls to Christ (3 Ne. 28:6–11); that the Lord promised him that he could tarry “until I come in my glory”; and that John is a translated being whose state is “as flaming fire and a ministering angel” (D&C 7:1–3, 6).

ADDITIONAL RECORD OF JOHN. In another revelation to Joseph Smith on May 6, 1833, an excerpt of eleven verses appears from what is called the “fulness of the record of John” (D&C 93:7–18). Important similarities exist between these verses and the opening verses of John’s gospel (John 1:1–34), but links to the experiences of JOHN THE BAPTIST are also apparent (cf. D&C 93:15; John 1:32–34). Since Doctrine and Covenants 93 mentions only the name John, without annotation, it is unclear whether John the Beloved or John the Baptist is meant (cf. McConkie, 1979, Vol. 1, pp. 426–27).

Whatever the source, these few lines from the “record of John” bear important witness of the Savior, reaffirming that Jesus is the Word, “even the messenger of salvation” (D&C 93:7–8); that he is the light and the redeemer of the world and the spirit of truth (93:9–10); and that he did not receive the fulness at first, but continued “from grace to grace” until he received “all power, both in heaven and on earth” (93:11–17).

BOOK OF REVELATION. Two Book of Mormon passages underscore the importance of the Revelation of John for the latter days. The prophet NEPHI<sup>1</sup> (c. 600 B.C.) saw in vision many future events, but he was forbidden to write them, “for the Lord God hath ordained the apostle of the Lamb of God that he should write them. . . . [And] the name of the apostle of the Lamb was John” (1 Ne. 14:25, 27). Further, speaking of the last days, the Lord said, “Then shall my revelations which I have caused to be written by my servant John be unfolded in the eyes of all the people” (Ether 4:16).

In this connection, three important sources aid the interpretation of the Apocalypse.

1. Doctrine and Covenants section 77. Received by Joseph Smith while working on the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST), this revelation contains fifteen questions and answers about the book of Revelation. “This Revelation [D&C 77] is not a complete interpretation of the book. It is a key. . . . It unlocks the door through which an entrance may be gained, but after the key has been turned, the searcher for treasure must find it for himself” (Smith, p. 478).

2. The Joseph Smith Translation. In addition to the questions and answers in section 77, Joseph Smith made significant revisions to the text of Revelation in the JST.

3. Other scriptural and prophetic writings. Much of the Apocalypse is couched in imagery. Both latter-day scripture and the writings of GENERAL AUTHORITIES provide interpretations that help unlock this imagery. Examples include the “rod of iron” as the word of God (Rev. 2:27; cf. 1 Ne. 15:23–24), the “beasts” of chapter 13 as the degenerate kingdoms of the world (TPJS, p. 289), and Babylon as the symbol of spiritual wickedness (Rev. 17:5; cf. D&C 133:14).

In brief, the book of Revelation is divided into two major segments—the letters to the seven churches of Asia (chaps. 2–3) and the vision of “things which must be hereafter” (4:1; see chaps. 4–22).

The seven letters written to churches in Asia are important to Christians of all ages. They outline beliefs and practices that the Lord found commendable, as well as those which displeased him. In capsule form, these chapters summarize blessings that await the faithful.

The vision of the future (Rev. 4–22) revolves around a “book,” sealed with seven seals, which was in God’s hand (5:1–8). According to Doctrine and Covenants section 77, that book represented God’s plan for this earth during the seven thousand years of its “temporal existence,” each seal representing a thousand years (D&C 77:6–7). “By the seven thousand years of temporal existence is meant the time of the earth’s duration from the fall of Adam to the end of time, which will come after the Millennium” (Joseph Fielding Smith, in Smith and Sjodahl, p. 474).

The first five seals highlight, in two or three verses (Rev. 6:1–11), each of the first five thousand years (see also McConkie, 1973, Vol. 3, pp. 476–85). In the sixth seal, representing the sixth millennium, John saw four angels holding the judgments of God (Rev. 7:1; D&C 77:8) and another angel who represented the work of the RESTORATION (Rev. 7:2–3; D&C 77:9–11; McConkie, 1973, Vol. 3, pp. 489–94).

The seventh seal opens in chapter 8. But the prediction of Christ’s return does not occur until chapter 19. Thus, a major portion of the book focuses on the time just prior to Jesus’ second coming (cf. D&C 77:13). Peter declared that Christ would not come again “until the times of restitution of all things” (Acts 3:21). It is central to this latter-day restitution that angelic ministers (MORONI<sub>2</sub>, John the Baptist, Peter, James, John, Moses, etc.) brought back not only the fulness of the everlasting gospel and its KEYS and ORDINANCES but also the “sealing power,” which is the power to bind things on earth and have them be binding in heaven (Matt. 16:19; see SEALING). The restoration of the gospel and the power of sealing are important conditions for Christ’s coming. During this period three characteristics will prevail: judgments, the kingdom of Christ versus the kingdoms of the world, and the destruction of latter-day Babylon.

As trumpets sound and “vials” of destruction are poured out, one devastating scourge follows another, including vast pollutions, rampant wickedness, and the battle of Armageddon (Rev. 8–11, 16). In the midst of these judgments allowed by God, a voice declares that “the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ” (Rev. 11:15). Chapter 12 portrays the Church of Christ and the KINGDOM OF GOD (JST Rev. 12:7; McConkie, 1973, Vol. 3, p. 516). In chapter 13, Satan’s kingdoms oppose the Saints and the work of God. Chapter 14 then shows the triumph of Christ’s kingdom and what leads to that victory. Christ comes to Mount Zion with his servants (14:1–5), and an angel, having the everlasting gospel to preach to the earth, flies through the heavens (14:6–7). (Verse 6 provides the inspiration for the well-known ANGEL MORONI STATUE placed atop some LDS temples.) Then the fall of Babylon is announced (14:8–11). Like the angel from the east (Rev. 7:2), this angel is interpreted to represent the work of the restoration (McConkie, 1973, Vol. 3, p. 530). It is this work, directed by Christ and his servants, which brings about the eventual destruction of all worldly kingdoms. The fall of Babylon (Rev. 16–18) is so dramatic that all the hosts of heaven spontaneously shout, “Alleluia” (Rev. 19:1–6).

After Christ’s coming (Rev. 19:7–21), the vision concludes in quick succession with the Millennium (Rev. 20:1–6), the loosing of Satan for a “little season” (Rev. 20:7–10; D&C 88:111–15), the great Judgment (Rev. 20:11–15), and the celestialization of the earth (Rev. 21:22–5). Thus, the Revelation of John shows that in spite of all of Satan’s efforts to the contrary, God’s work will triumph and Christ will come again to reign with his Saints for a thousand years during the Millennium and throughout eternity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lund, Gerald N. “Insights from the JST into the Book of Revelation.” The Joseph Smith Translation, ed. M. Nyman and R. Millet. Provo, Utah, 1985.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, Vol. 3, pp. 476–85, 489–94, 516, 530. Salt Lake City, 1973.
- . “Understanding the Book of Revelation.” Ensign 5 (Sept. 1975):85–89.
- . The Mortal Messiah, Vol. 1, pp. 426–27. Salt Lake City, 1979.
- Smith, Hyrum M., and Janne M. Sjodahl. Doctrine and Covenants Commentary, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1951.

GERALD N. LUND

---

JOHN THE BAPTIST

John the Baptist was born in Judea about six months before the Savior Jesus Christ. John’s primary mortal mission was to prepare the way for, and baptize, Jesus. His later role in restoring the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD in 1829 is particularly significant to Latter-day Saints.

Biblical scholars discern subtle differences in the way each of the four New Testament Gospels presents information about John the Baptist. Mark seems to emphasize how John prefigured Jesus, in that both proclaimed the gospel and then were given over to death. Luke points to personal relationships between John and Jesus, along with important links that the Baptist provides between the Old Testament and the New. Matthew records several ways in which John’s ministry parallels that of Jesus, yet at the same time makes it clear that John was subordinate to Jesus, who identifies John as “the Elias who is to come” (cf. Matt. 11:14). The Greek Gospel of John, on the other hand, seems to minimize John’s apocalyptic teachings, quotes him as denying that he was that Elias (John 1:21), and never uses the title “the Baptist,” apparently in order to emphasize John’s role as the first person at that time to know by revelation, and to witness, that Jesus was the son of God (see J. Meier, “John the Baptist in Matthew’s Gospel,” Journal of Biblical Literature 99 [1980]:383–86).

For Latter-day Saints, these nuances are transcended by John’s larger roles subsumed within the plan of salvation. For example, his ministry illustrates the concept of the need for a prophet, for “God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets” (Amos 3:7); he came as a voice of warning, proclaiming the gospel latter-day restitution that angelic ministers (MORONI<sub>2</sub>, John the Baptist, Peter, James, John, Moses, etc.) brought back not only the fulness of the everlasting gospel and its KEYS and ORDINANCES but also the “sealing power,” which is the power to bind things on earth and have them be binding in heaven (Matt. 16:19; see SEALING). The restoration of the gospel and the power of sealing are important conditions for Christ’s coming. During this period three characteristics will prevail: judgments, the kingdom of Christ versus the kingdoms of the world, and the destruction of latter-day Babylon.

As trumpets sound and “vials” of destruction are poured out, one devastating scourge follows another, including vast pollutions, rampant wickedness, and the battle of Armageddon (Rev. 8–11, 16). In the midst of these judgments allowed by God, a voice declares that “the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ” (Rev. 11:15). Chapter 12 portrays the Church of Christ and the KINGDOM OF GOD (JST Rev. 12:7; McConkie, 1973, Vol. 3, p. 516). In chapter 13, Satan’s kingdoms oppose the Saints and the work of God. Chapter 14 then shows the triumph of Christ’s kingdom and what leads to that victory. Christ comes to Mount Zion with his servants (14:1–5), and an angel, having the everlasting gospel to preach to the earth, flies through the heavens (14:6–7). (Verse 6 provides the inspiration for the well-known ANGEL MORONI STATUE placed atop some LDS temples.) Then the fall of Babylon is announced (14:8–11). Like the angel from the east (Rev. 7:2), this angel is interpreted to represent the work of the restoration (McConkie, 1973, Vol. 3, p. 530). It is this work, directed by Christ and his servants, which brings about the eventual destruction of all worldly kingdoms. The fall of Babylon (Rev. 16–18) is so dramatic that all the hosts of heaven spontaneously shout, “Alleluia” (Rev. 19:1–6).

After Christ’s coming (Rev. 19:7–21), the vision concludes in quick succession with the Millennium (Rev. 20:1–6), the loosing of Satan for a “little season” (Rev. 20:7–10; D&C 88:111–15), the great Judgment (Rev. 20:11–15), and the celestialization of the earth (Rev. 21:22–5). Thus, the Revelation of John shows that in spite of all of Satan’s efforts to the contrary, God’s work will triumph and Christ will come again to reign with his Saints for a thousand years during the Millennium and throughout eternity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lund, Gerald N. “Insights from the JST into the Book of Revelation.” The Joseph Smith Translation, ed. M. Nyman and R. Millet. Provo, Utah, 1985.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, Vol. 3, pp. 476–85, 489–94, 516, 530. Salt Lake City, 1973.
- . “Understanding the Book of Revelation.” Ensign 5 (Sept. 1975):85–89.
- . The Mortal Messiah, Vol. 1, pp. 426–27. Salt Lake City, 1979.
- Smith, Hyrum M., and Janne M. Sjodahl. Doctrine and Covenants Commentary, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1951.

GERALD N. LUND

---

JOHN THE BAPTIST

John the Baptist was born in Judea about six months before the Savior Jesus Christ. John’s primary mortal mission was to prepare the way for, and baptize, Jesus. His later role in restoring the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD in 1829 is particularly significant to Latter-day Saints.

Biblical scholars discern subtle differences in the way each of the four New Testament Gospels presents information about John the Baptist. Mark seems to emphasize how John prefigured Jesus, in that both proclaimed the gospel and then were given over to death. Luke points to personal relationships between John and Jesus, along with important links that the Baptist provides between the Old Testament and the New. Matthew records several ways in which John’s ministry parallels that of Jesus, yet at the same time makes it clear that John was subordinate to Jesus, who identifies John as “the Elias who is to come” (cf. Matt. 11:14). The Greek Gospel of John, on the other hand, seems to minimize John’s apocalyptic teachings, quotes him as denying that he was that Elias (John 1:21), and never uses the title “the Baptist,” apparently in order to emphasize John’s role as the first person at that time to know by revelation, and to witness, that Jesus was the son of God (see J. Meier, “John the Baptist in Matthew’s Gospel,” Journal of Biblical Literature 99 [1980]:383–86).

For Latter-day Saints, these nuances are transcended by John’s larger roles subsumed within the plan of salvation. For example, his ministry illustrates the concept of the need for a prophet, for “God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets” (Amos 3:7); he came as a voice of warning, proclaiming the gospel of repentance, bearing testimony of Jesus Christ, baptizing by immersion, holding divine authority, promising the gift of the Holy Ghost, and enduring to the end, even by suffering martyrdom. He was the Elias who was “to prepare all things” (JST Matt. 11:15), but not the Elias “who was to restore all things” (JST John 1:22, 26).

Baptism of Jesus Christ, Alma B. Wright (mural in the Alberta Temple baptistry, c. 1923). John the Baptist baptized Jesus Christ in the Jordan River. John baptized by immersion, which symbolizes death, burial, and resurrection. Jesus, who was free from sin, obediently set an example for all people to follow.

Both of John’s parents were descendants of Aaron: Zacharias was an officiating priest in the temple of Jerusalem, and Elisabeth, of the daughters of Aaron, was a relative of Mary the mother of Jesus (Luke 1:5, 36). His birth was promised by the angel Gabriel (see NOAH), who visited Zacharias while he was officiating in the temple. Although Zacharias and Elisabeth had fervently prayed for children, none had been born to them. In their old age, Gabriel’s promise was received with some doubt by Zacharias. As a sign, Gabriel struck Zacharias deaf and evidently dumb until the naming of the baby eight days after John’s birth, the day John was circumcised according to the law of Moses. Contrary to the custom, by previous direction of Gabriel, the baby was named John instead of Zacharias, after his father. Zacharias gave his son a blessing on this occasion, the words of which are known as the Benedictus in Roman Catholic and Protestant terminology (Luke 1:68–79).

Little is known of John’s early life and training. When Mary visited Elisabeth during their pregnancies, John “leaped in her womb” (Luke 1:41). He was “filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother’s womb” and “was ordained by the angel of God” when he was eight days old (D&C 84:27–28). Since his parents were elderly, some wonder if he was soon orphaned or associated with religious sects in the Judean desert. Somehow he was carefully reared in gospel principles, for he came forth from the desert preaching repentance (Matt. 3:2) and was well prepared. He knew his mission and the source of his authority.

Jesus said of him, “Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet” (Luke 7:28). John the Baptist was dearly loved by the Savior. John had unusual privileges: none other would proclaim the immediate coming of Jesus; none other would be privileged to baptize the Lamb of God; none other was the legal administrator in the affairs of the kingdom then on the earth and holder of the keys of power. “These three reasons constitute him the greatest prophet born of a woman” (TPJS, p. 276).

With these credentials John came forth vigorously preaching repentance and many principles of the gospel in the wilderness of Judea near the river Jordan (Mark 1:4–5). He ate ritually clean foods, locusts (Lev. 11:22), and wild honey; he drank “neither wine nor strong drink” (Luke 1:15); and he wore the traditional clothing of a prophet, camel’s hair and a leather girdle (Mark 1:6). He also fasted (Matt. 11:18). He attracted large crowds and came under the increasing condemnation of those Jewish leaders whom he challenged with his preaching.

After a time, the “One mightier than I,” even Jesus, approached John and requested baptism (see JESUS CHRIST: BAPTISM OF JESUS CHRIST). A humble and meek John initially resisted, declaring that he needed to be baptized by Jesus. Upon Jesus’ insistence, John baptized Jesus, following which he witnessed the sign of the dove descending from heaven upon the Christ (John 1:32).

At this juncture John alone seemed to bear the responsibility of spanning two DISPENSATIONS. He was a child of promise whose mission had been prophesied years before by Isaiah, LEHI, and NEPHI (Isa. 40:3; 1 Ne. 10:7–10; 2 Ne. 31:4–8).

John had begun his preaching and baptizing near the river Jordan probably about a year before Jesus began his public ministry. He “had no intention of founding a new sect” (Scobie, p. 131); his calling was to prepare the way for Jesus; and many of his followers became Jesus’ closest and earliest disciples. His intense preaching of repentance had deeply angered those in power. He denounced the marriage of Herod Antipas to his brother’s wife, Herodias, which clearly violated Jewish law (Lev. 20:21; Josephus, Antiquities 18.5.1–2). Herodias wanted John killed, but Herod Antipas had concern for John’s popularity with the people. He had John imprisoned (Mark 6:17), somewhat pacifying the Pharisees, as well as Herodias. During all of this, Jesus went to Galilee. While in prison, John sent two of his disciples to Jesus to confirm their faith in the Savior’s identity, and Jesus supported and sustained him (Luke 7:24–28). Through shrewd plotting and the beguiling dance of her daughter Salome, Herodias eventually manipulated Herod into having John beheaded.

John the Baptist was among the prophets and saints who were with Christ in his resurrection (D&C 133:55). Approximately eighteen centuries later, on Friday, May 15, 1829, this forerunner of the Savior again appeared, this time as an angel of the Lord preparing the world for the Savior’s second coming, and conferred the keys of the Aaronic Priesthood. This occurred when Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY withdrew to a secluded place on the Susquehanna River near Harmony, Pennsylvania, and prayed for instruction. Hardly had they begun when a heavenly messenger appeared, introducing himself as John the Baptist. Placing his hands upon their heads, he conferred upon them the priesthood of Aaron (D&C 13). He then commanded the young men to baptize each other in the nearby Susquehanna River and then lay hands upon each other to reconfer the priesthood that he had bestowed upon them. The messenger promised that the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, or higher priesthood, would be given to them at a future time by the apostles Peter, James, and John (JS—H 1:72).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Matthews, Robert J. A Burning Light. Provo, Utah, 1972.
 Scobie, Charles H. John the Baptist. Philadelphia, 1964.

LOUI NOVAK

JOHN THE BELOVED

John the Beloved is the author of five New Testament writings—a Gospel, the Revelation (Apocalypse; see JOHN, REVELATIONS OF), and three letters. Although the author identifies himself as John in the Revelation (Rev. 1:1, 4, 9), he is known only as “the Elder” in the letters and as “the disciple whom Jesus loved” in the Gospel. Ancient tradition and elements of style have supported the common authorship of these writings, but some argue that “the Beloved” and “the Elder” were two different people.

John emphasizes spiritual qualities in his writings, including some contrasting pairs of qualities that illustrate the two opposing spiritual forces in the world. Examples include light and darkness, love and hate, truth and falsehood, and God and the devil (see OPPOSITION). John also emphasizes such ideas as bearing true witness, knowing the Lord, enduring to the end, and being raised up by the Savior.

John and his brother, James, were sons of Zebedee (some feel that Salome was Zebedee’s wife, basing their identification on Matt. 27:56 and Mark 15:40), and the men of the family were fishermen at the Sea of Galilee. Their business prospered to the extent that they employed servants (Mark 1:19–20) by the time Jesus called the brothers to the full-time ministry. Although the Gospels of Matthew and Luke list Peter, Andrew, James, and John at the beginning of their lists, Mark and Acts place Peter, James, and John at the beginning of the list of the Twelve. These three apostles were alone with Jesus on special occasions, such as at the raising of Jairus’ daughter (Mark 5:37–43), on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matt. 17:1–9), and at Jesus’ suffering in the garden of Gethsemane (Matt. 26:37–45). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that these three ancient apostles received the KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD during the transfiguration experience (TPJS, p. 158).

John is usually identified as one of the two disciples of John the Baptist mentioned in the Gospel of John who became disciples of Jesus after his baptism (John 1:35–40). James and John were called Boanerges (“Sons of Thunder”) by Jesus, perhaps because of their strong and impulsive personalities. Either they (Mark 10:35–40) or their mother on their behalf (Matt. 20:20–23) asked Jesus to grant them places of honor in his heavenly

John had begun his preaching and baptizing near the river Jordan probably about a year before Jesus began his public ministry. He “had no intention of founding a new sect” (Scobie, p. 131); his calling was to prepare the way for Jesus; and many of his followers became Jesus’ closest and earliest disciples. His intense preaching of repentance had deeply angered those in power. He denounced the marriage of Herod Antipas to his brother’s wife, Herodias, which clearly violated Jewish law (Lev. 20:21; Josephus, Antiquities 18.5.1–2). Herodias wanted John killed, but Herod Antipas had concern for John’s popularity with the people. He had John imprisoned (Mark 6:17), somewhat pacifying the Pharisees, as well as Herodias. During all of this, Jesus went to Galilee. While in prison, John sent two of his disciples to Jesus to confirm their faith in the Savior’s identity, and Jesus supported and sustained him (Luke 7:24–28). Through shrewd plotting and the beguiling dance of her daughter Salome, Herodias eventually manipulated Herod into having John beheaded.

John the Baptist was among the prophets and saints who were with Christ in his resurrection (D&C 133:55). Approximately eighteen centuries later, on Friday, May 15, 1829, this forerunner of the Savior again appeared, this time as an angel of the Lord preparing the world for the Savior’s second coming, and conferred the keys of the Aaronic Priesthood. This occurred when Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY withdrew to a secluded place on the Susquehanna River near Harmony, Pennsylvania, and prayed for instruction. Hardly had they begun when a heavenly messenger appeared, introducing himself as John the Baptist. Placing his hands upon their heads, he conferred upon them the priesthood of Aaron (D&C 13). He then commanded the young men to baptize each other in the nearby Susquehanna River and then lay hands upon each other to reconfer the priesthood that he had bestowed upon them. The messenger promised that the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, or higher priesthood, would be given to them at a future time by the apostles Peter, James, and John (JS—H 1:72).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Matthews, Robert J. A Burning Light. Provo, Utah, 1972.
 Scobie, Charles H. John the Baptist. Philadelphia, 1964.

LOUI NOVAK

JOHN THE BELOVED

John the Beloved is the author of five New Testament writings—a Gospel, the Revelation (Apocalypse; see JOHN, REVELATIONS OF), and three letters. Although the author identifies himself as John in the Revelation (Rev. 1:1, 4, 9), he is known only as “the Elder” in the letters and as “the disciple whom Jesus loved” in the Gospel. Ancient tradition and elements of style have supported the common authorship of these writings, but some argue that “the Beloved” and “the Elder” were two different people.

John emphasizes spiritual qualities in his writings, including some contrasting pairs of qualities that illustrate the two opposing spiritual forces in the world. Examples include light and darkness, love and hate, truth and falsehood, and God and the devil (see OPPOSITION). John also emphasizes such ideas as bearing true witness, knowing the Lord, enduring to the end, and being raised up by the Savior.

John and his brother, James, were sons of Zebedee (some feel that Salome was Zebedee’s wife, basing their identification on Matt. 27:56 and Mark 15:40), and the men of the family were fishermen at the Sea of Galilee. Their business prospered to the extent that they employed servants (Mark 1:19–20) by the time Jesus called the brothers to the full-time ministry. Although the Gospels of Matthew and Luke list Peter, Andrew, James, and John at the beginning of their lists, Mark and Acts place Peter, James, and John at the beginning of the list of the Twelve. These three apostles were alone with Jesus on special occasions, such as at the raising of Jairus’ daughter (Mark 5:37–43), on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matt. 17:1–9), and at Jesus’ suffering in the garden of Gethsemane (Matt. 26:37–45). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that these three ancient apostles received the KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD during the transfiguration experience (TPJS, p. 158).

John is usually identified as one of the two disciples of John the Baptist mentioned in the Gospel of John who became disciples of Jesus after his baptism (John 1:35–40). James and John were called Boanerges (“Sons of Thunder”) by Jesus, perhaps because of their strong and impulsive personalities. Either they (Mark 10:35–40) or their mother on their behalf (Matt. 20:20–23) asked Jesus to grant them places of honor in his heavenly kingdom. Although rebuked for their ambition, they averred their willingness to share in his trials and suffering, and Jesus affirmed that they would do so.

John describes himself as “leaning on Jesus’ bosom” during the Last Supper (John 13:23); later, when Jesus was bound and taken to the high priest, John (who “was known unto the high priest”) and Peter followed along (John 18:15). John continued to follow the Savior through the ensuing events and was the only one of the Twelve recorded as being present at the Crucifixion. Jesus asked him to take care of his mother, Mary, and John took her to his own home (John 19:26–27).

Following the resurrection of Christ, Peter and John ran to the tomb when told by Mary Magdalene that the covering stone had been removed. John ran faster and arrived first at the empty tomb (John 20:1–8). Later, the Lord told Peter that John would remain (on earth) until the Lord’s second coming (John 21:20–23), giving rise to the early Christian tradition that John did not die. The Prophet Joseph Smith confirmed and corrected that tradition in a revelation that states that John, having been given “power over death,” remains on earth “as flaming fire and a ministering angel . . . for those who shall be heirs of salvation” until the Savior returns (D&C 7; see TRANSLATED BEINGS). The resurrected Christ also mentioned John’s continued earthly ministry during his visit to the people of the Book of Mormon (3 Ne. 28:6–8).

Peter and John appear together in many events of the early chapters of Acts, and some time after James’ death (Acts 12:1–2) these two apostles were joined by another James, the “brother of the Lord” (Gal. 1:19), in a presiding responsibility over the Church; James, Peter, and John were the recognized “pillars” (Gal. 2:9).

After Peter’s death (traditionally dated about A.D. 67), John would have been the senior and presiding apostle. Many sources state that years later John lived at Ephesus, was exiled to Patmos (c. A.D. 90) by the Emperor Domitian, and returned to Ephesus during the reign of Nerva (A.D. 96–98), Domitian’s successor. During his exile to Patmos, John received the Revelation, which he was directed to send with cover letters to seven churches of Asia Minor. The importance of the Revelation to the Latter-day Saints is underscored by the vision of NEPHI<sup>1</sup> in the Book of Mormon, where that prophet was told by an angel not to write all he had seen, for the record of the last days would be made for the world by John, an apostle of the Lord (1 Ne. 14:18–27; cf. Ether 4:16).

After returning to Ephesus, John wrote the three letters that bear his name in the New Testament. Some think he also wrote his Gospel in Ephesus at this late date, but others date it earlier. Other writings have been ascribed to John, including the apocryphal Acts of John, and various versions of the Apocryphon [secret writing] of John, but none of these has been generally considered an authentic writing of the apostle.

In May–June 1829 the three ancient apostles, Peter, James, and John, appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY, ordained them to the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, and gave to them the same keys they had received on the Mount of Transfiguration (see D&C 27:12–13). Joseph Smith later received a revelation, parts of which paralleled the prologue to the Gospel of John, and was told that “the fulness of John’s record” would be given at some future date (D&C 93:6, 18).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Raymond E. The Gospel According to John, 2 vols. Garden City, N.Y., 1966, 1970.
- . The Epistles of John. New York, 1982.
- Charles, R. H. Revelation, 2 vols. Edinburgh, 1920; rep. 1970.
- Ford, J. Massyngherde. Revelation. New York, 1975.
- Morris, Leon. Commentary on the Gospel of John. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1971.
- Schnaakenburg, Rudolf. The Gospel According to St. John, 3 vols. English trans., London, 1968–1982.

C. WILFRED GRIGGS

---

JOINING THE CHURCH

Converts to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have various motivations for their initial interest in the Church, and many factors influence them in the conversion process. However, they generally share three common experiences as they seek BAPTISM and membership in the Church. First, most of those interested in joining the Church meet with missionaries for a series of brief lessons on basic LDS beliefs and religious practices. Second, all prospective converts must demonstrate in a prebaptism interview with a Church representative that they are making an informed decision of their own free will and that they willingly fulfill the baptismal requirements. Third, kingdom. Although rebuked for their ambition, they averred their willingness to share in his trials and suffering, and Jesus affirmed that they would do so.

John describes himself as “leaning on Jesus’ bosom” during the Last Supper (John 13:23); later, when Jesus was bound and taken to the high priest, John (who “was known unto the high priest”) and Peter followed along (John 18:15). John continued to follow the Savior through the ensuing events and was the only one of the Twelve recorded as being present at the Crucifixion. Jesus asked him to take care of his mother, Mary, and John took her to his own home (John 19:26–27).

Following the resurrection of Christ, Peter and John ran to the tomb when told by Mary Magdalene that the covering stone had been removed. John ran faster and arrived first at the empty tomb (John 20:1–8). Later, the Lord told Peter that John would remain (on earth) until the Lord’s second coming (John 21:20–23), giving rise to the early Christian tradition that John did not die. The Prophet Joseph Smith confirmed and corrected that tradition in a revelation that states that John, having been given “power over death,” remains on earth “as flaming fire and a ministering angel . . . for those who shall be heirs of salvation” until the Savior returns (D&C 7; see TRANSLATED BEINGS). The resurrected Christ also mentioned John’s continued earthly ministry during his visit to the people of the Book of Mormon (3 Ne. 28:6–8).

Peter and John appear together in many events of the early chapters of Acts, and some time after James’ death (Acts 12:1–2) these two apostles were joined by another James, the “brother of the Lord” (Gal. 1:19), in a presiding responsibility over the Church; James, Peter, and John were the recognized “pillars” (Gal. 2:9).

After Peter’s death (traditionally dated about A.D. 67), John would have been the senior and presiding apostle. Many sources state that years later John lived at Ephesus, was exiled to Patmos (c. A.D. 90) by the Emperor Domitian, and returned to Ephesus during the reign of Nerva (A.D. 96–98), Domitian’s successor. During his exile to Patmos, John received the Revelation, which he was directed to send with cover letters to seven churches of Asia Minor. The importance of the Revelation to the Latter-day Saints is underscored by the vision of NEPHI<sub>1</sub> in the Book of Mormon, where that prophet was told by an angel not to write all he had seen, for the record of the last days would be made for the world by John, an apostle of the Lord (1 Ne. 14:18–27; cf. Ether 4:16).

After returning to Ephesus, John wrote the three letters that bear his name in the New Testament. Some think he also wrote his Gospel in Ephesus at this late date, but others date it earlier. Other writings have been ascribed to John, including the apocryphal Acts of John, and various versions of the Apocryphon [secret writing] of John, but none of these has been generally considered an authentic writing of the apostle.

In May–June 1829 the three ancient apostles, Peter, James, and John, appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY, ordained them to the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, and gave to them the same keys they had received on the Mount of Transfiguration (see D&C 27:12–13). Joseph Smith later received a revelation, parts of which paralleled the prologue to the Gospel of John, and was told that “the fulness of John’s record” would be given at some future date (D&C 93:6, 18).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Raymond E. The Gospel According to John, 2 vols. Garden City, N.Y., 1966, 1970.
- . The Epistles of John. New York, 1982.
- Charles, R. H. Revelation, 2 vols. Edinburgh, 1920; rep. 1970.
- Ford, J. Massyngherde. Revelation. New York, 1975.
- Morris, Leon. Commentary on the Gospel of John. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1971.
- Schnaakenburg, Rudolf. The Gospel According to St. John, 3 vols. English trans., London, 1968–1982.

C. WILFRED GRIGGS

---

JOINING THE CHURCH

Converts to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have various motivations for their initial interest in the Church, and many factors influence them in the conversion process. However, they generally share three common experiences as they seek BAPTISM and membership in the Church. First, most of those interested in joining the Church meet with missionaries for a series of brief lessons on basic LDS beliefs and religious practices. Second, all prospective converts must demonstrate in a prebaptism interview with a Church representative that they are making an informed decision of their own free will and that they willingly fulfill the baptismal requirements. Third, every convert must receive the ORDINANCES of baptism and CONFIRMATION as performed by authorized representatives of the Church and be accepted as a member of the local WARD or BRANCH by the common consent of the members.

LDS converts come from a wide age range and from all socioeconomic groups. Often they have friends or acquaintances who are already members, but sometimes they are located by missionary contacting. They typically have a desire to improve their lives by learning correct gospel principles and by uniting themselves with others having similar needs and attitudes. Thus, the common essential in most conversions to the Church is obtaining a personal conviction that the Church today is authorized by God to teach and administer the gospel of Jesus Christ.

All who are interested in joining the Church must know and understand the responsibilities that Church membership will bring. To this end, they receive a series of lessons from LDS missionaries or from members of the Church. At this stage, prospective converts are called "investigators," because they are investigating or studying the Church. The lessons are called the missionary "discussions," because although they cover standardized topics, missionaries are encouraged to present them in an informal, conversational manner. For example, missionaries typically share their personal experiences and feelings about the topics discussed, and encourage investigators to do likewise, asking questions and giving reactions to LDS teachings. These lessons are usually taught in a home setting, to individuals or to a small group.

The lessons teach the gospel of Jesus Christ, including the nature of the godhead, the PLAN OF SALVATION, keeping the commandments, and living a Christlike life. They also discuss the life and mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, the coming-forth of the Book of Mormon, the RESTORATION of the PRIESTHOOD, and the importance of following the PROPHETS living today.

Investigators are asked to make various commitments during their course of study, which may last a few weeks or several months, depending on their individual rate of preparation toward baptism. For example, they are challenged and encouraged to engage in daily prayer and scripture study, especially prayerful study of the Book of Mormon. Those who wish to join the Church are urged to begin living an LDS lifestyle. This includes striving for Christlike attitudes and behavior in all circumstances; attending Church meetings; abstaining from harmful substances, including tobacco, alcoholic beverages, coffee, tea, and drugs; beginning to tithe; living a moral and chaste life (see CHASTITY); and laboring to serve those in need.

Eight-year-old boy (standing, center) on his baptismal day, with his parents and extended family, in Logan, Utah, 1987. Joining the Church brings individuals into "the household of God" (Eph. 2:19). Courtesy Craig Law.

In the interview customarily conducted by an authorized Church representative prior to baptism, the interviewer determines the candidate's willingness and worthiness to enter into the baptismal covenant. During this interview, baptismal candidates are asked whether they have a heartfelt TESTIMONY of the fundamental doctrine of the Church. All baptismal candidates also must declare whether they currently keep, and will continue to keep, God's commandments through their lives.

Baptism is required for Church membership. It represents a covenant with God whereby the candidate agrees to follow Christ and live his commandments. The requirements for baptism are described in the Doctrine and Covenants as follows: "All those who humble themselves before God, and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church” (D&C 20:37). Baptism symbolizes the washing away of sins as well as a rebirth and the beginning of a new life on earth leading to eternal life with God.

Baptism is followed by confirmation into the Church by the LAYING ON OF HANDS of one holding the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. During this ordinance, the new convert is confirmed a member of the Church and receives the gift of the Holy Ghost. This is typically a momentous and joyous occasion for all involved. Following his confirmation the convert is presented for acceptance by the local membership as a member in full fellowship and embarks on a life of spiritual growth through obedience to the laws of God and activity and service in the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Rector, Hartman, and Connie Rector. No More Strangers, 4 vols. Salt Lake City, 1971–1990.

LINDA A. CHARNEY

---

JOSEPH OF EGYPT

[This entry consists of three articles:

Joseph, Son of Jacob
Writings of Joseph
Seed of Joseph

Latter-day Saint scripture portrays a broader interest in Joseph of Egypt than the Bible does. The article Joseph, Son of Jacob deals with the resulting wide sweep of LDS interests in Joseph, including the promises of the Lord about the latter-day importance of Joseph's posterity and his ancestral relationship to the Prophet Joseph Smith. The article Writings of Joseph treats specifically the matter of the writings of Joseph preserved in LDS scripture. The article Seed of Joseph focuses on the ancestral connection between Book of Mormon peoples and Joseph, son of Jacob.]

JOSEPH, SON OF JACOB

The Book of Mormon prophet NEPHI<sup>1</sup> said of Joseph, son of Jacob, “He truly prophesied concerning all his seed. And the prophecies which he wrote, there are not many greater” (2 Ne. 4:2). Latter-day Saints hold Joseph to be a progenitor of a branch of the house of Israel, including certain BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES about whom he prophesied. Additionally, he is honored as an ancestor of the Prophet Joseph SMITH and many Church members and as one who prophesied concerning the RESTORATION of the gospel of Jesus Christ through Joseph Smith.

The current Bible text preserves little scripture attributed to Joseph of Egypt. However, some writings of Joseph were recorded on the PLATES of brass, a scriptural record brought to the Western Hemisphere from Jerusalem by the prophet LEHI, and known among the Book of Mormon people. Another prophecy, restored by Joseph Smith, is now found in the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION (JST) Genesis 50. In this text, the ancient Joseph prophesied the bondage of his father's family in Egypt and their eventual deliverance by Moses, and specifically names him and his brother, Aaron. Moses was to deliver Israel from Egypt, have power over the Red Sea, receive commandments from God, and be assisted by Aaron as his spokesman (JST Gen. 50:24, 29, 34–35).

The same source indicates that the Lord visited Joseph, promising him a righteous posterity, a branch of which would be separated from their kindred and taken to a distant country (JST Gen. 50:25–26). According to the Bible, Jacob had already prophesied that Joseph's branches—Ephraim and Manasseh—would inherit the “utmost bound of the everlasting hills” (Gen. 49:26). Moses described the new land of their inheritance as containing riches of both heaven and earth (Deut. 33:13–15). The Book of Mormon records the partial fulfillment of these prophecies with the exodus of the families of Lehi, a descendant of Manasseh (Alma 10:3), and Ishmael, a descendant of Ephraim (JD 23:184), to the western continents. The Book of Mormon is called “the stick of Ephraim” in modern revelation (D&C 27:5) and both “the stick of Ephraim” and “the STICK OF JOSEPH” (Ezek. 37:15–28, esp. verses 16 and 19).

Notwithstanding Israel's anticipated deliverance from Egypt under the leadership of Moses, Joseph of Egypt also foresaw that the Israelites would eventually be scattered. Still he was assured that they would be remembered by the Lord and that he would bring their descendants out of “bondage” in the LAST DAYS. A “choice seer” was to be raised up, a descendant of Joseph, who would bear his name and whose father would also bear the same name. The prophecy stated that this latter-day Joseph would be highly esteemed by Joseph's descendants and would bring them knowledge of their progenitors. Moreover, he would be like both Joseph and Moses. As the ancient Joseph gathered his father's family in Egypt received by baptism into his church” (D&C 20:37). Baptism symbolizes the washing away of sins as well as a rebirth and the beginning of a new life on earth leading to eternal life with God.

Baptism is followed by confirmation into the Church by the LAYING ON OF HANDS of one holding the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. During this ordinance, the new convert is confirmed a member of the Church and receives the gift of the Holy Ghost. This is typically a momentous and joyous occasion for all involved. Following his confirmation the convert is presented for acceptance by the local membership as a member in full fellowship and embarks on a life of spiritual growth through obedience to the laws of God and activity and service in the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Rector, Hartman, and Connie Rector. No More Strangers, 4 vols. Salt Lake City, 1971–1990.

LINDA A. CHARNEY

---

JOSEPH OF EGYPT

[This entry consists of three articles:

Joseph, Son of Jacob
Writings of Joseph
Seed of Joseph

Latter-day Saint scripture portrays a broader interest in Joseph of Egypt than the Bible does. The article Joseph, Son of Jacob deals with the resulting wide sweep of LDS interests in Joseph, including the promises of the Lord about the latter-day importance of Joseph's posterity and his ancestral relationship to the Prophet Joseph Smith. The article Writings of Joseph treats specifically the matter of the writings of Joseph preserved in LDS scripture. The article Seed of Joseph focuses on the ancestral connection between Book of Mormon peoples and Joseph, son of Jacob.]

JOSEPH, SON OF JACOB

The Book of Mormon prophet NEPHI<sup>1</sup> said of Joseph, son of Jacob, “He truly prophesied concerning all his seed. And the prophecies which he wrote, there are not many greater” (2 Ne. 4:2). Latter-day Saints hold Joseph to be a progenitor of a branch of the house of Israel, including certain BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES about whom he prophesied. Additionally, he is honored as an ancestor of the Prophet Joseph SMITH and many Church members and as one who prophesied concerning the RESTORATION of the gospel of Jesus Christ through Joseph Smith.

The current Bible text preserves little scripture attributed to Joseph of Egypt. However, some writings of Joseph were recorded on the PLATES of brass, a scriptural record brought to the Western Hemisphere from Jerusalem by the prophet LEHI, and known among the Book of Mormon people. Another prophecy, restored by Joseph Smith, is now found in the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION (JST) Genesis 50. In this text, the ancient Joseph prophesied the bondage of his father's family in Egypt and their eventual deliverance by Moses, and specifically names him and his brother, Aaron. Moses was to deliver Israel from Egypt, have power over the Red Sea, receive commandments from God, and be assisted by Aaron as his spokesman (JST Gen. 50:24, 29, 34–35).

The same source indicates that the Lord visited Joseph, promising him a righteous posterity, a branch of which would be separated from their kindred and taken to a distant country (JST Gen. 50:25–26). According to the Bible, Jacob had already prophesied that Joseph's branches—Ephraim and Manasseh—would inherit the “utmost bound of the everlasting hills” (Gen. 49:26). Moses described the new land of their inheritance as containing riches of both heaven and earth (Deut. 33:13–15). The Book of Mormon records the partial fulfillment of these prophecies with the exodus of the families of Lehi, a descendant of Manasseh (Alma 10:3), and Ishmael, a descendant of Ephraim (JD 23:184), to the western continents. The Book of Mormon is called “the stick of Ephraim” in modern revelation (D&C 27:5) and both “the stick of Ephraim” and “the STICK OF JOSEPH” (Ezek. 37:15–28, esp. verses 16 and 19).

Notwithstanding Israel's anticipated deliverance from Egypt under the leadership of Moses, Joseph of Egypt also foresaw that the Israelites would eventually be scattered. Still he was assured that they would be remembered by the Lord and that he would bring their descendants out of “bondage” in the LAST DAYS. A “choice seer” was to be raised up, a descendant of Joseph, who would bear his name and whose father would also bear the same name. The prophecy stated that this latter-day Joseph would be highly esteemed by Joseph's descendants and would bring them knowledge of their progenitors. Moreover, he would be like both Joseph and Moses. As the ancient Joseph gathered his father's family in Egypt and supplied them with bread during famine, so the latter-day Joseph would gather their descendants from the ends of the earth to feast upon the words of everlasting life. Like Moses, he would bring forth the word of God (the Book of Mormon and other revelations), which would testify of, and sustain, other words of God that had already gone forth (the Bible), thereby confounding false doctrines and laying contentions to rest. As Moses would liberate Israel from Egyptian bondage, the “choice seer” of the last days would liberate them from the bondage of false traditions; as Moses would reveal a new COVENANT and prepare Israel to enter the PROMISED LAND, so his latter-day counterpart would reveal a NEW AND EVER-LASTING COVENANT and prepare modern Israel, the Church, for the day of Christ’s millennial reign (JST Gen. 50:24–38; cf. 2 Ne. 3; JST Gen. 48:11).

When Joseph Smith’s father, Joseph SMITH, Sr., acting in his office of PATRIARCH, gave his son a PATRIARCHAL BLESSING, he further illuminated what was known to the ancient Joseph.

I bless thee with the blessings of thy fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; and . . . thy father Joseph, the son of Jacob. Behold, he looked after his posterity in the last days, when they should be scattered and driven by the Gentiles, and wept before the Lord; he sought diligently to know from whence the Son should come who should bring forth the word of the Lord, by which they might be enlightened, and brought back to the true fold, and his eyes beheld thee, my son; . . . and he said, As my blessings are to extend to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills; as my father’s blessing prevailed, over the blessings of his progenitors, and as my branches are to run over the wall, and my seed are to inherit the choice land whereon the Zion of God shall stand in the last days, from among my seed, scattered with the Gentiles, shall a choice Seer arise, whose bowels shall be a fountain of truth, whose loins shall be girded with the girdle of righteousness, whose hands shall be lifted with acceptance before the God of Jacob to turn away his anger from his anointed, whose heart shall meditate great wisdom, whose intelligence shall circumscribe and comprehend the deep things of God, and whose mouth shall utter the law of the just . . . and he shall feed upon the heritage of Jacob his father [Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine 23 (Oct. 1932):175].

A blessing pronounced by Joseph Smith on Oliver COWDERY (Dec. 18, 1833) notes that Joseph of Egypt had seen Oliver in vision and knew of his scribal role in the translation of the Book of Mormon. Oliver was also told that Joseph of Egypt knew that Oliver would be present when the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD, or lesser priesthood, was restored and again when the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, or higher priesthood, was restored by messengers who received it from Jesus during his earthly ministry (Joseph F. Smith, IE 7 [Oct. 1904]:943). With the restoration of these priesthoods in 1829 and the publication of the Book of Mormon in 1830, the stage was set for fulfilling Moses’ promise that the posterity of Ephraim and Manasseh would “push” or gather scattered Israel from the four quarters of the earth (cf. Deut. 33:17).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Horton, George A., Jr. “Joseph: A Legacy of Greatness.” In Studies in Scripture, ed. K. Jackson and R. Millet, Vol. 3, pp. 63–92. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- McConkie, Joseph Fielding. His Name Shall Be Joseph. Salt Lake City, 1980.

JOSEPH FIELDING MCCONKIE

WRITINGS OF JOSEPH

Certain prophecies of Joseph of Egypt were preserved on brass plates carried by NEPHI<sup>1</sup> from Jerusalem to the Americas in approximately 590 B.C. The Book of Mormon makes available some of these prophecies. Although it is not known when Joseph’s prophetic texts were recorded, they are doubtless very ancient. By contrast, the History of Joseph, Prayer of Joseph, Testament of Joseph, and Joseph and Asenath are considered to be Hellenistic Jewish writings, dating between 200 B.C. and A.D. 200, and are of unknown authorship (see Charlesworth). Joseph SMITH noted “writings of Joseph” on papyri that he owned (HC 2:236).

According to Alma 46:24, Jacob the patriarch saw that part of Joseph’s coat would be preserved, symbolizing a remnant of Joseph’s seed (cf. CWHN 6:211–21). In addition, two similar though not identical texts from Joseph are preserved in 2 Nephi 3 and JST Genesis 50. Both prophesy that Moses will arise, that writings from “the fruit of the loins of Judah shall grow together” with writings of Joseph’s descendants, and that a seer named Joseph—whose father would also be named Joseph—would appear in the last days (2 Ne. 3:6–17; JST Gen. 50:24–35; for similar expectations in pseud-epigraphic texts, see McConkie). Associates of Joseph Smith saw him as the predicted seer, as did Joseph Smith himself. For instance, President John TAYLOR affirmed:

God called [Joseph Smith] to occupy the position that he did. How long ago? Thousands of years ago . . . Prophets prophesied about his coming, that a man should arise whose name should be Joseph, and that his father's name should be Joseph, and also that he should be a descendant of that Joseph who was sold into Egypt [JD 26:106].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, James H. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 vols. Garden City, New York, 1983–1985.
- McConkie, Joseph F. "Joseph Smith as Found in Ancient Manuscripts." In Isaiah and the Prophets, ed. M. Nyman. Provo, Utah, 1984.

JAMES R. CLARK

SEED OF JOSEPH

The Book of Mormon teaches that Joseph, son of Jacob, "obtained a promise of the Lord" that his seed would become a "righteous branch unto the house of Israel" (2 Ne. 3:5) and that a latter-day descendant also named Joseph would have a rôle in bringing Joseph's seed and all the house of Israel "unto salvation" (2 Ne. 3:15).

While many of Joseph's posterity were among the ten tribes of Israel taken into captivity about 722 B.C. (2 Kgs. 17:5–6), a few descendants had settled in Jerusalem some 200 years earlier (cf. 2 Chr. 15:9–10). From those came the Book of Mormon leaders LEHI and ISHMAEL, who, about 600 B.C., led their families to the Western Hemisphere. Their descendants were later called "a remnant of the seed of Joseph" (Alma 46:23–24). Lehi reported that Joseph's prophecies concerning his seed included the following: (1) they would become a righteous people; (2) the Messiah would manifest himself to them; (3) a latter-day SEER like Moses, raised up by God from Joseph's seed, would himself be called Joseph (2 Ne. 3:1–25); and (4) the righteous seed of the ancient Joseph who accept the gospel will help in building the NEW JERUSALEM and will participate in events of the LAST DAYS (3 Ne. 20:10–28; 21:2–26).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ludlow, Daniel H. A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Pratt, Orson. "The Blessings of Joseph." JD 14:7–11.

LIESEL C. MCBRIDE

JOSEPH SMITH—HISTORY

The account called Joseph Smith—History, as it appears in the Pearl of Great Price, tells of the Prophet's experiences from his early years through May 1829. Franklin D. Richards, an early apostle, extracted this part of Joseph SMITH's history from the much longer HISTORY OF THE CHURCH printed in the TIMES AND SEASONS (T&S 3:726), and published the extract in 1851. In the preface of the first edition of the Pearl of Great Price, Richards expressed a hope that this collection of precious truths would increase the members' ability to defend the faith. Joseph Smith—History, the name now given to the historical extract, became canonized scripture to the members of the Church when they accepted the Pearl of Great Price by vote at the October 10, 1880, General Conference (see PEARL OF GREAT PRICE: CONTENTS AND PUBLICATION).

This account in the Pearl of Great Price was not the first attempt to record the Prophet's early experiences. From the organization of the Church in 1830, he understood the importance of keeping records but his efforts were hindered by lawsuits, imprisonments, poverty, and mobs. John Whitmer kept a history between 1830 and 1832 that was lost for many years but is now available again, and Oliver COWDERY wrote eight letters about Joseph Smith's early visions that were published in MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE in 1834–1835. Joseph Smith began work on a history between July and November 1832; it opened with the words "A History of the life of Joseph Smith, Jr., an account of his marvilous [sic] experience," and described his early visions. Various clerks and historians made three more beginnings between 1834 and 1836. In the trying years 1837 and 1838, Joseph Smith and the First Presidency worked on the history of the Church, sometimes taking a grammar lesson before the writing sessions. Finally, in June 1839, Joseph undertook the work again. Materials from the previous efforts were assimilated into this new history, which eventually was published in the Times and Seasons, beginning March 1, 1842 (T&S 3:706). Joseph Smith—History, as we now have it in the Pearl of Great Price, was part of this 1839 version of the history of the Church.

The history introduces Joseph by giving a brief record of his ancestry and his own birth on December 23, 1805, in the township of Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont, one of eleven children

God called [Joseph Smith] to occupy the position that he did. How long ago? Thousands of years ago . . . Prophets prophesied about his coming, that a man should arise whose name should be Joseph, and that his father's name should be Joseph, and also that he should be a descendant of that Joseph who was sold into Egypt [JD 26:106].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, James H. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 vols. Garden City, New York, 1983–1985.
- McConkie, Joseph F. "Joseph Smith as Found in Ancient Manuscripts." In Isaiah and the Prophets, ed. M. Nyman. Provo, Utah, 1984.

JAMES R. CLARK

SEED OF JOSEPH

The Book of Mormon teaches that Joseph, son of Jacob, "obtained a promise of the Lord" that his seed would become a "righteous branch unto the house of Israel" (2 Ne. 3:5) and that a latter-day descendant also named Joseph would have a rôle in bringing Joseph's seed and all the house of Israel "unto salvation" (2 Ne. 3:15).

While many of Joseph's posterity were among the ten tribes of Israel taken into captivity about 722 B.C. (2 Kgs. 17:5–6), a few descendants had settled in Jerusalem some 200 years earlier (cf. 2 Chr. 15:9–10). From those came the Book of Mormon leaders LEHI and ISHMAEL, who, about 600 B.C., led their families to the Western Hemisphere. Their descendants were later called "a remnant of the seed of Joseph" (Alma 46:23–24). Lehi reported that Joseph's prophecies concerning his seed included the following: (1) they would become a righteous people; (2) the Messiah would manifest himself to them; (3) a latter-day SEER like Moses, raised up by God from Joseph's seed, would himself be called Joseph (2 Ne. 3:1–25); and (4) the righteous seed of the ancient Joseph who accept the gospel will help in building the NEW JERUSALEM and will participate in events of the LAST DAYS (3 Ne. 20:10–28; 21:2–26).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ludlow, Daniel H. A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Pratt, Orson. "The Blessings of Joseph." JD 14:7–11.

LIESEL C. MCBRIDE

JOSEPH SMITH—HISTORY

The account called Joseph Smith—History, as it appears in the Pearl of Great Price, tells of the Prophet's experiences from his early years through May 1829. Franklin D. Richards, an early apostle, extracted this part of Joseph SMITH's history from the much longer HISTORY OF THE CHURCH printed in the TIMES AND SEASONS (T&S 3:726), and published the extract in 1851. In the preface of the first edition of the Pearl of Great Price, Richards expressed a hope that this collection of precious truths would increase the members' ability to defend the faith. Joseph Smith—History, the name now given to the historical extract, became canonized scripture to the members of the Church when they accepted the Pearl of Great Price by vote at the October 10, 1880, General Conference (see PEARL OF GREAT PRICE: CONTENTS AND PUBLICATION).

This account in the Pearl of Great Price was not the first attempt to record the Prophet's early experiences. From the organization of the Church in 1830, he understood the importance of keeping records but his efforts were hindered by lawsuits, imprisonments, poverty, and mobs. John Whitmer kept a history between 1830 and 1832 that was lost for many years but is now available again, and Oliver COWDERY wrote eight letters about Joseph Smith's early visions that were published in MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE in 1834–1835. Joseph Smith began work on a history between July and November 1832; it opened with the words "A History of the life of Joseph Smith, Jr., an account of his marvilous [sic] experience," and described his early visions. Various clerks and historians made three more beginnings between 1834 and 1836. In the trying years 1837 and 1838, Joseph Smith and the First Presidency worked on the history of the Church, sometimes taking a grammar lesson before the writing sessions. Finally, in June 1839, Joseph undertook the work again. Materials from the previous efforts were assimilated into this new history, which eventually was published in the Times and Seasons, beginning March 1, 1842 (T&S 3:706). Joseph Smith—History, as we now have it in the Pearl of Great Price, was part of this 1839 version of the history of the Church.

The history introduces Joseph by giving a brief record of his ancestry and his own birth on December 23, 1805, in the township of Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont, one of eleven children of Joseph Sr. and Lucy Mack Smith. It tells of the religious conditions that led to Joseph Smith's FIRST VISION and describes what he saw and heard when the Father and Son appeared, in a direct, first-person account that makes no effort to adorn the events it relates. Oliver Cowdery, Joseph's close associate in these early years, wrote a much more ornate narrative of the early experiences. Joseph Smith simply described what happened to him, from the First Vision, through the visitation of MORONI<sup>2</sup>, the visits to the hill CUMORAH, the translation of the gold plates, and to the visit of John the Baptist to restore the Aaronic Priesthood (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION).

For many years the Church published Joseph Smith—History as a pamphlet with the title Joseph Smith's Own Story. Missionaries carried it to all parts of the world to help explain Joseph Smith's part in the restoration of the gospel in modern times.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Clark, James R. Story of the Pearl of Great Price. Salt Lake City, 1955.

Jessee, Dean C. "The Writing of Joseph Smith's History." BYU Studies 11 (1971):439–73.

———. "The Reliability of Joseph Smith's History." Journal of Mormon History 3 (1976):23–46.

JOSEPH GRANT STEVENSON

JOSEPH SMITH—MATTHEW

Joseph Smith—Matthew is an extract from the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST), as revealed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH in 1831, and comprises a revision of Jesus' discourse on the Mount of Olives recorded in Matthew 23:39 through chapter 24. First published in Ohio in the mid-1830s as a broadside, Joseph Smith—Matthew was republished in 1851 as part of the original PEARL OF GREAT PRICE (Matthews, p. 52).

On March 7, 1831, Joseph Smith was directed to begin a translation of the New Testament "that ye may be prepared for the things to come" (D&C 45:60–61). In Matthew 24, Jesus foretold the impending destruction of Jerusalem. He also spoke of his own SECOND COMING and the destruction of the wicked.

The following are some of the significant additions and clarifications of Joseph Smith—Matthew to the King James text:

1. Jesus' disciples clearly understood that he would come again in glory "in the clouds of heaven, and all the holy angels with him" (JS—M 1:1).
2. Verses 4–22 of the King James text refer to "things I have spoken unto you concerning the Jews" (JS—M 1:21).
3. Verses 6, 7, and 14 of KJV are repositioned from the early part of the chapter, which deals with the Jews of New Testament times, to the latter part of the chapter, which concerns the second coming.
4. The end of the world is not the end of the earth, but the "destruction of the wicked" (JS—M 1:4, 55).
5. The parable in KJV verse 28 is completed to read, "Whosoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together; so likewise shall mine elect be gathered from the four quarters of the earth" (JS—M 1:27).
6. The "abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet," applies both to conditions at the destruction of Jerusalem and to Jesus' second coming (JS—M 1:12, 32).

The plainness and clarity of Joseph Smith—Matthew eliminate much of the confusion that has surrounded Matthew 24. It states that the gospel must be preached in all the world and the elect gathered before the second coming (JS—M 1:31). Finally, the elect will know the signs of the times and will be prepared and preserved during the events of the last days.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Matthews, Robert J. "A Plainer Translation": Joseph Smith's Translation of the Bible. Provo, Utah, 1985.

DAVID T. GILES

JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST)

Joseph SMITH, the first PROPHET of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, made a "new translation" of the Bible, using the text of the King James Version (KJV). This work differs from the KJV in at least 3,410 verses and consists of additions, deletions, rearrangements, and other alterations that cause it to vary not only from the KJV of Joseph Sr. and Lucy Mack Smith. It tells of the religious conditions that led to Joseph Smith's FIRST VISION and describes what he saw and heard when the Father and Son appeared, in a direct, first-person account that makes no effort to adorn the events it relates. Oliver Cowdery, Joseph's close associate in these early years, wrote a much more ornate narrative of the early experiences. Joseph Smith simply described what happened to him, from the First Vision, through the visitation of MORONI<sup>2</sup>, the visits to the hill CUMORAH, the translation of the gold plates, and to the visit of John the Baptist to restore the Aaronic Priesthood (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION).

For many years the Church published Joseph Smith—History as a pamphlet with the title Joseph Smith's Own Story. Missionaries carried it to all parts of the world to help explain Joseph Smith's part in the restoration of the gospel in modern times.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Clark, James R. Story of the Pearl of Great Price. Salt Lake City, 1955.

Jessee, Dean C. "The Writing of Joseph Smith's History." BYU Studies 11 (1971):439–73.

———. "The Reliability of Joseph Smith's History." Journal of Mormon History 3 (1976):23–46.

JOSEPH GRANT STEVENSON

---

JOSEPH SMITH—MATTHEW

Joseph Smith—Matthew is an extract from the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST), as revealed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH in 1831, and comprises a revision of Jesus' discourse on the Mount of Olives recorded in Matthew 23:39 through chapter 24. First published in Ohio in the mid-1830s as a broadside, Joseph Smith—Matthew was republished in 1851 as part of the original PEARL OF GREAT PRICE (Matthews, p. 52).

On March 7, 1831, Joseph Smith was directed to begin a translation of the New Testament "that ye may be prepared for the things to come" (D&C 45:60–61). In Matthew 24, Jesus foretold the impending destruction of Jerusalem. He also spoke of his own SECOND COMING and the destruction of the wicked.

The following are some of the significant additions and clarifications of Joseph Smith—Matthew to the King James text:

1. Jesus' disciples clearly understood that he would come again in glory "in the clouds of heaven, and all the holy angels with him" (JS—M 1:1).
2. Verses 4–22 of the King James text refer to "things I have spoken unto you concerning the Jews" (JS—M 1:21).
3. Verses 6, 7, and 14 of KJV are repositioned from the early part of the chapter, which deals with the Jews of New Testament times, to the latter part of the chapter, which concerns the second coming.
4. The end of the world is not the end of the earth, but the "destruction of the wicked" (JS—M 1:4, 55).
5. The parable in KJV verse 28 is completed to read, "Whosoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together; so likewise shall mine elect be gathered from the four quarters of the earth" (JS—M 1:27).
6. The "abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet," applies both to conditions at the destruction of Jerusalem and to Jesus' second coming (JS—M 1:12, 32).

The plainness and clarity of Joseph Smith—Matthew eliminate much of the confusion that has surrounded Matthew 24. It states that the gospel must be preached in all the world and the elect gathered before the second coming (JS—M 1:31). Finally, the elect will know the signs of the times and will be prepared and preserved during the events of the last days.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Matthews, Robert J. "A Plainer Translation": Joseph Smith's Translation of the Bible. Provo, Utah, 1985.

DAVID T. GILES

---

JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST)

Joseph SMITH, the first PROPHET of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, made a "new translation" of the Bible, using the text of the King James Version (KJV). This work differs from the KJV in at least 3,410 verses and consists of additions, deletions, rearrangements, and other alterations that cause it to vary not only from the KJV

of Joseph Sr. and Lucy Mack Smith. It tells of the religious conditions that led to Joseph Smith's FIRST VISION and describes what he saw and heard when the Father and Son appeared, in a direct, first-person account that makes no effort to adorn the events it relates. Oliver Cowdery, Joseph's close associate in these early years, wrote a much more ornate narrative of the early experiences. Joseph Smith simply described what happened to him, from the First Vision, through the visitation of MORONI<sup>2</sup>, the visits to the hill CUMORAH, the translation of the gold plates, and to the visit of John the Baptist to restore the Aaronic Priesthood (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION).

For many years the Church published Joseph Smith—History as a pamphlet with the title Joseph Smith's Own Story. Missionaries carried it to all parts of the world to help explain Joseph Smith's part in the restoration of the gospel in modern times.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Clark, James R. Story of the Pearl of Great Price. Salt Lake City, 1955.

Jessee, Dean C. "The Writing of Joseph Smith's History." BYU Studies 11 (1971):439–73.

———. "The Reliability of Joseph Smith's History." Journal of Mormon History 3 (1976):23–46.

JOSEPH GRANT STEVENSON

---

JOSEPH SMITH—MATTHEW

Joseph Smith—Matthew is an extract from the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST), as revealed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH in 1831, and comprises a revision of Jesus' discourse on the Mount of Olives recorded in Matthew 23:39 through chapter 24. First published in Ohio in the mid-1830s as a broadside, Joseph Smith—Matthew was republished in 1851 as part of the original PEARL OF GREAT PRICE (Matthews, p. 52).

On March 7, 1831, Joseph Smith was directed to begin a translation of the New Testament "that ye may be prepared for the things to come" (D&C 45:60–61). In Matthew 24, Jesus foretold the impending destruction of Jerusalem. He also spoke of his own SECOND COMING and the destruction of the wicked.

The following are some of the significant additions and clarifications of Joseph Smith—Matthew to the King James text:

1. Jesus' disciples clearly understood that he would come again in glory "in the clouds of heaven, and all the holy angels with him" (JS—M 1:1).
2. Verses 4–22 of the King James text refer to "things I have spoken unto you concerning the Jews" (JS—M 1:21).
3. Verses 6, 7, and 14 of KJV are repositioned from the early part of the chapter, which deals with the Jews of New Testament times, to the latter part of the chapter, which concerns the second coming.
4. The end of the world is not the end of the earth, but the "destruction of the wicked" (JS—M 1:4, 55).
5. The parable in KJV verse 28 is completed to read, "Whosoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together; so likewise shall mine elect be gathered from the four quarters of the earth" (JS—M 1:27).
6. The "abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet," applies both to conditions at the destruction of Jerusalem and to Jesus' second coming (JS—M 1:12, 32).

The plainness and clarity of Joseph Smith—Matthew eliminate much of the confusion that has surrounded Matthew 24. It states that the gospel must be preached in all the world and the elect gathered before the second coming (JS—M 1:31). Finally, the elect will know the signs of the times and will be prepared and preserved during the events of the last days.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Matthews, Robert J. "A Plainer Translation": Joseph Smith's Translation of the Bible. Provo, Utah, 1985.

DAVID T. GILES

---

JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST)

Joseph SMITH, the first PROPHET of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, made a "new translation" of the Bible, using the text of the King James Version (KJV). This work differs from the KJV in at least 3,410 verses and consists of additions, deletions, rearrangements, and other alterations that cause it to vary not only from the KJV but from other biblical texts. Changes range from minor details to fully reconstituted chapters. This article presents statements by Joseph Smith telling why he made a Bible translation, gives information relating to the development and production of the work, examines a number of the significant variants, and considers some doctrinal results and historical implications.

VIEW OF THE BIBLE. The official position of the Church is stated in its eighth ARTICLE OF FAITH: “We believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly.” The message of the Bible is held to be true, while details of accuracy and completeness are accepted within certain limits. The Prophet Joseph Smith explained: “I believe the Bible as it read when it came from the pen of the original writers. Ignorant translators, careless transcribers, or designing and corrupt priests have committed many errors” (TPJS, p. 327). And again, “From sundry revelations which had been received, it was apparent that many points touching the salvation of men, had been taken from the Bible, or lost before it was compiled” (TPJS, pp. 9–10).

Joseph Smith often used the words “translated” and “translation,” not in the narrow sense alone of rendering a text from one language into another, but in the wider senses of “transmission,” having reference to copying, editing, adding to, taking from, rephrasing, and interpreting. This is substantially beyond the usual meaning of “translation.” When he said the Bible was not translated correctly, he not only was referring to the difficulties of rendering the Bible into another language but he was also observing that the manuscripts containing the text of the Bible have suffered at the hands of editors, copyists, and revisionists through centuries of transmission. Thus, the available texts of the Bible are neither as complete nor as accurate as when first written.

The Book of Mormon presents an account of a vision in which an angel, looking to the future, describes the Bible as a “record of the Jews” containing writings of “the prophets” and of the “Twelve Apostles of the Lamb.” The vision asserts (1) that the ancient authors wrote under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, (2) that originally their words contained the fulness of the gospel and were plain and easy to understand, but (3) that many things which were plain and precious, and many covenants, would be “taken away” from the original manuscripts; as a result, afterward (4) a great many persons, even with a Bible, would not understand the fulness of the gospel, but (5) the lost material would be restored through “other records” that the Lord would bring forth (1 Ne. 13:21–41). A somewhat parallel statement came to Joseph Smith in June 1830 while he was restoring a revelation received by Moses, declaring that many things would be taken “from the book” which Moses would write, but that the missing information would be restored through another prophet and thus be “had again” among those who believe (Moses 1:41). Latter-day Saints believe that the “other records” referred to include the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, the Pearl of Great Price, the JST, and other records still to come forth, and that the prophet divinely raised up to begin restoring the lost material is Joseph Smith (see SCRIPTURES: FORTHCOMING SCRIPTURES). In light of the foregoing statements, it is worth observing that the principal difficulty in the Bible apparently has been omissions. The remaining text may be generally correct in itself, but many important doctrinal items (resulting from the loss of a single word, a verse, a longer passage, or even whole books in some instances) are now missing.

AUTHORITY TO TRANSLATE. The Prophet Joseph Smith claimed a divine appointment to make an inspired rendition or, as he termed it, a “new translation” of the Bible. This appointment can be illustrated by excerpts from his writings. After laboring off and on for ten months on the early chapters of Genesis, Joseph Smith received a revelation from the Lord on March 7, 1831, directing him to begin work on the New Testament: “It shall not be given unto you to know any further concerning this chapter, until the New Testament be translated, and in it all these things shall be made known; wherefore I give unto you that ye may now translate it” (D&C 45:60–61). The manuscript of the JST shows that Joseph Smith began the translation of Matthew the next day. On December 1, 1831, the Prophet entered the following in his journal: “I resumed the translation of the Scriptures, and continued to labor in this branch of my calling with Elder Sidney Rigdon as my scribe” (HC 1:238–39). On February 16, 1832, he reported a revelation concerning the RESURRECTION of the dead that includes the following reference to his divine commission to translate: “For while we [Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon] were doing the work of translation, which the Lord had appointed unto us, we came to the twenty-ninth verse of the fifth chapter of John" (D&C 76:15). On March 8, 1833, he reported the word of the Lord to him as follows: "And when you have finished the translation of the [Old Testament] prophets, you shall from thenceforth preside over the affairs of the church" (D&C 90:13). On May 6, 1833, Joseph Smith reported the following revelation: "It is my will that you should hasten to translate my scriptures" (D&C 93:53). Although not a complete list, the foregoing items illustrate Joseph Smith's claim to a divine appointment to translate the Old and New Testaments.

PROCEDURE AND TIME FRAME. When he began his work in 1830, Joseph Smith did not have a knowledge of biblical languages. His translation was not done in the usual manner of a scholar, but was a revelatory experience using only an English text. He did not leave a description of the translating process, but it appears that he would read from the KJV and dictate revisions to a scribe.

Joseph Smith was assisted by various scribes. The manuscript shows that Oliver COWDERY was the first, serving between June and October 1830; he recorded an introductory revelation (Moses 1) and the translation of KJV Genesis 1:1 to Genesis 4:18. John Whitmer served second, from October until December 1830, recording the translation of KJV Genesis 4:19 to approximately Genesis 5:20. Sidney RIGDON was next, becoming the main scribe from early December 1830 until the translation was finished on July 2, 1833. He recorded most of the translation from KJV Genesis 5:21 to the end of the Bible, although others recorded small portions.

They used a large edition of the KJV (9 inches by 11 inches by 2½ inches), printed in 1828 by H. and E. Phinney Company of Cooperstown, New York, that included the Old Testament Apocrypha. (A notation on the flyleaf, in what appears to be Joseph Smith's handwriting, states that it had been purchased from the Egbert B. Grandin Bookstore in Palmyra, New York, on October 8, 1829, for $3.75). In this copy of the Phinney Bible are hundreds of pencil and ink notations consisting primarily of checks or crosses marking off passages to be revised. Likewise, a number of italicized words in the KJV text—which usually represent words implicitly understood in the Greek or Hebrew—are lined out. Words of the revision were not written on the pages of the Bible itself, but were recorded on sheets of paper and identified by the appropriate citation. The manuscript is written in full from Genesis 1:1 through Genesis 24 and from Matthew 1:1 through John 5, including entire chapters in which there are no corrections. A more rapid and efficient system was eventually used in which only the actual points of revision were written. These sometimes consisted of only one or two words. The markings in the Bible that designate verses to be translated appear only in those portions where the shorter method was used. The manuscript sheets, 17 inches by 14 inches folded to produce surfaces 8½ inches by 14 inches, were once sewn together at the fold in convenient thicknesses. The entire manuscript consists of 477 pages.

The exact date on which the translation was begun is not known, but it is closely associated with the June 1830 revelation that contains an account of visions given to Moses before he composed the book of Genesis (see Moses 1). The work proceeded from June 1830 until July 2, 1833. Genesis 1–17 was translated first, being done between June 1830 and March 7, 1831. On the latter date Joseph Smith received the revelation instructing him to "translate" the New Testament (D&C 45:60–62), which he began at Matthew 1:1. It appears that for a few days the translation may have continued in both Genesis and in Matthew, but the Old Testament was subsequently laid aside, possibly at the end of Genesis 24, in favor of working on the New Testament. The work then proceeded consecutively through the entire New Testament until February 2, 1833. The remainder of the Old Testament (Genesis 25 through Malachi) was then translated, being completed five months later. In response to prayer as to whether he should translate the Apocrypha, Joseph Smith reported a revelation dated March 9, 1833, to the effect that he need not attend to it: "It is mostly translated correctly," though there are some errors and "interpolations by the hands of men" (D&C 91:1–2).

The dates on the JST manuscripts, when compared with dates of related revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants and with dates and events entered in Joseph Smith's personal journal, indicate the movement back and forth between the Old and New Testaments, as explained above, rather than a straight-line progress from Genesis through Revelation. Likewise, the varying styles of handwriting in the manuscript reflect the known coming and going of those who served as scribes. Although the bulk of the translation was accomplished by July 2, 1833, that work represented a preliminary draft. As the manuscript was later reviewed and prepared for publication, further revisions, refinements, and alterations were made.

After Joseph Smith's death in June 1844, the marked Phinney Bible and the 477-page manuscript were kept by his widow, Emma SMITH. She permitted Dr. John M. Bernhisel to examine the materials in the spring of 1845 at NAUVOO, Illinois. Bernhisel later reported that he made a complete copy of the markings in the Bible and an extensive but incomplete copy of the manuscript entries (Matthews, 1975, p. 118). The Bernhisel manuscript is in the Historian's Library of the LDS Church in Salt Lake City, but the location of the Bernhisel marked Bible is not known. Emma Smith gave the Phinney Bible and the original manuscript to a publication committee representing the REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS (RLDS Church) in 1866. These are now in the custody of the RLDS Church at Independence, Missouri.

PUBLICATION. Although excerpts from the JST were published in Church newspapers and as a broadside tract during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, the entire work was not published in his day, even though he had intended and had expended considerable effort to accomplish it. The distraction of persecution, the demands of Church business, and the lack of financial means prevented him from completing and authorizing a manuscript ready for the press (Matthews, pp. 57–63).

In 1867, after considerable effort and expense, the RLDS Church published a copyrighted edition of the Bible, under the title Holy Scriptures, which incorporated the Prophet's translation into the format of a King James text. This was followed by many subsequent printings, all from the same stereotype plates. In 1936 a teacher's edition containing study helps was published by the RLDS Church. At that time a subtitle, "Inspired Version," was added, although the text remained the same as the 1867 edition. In 1944 a "New Corrected Edition" was published by the RLDS Church in which at least 352 verses were amended to correct typographical and judgment errors in the 1867 edition. These corrections were matters of detail, although in a few instances they significantly affected the meaning of the passages and brought the printed text into closer harmony with the manuscript. In 1970 a parallel column edition consisting of the Inspired Version and the King James Version was issued by the RLDS Church publishing house.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has never published the entire Joseph Smith translation of the Bible. Portions of Genesis and of Matthew, distributed during the time of Joseph Smith in Kirtland and in Nauvoo, are included in the Pearl of Great Price under the title BOOK OF MOSES (JST Gen. 1 through 8:18) and JOSEPH SMITH—MATTHEW (JST Matt. 24). Extensive portions of JST Genesis 1–5 and a single excerpt each from Romans and Hebrews were used in the LECTURES ON FAITH and are still published therein. In 1979 the LDS Church published an edition of the King James Version with hundreds of JST footnotes and a seventeen-page appendix containing JST excerpts (see LDS PUBLICATION OF THE BIBLE).

EXTENT OF THE CHANGES. Joseph Smith made extensive corrections and additions to the books of Genesis, Exodus, Psalms, Isaiah, Matthew, Luke, Romans, 1 Corinthians, Galatians, Hebrews, James, 2 Peter, and Revelation. He also made many alterations in the writings of the Old Testament prophets and in Mark, John, Acts, and several of the epistles. He made no changes in Ruth, Ezra, Esther, Ecclesiastes, Lamentations, Obadiah, Micah, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Malachi, Philemon, 2 John, and 3 John. He made some corrections in all other books of the Bible, and rejected the Song of Solomon as not being inspired scripture.

TITLE. Joseph Smith's work with the Bible has been known by various titles. The revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants call it a "translation" (D&C 37:1; 90:13). Joseph Smith called it the "new translation," and it is known by this title in the early literature of the Church. It was published by the RLDS Church under the title "Holy Scriptures," with the later subtitle, "Inspired Version." Many call it an "inspired revision." In 1978 the LDS Church officially labeled it the "Joseph Smith Translation," abbreviated JST.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE JST. Assessing the contributions of the JST requires a differentiation between the process and the product. The translation process was revelatory and educational, and was a means of expanding the Prophet Joseph Smith's knowledge and doctrinal awareness (cf. D&C 45:60–61). The contributions, therefore, go beyond the particular biblical text that may have initiated the process. Among the doctrines of the LDS Church that arose from the JST translation process are the building of Zion, patterned after Enoch's city; the age of accountability of children, with baptism at eight years; the extensive revelation about the DEGREES OF GLORY and plural marriage (including celestial, eternal MARRIAGE); and various items of priesthood organization and responsibility. These and other doctrines were often introduced during the translation process and later developed through subsequent revelations now contained in the Doctrine and Covenants. Revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants received during the translation process are sections 76, 77, 86, and 91, and parts of 107 and 132. In this way the JST has affected the spiritual life of every member of the Church, even though most of the members have not known of the JST.

The tangible product—the printed JST—consists of a Bible with thousands of unique corrections, additions, and readings. Although many Latter-day Saints regard this as the most correct version of the Bible now available, and therefore use it as a valuable source for biblical understanding, the wider contribution has probably been the enlightening effect that the process had upon Joseph Smith and the subsequent revelations through him that have shaped Church doctrine and practice. Most of the doctrinal and organizational revelations that have governed the Church, and that are now published in the Doctrine and Covenants, came to Joseph Smith during the period that he was translating the Bible (1830–1833).

Many items in the Doctrine and Covenants relate directly to the process of the JST. These gave direction to the Prophet concerning matters related to the translation, the selection of scribes, when to proceed with the translation, which portions of the Bible to do next, when to lay the work aside for other matters, and other such information, but do not contain texts of the JST. This type of related information is seen in the editorial headnotes to sections 35, 71, 76, 77, 86, and 91; and in the text of D&C 9:2; 35:20; 37:1; 41:7; 42:56–58; 45:60–62; 73:3; 76:15–18; 77:1–15; 86:1–11; 93:53; 94:10; 104:58; and 124:89. The Pearl of Great Price presents part of the product, and contains two extracts from the text of the JST, the book of Moses and Joseph Smith—Matthew.

MAIN DOCTRINAL THEMES. Most of the passages revised or added by Joseph Smith are of doctrinal significance. While many individual topics are involved, some main themes are (1) an emphasis in both the Old and New Testaments on the mission and divinity of Jesus Christ; (2) the nature of God; (3) the innocence of CHILDREN; (4) the PLAN OF SALVATION; (5) PREMORTAL LIFE; (6) the holy PRIESTHOOD and credentials of the patriarchs; (7) the ministries of ENOCH and of MELCHIZEDEK; and (8) clarification of ambiguous passages, elimination of some contradictions between biblical texts, and explanations of terms and phrases.

Representative passages of the types of information found only in Joseph Smith's translation of the Bible constitute the remainder of this article.

The purpose of the JST is to provide knowledge not found in other Bibles. Thus it is by nature declarative and informative.

1. Emphasis on Jesus Christ. The JST emphasizes that the gospel of Jesus Christ was taught in the earliest ages of mankind. According to JST Genesis 1–8 (published as Moses 1–8 in the Pearl of Great Price), Adam, Enoch, Noah, and the other patriarchs were preachers of righteousness and taught the gospel of Jesus Christ, including faith, repentance, baptism, and receiving the Holy Ghost.

The JST states that Adam was taught by a heavenly angel to offer animal sacrifice as a type and symbol of the atoning sacrifice that the Son of God would accomplish. He was instructed to do all things in the name of the Son. Adam was taught the gospel, was baptized by immersion, received the Holy Ghost, and was born of the Spirit (Moses 5, 6).

Enoch likewise knew the gospel of Jesus Christ, was ordained to the same priesthood that Adam held, and he taught these principles to others. To Enoch was given a vision that included the spirit world and future events upon the earth from his day to the second coming of Jesus Christ. He presided in a city of righteous people called Zion, which was translated and taken into heaven (Moses 6–7; see TRANSLATED BEINGS).

Noah was also a preacher of righteousness, ordained to the same priesthood held by Adam and Enoch, and taught the gospel of Jesus Christ to his contemporaries, including faith in Jesus Christ, baptism, and the reception of the Holy Ghost (Moses 8:12–25).

The New Testament JST portrays a slightly stronger image of Jesus than does the KJV. Examples include the following: In the KJV the wise men ask Herod about the birth of the “King of the Jews” (Matt. 2:2); in the JST they pose a more searching question: “Where is the child that is born, the Messiah of the Jews?” (JST Matt. 3:2). [JST variants here and hereafter are in italics.] When Herod inquires of the scribes, he is told that it is written that Christ should be born in Bethlehem, “For out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel” (Matt. 2:6); the JST reads, “for out of thee shall come the Messiah, who shall save my people Israel” (JST Matt. 3:6).

In the JST a transitional passage without a KJV equivalent is inserted between the end of KJV Matthew chapter 2 and the beginning of Matthew chapter 3:

And it came to pass that Jesus grew up with his brethren, and waxed strong, and waited upon the Lord for the time of his ministry to come. And he served under his father, and he spake not as other men, neither could he be taught; for he needed not that any man should teach him. And after many years, the hour of his ministry drew nigh [JST Matt. 3:24–26].

At age twelve, when Jesus was teaching in the temple, the KJV (Luke 2:46) records that Jesus was “sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions.” The JST reads, “they were hearing him, and asking him questions” (JST Luke 2:46).

The KJV account of Jesus’ forty days in the wilderness states that Jesus went there “to be tempted of the devil. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered” (Matt. 4:1–2). The JST reads: “Then Jesus was led up of the Spirit, into the wilderness, to be with God. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, and had communed with God, he was afterwards an hungered, and was left to be tempted of the devil” (JST Matt. 4:1–2). Luke’s record (KJV) says that Jesus was “forty days tempted of the devil” (Luke 4:2). The JST reads, “And after forty days, the devil came unto him, to tempt him” (JST Luke 4:2).

The KJV states that “the devil taketh” Jesus to a “pinnacle of the temple” and also to a “high mountain” (Matt. 4:5–8; Luke 4:5–9). The JST says it was “the Spirit” who transported Jesus to these places (JST Matt. 4:5–8; Luke 4:5–9).

In the KJV John 3:23 states that Jesus performed baptisms, but John 4:2 largely negates Jesus’ activity as a baptizer by stating: “Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples.” The JST reads, “Though he himself baptized not so many as his disciples; For he suffered them for an example, preferring one another” (JST John 4:3–4).

Jesus’ parables are touched upon in many JST passages. One of the most important is a statement, presented as the words of Jesus himself, explaining why he used parables to veil the spiritual message when speaking to certain individuals: “Hear another parable; for unto you that believe not, I speak in parables; that your unrighteousness may be rewarded unto you” (JST Matt. 21:34).

In Mark 7:22–24 (KJV) Jesus enters a house “and would have no man know it: but he could not be hid.” JST Mark 7:22–23 reads, “and would that no man should come unto him. But he could not deny them; for he had compassion upon all men.”

Luke reports that while Jesus was on the cross, he cried out, “Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do” (KJV Luke 23:34). The JST adds a parenthetical clarification: “(meaning the soldiers who crucified him)” (JST Luke 23:35).

2. God’s Dealings with Mankind. JST passages bearing on God’s dealings with mankind include the following: Genesis 6:6 (KJV) states that “It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart.” JST Genesis 8:13 (Moses 8:25) renders this passage thus: “And it repented Noah, and his heart was pained, that the Lord had made man on the earth.” Exodus 7:3, 13; 9:12; 10:1, 20 (KJV) all state that God will harden Pharaoh’s heart. In each of these the JST reads that Pharaoh will harden his own heart:

Isaiah 63:17 (KJV) reads “O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways, and hardened our heart?” The JST reads, “O Lord, why hast thou suffered us to err, . . . and to harden our heart?”

Matthew 6:13 (KJV) reads, “And lead us not into temptation,” whereas the JST reads “suffer us not to be led into temptation” (JST Matt. 6:14).

3. Innocence of Children. Many passages bear on man’s nature in relation to the fall of Adam, his agency, and accountability to God. For instance, concerning the innocence of little children, the JST states that in the days of Adam the Lord revealed that “the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world” (JST Gen. 6:56; Moses 6:54). To Abraham the Lord said, “Children are not accountable before me until they are eight years old” (JST Gen. 17:11). Matthew 18:11 in the KJV states with reference to children: “For the Son of man is come to save that which is lost.” The JST adds, “and to call sinners to repentance; but these little ones have no need of repentance, and I will save them.”

4. Paul’s Writings. The JST offers many clarifications regarding teachings attributed to Paul in the New Testament. Some of these are as follows:

First Corinthians 14:35 (KJV) reports Paul writing “it is a shame for women to speak in the church.” The JST reads “for women to rule in the church.”

Hebrews 6:1 (KJV) reads “Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection.” The JST reads “not leaving . . .”

Hebrews 7:3 (KJV) gives the impression that the prophet Melchizedek was “without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life.” The JST states that it was not Melchizedek the man, but his priesthood, that was without lineage or descent, being thus contrasted to the Levitical priesthood.

In 1 Timothy 3:15–16 (KJV) Paul is reported to have written that the church is the “pillar and ground of the truth.” In the JST it is Jesus, as God manifested in the flesh, who is the “pillar and ground of the truth.”

[See also other passages from the JST in the appendices, Vol. 4.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Durham, Reed Connell, Jr. “A History of Joseph Smith’s Revision of the Bible.” Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1965.
- Howard, Richard P. Restoration Scriptures. Independence, Mo., 1969.
- Matthews, Robert J. “A Plainer Translation.” Joseph Smith’s Translation of the Bible. Provo, Utah, 1975.
- . A Bible! A Bible! Salt Lake City, 1990.
- . “Joseph Smith’s Efforts to Publish His Bible Translation.” Ensign 13 [Jan. 1983]:57–63.
- Nyman, Monte S., and Robert L. Millet, eds. The Joseph Smith Translation. Provo, Utah, 1985.

ROBERT J. MATTHEWS

JOURNAL OF DISCOURSES

The Journal of Discourses was a sixteen-page semi-monthly subscription publication privately printed in Liverpool, England, in 1854–1886. It served as the printed word of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, particularly for members who had no access to the Salt Lake City Deseret News. While the Journal most often published sermons of Church leaders, these speeches were not always considered to be official statements of doctrine. Many different kinds of speeches were printed, including the prayer given at the laying of a cornerstone of the SALT LAKE TEMPLE, a report of a HIGH COUNCIL court decision, a funeral sermon, and a plea for the defendant and the charge to the jury in a murder trial. In all, the collected Journal of Discourses contains 1,438 speeches given by fifty-five people, including Presidents of the Church, members of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, members of the SEVENTY, and sixteen other speakers. Brigham YOUNG gave 390; John TAYLOR, 162; Orson Pratt, 127; Heber C. KIMBALL, 113; and George Q. Cannon, 111. Twenty-one people gave a single speech, and the rest gave from 2 to 66 speeches. The semimonthly issues have been bound into twenty-six annual volumes and are currently available in a lithograph reprinting “of the original edition.”

The origin of the Journal of Discourses is tied to George D. Watt, an English convert baptized in 1837 by Heber C. Kimball. Before immigrating to the United States in 1842, Watt learned Pitman shorthand. He used this new skill in his adopted land to record the proceedings of conferences of the Church. He also recorded the trial of the accused murderers of the Prophet Joseph SMITH.

After 1852 Watt transcribed Church conference addresses for the Deseret News. But because the News was not generally available outside central Utah and because Watt received little pay for his work, he proposed to publish privately and sell sixteen-page semiweekly issues of the Journal of Discourses containing selected sermons of the GENERAL AUTHORITIES. The sale of these to the Saints at large would enable Watt to earn a living with his shorthand skill. He was supported in this proposal by Brigham Young, who authorized him to print his sermons.

David W. Evans, also an English convert, an associate editor of the Deseret News, and the first violinist in the Salt Lake Theatre Orchestra, suc-

vealed that “the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world” (JST Gen. 6:56; Moses 6:54). To Abraham the Lord said, “Children are not accountable before me until they are eight years old” (JST Gen. 17:11). Matthew 18:11 in the KJV states with reference to children: “For the Son of man is come to save that which is lost.” The JST adds, “and to call sinners to repentance; but these little ones have no need of repentance, and I will save them.”

4. Paul’s Writings. The JST offers many clarifications regarding teachings attributed to Paul in the New Testament. Some of these are as follows:

First Corinthians 14:35 (KJV) reports Paul writing “it is a shame for women to speak in the church.” The JST reads “for women to rule in the church.”

Hebrews 6:1 (KJV) reads “Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection.” The JST reads “not leaving . . .”

Hebrews 7:3 (KJV) gives the impression that the prophet Melchizedek was “without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life.” The JST states that it was not Melchizedek the man, but his priesthood, that was without lineage or descent, being thus contrasted to the Levitical priesthood.

In 1 Timothy 3:15–16 (KJV) Paul is reported to have written that the church is the “pillar and ground of the truth.” In the JST it is Jesus, as God manifested in the flesh, who is the “pillar and ground of the truth.”

[See also other passages from the JST in the appendices, Vol. 4.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Durham, Reed Connell, Jr. “A History of Joseph Smith’s Revision of the Bible.” Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1965.
- Howard, Richard P. Restoration Scriptures. Independence, Mo., 1969.
- Matthews, Robert J. “A Plainer Translation:” Joseph Smith’s Translation of the Bible. Provo, Utah, 1975.
- . A Bible! A Bible! Salt Lake City, 1990.
- . “Joseph Smith’s Efforts to Publish His Bible Translation.” Ensign 13 [Jan. 1983]:57–63.
- Nyman, Monte S., and Robert L. Millet, eds. The Joseph Smith Translation. Provo, Utah, 1985.

ROBERT J. MATTHEWS

JOURNAL OF DISCOURSES

The Journal of Discourses was a sixteen-page semi-monthly subscription publication privately printed in Liverpool, England, in 1854–1886. It served as the printed word of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, particularly for members who had no access to the Salt Lake City Deseret News. While the Journal most often published sermons of Church leaders, these speeches were not always considered to be official statements of doctrine. Many different kinds of speeches were printed, including the prayer given at the laying of a cornerstone of the SALT LAKE TEMPLE, a report of a HIGH COUNCIL court decision, a funeral sermon, and a plea for the defendant and the charge to the jury in a murder trial. In all, the collected Journal of Discourses contains 1,438 speeches given by fifty-five people, including Presidents of the Church, members of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, members of the SEVENTY, and sixteen other speakers. Brigham YOUNG gave 390; John TAYLOR, 162; Orson Pratt, 127; Heber C. KIMBALL, 113; and George Q. Cannon, 111. Twenty-one people gave a single speech, and the rest gave from 2 to 66 speeches. The semimonthly issues have been bound into twenty-six annual volumes and are currently available in a lithograph reprinting “of the original edition.”

The origin of the Journal of Discourses is tied to George D. Watt, an English convert baptized in 1837 by Heber C. Kimball. Before immigrating to the United States in 1842, Watt learned Pitman shorthand. He used this new skill in his adopted land to record the proceedings of conferences of the Church. He also recorded the trial of the accused murderers of the Prophet Joseph SMITH.

After 1852 Watt transcribed Church conference addresses for the Deseret News. But because the News was not generally available outside central Utah and because Watt received little pay for his work, he proposed to publish privately and sell sixteen-page semiweekly issues of the Journal of Discourses containing selected sermons of the GENERAL AUTHORITIES. The sale of these to the Saints at large would enable Watt to earn a living with his shorthand skill. He was supported in this proposal by Brigham Young, who authorized him to print his sermons.

David W. Evans, also an English convert, an associate editor of the Deseret News, and the first violinist in the Salt Lake Theatre Orchestra, succeeded Watt as the main reporter to the Journal from 1867 to 1876. Another major reporter was George F. Gibbs, who was born in Wales and was the secretary to the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church for fifty-six years. In all, twelve people reported sermons for the Journal of Discourses, including one of Brigham Young's daughters, "Miss Julia Young," who reported one of his speeches.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Joseph Fielding, ed. Journal of Discourses Digest. Salt Lake City, 1975.

Watt, Ronald G. "Sailing the Old Ship Zion: The Life of George D. Watt." BYU Studies 18 (Fall 1977):48–65.

RONALD G. WATT

---

JOURNALS

Journal writing among the early Latter-day Saints took impetus from a divine charge to the Prophet Joseph SMITH on the day the Church was organized: "There shall be a record kept among you" (D&C 21:1). Although that was an official charge to the Church, individual members took it as a personal charge and began keeping journals. Joseph Smith himself worked regularly with scribes until his death, directing the recording of his daily activities. Much of what is known about the early events of the Church comes from the many personal journals kept by leaders and members.

Careful and complete records served as a protection against opponents of the Church. In instructions to the Quorum of the Twelve in 1835, Joseph Smith urged them to note down the procedures of meetings held, for "the time will come, when, if you neglect to do this thing, you will fall by the hands of unrighteous men. . . . If you will be careful to keep minutes of these things . . . it will be one of the most important records ever seen" (HC 2:198–99). Joseph Smith stated that the Saints had been somewhat delinquent in this charge.

In addition to Joseph Smith's comprehensive journal, which he kept with the aid of personal scribes, several early converts began to keep personal diaries, most of them sketchy but some very ambitious. It has been a common practice of missionaries to keep journals of their activities, though most of these early journals tended to be factual rather than reflective, and followed a quite standard format: the call, travel particulars, names of companions and Church members, lists of letters from home, sightseeing, release, and the return home. A frequent topic of Latter-day Saint journals is the writer's conversion to the Church.

Early journals usually are also quite reportorial, matter-of-fact in tone, sparing in detail, and often repetitive; yet they are valuable for historical reference, if not engaging in content or style, though some passages are eloquent in their plainness. Feelings and introspection are more characteristic of twentieth-century journals. Yet all journals are important resources for FAMILY HISTORY information.

Most Presidents of the Church have kept a journal of some type—either historical or personal, with or without the assistance of a secretary. From the founding of the Church, there was a steady flow of journal writing, the quantity increasing during times of reformation, as in 1856–1857, or when leaders urged the practice of journal keeping. Perhaps best known of the early diarists was Wilford WOODRUFF, who kept a meticulous personal record (including many drawings)—fifteen volumes covering the years 1833–1898. His record is rich in detail and personal insight on many important events in the early Church.

In 1977, in his Guide to Mormon Diaries & Autobiographies, Davis Bitton identified and cataloged some 3,000 pieces of LDS autobiographical writing, consisting largely of journals, mostly by men, in repositories throughout the United States, though mainly in the state of Utah. Many more uncataloged journals remain in the possession of individuals and families, and Bitton suggested that his bibliography be updated from time to time.

Twentieth-century LDS journals tend to be longer and more numerous, reflecting increased literacy, more time to write, and greater openness. Both Joseph F. SMITH and Heber J. GRANT, Church presidents from 1901 to 1918 and 1918 to 1945, respectively, left multivolume journal records. LDS journal writing received special stimulus during the presidency of Spencer W. KIMBALL (1973–1985), who himself kept an extensive journal of about eighty volumes. Typical of his many admonitions to Church members is a short remark in the 1977 October General Conference: "A word about personal journals and records: We urge every person in the Church to keep a diary or a ceeded Watt as the main reporter to the Journal from 1867 to 1876. Another major reporter was George F. Gibbs, who was born in Wales and was the secretary to the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church for fifty-six years. In all, twelve people reported sermons for the Journal of Discourses, including one of Brigham Young's daughters, "Miss Julia Young," who reported one of his speeches.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Joseph Fielding, ed. Journal of Discourses Digest. Salt Lake City, 1975.

Watt, Ronald G. "Sailing the Old Ship Zion: The Life of George D. Watt." BYU Studies 18 (Fall 1977):48–65.

RONALD G. WATT

---

JOURNALS

Journal writing among the early Latter-day Saints took impetus from a divine charge to the Prophet Joseph SMITH on the day the Church was organized: "There shall be a record kept among you" (D&C 21:1). Although that was an official charge to the Church, individual members took it as a personal charge and began keeping journals. Joseph Smith himself worked regularly with scribes until his death, directing the recording of his daily activities. Much of what is known about the early events of the Church comes from the many personal journals kept by leaders and members.

Careful and complete records served as a protection against opponents of the Church. In instructions to the Quorum of the Twelve in 1835, Joseph Smith urged them to note down the procedures of meetings held, for "the time will come, when, if you neglect to do this thing, you will fall by the hands of unrighteous men. . . . If you will be careful to keep minutes of these things . . . it will be one of the most important records ever seen" (HC 2:198–99). Joseph Smith stated that the Saints had been somewhat delinquent in this charge.

In addition to Joseph Smith's comprehensive journal, which he kept with the aid of personal scribes, several early converts began to keep personal diaries, most of them sketchy but some very ambitious. It has been a common practice of missionaries to keep journals of their activities, though most of these early journals tended to be factual rather than reflective, and followed a quite standard format: the call, travel particulars, names of companions and Church members, lists of letters from home, sightseeing, release, and the return home. A frequent topic of Latter-day Saint journals is the writer's conversion to the Church.

Early journals usually are also quite reportorial, matter-of-fact in tone, sparing in detail, and often repetitive; yet they are valuable for historical reference, if not engaging in content or style, though some passages are eloquent in their plainness. Feelings and introspection are more characteristic of twentieth-century journals. Yet all journals are important resources for FAMILY HISTORY information.

Most Presidents of the Church have kept a journal of some type—either historical or personal, with or without the assistance of a secretary. From the founding of the Church, there was a steady flow of journal writing, the quantity increasing during times of reformation, as in 1856–1857, or when leaders urged the practice of journal keeping. Perhaps best known of the early diarists was Wilford WOODRUFF, who kept a meticulous personal record (including many drawings)—fifteen volumes covering the years 1833–1898. His record is rich in detail and personal insight on many important events in the early Church.

In 1977, in his Guide to Mormon Diaries & Autobiographies, Davis Bitton identified and cataloged some 3,000 pieces of LDS autobiographical writing, consisting largely of journals, mostly by men, in repositories throughout the United States, though mainly in the state of Utah. Many more uncataloged journals remain in the possession of individuals and families, and Bitton suggested that his bibliography be updated from time to time.

Twentieth-century LDS journals tend to be longer and more numerous, reflecting increased literacy, more time to write, and greater openness. Both Joseph F. SMITH and Heber J. GRANT, Church presidents from 1901 to 1918 and 1918 to 1945, respectively, left multivolume journal records. LDS journal writing received special stimulus during the presidency of Spencer W. KIMBALL (1973–1985), who himself kept an extensive journal of about eighty volumes. Typical of his many admonitions to Church members is a short remark in the 1977 October General Conference: "A word about personal journals and records: We urge every person in the Church to keep a diary or a journal from youth up, all through his life" ("The Foundations of Righteousness." Ensign 7 [Nov. 1977]:4).

Journal writing has been encouraged since the earliest days of the Church and has been the source of much of what is known about Church history. Many Latter-day Saints today, including children, youth, and adults, regularly record their experiences in personal journals.

Also in recent years, a new reason for journal writing has been voiced: the value of journals as a gift to descendants—a linking of the generations. President Kimball said: "I promise you that if you will keep your journals and records, they will indeed be a source of great inspiration to your families, to your children, your grandchildren, and others, on through the generations. . . . Rich passages . . . will be quoted by your posterity" (p. 61).

Because of the admonitions of scripture and leaders, journal writing, especially in recent decades, has become an integral part of the religious experience of many Latter-day Saints. Parents have been encouraged to write their own personal journals and to help their children begin writing theirs, to make the experience pleasant. President Kimball said in 1980: "Those who keep a personal journal are more likely to keep the Lord in remembrance in their daily lives" (p. 61).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bitton, Davis. Guide to Mormon Diaries & Autobiographies. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- Forbis, Dianne Dibb. "It's Child's Play: How to Help Your Child Begin a Journal." Ensign 7 (Jan. 1977):29.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "President Kimball Speaks out on Personal Journals." Ensign 10 (Dec. 1980):60–61.

DON E. NORTON
JOANNE LINNABARY

JOY

The Prophet Joseph SMITH declared, "Happiness is the object and design of our existence; and will be the end thereof, if we pursue the path that leads to it" (TPJS, p. 255). The concept of true joy to be experienced in this life and in the life to come lies at the core of LDS thought. The Book of Mormon prophet LEHI taught, "Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy" (2 Ne. 2:25; cf. Alma 42:8).

Latter-day Saints believe in a PREMORTAL LIFE in which all lived with God, the literal father of the spirits of humankind. Part of God's plan for the growth and progress of his children—the goal of which is to help everyone become as God himself is and to know the joy that he knows—involves a mortal experience. Therein people obtain a physical body, the power of procreation, and an independence and AGENCY that allow experiences of diverse kinds and thereby enhance the powers of self-determination.

In this light, Latter-day Saints view the physical body, the mortal environment, the procreative power, and the freedom of choice as essential elements of joy. Thus, Heavenly Father created this earth and sent his children to it that they might know joy. In this profound sense, joy and happiness arise from combinations of experience, responsibility and service, and pain and grief, along with pleasure and enjoyment. At the center of God's plan to make maximum joy accessible to his children is the ATONEMENT of Christ (2 Ne. 2:10–14, 22–27).

One can identify aspects of joy that are available in this life. First are the simple joys of being journal from youth up, all through his life" ("The Foundations of Righteousness." Ensign 7 [Nov. 1977]:4).

Journal writing has been encouraged since the earliest days of the Church and has been the source of much of what is known about Church history. Many Latter-day Saints today, including children, youth, and adults, regularly record their experiences in personal journals.

Also in recent years, a new reason for journal writing has been voiced: the value of journals as a gift to descendants—a linking of the generations. President Kimball said: "I promise you that if you will keep your journals and records, they will indeed be a source of great inspiration to your families, to your children, your grandchildren, and others, on through the generations. . . . Rich passages . . . will be quoted by your posterity" (p. 61).

Because of the admonitions of scripture and leaders, journal writing, especially in recent decades, has become an integral part of the religious experience of many Latter-day Saints. Parents have been encouraged to write their own personal journals and to help their children begin writing theirs, to make the experience pleasant. President Kimball said in 1980: "Those who keep a personal journal are more likely to keep the Lord in remembrance in their daily lives" (p. 61).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bitton, Davis. Guide to Mormon Diaries & Autobiographies. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- Forbis, Dianne Dibb. "It's Child's Play: How to Help Your Child Begin a Journal." Ensign 7 (Jan. 1977):29.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "President Kimball Speaks out on Personal Journals." Ensign 10 (Dec. 1980):60–61.

DON E. NORTON
JOANNE LINNABARY

JOY

The Prophet Joseph SMITH declared, "Happiness is the object and design of our existence; and will be the end thereof, if we pursue the path that leads to it" (TPJS, p. 255). The concept of true joy to be experienced in this life and in the life to come lies at the core of LDS thought. The Book of Mormon prophet LEHI taught, "Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy" (2 Ne. 2:25; cf. Alma 42:8).

Latter-day Saints believe in a PREMORTAL LIFE in which all lived with God, the literal father of the spirits of humankind. Part of God's plan for the growth and progress of his children—the goal of which is to help everyone become as God himself is and to know the joy that he knows—involves a mortal experience. Therein people obtain a physical body, the power of procreation, and an independence and AGENCY that allow experiences of diverse kinds and thereby enhance the powers of self-determination.

In this light, Latter-day Saints view the physical body, the mortal environment, the procreative power, and the freedom of choice as essential elements of joy. Thus, Heavenly Father created this earth and sent his children to it that they might know joy. In this profound sense, joy and happiness arise from combinations of experience, responsibility and service, and pain and grief, along with pleasure and enjoyment. At the center of God's plan to make maximum joy accessible to his children is the ATONEMENT of Christ (2 Ne. 2:10–14, 22–27).

One can identify aspects of joy that are available in this life. First are the simple joys of being aware of and appreciating the gifts of life, the earth, and personal agency (e.g., taste, smell, beauty, music). A second is the joy of using these gifts to create opportunities or to develop relationships (e.g., marriage, parenting, charity). A third is the joy of coming to understand how mortality fits into the divine purpose or plan of the Heavenly Father (see PLAN OF SALVATION). This understanding derives from learning of God's plan for his children's salvation and using it as a framework for comprehending and assimilating life's experiences. Another is the joy of accepting Christ as Savior and feeling his acceptance and approval of one's efforts. This joy is accompanied by the power and beauty of Christ's spirit in one's life. In this connection, the Book of Mormon describes a scene wherein "the spirit of the Lord came upon them, and they were filled with joy, having received a remission of their sins, and having peace of conscience" (Mosiah 4:3; cf. John 15:10–12).

LDS doctrine teaches that joy is obtained only by RIGHTEOUSNESS (Mosiah 4:3, 20). Consequently, Latter-day Saints view God's COMMANDMENTS as loving counsel from a wise Father—a Father whose goal is human happiness. They believe that lives which conform to God's will and are governed by his standards will create the most joyful response to all of life's circumstances, bringing both a fulfillment in life's accomplishments and a sweet resolve in life's sorrows.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Eyre, Richard M. The Discovery of Joy. Salt Lake City, 1974.
 ———. Teaching Children Joy. New York, 1986.
 Hanks, Marion D. "Joy Through Christ." Ensign 2 (July 1972):104–106.
 Romney, Marion G. "Joy and Happiness." Ensign 3 (Sept. 1973):2–3.

RICHARD M. EYRE

---

JUDGMENT

All humankind shall stand before Jesus, "and he shall separate them from one another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats" (Matt. 25:32). The verb "separate" reflects the Lord's determination of exact boundaries between good and evil, since he "cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance" (D&C 1:31). The Greek New Testament word for judgment (krino) means to separate or to decide, and refers not only to God's decisions but to those made by man as well (Matt. 7:1–2).

AMULEK warned that this life is the time to prepare to meet God (Alma 34:32). MORTALITY requires basic decisions of a moral and spiritual character, in which individuals are free to choose for themselves yet are accountable to God for their choices. In turn, God will render a perfect and just decision to determine blessings or punishments. In the judgment there will be a perfect restoration of joy for righteous living and of misery for evil (Alma 41:3–5). After death is not the time to repent: "Ye cannot say, when ye are brought to that awful crisis, that I will repent, that I will return to my God; . . . for that same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that ye go out of this life . . . will have power to possess your body in that eternal world" (Alma 34:34).

Judgment applies to "the whole human family" (Morm. 3:20; cf. John 5:25–29; TPJS, p. 149). Every soul will come before the bar of God through the power of the ATONEMENT and the RESURRECTION (Jacob 6:9). Indeed, as Christ was lifted up on the cross, he will raise all men before him in judgment (3 Ne. 27:14–15; TPJS, p. 62). Christ has been given the responsibility for judgment. He taught, "The Father judgeth no man, but has committed all judgment unto the Son" (John 5:22). Others have been given some role in judgment, such as the twelve apostles in Palestine and the twelve disciples among the Nephites as described in the Book of Mormon (Morm. 3:18–19). Individuals will also judge themselves either by having a perfect knowledge of their joy and righteousness or by having a perfect knowledge of their guilt and unrighteousness (2 Ne. 9:14, 46). All have the assurance, however, that final judgment is in the hands of Christ (2 Ne. 9:41).

Three sets of records will be used in judgment: the records kept in heaven, the records kept on earth (D&C 128:6–7), and the records embedded in the consciousness of each individual (MD, p. 97; cf. Alma 11:43). Individuals are judged according to their works, thoughts, words, and the desires of their hearts (Alma 12:14; D&C 137:9).

There can be no pretense or hypocrisy in the manner in which people accept and live the gospel (2 Ne. 31:13). The Lord will judge members of the aware of and appreciating the gifts of life, the earth, and personal agency (e.g., taste, smell, beauty, music). A second is the joy of using these gifts to create opportunities or to develop relationships (e.g., marriage, parenting, charity). A third is the joy of coming to understand how mortality fits into the divine purpose or plan of the Heavenly Father (see PLAN OF SALVATION). This understanding derives from learning of God's plan for his children's salvation and using it as a framework for comprehending and assimilating life's experiences. Another is the joy of accepting Christ as Savior and feeling his acceptance and approval of one's efforts. This joy is accompanied by the power and beauty of Christ's spirit in one's life. In this connection, the Book of Mormon describes a scene wherein "the spirit of the Lord came upon them, and they were filled with joy, having received a remission of their sins, and having peace of conscience" (Mosiah 4:3; cf. John 15:10–12).

LDS doctrine teaches that joy is obtained only by RIGHTEOUSNESS (Mosiah 4:3, 20). Consequently, Latter-day Saints view God's COMMANDMENTS as loving counsel from a wise Father—a Father whose goal is human happiness. They believe that lives which conform to God's will and are governed by his standards will create the most joyful response to all of life's circumstances, bringing both a fulfillment in life's accomplishments and a sweet resolve in life's sorrows.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Eyre, Richard M. The Discovery of Joy. Salt Lake City, 1974.
 ———. Teaching Children Joy. New York, 1986.
 Hanks, Marion D. "Joy Through Christ." Ensign 2 (July 1972):104–106.
 Romney, Marion G. "Joy and Happiness." Ensign 3 (Sept. 1973):2–3.

RICHARD M. EYRE

---

JUDGMENT

All humankind shall stand before Jesus, "and he shall separate them from one another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats" (Matt. 25:32). The verb "separate" reflects the Lord's determination of exact boundaries between good and evil, since he "cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance" (D&C 1:31). The Greek New Testament word for judgment (krino) means to separate or to decide, and refers not only to God's decisions but to those made by man as well (Matt. 7:1–2).

AMULEK warned that this life is the time to prepare to meet God (Alma 34:32). MORTALITY requires basic decisions of a moral and spiritual character, in which individuals are free to choose for themselves yet are accountable to God for their choices. In turn, God will render a perfect and just decision to determine blessings or punishments. In the judgment there will be a perfect restoration of joy for righteous living and of misery for evil (Alma 41:3–5). After death is not the time to repent: "Ye cannot say, when ye are brought to that awful crisis, that I will repent, that I will return to my God; . . . for that same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that ye go out of this life . . . will have power to possess your body in that eternal world" (Alma 34:34).

Judgment applies to "the whole human family" (Morm. 3:20; cf. John 5:25–29; TPJS, p. 149). Every soul will come before the bar of God through the power of the ATONEMENT and the RESURRECTION (Jacob 6:9). Indeed, as Christ was lifted up on the cross, he will raise all men before him in judgment (3 Ne. 27:14–15; TPJS, p. 62). Christ has been given the responsibility for judgment. He taught, "The Father judgeth no man, but has committed all judgment unto the Son" (John 5:22). Others have been given some role in judgment, such as the twelve apostles in Palestine and the twelve disciples among the Nephites as described in the Book of Mormon (Morm. 3:18–19). Individuals will also judge themselves either by having a perfect knowledge of their joy and righteousness or by having a perfect knowledge of their guilt and unrighteousness (2 Ne. 9:14, 46). All have the assurance, however, that final judgment is in the hands of Christ (2 Ne. 9:41).

Three sets of records will be used in judgment: the records kept in heaven, the records kept on earth (D&C 128:6–7), and the records embedded in the consciousness of each individual (MD, p. 97; cf. Alma 11:43). Individuals are judged according to their works, thoughts, words, and the desires of their hearts (Alma 12:14; D&C 137:9).

There can be no pretense or hypocrisy in the manner in which people accept and live the gospel (2 Ne. 31:13). The Lord will judge members of the Church as to whether they have sought to deny themselves all ungodliness (Moro. 10:32) and whether they have served others with their whole soul (D&C 4:3). Other criteria for judgment include their concern for the needs of others, both spiritual and physical, and the use they make of the light and talents that they have been given (D&C 82:2–3). To merit God's approval, everyone must live and serve according to his will (Matt. 7:21–23) and do all things the Lord commands (Abr. 3:26). Yet, since all have sinned and come short of the glory of God (Rom. 3:23), except Jesus only, all are dependent on the Atonement and on repentance to escape the demands of justice (see JUSTICE AND MERCY).

Judgment is an expression of the love of God for his children and is exercised mercifully. Mercy takes into account the variety and differing circumstances of human life. For instance, many of God's expectations are relative to the opportunity that individuals have had to know the gospel. Nevertheless, "mercy cannot rob justice," and those who rebel openly against God merit punishment (Alma 42:25; Mosiah 2:38–39; 2 Pet. 2:9). Although the "Lord's arms of mercy are extended to all" (Alma 5:33), only those who repent have claim on mercy through the Son (Alma 12:33–34). God's judgment reflects the truth that he is "a perfect, just God, and a merciful God also" (Alma 42:15). Eventually all persons will acknowledge that God's judgment is just: "every nation, kindred, tongue, and people shall see eye to eye and shall confess before God that his judgments are just" (Mosiah 16:1).

The principle of judgment was operative in the premortal estate, is continuously operative during mortal life, and will continue in the spirit world and beyond, through resurrection and final judgment. In the premortal state Satan and "a third part" of God's children were denied the opportunity of mortality because they rebelled against God (Abr. 3:24–28; D&C 29:36–38). In mortal life nations and peoples have been destroyed or scattered when they have become ripened in iniquity and the judgments of God have thereby come upon them (1 Ne. 17:37).

Judgment during mortality is a continuous process to assess people's worthiness to participate in the saving ordinances of the gospel and to serve in the Church. This is done by means of interviews with local Church leaders. Priesthood leaders are called upon to judge the deeds of member's who transgress God's commandments to determine their standing in the Church (see DISCIPLINARY COUNCILS). Judgment also occurs at death as individuals are received into the SPIRIT WORLD either in happiness or in misery (Alma 40:9–14).

In LDS doctrine, individual destiny after the final judgment is not limited to either HEAVEN or HELL. Although the wicked will be thrust into hell (D&C 76:106); nevertheless, all humankind (except those who deny the Holy Ghost and become SONS OF PERDITION) will be redeemed when Christ perfects his work (D&C 76:107). Thus, nearly everyone who has lived on the earth will eventually inherit a degree of glory, it being that amount of heavenly bliss and glory that they have the capacity and the qualifications to receive.

Concerning those who die without an opportunity to hear the gospel, the Lord revealed to Joseph SMITH that "all who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom" (D&C 137:7–8). Little children who die also receive the full blessings of salvation (Moro. 8:11, 22). All mankind will be taught the gospel, either on earth or in the spirit world. All necessary ordinances will be performed on the earth vicariously by living proxies in the TEMPLE for those who did not have the opportunity to receive the gospel while in this life, so that they may accept or reject the gospel in the spirit world and be judged on the same basis as those who receive the gospel on earth and remain faithful (1 Pet. 4:6). Such doctrine is not only just; it is also a merciful expression of the pure love of Christ (TPJS, p. 218; Moro. 7:44–47).

[See also Baptism for the Dead; Plan of Salvation; Purpose of Earth Life; Salvation of the Dead; Spiritual Death; Temple Ordinances; Voice of Warning.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. MD, pp. 398–99, 400–408. Salt Lake City, 1966.
Smith, Joseph Fielding, comp. TPJS, pp. 216–23. Salt Lake City, 1938.

DEAN JARMAN

JUDGMENT DAY, FINAL

A purpose of the final judgment is to judge every person, to provide a separation of the faithful from the wicked, and to make available the promised blessings of eternal reward to God's faithful children. Jesus Christ is the judge.

The concept of a final judgment requires that it be deferred until the entire mortal experience is completed. The PLAN OF SALVATION teaches of a partial judgment at the time of death, when the spirit leaves the mortal body and enters the world of spirits (Alma 40:11–14), of another partial judgment at the time of resurrection, when the spirit and the physical body are permanently resurrected and reunited (Alma 11:45); and of a final judgment (Rev. 20:12; D&C 38:5) that will consign individuals to an eternal status (D&C 29:27–29; 3 Ne. 26:4). Thus, this final judgment will take place following the reuniting of body and spirit in the RESURRECTION (Alma 11:44; 12:12). By that time, every person will have been given an opportunity to receive an understanding of the gospel of Jesus Christ (1 Pet. 3:19–20; Luke 4:18; Isa. 42:7).

At the Judgment, each person will be required to give an accounting of the use of his or her moral agency during mortality (D&C 101:78). The final judgment is the final point of eternal accountability for all voluntary actions, words, thoughts, desires, and works of the individual. The full significance of such an accounting cannot be adequately assessed unless it is realized that all judgments granted from the seat of God's justice are of infinite scope and eternal consequence (3 Ne. 26:4; D&C 76:112).

Every person born to mortality will be brought to a final judgment (Morm. 3:18–20). No mortal act, no matter how righteous or wicked, will provide exemption from this judgment.

Each individual is to be judged according to the degree of knowledge and opportunity available during mortal probation (2 Ne. 2:10). On the basis of records kept both on earth and in heaven (Rev. 20:12; 2 Ne. 29:11; D&C 128:7), each individual will be judged according to works, desires, and intent of the heart (Mosiah 4:6; 1 Ne. 15:33; D&C 33:1; 137:7–9; Alma 41:3) and assigned to an eternal kingdom. In this solemn responsibility, the Savior will apply both justice and mercy, such that every individual will know and declare that his or her reward is just (2 Ne. 9:46; Mosiah 27:31). Every soul will recognize that the record presented is true and that the Judgment constitutes a proper decision (Mosiah 16:1; 29:12) at the hand of a loving yet impartial judge (Mosiah 29:12–13; Alma 41:3–7; cf. TPJS, p. 218).

Not all, however, will be held equally responsible for personal mortal acts. Speaking of the Judgment, the Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that God “will judge them, ‘not according to what they have not, but according to what they have,’ those who have lived without law, will be judged without law, and those who have a law, will be judged by that law” (TPJS, p. 218).

Each brings his or her own record to this judgment, as stated by Church President John TAYLOR: “Because that record that is written by the man himself in the tablets of his own mind—that record that cannot lie—will in that day be unfolded before God and angels, and those who shall sit as judges” (JD 11:79; cf. Alma 41:7). Jesus Christ will be at the judgment bar, for he is the judge of both the living and the dead (Alma 11:44; Moro. 10:34; D&C 76:68).

Others will also participate in the process, but the final judgment rests with Christ. The twelve apostles of the Lamb will judge the righteous among the twelve tribes of Israel (D&C 29:12; Matt. 19:28; 1 Ne. 12:9–10), and the twelve Nephite disciples will judge the Nephites (3 Ne. 27:27). Still other prophets and righteous Saints have been appointed to help judge the works and deeds of their fellow sojourners in mortality (1 Cor. 6:2; Morm. 3:18–20). Thus, “there will be a whole hierarchy of judges who, under Christ, shall judge the righteous. He alone shall issue the decrees of damnation for the wicked” (McConkie, p. 520).

The Lord Jesus Christ earned the right to judge every earthly soul as he ensured the plan of redemption through the Atonement (3 Ne. 27:14–16; Alma 42:23). That this responsibility was explicitly given to the Son by the Father (John 5:22, 27) is attested in the Book of Mormon: “My Father sent me that I might be lifted up upon the cross; . . . that I might draw all men unto me, that as I have been lifted up by men even so should men be lifted up by the Father, to stand before me, to be judged of their works” (3 Ne. 27:14). Evidence of the Father's divine trust is shown in giving Jesus the responsibility of pronouncing eternal judgment on the Father's own children. Christ will judge in accordance with the will of the Father (John 5:30).

The basis of justice carried out at the final judgment lies in the agency granted to mortals so that “every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment” (D&C 101:78). There would be little value to agency without accountability. Just as Cain was counseled by the Lord, “If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?” (Gen. 4:7), so each person has full option in making moral choices.

As a result of this final judgment, the wicked will be eternally separated from the righteous (D&C 76; Alma 41:5). This separation will be the desired state for both, for neither the wicked nor the righteous could enjoy the constant presence of others so unlike themselves. As stated by Moroni, “Ye would be more miserable to dwell with a holy and just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would to dwell with the damned souls in hell” (Morm. 9:4). And to the righteous, judgment will bring fulfillment of the promise that “they who have believed in the Holy One of Israel, they who have endured the crosses of the world, and despised the shame of it, they shall inherit the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world, and their joy shall be full forever” (2 Ne. 9:18).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ludlow, Daniel H., ed. Latter-Day Prophets Speak, pp. 50–60. Salt Lake City, 1948.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Millennial Messiah. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Young, Brigham. Discourses of Brigham Young, ed. John A. Widtsoe, pp. 382–86. Salt Lake City, 1941.

DONALD N. WRIGHT

---

JUSTICE AND MERCY

Justice and mercy are attributes of deity. They are also eternal principles. The “justice of God” (Alma 41:2; 42:14) is a principle so fundamental that without it, “God would cease to be God” (Alma 42:13). Of equivalent significance is God’s mercy, which, broadly, is the ultimate source of all of the blessings of the human race and, specifically, is the principle that allows mankind’s redemption. The competing demands of justice’s claim for punishment and mercy’s claim for forgiveness are reconciled by the unifying power of the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST.

On one hand, justice rewards righteousness. “And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated” (D&C 130:21, see also D&C 82:10). On the other, justice requires penalties as a consequence of disobedience to the laws of God, for “I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance” (D&C 1:31). Just as obedience to divine law leads to blessings, justice affixes a punishment to each violation of the Lord’s commandments (Alma 42:17–18, 22), and men and women will be “punished for their own sins” (A of F 2). Each person will thus be judged according to his or her works (Rom. 2:5–6; 3 Ne. 27:14; Alma 41:2–6), although the degree of accountability varies according to the extent of each person’s knowledge and culpability (2 Ne. 9:25; Mosiah 3:11). Yet the principle of mercy allows the atonement of Jesus Christ to pay the demands of justice on a repentant transgressor’s behalf in a way that reconciles the principles of mercy and justice.

Not just any person may invoke mercy on behalf of another: “Now there is not any man that can sacrifice his own blood which will atone for the sins of another . . . therefore there can be nothing which is short of an infinite atonement which will suffice for the sins of the world” (Alma 34:11–12). Jesus Christ alone can achieve such an infinite atonement “once for all” (Hebrews 10:10) because of his nature as the actual son of God in the flesh and because he was himself without sin (see ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST; JESUS CHRIST: ONLY BEGOTTEN IN THE FLESH).

Mercy is not extended arbitrarily. To protect individuals from the undeserved effects of sins for which they are not responsible, the Atonement unconditionally paid the penalty for the transgression of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. It pays similarly for sins committed in ignorance (Mosiah 3:11; see also Moses 6:54). However, the Atonement removes the penalty for personal sins for which one is accountable only on the condition of individual repentance.

In this way, the concepts of justice, mercy, and the Atonement retain both a specific integrity and a logically consistent relationship: “The plan of mercy could not be brought about except an atonement should be made; therefore God himself atoneth for the sins of the world, to bring about the plan of mercy, to appease the demands of justice, that God might be a perfect, just God, and merciful God also. . . . But there is a law given, and a that “every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment” (D&C 101:78). There would be little value to agency without accountability. Just as Cain was counseled by the Lord, “If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?” (Gen. 4:7), so each person has full option in making moral choices.

As a result of this final judgment, the wicked will be eternally separated from the righteous (D&C 76; Alma 41:5). This separation will be the desired state for both, for neither the wicked nor the righteous could enjoy the constant presence of others so unlike themselves. As stated by Moroni, “Ye would be more miserable to dwell with a holy and just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would to dwell with the damned souls in hell” (Morm. 9:4). And to the righteous, judgment will bring fulfillment of the promise that “they who have believed in the Holy One of Israel, they who have endured the crosses of the world, and despised the shame of it, they shall inherit the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world, and their joy shall be full forever” (2 Ne. 9:18).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ludlow, Daniel H., ed. Latter-Day Prophets Speak, pp. 50–60. Salt Lake City, 1948.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Millennial Messiah. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Young, Brigham. Discourses of Brigham Young, ed. John A. Widtsoe, pp. 382–86. Salt Lake City, 1941.

DONALD N. WRIGHT

---

JUSTICE AND MERCY

Justice and mercy are attributes of deity. They are also eternal principles. The “justice of God” (Alma 41:2; 42:14) is a principle so fundamental that without it, “God would cease to be God” (Alma 42:13). Of equivalent significance is God’s mercy, which, broadly, is the ultimate source of all of the blessings of the human race and, specifically, is the principle that allows mankind’s redemption. The competing demands of justice’s claim for punishment and mercy’s claim for forgiveness are reconciled by the unifying power of the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST.

On one hand, justice rewards righteousness. “And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated” (D&C 130:21, see also D&C 82:10). On the other, justice requires penalties as a consequence of disobedience to the laws of God, for “I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance” (D&C 1:31). Just as obedience to divine law leads to blessings, justice affixes a punishment to each violation of the Lord’s commandments (Alma 42:17–18, 22), and men and women will be “punished for their own sins” (A of F 2). Each person will thus be judged according to his or her works (Rom. 2:5–6; 3 Ne. 27:14; Alma 41:2–6), although the degree of accountability varies according to the extent of each person’s knowledge and culpability (2 Ne. 9:25; Mosiah 3:11). Yet the principle of mercy allows the atonement of Jesus Christ to pay the demands of justice on a repentant transgressor’s behalf in a way that reconciles the principles of mercy and justice.

Not just any person may invoke mercy on behalf of another: “Now there is not any man that can sacrifice his own blood which will atone for the sins of another . . . therefore there can be nothing which is short of an infinite atonement which will suffice for the sins of the world” (Alma 34:11–12). Jesus Christ alone can achieve such an infinite atonement “once for all” (Hebrews 10:10) because of his nature as the actual son of God in the flesh and because he was himself without sin (see ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST; JESUS CHRIST: ONLY BEGOTTEN IN THE FLESH).

Mercy is not extended arbitrarily. To protect individuals from the undeserved effects of sins for which they are not responsible, the Atonement unconditionally paid the penalty for the transgression of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. It pays similarly for sins committed in ignorance (Mosiah 3:11; see also Moses 6:54). However, the Atonement removes the penalty for personal sins for which one is accountable only on the condition of individual repentance.

In this way, the concepts of justice, mercy, and the Atonement retain both a specific integrity and a logically consistent relationship: “The plan of mercy could not be brought about except an atonement should be made; therefore God himself atoneth for the sins of the world, to bring about the plan of mercy, to appease the demands of justice, that God might be a perfect, just God, and merciful God also. . . . But there is a law given, and a punishment affixed, and a repentance granted; which repentance mercy claimeth; otherwise, justice claimeth the creature. . . . For behold, justice exerciseth all his demands, and also mercy claimeth all which is her own; and thus, none but the truly penitent are saved" (Alma 42:13, 15, 22, 24).

Mercy is thus rehabilitative, not retributive or arbitrary. The Lord asks repentance from a transgressor, not to compensate the Savior for paying the debt of justice, but to induce the transgressor to undertake a meaningful process of personal development toward a Christlike nature.

At the same time, mercy depends ultimately on the Lord's extension of unmerited grace. Even though conditioned on repentance for personal sins, mercy is never fully "earned" by its recipients. Repentance is a necessary, but not a sufficient, condition of salvation and exaltation. "For we know that it is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do" (2 Ne. 25:23). The unearned nature of mercy is demonstrated by the Atonement's having unconditionally compensated for the disabilities imposed on mankind by the FALL OF ADAM. Adam and Eve and their posterity were utterly powerless to overcome the physical and spiritual deaths that were introduced by the Fall. Moreover, transgressors do not "pay" fully for their sins through the process of repentance. Even though repentance requires restitution to the extent of one's ability, most forms of restitution are beyond any person's ability to achieve. No matter how complete our repentance, it would all be to no avail without a mediator willing and able to pay our debt to justice, on condition of our repentance. Thus, even with sincere and complete repentance, all are utterly dependent on Jesus Christ.

Through the atonement of Jesus Christ, justice and mercy are interdependent and interactive, demonstrating that God cannot be just without being merciful, nor merciful without being just.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hafen, Bruce C. "Justice, Mercy, and Rehabilitation." In The Broken Heart, pp. 143–54. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Oaks, Dallin H. "The Atonement and the Principles of Justice and Mercy." Unpublished manuscript, from May 1, 1985, General Authority training meeting.
- Roberts, B. H. The Atonement. Salt Lake City, 1911.
- Taylor, John. Mediation and Atonement. Salt Lake City, 1882.

BRUCE C. HAFEN

JUSTIFICATION

Although the word "justify" has several meanings, its main meaning in the latter-day scriptures is inseparably intertwined with the concepts of GRACE (Rom. 3:28; Gal. 2:16; 2 Ne. 2:5; Mosiah 14:11; D&C 20:30; Moses 6:60), FAITH, REPENTANCE, RIGHTEOUSNESS, and SANCTIFICATION.

Justification is a scriptural metaphor drawn from the courts of law: a judge justifies an accused person by declaring or pronouncing that person innocent. Likewise, God may treat a person as being "not guilty" of sin. All mortals individually need to be justified because they fall short of perfect obedience to God, becoming "carnal, sensual, and devilish" through transgression (Moses 5:13; Mosiah 16:3), are "cut off" from God, and are in jeopardy of becoming "miserable forever" (2 Ne. 2:5). In this plight, they of themselves cannot be justified through subsequent obedience to the law and cannot change their own nature to become obedient. Furthermore, they are severed from the source of the divine power that can change, or sanctify, them (2 Ne. 9:5–9).

However, through the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST, when men, women, or children have faith in Jesus, are truly penitent, call upon his name, and are baptized, they become eligible for the redeeming grace extended through Jesus Christ. In this sense they become justified. This is given as a gift by grace, since fallen man must rely "alone upon the merits of Christ" (1 Ne. 10:6; Moro. 6:4). The faith by which one receives this grace manifests itself in an active determination to follow Christ in all things. It is demonstrated by obedience to the commandments to repent and be baptized, followed by a life of submission, obedience, and service to God and others (2 Ne. 31:16–20; Moro. 8:25–26; see GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST).

Justification directly opens the way to sanctification by establishing a "right" relationship of mortals with God. Thus, God, without denying justice, can bless them with the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost (Mosiah 5:1–2; 3 Ne. 27:20). Justification starts the believer on the path toward righteousness.

Because justified, and even sanctified, persons can fall from that state of grace, believers are admonished to "take heed and pray always" (D&C 20:30–33) and to meet together often to fast and partake of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, thereby renewing and personally reviewing their punishment affixed, and a repentance granted; which repentance mercy claimeth; otherwise, justice claimeth the creature. . . . For behold, justice exerciseth all his demands, and also mercy claimeth all which is her own; and thus, none but the truly penitent are saved" (Alma 42:13, 15, 22, 24).

Mercy is thus rehabilitative, not retributive or arbitrary. The Lord asks repentance from a transgressor, not to compensate the Savior for paying the debt of justice, but to induce the transgressor to undertake a meaningful process of personal development toward a Christlike nature.

At the same time, mercy depends ultimately on the Lord's extension of unmerited grace. Even though conditioned on repentance for personal sins, mercy is never fully "earned" by its recipients. Repentance is a necessary, but not a sufficient, condition of salvation and exaltation. "For we know that it is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do" (2 Ne. 25:23). The unearned nature of mercy is demonstrated by the Atonement's having unconditionally compensated for the disabilities imposed on mankind by the FALL OF ADAM. Adam and Eve and their posterity were utterly powerless to overcome the physical and spiritual deaths that were introduced by the Fall. Moreover, transgressors do not "pay" fully for their sins through the process of repentance. Even though repentance requires restitution to the extent of one's ability, most forms of restitution are beyond any person's ability to achieve. No matter how complete our repentance, it would all be to no avail without a mediator willing and able to pay our debt to justice, on condition of our repentance. Thus, even with sincere and complete repentance, all are utterly dependent on Jesus Christ.

Through the atonement of Jesus Christ, justice and mercy are interdependent and interactive, demonstrating that God cannot be just without being merciful, nor merciful without being just.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hafen, Bruce C. "Justice, Mercy, and Rehabilitation." In The Broken Heart, pp. 143–54. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Oaks, Dallin H. "The Atonement and the Principles of Justice and Mercy." Unpublished manuscript, from May 1, 1985, General Authority training meeting.
- Roberts, B. H. The Atonement. Salt Lake City, 1911.
- Taylor, John. Mediation and Atonement. Salt Lake City, 1882.

BRUCE C. HAFEN

JUSTIFICATION

Although the word "justify" has several meanings, its main meaning in the latter-day scriptures is inseparably intertwined with the concepts of GRACE (Rom. 3:28; Gal. 2:16; 2 Ne. 2:5; Mosiah 14:11; D&C 20:30; Moses 6:60), FAITH, REPENTANCE, RIGHTEOUSNESS, and SANCTIFICATION.

Justification is a scriptural metaphor drawn from the courts of law: a judge justifies an accused person by declaring or pronouncing that person innocent. Likewise, God may treat a person as being "not guilty" of sin. All mortals individually need to be justified because they fall short of perfect obedience to God, becoming "carnal, sensual, and devilish" through transgression (Moses 5:13; Mosiah 16:3), are "cut off" from God, and are in jeopardy of becoming "miserable forever" (2 Ne. 2:5). In this plight, they of themselves cannot be justified through subsequent obedience to the law and cannot change their own nature to become obedient. Furthermore, they are severed from the source of the divine power that can change, or sanctify, them (2 Ne. 9:5–9).

However, through the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST, when men, women, or children have faith in Jesus, are truly penitent, call upon his name, and are baptized, they become eligible for the redeeming grace extended through Jesus Christ. In this sense they become justified. This is given as a gift by grace, since fallen man must rely "alone upon the merits of Christ" (1 Ne. 10:6; Moro. 6:4). The faith by which one receives this grace manifests itself in an active determination to follow Christ in all things. It is demonstrated by obedience to the commandments to repent and be baptized, followed by a life of submission, obedience, and service to God and others (2 Ne. 31:16–20; Moro. 8:25–26; see GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST).

Justification directly opens the way to sanctification by establishing a "right" relationship of mortals with God. Thus, God, without denying justice, can bless them with the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost (Mosiah 5:1–2; 3 Ne. 27:20). Justification starts the believer on the path toward righteousness.

Because justified, and even sanctified, persons can fall from that state of grace, believers are admonished to "take heed and pray always" (D&C 20:30–33) and to meet together often to fast and partake of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, thereby renewing and personally reviewing their covenants with God, including baptism and its cleansing effect (Moro. 6:5–6), and to endure to the end (D&C 53:7).

The person whom God justifies has not yet necessarily received the promise of eternal life (see HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE; JESUS CHRIST: SECOND COMFORTER). To obtain that promise, the justified must continue in the path of faith, wherein nothing can separate the faithful from the love of God.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. Understanding Paul. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Sperry, Sidney B. Paul's Life and Letters, pp. 171–78. Salt Lake City, 1955.

COLIN B. DOUGLAS

---

JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR

The Juvenile Instructor began publication in January 1866 and was the first children's magazine published between the Mississippi River and the West Coast of the United States. Its first issue identified its primary audience as the children of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and its purpose was to help prepare them for future responsibilities. It was originally published as a 10½-by-15½-inch four-page, three-column, semimonthly publication.

The magazine was initiated, owned, edited, and published by Elder George Q. Cannon until shortly before his death in 1901. During his lifetime he was the general superintendent of the Church's Sunday School, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, a Counselor in the First Presidency of the Church, and also a territorial delegate from Utah to the U.S. Congress. The Juvenile Instructor published editorials, poetry (some by Eliza R. SNOW), and a monthly column, "Voices from Nature," by Karl G. Maeser (president of Brigham Young Academy, later Brigham Young University). It also printed essays, stories, and biographical sketches that often focused on moral issues or the history of other cultures.

Officially owned and published by the Sunday School from 1901 to 1929, the Juvenile Instructor contained important organization and business matters of the Sunday School as well as adult and youth stories and essays. As its interests turned more toward filling the needs of teachers, it became the teachers' magazine of the Church and was renamed The Instructor in 1929.

[See also Instructor.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Green, Doyle L. "The Church and Its Magazines." Ensign 1 (Jan. 1971):12–15.

RUEL A. ALLRED

covenants with God, including baptism and its cleansing effect (Moro. 6:5–6), and to endure to the end (D&C 53:7).

The person whom God justifies has not yet necessarily received the promise of eternal life (see HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE; JESUS CHRIST: SECOND COMFORTER). To obtain that promise, the justified must continue in the path of faith, wherein nothing can separate the faithful from the love of God.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. Understanding Paul. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Sperry, Sidney B. Paul's Life and Letters, pp. 171–78. Salt Lake City, 1955.

COLIN B. DOUGLAS

---

JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR

The Juvenile Instructor began publication in January 1866 and was the first children's magazine published between the Mississippi River and the West Coast of the United States. Its first issue identified its primary audience as the children of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and its purpose was to help prepare them for future responsibilities. It was originally published as a 10½-by-15½-inch four-page, three-column, semimonthly publication.

The magazine was initiated, owned, edited, and published by Elder George Q. Cannon until shortly before his death in 1901. During his lifetime he was the general superintendent of the Church's Sunday School, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, a Counselor in the First Presidency of the Church, and also a territorial delegate from Utah to the U.S. Congress. The Juvenile Instructor published editorials, poetry (some by Eliza R. SNOW), and a monthly column, "Voices from Nature," by Karl G. Maeser (president of Brigham Young Academy, later Brigham Young University). It also printed essays, stories, and biographical sketches that often focused on moral issues or the history of other cultures.

Officially owned and published by the Sunday School from 1901 to 1929, the Juvenile Instructor contained important organization and business matters of the Sunday School as well as adult and youth stories and essays. As its interests turned more toward filling the needs of teachers, it became the teachers' magazine of the Church and was renamed The Instructor in 1929.

[See also Instructor.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Green, Doyle L. "The Church and Its Magazines." Ensign 1 (Jan. 1971):12–15.

RUEL A. ALLRED

---

K

---

---

KANE, THOMAS L.

A courageous friend of the Latter-day Saints, Thomas Leiper Kane was born in Philadelphia on January 27, 1822. His great-grandfather John Kane (O'Kane) came to America from Ireland before the American Revolution. John's grandson John Kintzing Kane married June Duval Leiper, and they became the parents of Thomas L. Kane.

After completing his college training in Philadelphia in 1840, Thomas studied in England. Returning to America, he studied law under his father's direction and was admitted to the Pennsylvania bar in 1846. Then came a period of service with the U.S. Army, following which he became known as Colonel Kane.

Kane's introduction to the Mormon cause came in his native Philadelphia at a conference in May 1846 held under the direction of Jesse C. Little, presiding elder in the East, who was soliciting support for the Latter-day Saints' WESTWARD MIGRATION. Colonel Kane gave Little helpful letters of recommendation and later joined him in Washington, D.C., where they called on the secretary of state, secretary of war, and President James K. Polk. As a result of their negotiations, the United States agreed to enlist a battalion of 500 LDS men to serve in the campaign against Mexico (see MORMON BATTALION).

Later, after carrying government dispatches to Fort Leavenworth, Kane rejoined Little in the Mormon camp on the Missouri, where he became seriously ill with pulmonary tuberculosis. The Saints nursed him back to health, and during his long convalescence he abandoned plans for a political career and decided to devote himself to helping the Latter-day Saints and other downtrodden people. The Saints later named their principal Iowa settlement Kaneshville (present-day COUNCIL BLUFFS) in recognition of his service. Although he was not a member of the Church, Colonel Kane received a PATRIARCHIAL BLESSING from the Church's patriarch, John Smith, an uncle of Joseph SMITH. This blessing furnished encouragement, and it also provided a bond with the Saints.

Kane rendered his most significant service by assisting the Saints during the Utah War. Responding to reports from federal officials in Utah, President James Buchanan ordered the UTAH EXPEDITION of 2,500 U.S. Army troops to Utah. Traveling under the alias of Dr. Osborne, supposedly a botanist from Philadelphia, Dr. Kane came to Utah in 1858 and served as a mediator. He succeeded in convincing the newly appointed territorial governor, Alfred Cumming, that the Saints were not in a state of rebellion, and helped arrange a solution to the conflict that avoided a violent confrontation and preserved the peace.

Colonel Kane continued for many years as a friend and political adviser to the Saints. He promoted UTAH STATEHOOD in the nation's capital throughout the 1850s and defended the Church, its leaders, and its interests at every opportunity. After outstanding service in the Civil War, Kane was promoted to major general. In 1872 he and his wife, Elizabeth, spent the winter in Utah. They traveled throughout the territory and stayed as guests of Brigham YOUNG at his winter home in St. George.

Thomas Leiper Kane (1822–1883) was known for his philanthropy. He helped those in prison and was kind to the Quakers. He was a loyal friend to the Latter-day Saints for almost forty years.

When Brigham Young died in 1877, Kane returned to Utah to express his sorrow and to assure the Church of his continued support. Upon Kane's death in 1883, Church leaders eulogized him for his staunch friendship and assistance. Today the Church helps maintain as a historic site the Thomas L. Kane Memorial Chapel, in Kane, Pennsylvania, where Kane is buried.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. "In Honorable Remembrance: Thomas L. Kane's Services to the Mormons." BYU Studies 21 (Fall, 1981):389–402.
- Cannon, Donald Q. "Thomas L. Kane Meets the Mormons." BYU Studies 18 (Fall 1977):126–28.

Kane, Elizabeth [Mrs. Thomas L.]. Twelve Mormon Homes Visited in Succession on a Journey Through Utah to Arizona, ed. Everett L. Cooley. Salt Lake City, 1975.

Zobell, Albert L., Jr. Sentinel in the East: A Biography of Thomas L. Kane. Salt Lake City, 1965.

DONALD Q. CANNON

KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD

The keys of the priesthood refer to the right to exercise power in the name of Jesus Christ or to preside over a priesthood function, quorum, or organizational division of the Church. Keys are necessary to maintain order and to see that the functions of the Church are performed in the proper time, place, and manner. They are given by the laying on of hands in an ordination or setting apart by a person who presides and who holds the appropriate keys at a higher level. Many keys were restored to men on earth by heavenly messengers to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY.

The keys of the kingdom of God on earth are held by the APOSTLES. The PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH, who is the senior apostle, holds all the keys presently on earth and presides over all the organizational and ordinance work of the Church (D&C 107:8–9, 91–92). He delegates authority by giving the keys of specific offices to others (D&C 124:123). Only presiding priesthood officers (including General Authorities, stake presidents, mission presidents, temple presidents, bishops, branch presidents, and quorum presidents) hold keys pertaining to their respective offices. Latter-day Saints distinguish between holding the priesthood and holding keys to direct the work of the priesthood: one does not receive additional priesthood when one is given keys (Joseph F. Smith, IE 4 [Jan. 1901]:230).

The Prophet Joseph Smith taught that "the fundamental principles, government, and doctrine of the Church are vested in the keys of the kingdom" (TPJS, p. 21). "The keys have to be brought from heaven whenever the Gospel is sent"; they are revealed to man under the authority of ADAM, for he was the first to be given them when he was given dominion over all things. They have come down through the DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL to prophets, including NOAH, ABRAHAM, MOSES, ELIJAH; to PETER, JAMES, and JOHN; and to Joseph throughout the 1850s and defended the Church, its leaders, and its interests at every opportunity. After outstanding service in the Civil War, Kane was promoted to major general. In 1872 he and his wife, Elizabeth, spent the winter in Utah. They traveled throughout the territory and stayed as guests of Brigham YOUNG at his winter home in St. George.

Thomas Leiper Kane (1822–1883) was known for his philanthropy. He helped those in prison and was kind to the Quakers. He was a loyal friend to the Latter-day Saints for almost forty years.

When Brigham Young died in 1877, Kane returned to Utah to express his sorrow and to assure the Church of his continued support. Upon Kane's death in 1883, Church leaders eulogized him for his staunch friendship and assistance. Today the Church helps maintain as a historic site the Thomas L. Kane Memorial Chapel, in Kane, Pennsylvania, where Kane is buried.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. "In Honorable Remembrance: Thomas L. Kane's Services to the Mormons." BYU Studies 21 (Fall, 1981):389–402.
- Cannon, Donald Q. "Thomas L. Kane Meets the Mormons." BYU Studies 18 (Fall 1977):126–28.

Kane, Elizabeth [Mrs. Thomas L.]. Twelve Mormon Homes Visited in Succession on a Journey Through Utah to Arizona, ed. Everett L. Cooley. Salt Lake City, 1975.

Zobell, Albert L., Jr. Sentinel in the East: A Biography of Thomas L. Kane. Salt Lake City, 1965.

DONALD Q. CANNON

KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD

The keys of the priesthood refer to the right to exercise power in the name of Jesus Christ or to preside over a priesthood function, quorum, or organizational division of the Church. Keys are necessary to maintain order and to see that the functions of the Church are performed in the proper time, place, and manner. They are given by the laying on of hands in an ordination or setting apart by a person who presides and who holds the appropriate keys at a higher level. Many keys were restored to men on earth by heavenly messengers to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY.

The keys of the kingdom of God on earth are held by the APOSTLES. The PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH, who is the senior apostle, holds all the keys presently on earth and presides over all the organizational and ordinance work of the Church (D&C 107:8–9, 91–92). He delegates authority by giving the keys of specific offices to others (D&C 124:123). Only presiding priesthood officers (including General Authorities, stake presidents, mission presidents, temple presidents, bishops, branch presidents, and quorum presidents) hold keys pertaining to their respective offices. Latter-day Saints distinguish between holding the priesthood and holding keys to direct the work of the priesthood: one does not receive additional priesthood when one is given keys (Joseph F. Smith, IE 4 [Jan. 1901]:230).

The Prophet Joseph Smith taught that "the fundamental principles, government, and doctrine of the Church are vested in the keys of the kingdom" (TPJS, p. 21). "The keys have to be brought from heaven whenever the Gospel is sent"; they are revealed to man under the authority of ADAM, for he was the first to be given them when he was given dominion over all things. They have come down through the DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL to prophets, including NOAH, ABRAHAM, MOSES, ELIJAH; to PETER, JAMES, and JOHN; and to Joseph

The First Presidency (1910–1918). Left to right: Anthon H. Lund, President Joseph F. Smith, Charles W. Penrose. The keys of the priesthood are held by the apostles; as the senior apostle, the President of the Church exercises all those keys and presides over the Church.

Smith and the designated prophets of the latter days (HC 3:385–87). Keys to perform or preside over various priesthood functions were bestowed upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery by JOHN THE BAPTIST (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF AARONIC PRIESTHOOD), by Peter, James, and John (see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD), and by Moses, Elias, and Elijah in the Kirtland Temple (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTIONS 109–110).

Many types of keys are mentioned in the scriptures of the Church (see MD, pp. 409–13). Jesus Christ holds all the keys. Joseph Smith received the keys pertaining to the RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST (D&C 6:25–28; 28:7; 35:18), and through him the FIRST PRESIDENCY holds the “keys of the kingdom,” including the SEALING ordinances (D&C 81:1–2; 90:1–6; 110:16; 128:20; 132:19). Specific mention of certain keys and those who hold them include the following: The QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES exercises the keys “to open the door by the proclamation of the gospel of Jesus Christ” in all the world (D&C 107:35; 112:16; 124:128). Adam holds “the keys of salvation under the counsel and direction of the Holy One,” and “the keys of the universe” (D&C 78:16; TPJS, p. 157); Moses, “the keys of the gathering of Israel” (D&C 110:11); Elias, the keys to bring to pass “the restoration of all things” (D&C 27:6); and Elijah, “the keys of the power of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers” (D&C 27:9). Holders of the Melchizedek Priesthood are said to have “the keys of the Church,” “the key of knowledge,” and “the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church” (D&C 42:69; 84:19; 107:18), while belonging to the Aaronic Priesthood are “the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins” (D&C 13:1; 84:26). All these stewardships will eventually be delivered back into the hands of Jesus Christ (TPJS, p. 157).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Durham, G. Homer. “The Keys of the Priesthood.” In Priesthood, ed. S. Kimball et al. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Nelson, Russell M. “Keys of the Priesthood.” Ensign 17 (Nov. 1987):36–39.

ALAN K. PARRISH

---

KIMBALL, HEBER C.

Heber Chase Kimball was First Counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church from December 5, 1847, until his death in 1868. One of the foremost men in the early years of the Church, along with the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Brigham YOUNG, Heber marched in ZION’S CAMP in 1834,

The First Presidency (1910–1918). Left to right: Anthon H. Lund, President Joseph F. Smith, Charles W. Penrose. The keys of the priesthood are held by the apostles; as the senior apostle, the President of the Church exercises all those keys and presides over the Church.

Smith and the designated prophets of the latter days (HC 3:385–87). Keys to perform or preside over various priesthood functions were bestowed upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery by JOHN THE BAPTIST (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF AARONIC PRIESTHOOD), by Peter, James, and John (see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD), and by Moses, Elias, and Elijah in the Kirtland Temple (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTIONS 109–110).

Many types of keys are mentioned in the scriptures of the Church (see MD, pp. 409–13). Jesus Christ holds all the keys. Joseph Smith received the keys pertaining to the RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST (D&C 6:25–28; 28:7; 35:18), and through him the FIRST PRESIDENCY holds the “keys of the kingdom,” including the SEALING ordinances (D&C 81:1–2; 90:1–6; 110:16; 128:20; 132:19). Specific mention of certain keys and those who hold them include the following: The QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES exercises the keys “to open the door by the proclamation of the gospel of Jesus Christ” in all the world (D&C 107:35; 112:16; 124:128). Adam holds “the keys of salvation under the counsel and direction of the Holy One,” and “the keys of the universe” (D&C 78:16; TPJS, p. 157); Moses, “the keys of the gathering of Israel” (D&C 110:11); Elias, the keys to bring to pass “the restoration of all things” (D&C 27:6); and Elijah, “the keys of the power of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers” (D&C 27:9). Holders of the Melchizedek Priesthood are said to have “the keys of the Church,” “the key of knowledge,” and “the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church” (D&C 42:69; 84:19; 107:18), while belonging to the Aaronic Priesthood are “the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins” (D&C 13:1; 84:26). All these stewardships will eventually be delivered back into the hands of Jesus Christ (TPJS, p. 157).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Durham, G. Homer. “The Keys of the Priesthood.” In Priesthood, ed. S. Kimball et al. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Nelson, Russell M. “Keys of the Priesthood.” Ensign 17 (Nov. 1987):36–39.

ALAN K. PARRISH

KIMBALL, HEBER C.

Heber Chase Kimball was First Counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church from December 5, 1847, until his death in 1868. One of the foremost men in the early years of the Church, along with the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Brigham YOUNG, Heber marched in ZION’S CAMP in 1834, was ordained one of the original members of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES in 1835, and experienced the spiritual manifestations that attended the dedication of the KIRTLAND TEMPLE in 1836. He served two missions to Great Britain, in 1837–1838 and 1839–1841 (see MISSIONS OF THE TWELVE TO THE BRITISH ISLES). Blunt, honest, loyal, and believing, Heber served the struggling Church well when steadfastness was among the most needed qualities. This is reflected in Joseph Smith's saying, "Of the Twelve Apostles chosen in Kirtland, . . . there have been but two [who have not] lifted their heel against me—namely Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball" (HC 5:412).

Heber C. Kimball's residence (center) in Salt Lake City in the block northeast of Temple Square. This 1864 photograph also shows the wall around Temple Square (left), the Tithing Office inside Brigham Young's enclosure (right), and Indian tents outside the old city wall (top right). Photographer: C. R. Savage.

Heber C. Kimball was born June 14, 1801, near Sheldon, Vermont, to Solomon F. and Anna Spaulding Kimball. In 1811 the family moved to western New York, where, after scanty schooling, young Heber became a potter. He grew to be a physically impressive man, six feet tall and weighing more than two hundred pounds, barrel-chested, and dark-eyed. He married Vilate Murray in 1822. He, his friend Brigham Young, and their wives joined the Church in 1832, after a two-year period of inquiry, and in 1833 they moved to Church headquarters in KIRTLAND, OHIO.

In 1837 Elder Kimball received an assignment from the Prophet Joseph Smith to lead a group of missionaries to England. As the ship arrived in Liverpool, Kimball leapt ashore, thus becoming the first Latter-day Saint in Europe. His simplicity and spirit suited the men and women who heard him preach, and within a week nine persons sought baptism. On the morning of the baptism, Elder Kimball and his companions reported they experienced an attack by evil spirits, whom they saw distinctly in their room. Calling on God, they received deliverance from the dark power. Through their efforts groups of hundreds of English converts, commencing in 1840, began sailing to the United States to be with the main body of the Church.

After a year Elder Kimball returned to the United States and to Missouri, where the Saints experienced persecution. While Joseph Smith sat imprisoned in the LIBERTY JAIL (Missouri), Heber and Brigham Young organized the removal of approximately 12,000 LDS refugees to Illinois.

When the Prophet Joseph Smith rejoined the Saints in Illinois and established NAUVOO on the Mississippi River, Elder Kimball prepared to return to England. On the appointed day he and Brigham Young took their leave from sick wives, each with a new baby, and were themselves so ill they had to be lifted into the wagon. Elder Kimball was gone from home for almost two years, until 1841.

Kimball participated in the building of the Nauvoo Temple and received the temple ordinances. Joseph Smith taught him privately that God required him to enter into PLURAL MARRIAGE. After initial resistance, Elder Kimball married Sarah Noon. His anguish at keeping this secret from Vilate ended when she told him that the Lord had shown her that plural marriage was right, and that she accepted his participation in it. Kimball married a total of forty-three women (in many cases a caretaking rather than an intimate relationship), and by seventeen of them he had sixty-five children. He perceived his plural marriages as a religious obligation; Vilate accepted the other wives as sisters. Heber C. Kimball's grandson Spencer W. KIMBALL was President of the Church from 1973 to 1985.

Daguerreotype of Heber C. Kimball (1801–1868). One of the original Quorum of the Twelve Apostles ordained February 14, 1835, he served as first counselor to President Brigham Young from 1847 until 1868. Photograph, c. 1853, attributed to Marsena Cannon.

After Joseph Smith's assassination in 1844, Church leadership was carried forth by the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles under its president, Brigham Young. Elder Kimball stood next in leadership. The Saints soon had to abandon their homes in Nauvoo and flee to the Great Basin.

The brutal trek across Iowa, temporary settlement in Winter Quarters, and the pioneer journey of 1847 to the Great Salt Lake Valley occurred under Brigham Young's supervision, with Kimball as his assistant. In December 1847, at Kanesville (Council Bluffs, Iowa), the First Presidency was organized, with Brigham Young as president and Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards as his counselors. In summer 1848 President Kimball led one of three large companies of Saints to the Salt Lake Valley, where he established his families and supported them by farming, ranching, milling, freighting, and Church and civic administration.

The organization of Utah Territory in 1850 brought hostile federal appointees, but since the population was predominantly LDS, Church leaders had de facto control of the legislature. Heber served as leader of the legislature. Friction between the federally appointed judges and the Latter-day Saints led to U.S. President James Buchanan's sending federal troops to suppress a supposed "rebellion" of the Mormons. President Kimball helped direct the resistance.

A notably outspoken preacher, President Kimball often urged self-sufficiency, resistance to the corrupting influences of the larger society, and faithfulness to the kingdom of God. He frequently used metaphors from his experience as a potter. He prophesied accurately many times, including a prediction that Parley P. Pratt would go on a mission to Toronto, Canada, and find a people prepared for his message. He likewise prophesied that from there the gospel would spread to England. He correctly predicted that Pratt's invalid wife would bear him a son, even though the couple had been childless for ten years (Whitney, p. 135). He also prophesied to hungry pioneers in early 1849 that "in less than one year there will be plenty of clothes and everything that we shall want sold at less than St. Louis prices" (Kimball, 1981, p. 190). That summer, people traveling to the California gold fields dumped their excess supplies and equipment on the market in Salt Lake City and the prophecy was true.

President Kimball also shouldered special responsibility for the British mission and for all temple ordinances. His journals constitute important sources of Church history.

Heber C. Kimball died June 22, 1868, from the effects of a carriage accident, ending thirty-six years of unexcelled, dependable service to the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Stanley B. Heber C. Kimball: Mormon Patriarch and Pioneer. Urbana, Ill., 1981.

———, ed. On the Potter's Wheel: The Diaries of Heber C. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1987.

Whitney, Orson F. Life of Heber C. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1888; 2nd ed., 1945.

EDWARD L. KIMBALL

KIMBALL, SARAH GRANGER

Sarah Melissa Granger Kimball (1818–1898) was founder of the Ladies' Society of Nauvoo, a suffragist, an advocate of women's rights, ward RELIEF SOCIETY president for forty years, and a strong presence in the history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for much of the nineteenth century. Described by one of her associates as possessing "the courage to say what she thought," Sarah Kimball labored for the advancement of women, arguing that "education and agitation are our best weapons of warfare" (Woman's Exponent 20 [1 May 1892]:159 and 18 [15 Feb. 1890]:139, respectively). Such militancy was tempered, however, by her strong commitment to the Church and her loyalty to its leaders. Indeed, she saw little discrepancy between her devotion to the Church and her dedication to women's rights, since Joseph SMITH's "turning of the key" of power to women in 1842 had, in her view, led to the beginnings of the national women's rights movement.

Born December 29, 1818, in Phelps, New York, to Oliver and Lydia Dibble Granger, Sarah joined the Church and moved with her family to KIRTLAND, OHIO, in 1833 at age fifteen. While she did not detail her own conversion, a dramatic vision of the Book of Mormon prophet MORONI<sup>2</sup> experienced by her father made a lasting impression on her. She, however, was never content to live vicariously, either intellectually or spiritually. She was one of the twenty-three women known to have attended Joseph Smith's SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS in Kirtland, and she later urged the inclusion of substantive courses of study in her ward Relief Society, delivered strong addresses expounding doctrine, and spoke in tongues.

Perhaps most significant in her early adulthood was her formation of the Ladies' Society of Nauvoo, the antecedent of the Relief Society. Married at age twenty-one to Hiram Kimball, a wealthy Nauvoo merchant who later converted to the Church, she sought to help build the kingdom of God, which the Saints then saw as embodied in Nauvoo, especially in the temple. She and her seamstress, a Miss (Margaret?) Cook, determined to sew shirts for the temple workmen and subsequently invited other women to join forces with them in a ladies' society. When they approached Joseph Smith for his approval of the society's constitution, written by Eliza R. SNOW, he stated that although the constitution was excellent, the Lord wanted the women organized "under the priesthood after the pattern of the priesthood." According to Sarah Kimball's recollection, Joseph continued, "The Church was never perfectly organized ple ordinances. His journals constitute important sources of Church history.

Sarah Melissa Granger Kimball (1818–1898), founder of a Nauvoo women's group, the precursor of the Relief Society, and president of the Utah Woman Suffrage Association. Photograph c. 1890, C. M. Bell.

Heber C. Kimball died June 22, 1868, from the effects of a carriage accident, ending thirty-six years of unexcelled, dependable service to the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Stanley B. Heber C. Kimball: Mormon Patriarch and Pioneer. Urbana, Ill., 1981.

———, ed. On the Potter's Wheel: The Diaries of Heber C. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1987.

Whitney, Orson F. Life of Heber C. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1888; 2nd ed., 1945.

EDWARD L. KIMBALL

KIMBALL, SARAH GRANGER

Sarah Melissa Granger Kimball (1818–1898) was founder of the Ladies' Society of Nauvoo, a suffragist, an advocate of women's rights, ward RELIEF SOCIETY president for forty years, and a strong presence in the history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for much of the nineteenth century. Described by one of her associates as possessing "the courage to say what she thought," Sarah Kimball labored for the advancement of women, arguing that "education and agitation are our best weapons of warfare" (Woman's Exponent 20 [1 May 1892]:159 and 18 [15 Feb. 1890]:139, respectively). Such militancy was tempered, however, by her strong commitment to the Church and her loyalty to its leaders. Indeed, she saw little discrepancy between her devotion to the Church and her dedication to women's rights, since Joseph SMITH's "turning of the key" of power to women in 1842 had, in her view, led to the beginnings of the national women's rights movement.

Born December 29, 1818, in Phelps, New York, to Oliver and Lydia Dibble Granger, Sarah joined the Church and moved with her family to KIRTLAND, OHIO, in 1833 at age fifteen. While she did not detail her own conversion, a dramatic vision of the Book of Mormon prophet MORONI<sub>2</sub> experienced by her father made a lasting impression on her. She, however, was never content to live vicariously, either intellectually or spiritually. She was one of the twenty-three women known to have attended Joseph Smith's SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS in Kirtland, and she later urged the inclusion of substantive courses of study in her ward Relief Society, delivered strong addresses expounding doctrine, and spoke in tongues.

Perhaps most significant in her early adulthood was her formation of the Ladies' Society of Nauvoo, the antecedent of the Relief Society. Married at age twenty-one to Hiram Kimball, a wealthy Nauvoo merchant who later converted to the Church, she sought to help build the kingdom of God, which the Saints then saw as embodied in Nauvoo, especially in the temple. She and her seamstress, a Miss (Margaret?) Cook, determined to sew shirts for the temple workmen and subsequently invited other women to join forces with them in a ladies' society. When they approached Joseph Smith for his approval of the society's constitution, written by Eliza R. SNOW, he stated that although the constitution was excellent, the Lord wanted the women organized "under the priesthood after the pattern of the priesthood." According to Sarah Kimball's recollection, Joseph continued, "The Church was never perfectly organized until the women were thus organized" (Kimball, p. 51).

Sarah Melissa Granger Kimball (1818–1898), founder of a Nauvoo women's group, the precursor of the Relief Society, and president of the Utah Woman Suffrage Association. Photograph c. 1890, C. M. Bell.

In light of her important early involvement with the Relief Society, it is not surprising that Sarah spent much of her life actively engaged in its work. After her 1851 move to Salt Lake City, where she taught school to support her family while her husband recovered from some serious financial losses, she was called in 1857 as president of the Fifteenth Ward Relief Society. She continued in that position until her death in 1898, also serving during twelve of those years as general secretary of the Relief Society under President Eliza R. Snow and later as a vice-president of the organization after its incorporation in 1892.

Sarah Kimball's tenure as ward Relief Society president was noted for its innovation and attention to the complete development of women. Her compassion and charity were legendary, and she organized the women of her ward to provide for the poor and needy. She directed their efforts to fund the first Relief Society hall, which functioned both as a store in which the women sold their items of home manufacture and as a meeting house devoted to secular and sacred education.

During her years of greatest involvement in the Relief Society, Sarah Kimball also became a major force in the suffrage fight as president of the Utah Woman Suffrage Association. Compared by one of her contemporaries to Susan B. Anthony, Sarah Kimball displayed the same courage and forthrightness in contending for women's rights. She argued not only for suffrage but for equal esteem of women with men. Further, many of her sermons spoke of the ultimate and divine equality of "the Father and Mother God" (Woman's Exponent 8 [1 July 1879]: 22; see also MOTHER IN HEAVEN).

Sarah Kimball died in Salt Lake City on December 1, 1898. A widow for thirty-five years following her husband's death in a steamship explosion while en route to a mission in the Sandwich Islands (Hawaii), she was survived by three sons and one adopted daughter.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Mulvey, Jill C. "The Liberal Shall Be Blessed: Sarah M. Kimball." Utah Historical Quarterly 44 (Summer 1976):205-221.
Kimball, Sarah M. "Auto-Biography." Woman's Exponent 12 (Sept. 1, 1883):51.

MARY STOVALL RICHARDS

KIMBALL, SPENCER W.

Spencer Woolley Kimball (1895-1985), twelfth President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (1973-1985), came to the Presidency at the age of seventy-eight. Little new had been expected of his administration because of his age and long history of serious health problems, but his personal energy, broad vision, and openness to change produced a dynamic period consistent with the Church's growing awareness of itself as an increasingly international institution. Under his leadership, access to the TEMPLE and the PRIESTHOOD was extended, regardless of race; the number of missionaries greatly increased; administrative innovations significantly changed Church governance; and a burst of temple building occurred. His tenure proved to be one of the

Spencer W. Kimball (c. 1935) was a businessman and stake president in Safford, Arizona, when he was called as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles in 1943. Courtesy Edward L. Kimball.

until the women were thus organized" (Kimball, p. 51).

In light of her important early involvement with the Relief Society, it is not surprising that Sarah spent much of her life actively engaged in its work. After her 1851 move to Salt Lake City, where she taught school to support her family while her husband recovered from some serious financial losses, she was called in 1857 as president of the Fifteenth Ward Relief Society. She continued in that position until her death in 1898, also serving during twelve of those years as general secretary of the Relief Society under President Eliza R. Snow and later as a vice-president of the organization after its incorporation in 1892.

Sarah Kimball's tenure as ward Relief Society president was noted for its innovation and attention to the complete development of women. Her compassion and charity were legendary, and she organized the women of her ward to provide for the poor and needy. She directed their efforts to fund the first Relief Society hall, which functioned both as a store in which the women sold their items of home manufacture and as a meeting house devoted to secular and sacred education.

During her years of greatest involvement in the Relief Society, Sarah Kimball also became a major force in the suffrage fight as president of the Utah Woman Suffrage Association. Compared by one of her contemporaries to Susan B. Anthony, Sarah Kimball displayed the same courage and forthrightness in contending for women's rights. She argued not only for suffrage but for equal esteem of women with men. Further, many of her sermons spoke of the ultimate and divine equality of "the Father and Mother God" (Woman's Exponent 8 [1 July 1879]: 22; see also MOTHER IN HEAVEN).

Sarah Kimball died in Salt Lake City on December 1, 1898. A widow for thirty-five years following her husband's death in a steamship explosion while en route to a mission in the Sandwich Islands (Hawaii), she was survived by three sons and one adopted daughter.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Mulvey, Jill C. "The Liberal Shall Be Blessed: Sarah M. Kimball." Utah Historical Quarterly 44 (Summer 1976):205-221.
Kimball, Sarah M. "Auto-Biography." Woman's Exponent 12 (Sept. 1, 1883):51.

MARY STOVALL RICHARDS

KIMBALL, SPENCER W.

Spencer Woolley Kimball (1895-1985), twelfth President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (1973-1985), came to the Presidency at the age of seventy-eight. Little new had been expected of his administration because of his age and long history of serious health problems, but his personal energy, broad vision, and openness to change produced a dynamic period consistent with the Church's growing awareness of itself as an increasingly international institution. Under his leadership, access to the TEMPLE and the PRIESTHOOD was extended, regardless of race; the number of missionaries greatly increased; administrative innovations significantly changed Church governance; and a burst of temple building occurred. His tenure proved to be one of the most active periods in twentieth-century Church history.

Spencer W. Kimball (c. 1935) was a businessman and stake president in Safford, Arizona, when he was called as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles in 1943. Courtesy Edward L. Kimball.

Spencer Woolley Kimball was born March 28, 1895, in Salt Lake City, Utah. His father, Andrew Kimball, was a son of Heber C. Kimball, a counselor to President Brigham YOUNG, and his mother, Olive, was the daughter of Bishop Edwin D. Woolley, Brigham Young's business manager. At that time, Andrew was serving as president of the Indian Territory Mission in what is now Missouri and Oklahoma, overseeing missionary work by correspondence and periodic visits while supporting his family as a traveling dry goods salesman through Utah and southern Idaho.

When Spencer was three, his father received a call from the FIRST PRESIDENCY to move to Thatcher, a Mormon settlement in the Gila Valley of southeastern Arizona, to become president of the St. Joseph STAKE. Andrew earned his living by farming and business while he presided over several thousand Latter-day Saints in the valley and the vast surrounding area.

As a child, Spencer suffered from typhoid fever and facial paralysis and once nearly drowned. Four of his sisters died in childhood, and his mother died when he was eleven. After high school, he served as a missionary in the Central States Mission from 1914 to 1916. During his second year in the mission, he served in the St. Louis area as a supervisor of twenty-five missionaries, all older than himself.

In 1917 he attended the University of Arizona for one semester. He then received an induction notice for army service in World War I. Although expecting to leave any day, he married Camilla Eyring, a school teacher, on November 16, 1917. They eventually had four children: Spencer L., Olive Beth, Andrew E., and Edward L.

Delay in organizing the army contingent from his area resulted in his being deferred, and he obtained work in a bank. When the bank failed in 1923, wiping out the Kimballs' life savings, another bank hired him almost immediately as chief teller. In 1927 he left that bank and, with Joseph W. Greenhalgh, established an insurance and real estate agency in Safford, Arizona. Despite hard times caused by the Great Depression, Kimball said he would set up a peanut stand before he would become another person's employee again. Operating his own business gave him flexibility to attend to Church responsibilities and, with his wife, to engage in many community activities—PTA, library, elections, city council, Red Cross, Boy Scouts, the local college, and the organization of a radio station. He was selected as statewide leader of the Arizona Rotary Club in 1936.

In the Church, Spencer Kimball served as his father's stake clerk from 1917 until the latter's death in 1924. He then became counselor to the new STAKE PRESIDENT. In 1938, when the St. Joseph Stake was divided, he was called as president of the new Mount Graham Stake, extending 250 miles from Safford, Arizona, where he lived, to El Paso, Texas. As stake president, he supervised Church Welfare Services relief for victims of a major flood in Duncan, Arizona, in 1943.

On July 8, 1943, the First Presidency notified President Kimball of his call to fill a vacancy in the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. Though he had a slight premonition of the call, he felt shocked, knowing so well his own limitations. With assurance from Camilla and after a long personal struggle, he received spiritual confirmation several days later that the call came from God. He sold his business, moved his family to Salt Lake City, and at the October General Conference in 1943 received the sustaining vote of the Church's membership and was that same day ordained an APOSTLE by President Heber J. GRANT.

For thirty years Kimball served in the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles helping with Church administration, dealing with the personal problems of individuals, visiting stakes and missions, and teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. In 1946, President George Albert SMITH gave him the responsibility of working with Indians. Soon afterwards, he awoke sensing a horrible enemy, unseen but very real, trying to destroy him. After a struggle, he rebuked the evil spirit and obtained relief. He concluded that perhaps the work he had just begun presented a special threat to the powers of darkness. He publicized the suffering of Navajos during the harsh winter of 1947 and organized relief for them, but concluded that improved roads and education were the keys to long-term improvement. He helped establish the Church's INDIAN STUDENT PLACEMENT SERVICES, under which LDS families with access to good schools took Indian children from the reservations into their homes for the school year on a voluntary basis. The program grew in two decades from one child to nearly 5,000 a year, before improved schools among the Indians reduced the need. He preached vigorously against racial prejudice.

Among other assignments, Elder Kimball also headed the missionary committee. As he traveled about the Church he gave hundreds of twelve-year-old boys a dollar each to begin a mission saving fund. He visited all the missions of Europe in 1955, circled the world in 1960, supervised the Church in South America for four years—where he began missionary work among the Indians of the Andes—and then supervised the missions in Great Britain.

His experience in counseling hundreds of individuals about personal problems, especially sexual immorality, moved him to write The Miracle of Forgiveness, a book on the process of REPENTANCE that has been well received among Church members.

Elder Kimball suffered a heart attack in 1948 and throat cancer a few years later. Removal of most of his vocal cords left him with a distinctive weak, raspy voice. In 1972 successful open-heart surgery replaced an obstructed artery and a failing valve. Since he was then age seventy-seven, he considered foregoing the surgery, but President Harold B. LEE said his work was not finished, and he should have the operation.

On December 26, 1973, when President Lee died, Spencer W. Kimball succeeded him. Though already seventy-eight, President Kimball led energetically until 1979, when a cerebral hemorrhage required two brain surgeries. He recovered well, but in mid-1981 a third such operation left him seriously weakened. From that time until his death in 1985, he left active leadership to his counselors, especially President Gordon B. Hinckley. On November 5, 1985, at age ninety, President Kimball died, and was succeeded as Church President by Ezra Taft BENSON. Camilla, notable in her own right, survived to age ninety-two.

Spencer W. Kimball's remarkable resolution and purity of spirit grew from a solid religious background provided by parents and a strong community. In his early teens he met a challenge to read the entire Bible. At age fourteen he taught Sunday School. Given a believing heart, he was serious but not solemn. Short but strong and quick, he enjoyed sports, especially basketball. He played the piano, sang, and all his life was the center of fun and activity. Annually his classmates elected him president of his small high school class. His verbal humor turned to wordplay rather than anecdote, his quick wit usually directed against himself. He often joked about his being short.

Elder Kimball was deeply concerned for the Native American people. President George Albert Smith charged him to "watch after the Indians in all the world." Photograph, 1947, Deseret News.

He greatly missed his mother and always desired to be a credit to his parents. He hungered for approval. His capacity for hard work as a GENERAL AUTHORITY was legendary. He had the ability to nap for a few minutes and start afresh. Despite his serious illnesses, including typhoid fever, smallpox, two bouts of Bell's palsy, a heart attack and later heart failure, recurring throat cancer, three subdural hematomas, minor strokes, and scores of boils, he never slackened his efforts. He was relatively uncomplaining in suffering and ever grateful for medical help.

Because his formal education ended at marriage, President Kimball feared people might judge the Church negatively because of his inadequacies. He compensated by working doubly hard. In fact, he was well educated by his wide reading. His addresses were carefully prepared, with his own poetic eloquence. A humble man, he felt completely at home with common folk. He expressed appreciation and love easily and generously. There was no presumptuousness in him; he made no demands. He encouraged publication of a candid biography that portrayed him as an imperfect man striving to meet a divine challenge.

He and Camilla celebrated sixty-eight years of devoted marriage. She was well-spoken, forthright, highly intelligent, and a committed Christian. Ever supportive, she perfectly complemented President Kimball in his calling.

People sometimes perceived him as a strict moralist because of his seriousness in preaching, but he understood individuals' failings. He was the soul of kindness and unfailingly thoughtful. He carried on a massive correspondence, answering children's letters and writing to people he had counseled. He had great compassion for those struggling physically, socially, and spiritually. He expended huge energies trying to improve the conditions of the American Indians. As President and Prophet of the Church, he sought and obtained revelation that Church members of black ancestry could be full participants in all aspects of the Church. Few Church leaders called forth the affection that this unassuming man did.

Many changes resulted from the explosive Church growth during his twelve-year administration: from 630 stakes to about 1,500; from organization in 50 countries to 96; and from 3.3 million members to nearly 6 million. At the time of his death, nearly half the Church's membership had known no other president.

Many of the accomplishments of President Kimball's administration came from the effort to cope with this growth, and particularly the expansion into new areas of the globe. He organized the First Quorum of the Seventy (see SEVENTY: FIRST QUORUM) to enlarge the number of General Authorities and called as members of that quorum men from Europe, Asia, and South America. The world was divided into areas with a presidency made up of General Authorities in each area (see AREA, AREA PRESIDENCY). He held numerous regional conferences and solemn assemblies. All of this reflected an effort to give the members closer contact with the general Church leadership. To meet leadership needs, additional General Authorities were called for limited terms of approximately five years and others were given emeritus status.

An influential address in 1974 set out his vision of expanded missionary effort. The total number of full-time missionaries increased during President Kimball's administration by more than 50 percent, with many young women and older couples swelling the ranks. The fastest growth of the Church occurred in Latin America and Asia, but the Church also began organized activity in Communist-dominated countries and in sub-Saharan Africa. A center established in Jerusalem under the aegis of Brigham Young University stirred up protest by some orthodox Jews. The fifteen temples in operation when he became President grew to thirty-one around the world at his death, with eleven more under construction or announced. The use of computers to maintain records greatly increased the efficiency of temple work.

All of this activity exemplified his challenge to the Church to "lengthen your stride," and his personal motto was Do It!

Despite all this growth, in his preaching and policies President Kimball emphasized the return of the Church to the simple basics of good living and Church service. He articulated a threefold mission for the Church: to proclaim the gospel, to redeem the dead, and to perfect the Saints. He preached about improved family life, planting gardens, cleaning up yards, maintaining personal journals, and writing family history. Church meetings were compressed into three hours on Sunday to reduce the demands on members and to allow more time for family activity. Streamlined Church organization was approved for small groups. He urged Church members to give charitable service and backed up his preaching with Church relief for victims of a burst dam in Idaho, an earthquake in Mexico City, and famine in Ethiopia.

President Spencer W. Kimball, shown here with his wife Camilla Eyring Kimball at a 1980 Church area conference in Los Angeles, was the President of the Church from 1973 to 1985. Photographer: Jutti Marsh.

Ironically, this peace-loving and kindly man became involved in a number of contentious public issues. First Presidency statements addressed the issues of homosexuality, abortion, and pornography, evincing serious concern about the permissiveness of American society. The First Presidency opposed installation of an MX missile system in the United States and objected doubly because it was projected for the Utah-Nevada desert. Controversy arose over the role of Church historical writing and was accentuated by the purported discovery of significant historical documents by forger Mark Hofmann (see FORGERIES OF HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS). The First Presidency endorsed equal rights for women but opposed the Equal Rights Amendment as an improper means to a desirable end. Sensitivity to women's issues resulted in Churchwide meetings for women and for girls, a statuary park in Nauvoo as a monument to women, authorization for women to pray in all meetings, speaking by women leaders in general conference.

No event in the twentieth-century Church matched the excitement attending President Kimball's announcement of receiving a revelation on priesthood in 1978, ending more than a century of limitation on admission of Church members of black African ancestry (see BLACKS) to priesthood office and temple ordinances. The announcement made no doctrinal statement, but simply said that the Lord had indicated that the time for change had come. The change was implemented immediately, giving great impetus to missionary work in Africa. The announcement of this revelation was added to the Doctrine and Covenants as Official Declaration—2.

From a man of whom little more than a brief caretaker administration was expected, remarkable achievements came. President Spencer W. Kimball's energetic leadership and willingness to break new ground produced twelve years of unequaled growth and change in the modern Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BYU Studies 25 (Fall 1985):1–166 (issue devoted to articles about Spencer W. Kimball).

Kimball, Edward L., and Andrew F. Kimball, Jr. Spencer W. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1977.

———. The Story of Spencer W. Kimball: A Short Man, A Long Stride. Salt Lake City, 1985.

Kimball, Edward L. "The Administration of Spencer W. Kimball." Sunstone 11 (Mar. 1987):8–14.

Kimball, Spencer W. Faith Precedes the Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1972.

———. One Silent Sleepless Night. Salt Lake City, 1975.

———. The Miracle of Forgiveness. Salt Lake City, 1969.

———. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, Edward L. Kimball, ed. Salt Lake City, 1982.

Miner, Caroline E., and Edward L. Kimball. Camilla. Salt Lake City, 1980.

EDWARD L. KIMBALL

---

KINDERHOOK PLATES

In April 1843 some alleged New World antiquities were presented to Joseph SMITH for his opinion. The six 2 7/8-by-2 1/4-inch bell-shaped brass plates with strange engravings were reported to have been excaavated in Kinderhook, Illinois, about seventy miles south of NAUVOO (HC 5:372–79). They were shown to Smith because of his claim to have translated the Book of Mormon from ancient GOLD PLATES taken from a New York hill in 1827.

The Kinderhook plates created a stir in Nauvoo; articles appeared in the Church press, an illustrated handbill was published, and some Latter-day Saints even claimed Joseph Smith said he could and would translate them. No translation exists, however, nor does any further comment from him indicating that he considered the plates genuine. After his assassination in June 1844, the incident was largely forgotten. Decades later two of the alleged discoverers announced that the plates were a hoax; an attempt to discredit Smith. By then, however, the Church was headquartered in Utah and little attention was paid to these strange disclosures.

Interest was kindled again in 1920 when the Chicago Historical Society acquired what appeared to be one of the original Kinderhook plates. Later the Chicago plate was subjected to a number of nondestructive tests, with inconclusive results. Then in 1980, the Chicago Historical Society gave permission for destructive tests, which were done at Northwestern University. Examination by a scanning electron microscope, a scanning auger microprobe, and X-ray fluorescence analysis proved conclusively that the plate was one of the more time for family activity. Streamlined Church organization was approved for small groups. He urged Church members to give charitable service and backed up his preaching with Church relief for victims of a burst dam in Idaho, an earthquake in Mexico City, and famine in Ethiopia.

Ironically, this peace-loving and kindly man became involved in a number of contentious public issues. First Presidency statements addressed the issues of homosexuality, abortion, and pornography, evincing serious concern about the permissiveness of American society. The First Presidency opposed installation of an MX missile system in the United States and objected doubly because it was projected for the Utah-Nevada desert. Controversy arose over the role of Church historical writing and was accentuated by the purported discovery of significant historical documents by forger Mark Hofmann (see FORGERIES OF HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS). The First Presidency endorsed equal rights for women but opposed the Equal Rights Amendment as an improper means to a desirable end. Sensitivity to women's issues resulted in Churchwide meetings for women and for girls, a statuary park in Nauvoo as a monument to women, authorization for women to pray in all meetings, speaking by women leaders in general conference.

No event in the twentieth-century Church matched the excitement attending President Kimball's announcement of receiving a revelation on priesthood in 1978, ending more than a century of limitation on admission of Church members of black African ancestry (see BLACKS) to priesthood office and temple ordinances. The announcement made no doctrinal statement, but simply said that the Lord had indicated that the time for change had come. The change was implemented immediately, giving great impetus to missionary work in Africa. The announcement of this revelation was added to the Doctrine and Covenants as Official Declaration—2.

From a man of whom little more than a brief caretaker administration was expected, remarkable achievements came. President Spencer W. Kimball's energetic leadership and willingness to break new ground produced twelve years of unequaled growth and change in the modern Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BYU Studies 25 (Fall 1985):1–166 (issue devoted to articles about Spencer W. Kimball).

Kimball, Edward L., and Andrew F. Kimball, Jr. Spencer W. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1977.

———. The Story of Spencer W. Kimball: A Short Man, A Long Stride. Salt Lake City, 1985.

Kimball, Edward L. "The Administration of Spencer W. Kimball." Sunstone 11 (Mar. 1987):8–14.

Kimball, Spencer W. Faith Precedes the Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1972.

———. One Silent Sleepless Night. Salt Lake City, 1975.

———. The Miracle of Forgiveness. Salt Lake City, 1969.

———. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, Edward L. Kimball, ed. Salt Lake City, 1982.

Miner, Caroline E., and Edward L. Kimball. Camilla. Salt Lake City, 1980.

EDWARD L. KIMBALL

---

KINDERHOOK PLATES

In April 1843 some alleged New World antiquities were presented to Joseph SMITH for his opinion. The six 2 7/8-by-2 1/4-inch bell-shaped brass plates with strange engravings were reported to have been excaavated in Kinderhook, Illinois, about seventy miles south of NAUVOO (HC 5:372–79). They were shown to Smith because of his claim to have translated the Book of Mormon from ancient GOLD PLATES taken from a New York hill in 1827.

The Kinderhook plates created a stir in Nauvoo; articles appeared in the Church press, an illustrated handbill was published, and some Latter-day Saints even claimed Joseph Smith said he could and would translate them. No translation exists, however, nor does any further comment from him indicating that he considered the plates genuine. After his assassination in June 1844, the incident was largely forgotten. Decades later two of the alleged discoverers announced that the plates were a hoax; an attempt to discredit Smith. By then, however, the Church was headquartered in Utah and little attention was paid to these strange disclosures.

Interest was kindled again in 1920 when the Chicago Historical Society acquired what appeared to be one of the original Kinderhook plates. Later the Chicago plate was subjected to a number of nondestructive tests, with inconclusive results. Then in 1980, the Chicago Historical Society gave permission for destructive tests, which were done at Northwestern University. Examination by a scanning electron microscope, a scanning auger microprobe, and X-ray fluorescence analysis proved conclusively that the plate was one of the

One of the Kinderhook Plates, a forgery used to try to embarrass Joseph Smith. Decorative and Industrial Arts Department, Chicago Historical Society.

Kinderhook six; that it had been engraved, not etched; and that it was of nineteenth-century manufacture. There thus appears no reason to accept the Kinderhook plates as anything but a frontier hoax.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Stanley B. "Kinderhook Plates Brought to Joseph Smith Appear to be a Nineteenth-Century Hoax." Ensign 11 (Aug. 1981):66-74.
- Ricks, Welby W. "The Kinderhook Plates." IE 65 (Sept. 1962):636-37, 656, 658, 660.

STANLEY B. KIMBALL

KINGDOM OF GOD

IN HEAVEN

The kingdom of God in HEAVEN is the place where God lives. It is a CELESTIAL KINGDOM, organized under "the divinely ordained system of government and dominion in all matters, temporal and spiritual" (JC, p. 789). It is a purposeful state of existence, composed of intellectual and physical effort. It is a place of perfect order, ETERNAL PROGRESSION, everlasting family, and a fulness of joy.

The Savior taught his disciples to pray, "Our Father which art in heaven, . . . Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:9-10). The kingdom of God is set up on the earth to prepare for the kingdom of God in heaven (D&C 65:5-6). The Lord revealed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH that this earth shall be "sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory, . . . that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it forever and ever" (D&C 88:17-20). When this occurs, this glorified celestial earth will become the kingdom of heaven for the Saints who have lived upon it, and then shall the meek and the righteous inherit it (Matt. 5:5; D&C 88:25-26; 130:9; TPJS, p. 181).

The purpose of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is to help prepare its members to live forever in the kingdom of God in heaven.

GEORGE W. PACE

ON EARTH

The kingdom of God on earth exists wherever the priesthood of God is (TPJS, pp. 271-74). At present it is The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Church was established by divine authority to prepare its members to live forever in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM or kingdom of God in heaven. Its nature is ecclesiastical and nonpolitical. It "asserts no claim to temporal rule over nations; its scepter of power is that of the Holy Priesthood, to be used in the preaching of the gospel and in administering its ordinances for the salvation of mankind living and dead" (JC, p. 788).

The kingdom of God on the earth is the stone, spoken of by Daniel, that in the latter days would roll forth to fill the earth and never be destroyed (Dan. 2:34-45). It is the kingdom that the Savior prayed would come (Matt. 6:10), and he taught us to pray in like manner. In the MERIDIAN OF TIME Jesus set up the kingdom of God on earth, called and ordained apostles and prophets, bestowed the necessary priesthood authority (Matt. 16:19; John 15:16), and charged them with the responsibilities of the Church. After an APOSTASY removed that priesthood from earth, the authority to reestablish the kingdom of God on the earth was given to the

One of the Kinderhook Plates, a forgery used to try to embarrass Joseph Smith. Decorative and Industrial Arts Department, Chicago Historical Society.

Kinderhook six; that it had been engraved, not etched; and that it was of nineteenth-century manufacture. There thus appears no reason to accept the Kinderhook plates as anything but a frontier hoax.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Stanley B. "Kinderhook Plates Brought to Joseph Smith Appear to be a Nineteenth-Century Hoax." Ensign 11 (Aug. 1981):66-74.
- Ricks, Welby W. "The Kinderhook Plates." IE 65 (Sept. 1962):636-37, 656, 658, 660.

STANLEY B. KIMBALL

KINGDOM OF GOD

IN HEAVEN

The kingdom of God in HEAVEN is the place where God lives. It is a CELESTIAL KINGDOM, organized under "the divinely ordained system of government and dominion in all matters, temporal and spiritual" (JC, p. 789). It is a purposeful state of existence, composed of intellectual and physical effort. It is a place of perfect order, ETERNAL PROGRESSION, everlasting family, and a fulness of joy.

The Savior taught his disciples to pray, "Our Father which art in heaven, . . . Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:9-10). The kingdom of God is set up on the earth to prepare for the kingdom of God in heaven (D&C 65:5-6). The Lord revealed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH that this earth shall be "sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory, . . . that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it forever and ever" (D&C 88:17-20). When this occurs, this glorified celestial earth will become the kingdom of heaven for the Saints who have lived upon it, and then shall the meek and the righteous inherit it (Matt. 5:5; D&C 88:25-26; 130:9; TPJS, p. 181).

The purpose of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is to help prepare its members to live forever in the kingdom of God in heaven.

GEORGE W. PACE

ON EARTH

The kingdom of God on earth exists wherever the priesthood of God is (TPJS, pp. 271-74). At present it is The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Church was established by divine authority to prepare its members to live forever in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM or kingdom of God in heaven. Its nature is ecclesiastical and nonpolitical. It "asserts no claim to temporal rule over nations; its scepter of power is that of the Holy Priesthood, to be used in the preaching of the gospel and in administering its ordinances for the salvation of mankind living and dead" (JC, p. 788).

The kingdom of God on the earth is the stone, spoken of by Daniel, that in the latter days would roll forth to fill the earth and never be destroyed (Dan. 2:34-45). It is the kingdom that the Savior prayed would come (Matt. 6:10), and he taught us to pray in like manner. In the MERIDIAN OF TIME Jesus set up the kingdom of God on earth, called and ordained apostles and prophets, bestowed the necessary priesthood authority (Matt. 16:19; John 15:16), and charged them with the responsibilities of the Church. After an APOSTASY removed that priesthood from earth, the authority to reestablish the kingdom of God on the earth was given to the

Prophet Joseph Smith by heavenly messengers (see RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST). Through Joseph Smith the Lord said:

The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth. . . . Call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth, that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth. Wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come [D&C 65:2, 5–6].

GEORGE W. PACE

KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE

The King Follett Discourse is the name given to an address the Prophet Joseph SMITH delivered in Nauvoo, Illinois, on April 7, 1844, at a general conference of the Church. It was a commemorative oration for a Church member named King Follett, who had died in an accident on March 9, 1844. The discourse may be one of the Prophet's greatest sermons because of its comprehensive doctrinal teachings. It was his last general conference address, delivered less than three months before he was martyred. Key doctrinal topics in the sermon include the character of God, man's potential to progress in God's likeness, the Creation, and the tie between the living and their progenitors.

Joseph Smith delivered the sermon to several thousand people in a grove west of the Nauvoo Temple in a natural amphitheater, where benches and a rostrum had been placed. He spoke for two hours and fifteen minutes. Four experienced scribes took synoptic notes: Willard Richards, Wilford WOODRUFF, William Clayton, and Thomas Bullock.

The spring of 1844 was a time of tension and turmoil in the Prophet's life. On the one hand, the Church was flourishing in Nauvoo and abroad, construction of the Nauvoo Temple was proceeding apace, and generally men and women were serving in the Church with dedication and effectiveness. On the other hand, apostates, political factions in Illinois and Missouri, and other groups were conspiring against Joseph Smith.

Of the kinship between God and man, Joseph Smith taught, "If men do not comprehend the character of God, they do not comprehend themselves" (TPJS, p. 343). "It is the first principle of the Gospel to know for a certainty the Character of God, and to know that we may converse with him as one man converses with another" (TPJS, p. 345). Echoing his FIRST VISION, the Prophet taught what he called the "great secret": "If the veil were rent today, and . . . God . . . [were] to make himself visible, . . . if you were to see him today, you would see him like a man in form—like yourselves in all the person, image, and very form as a man" (TPJS, p. 345).

Creation, he taught, was not by mere fiat or ex nihilo. God's role was to bring harmony to primal, unorganized elements and to "institute laws" whereby weaker INTELLIGENCES might have the privilege of advancing like himself (TPJS, p. 354).

Of man's potential, the Prophet said that even as God is eternal and self-existent, so the intelligence of man is also eternal. The Father has become what he is through eternities of progress. Christ, who did nothing but what he had seen the Father do (cf. John 5:19), followed identical paths and patterns. Since all mankind have a divine Father, they are potential "heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ" (TPJS, pp. 346–47; cf. Romans 8:17). In this sense, all the children of God are embryonic gods or goddesses. Obedience to the fulness of the gospel is the perfecting process through which they may go "from one small degree to another, and from a small capacity to a great one; from grace to grace, from exaltation to exaltation . . . until [they] arrive at the station of a God" (TPJS, pp. 346–47).

On the link between the living and their progenitors, the Prophet asked, "Is there nothing to be done?—no preparation—no salvation for our fathers and friends who have died without having had the opportunity to obey the decrees of the Son of Man?" (TPJS, p. 355). He answered, "God hath made a provision that every spirit in the eternal world can be . . . saved unless he has committed [the] unpardonable sin" (TPJS, p. 357). He explained these provisions as they apply both in mortality and in the world beyond. To the mourners, the Prophet testified, "We have reason to have the greatest hope and consolations for our dead of any people on the earth; for we have seen them walk worthily in our midst, and seen them sink asleep in the arms of Jesus; and those who have died in the

Prophet Joseph Smith by heavenly messengers (see RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST). Through Joseph Smith the Lord said:

The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth. . . . Call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth, that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth. Wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come [D&C 65:2, 5–6].

GEORGE W. PACE

KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE

The King Follett Discourse is the name given to an address the Prophet Joseph SMITH delivered in Nauvoo, Illinois, on April 7, 1844, at a general conference of the Church. It was a commemorative oration for a Church member named King Follett, who had died in an accident on March 9, 1844. The discourse may be one of the Prophet's greatest sermons because of its comprehensive doctrinal teachings. It was his last general conference address, delivered less than three months before he was martyred. Key doctrinal topics in the sermon include the character of God, man's potential to progress in God's likeness, the Creation, and the tie between the living and their progenitors.

Joseph Smith delivered the sermon to several thousand people in a grove west of the Nauvoo Temple in a natural amphitheater, where benches and a rostrum had been placed. He spoke for two hours and fifteen minutes. Four experienced scribes took synoptic notes: Willard Richards, Wilford WOODRUFF, William Clayton, and Thomas Bullock.

The spring of 1844 was a time of tension and turmoil in the Prophet's life. On the one hand, the Church was flourishing in Nauvoo and abroad, construction of the Nauvoo Temple was proceeding apace, and generally men and women were serving in the Church with dedication and effectiveness. On the other hand, apostates, political factions in Illinois and Missouri, and other groups were conspiring against Joseph Smith.

Of the kinship between God and man, Joseph Smith taught, "If men do not comprehend the character of God, they do not comprehend themselves" (TPJS, p. 343). "It is the first principle of the Gospel to know for a certainty the Character of God, and to know that we may converse with him as one man converses with another" (TPJS, p. 345). Echoing his FIRST VISION, the Prophet taught what he called the "great secret": "If the veil were rent today, and . . . God . . . [were] to make himself visible, . . . if you were to see him today, you would see him like a man in form—like yourselves in all the person, image, and very form as a man" (TPJS, p. 345).

Creation, he taught, was not by mere fiat or ex nihilo. God's role was to bring harmony to primal, unorganized elements and to "institute laws" whereby weaker INTELLIGENCES might have the privilege of advancing like himself (TPJS, p. 354).

Of man's potential, the Prophet said that even as God is eternal and self-existent, so the intelligence of man is also eternal. The Father has become what he is through eternities of progress. Christ, who did nothing but what he had seen the Father do (cf. John 5:19), followed identical paths and patterns. Since all mankind have a divine Father, they are potential "heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ" (TPJS, pp. 346–47; cf. Romans 8:17). In this sense, all the children of God are embryonic gods or goddesses. Obedience to the fulness of the gospel is the perfecting process through which they may go "from one small degree to another, and from a small capacity to a great one; from grace to grace, from exaltation to exaltation . . . until [they] arrive at the station of a God" (TPJS, pp. 346–47).

On the link between the living and their progenitors, the Prophet asked, "Is there nothing to be done?—no preparation—no salvation for our fathers and friends who have died without having had the opportunity to obey the decrees of the Son of Man?" (TPJS, p. 355). He answered, "God hath made a provision that every spirit in the eternal world can be . . . saved unless he has committed [the] unpardonable sin" (TPJS, p. 357). He explained these provisions as they apply both in mortality and in the world beyond. To the mourners, the Prophet testified, "We have reason to have the greatest hope and consolations for our dead of any people on the earth; for we have seen them walk worthily in our midst, and seen them sink asleep in the arms of Jesus; and those who have died in the faith are now in the celestial kingdom of God" (TPJS, p. 359).

The Prophet indicated some of his concerns: threats on his life, his love of the Saints, the loneliness of leadership ("You never knew my heart"), the wonderment he felt in retrospect ("I don't blame anyone for not believing my history. If I had not experienced what I have, I could not have believed it myself" [TPJS, p. 361]). He finished with a plea for peace and invoked God's blessing on the assembly.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Donald Q. "The King Follett Discourse: Joseph Smith's Greatest Sermon in Historical Perspective." BYU Studies 18 (Winter 1978):179–92.

———, and Larry E. Dahl, eds. The Prophet Joseph Smith's King Follett Discourse: A Six-Column Comparison of Original Notes and Amalgamation. Provo, Utah, 1983.

Hale, Van. "The Doctrinal Impact of the King Follett Discourse." BYU Studies 18 (Winter 1978):209–225.

Larson, Stanley. "The King Follett Discourse: A Newly Amalgamated Text." BYU Studies 18 (Winter 1978):193–208.

DONALD Q. CANNON

---

KING JAMES VERSION

See: Bible: King James Version

---

KIRTLAND ECONOMY

[This article reports the main facts and points of interest regarding the economic events in Kirtland in the 1830s and the significance of this historical development in the overall growth of the Church.]

In early 1830, Kirtland, Ohio, was a small rural trading center of approximately 1,000 people, none of whom was LDS (see HISTORY OF THE CHURCH: c. 1831–1844). Six years later, it was a bustling community of 3,000, with commercial, mercantile, and small manufacturing firms, and a temple serving the 2,000 Latter-day Saints in the town. Despite its rapid growth and apparent prosperity, within another two years Joseph SMITH departed Kirtland, leaving behind disgruntled creditors, warrants for his arrest, a failed banking experiment, and a divided Mormon population preparing to leave the temple and their homes. By 1840, only 200 Latter-day Saints remained in Kirtland.

The study of the Kirtland economy between 1830 and 1840 continues to generate controversy among historians. One question has to do with the precipitous increases in the land prices between 1832 and 1837. Were they the result of "reckless land speculation" by Joseph Smith and other Church leaders? The average price per acre of land sold in Kirtland rose from approximately $7 in 1832 to $44 in 1837, only to fall back to $17.50 in 1839. These dramatic changes, however, were related to movements in the general price level, trends in the value of land in neighboring communities, and the impact of population growth. Probably between 25 and 40 percent of the change in the nominal price of land was associated with generalized inflation during this period. As much as 84 percent of the remaining change in the real price of land was correlated with the rise and fall in population. Joseph Smith was primarily responsible for the call to gather to Kirtland; naturally, the newcomers needed land. An examination of land transactions reveals nothing in the buying, selling, or subdividing of land that was unusual for a frontier community.

Another question has to do with Joseph Smith's debts. Was his use of credit "irresponsible"? Early studies of the economic difficulties in Kirtland emphasized debts and ignored assets. Actually, Joseph Smith's potential cumulative indebtedness during this period, including all purchases of land and merchandise, totaled a little over $100,000, considerably below earlier estimates by some historians. At least $60,000 of this debt was eventually settled, and probably much more, since the remainder produced no lawsuits and primarily represented debt for land, which would likely have been paid for or the land reclaimed. At the same time, because of the increase in prices, President Smith and his associates held almost $60,000 equity in land. In the environment of rapid population growth from 1830 to 1837, many New York, Buffalo, and Cleveland merchants willingly extended Joseph Smith credit. His position of leadership in an expanding community, the value of his current assets, and the expectation of continued growth made these transactions reasonable at the time.

The financial problems of Church leaders arose from two circumstances. First, their debts were largely in the form of 90-to-180-day notes, while their assets were primarily in nonliquid land. Second, Joseph Smith found it very difficult to faith are now in the celestial kingdom of God" (TPJS, p. 359).

The Prophet indicated some of his concerns: threats on his life, his love of the Saints, the loneliness of leadership ("You never knew my heart"), the wonderment he felt in retrospect ("I don't blame anyone for not believing my history. If I had not experienced what I have, I could not have believed it myself" [TPJS, p. 361]). He finished with a plea for peace and invoked God's blessing on the assembly.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Donald Q. "The King Follett Discourse: Joseph Smith's Greatest Sermon in Historical Perspective." BYU Studies 18 (Winter 1978):179–92.

———, and Larry E. Dahl, eds. The Prophet Joseph Smith's King Follett Discourse: A Six-Column Comparison of Original Notes and Amalgamation. Provo, Utah, 1983.

Hale, Van. "The Doctrinal Impact of the King Follett Discourse." BYU Studies 18 (Winter 1978):209–225.

Larson, Stanley. "The King Follett Discourse: A Newly Amalgamated Text." BYU Studies 18 (Winter 1978):193–208.

DONALD Q. CANNON

---

KING JAMES VERSION

See: Bible: King James Version

---

KIRTLAND ECONOMY

[This article reports the main facts and points of interest regarding the economic events in Kirtland in the 1830s and the significance of this historical development in the overall growth of the Church.]

In early 1830, Kirtland, Ohio, was a small rural trading center of approximately 1,000 people, none of whom was LDS (see HISTORY OF THE CHURCH: C. 1831–1844). Six years later, it was a bustling community of 3,000, with commercial, mercantile, and small manufacturing firms, and a temple serving the 2,000 Latter-day Saints in the town. Despite its rapid growth and apparent prosperity, within another two years Joseph SMITH departed Kirtland, leaving behind disgruntled creditors, warrants for his arrest, a failed banking experiment, and a divided Mormon population preparing to leave the temple and their homes. By 1840, only 200 Latter-day Saints remained in Kirtland.

The study of the Kirtland economy between 1830 and 1840 continues to generate controversy among historians. One question has to do with the precipitous increases in the land prices between 1832 and 1837. Were they the result of "reckless land speculation" by Joseph Smith and other Church leaders? The average price per acre of land sold in Kirtland rose from approximately $7 in 1832 to $44 in 1837, only to fall back to $17.50 in 1839. These dramatic changes, however, were related to movements in the general price level, trends in the value of land in neighboring communities, and the impact of population growth. Probably between 25 and 40 percent of the change in the nominal price of land was associated with generalized inflation during this period. As much as 84 percent of the remaining change in the real price of land was correlated with the rise and fall in population. Joseph Smith was primarily responsible for the call to gather to Kirtland; naturally, the newcomers needed land. An examination of land transactions reveals nothing in the buying, selling, or subdividing of land that was unusual for a frontier community.

Another question has to do with Joseph Smith's debts. Was his use of credit "irresponsible"? Early studies of the economic difficulties in Kirtland emphasized debts and ignored assets. Actually, Joseph Smith's potential cumulative indebtedness during this period, including all purchases of land and merchandise, totaled a little over $100,000, considerably below earlier estimates by some historians. At least $60,000 of this debt was eventually settled, and probably much more, since the remainder produced no lawsuits and primarily represented debt for land, which would likely have been paid for or the land reclaimed. At the same time, because of the increase in prices, President Smith and his associates held almost $60,000 equity in land. In the environment of rapid population growth from 1830 to 1837, many New York, Buffalo, and Cleveland merchants willingly extended Joseph Smith credit. His position of leadership in an expanding community, the value of his current assets, and the expectation of continued growth made these transactions reasonable at the time.

The financial problems of Church leaders arose from two circumstances. First, their debts were largely in the form of 90-to-180-day notes, while their assets were primarily in nonliquid land. Second, Joseph Smith found it very difficult to demand cash from the sale of land or goods to his followers, many of whom were impoverished by the costly migration to Kirtland. The resulting cash-flow problem, common in frontier communities, could have been alleviated by a bank with the capacity to transfer long-term assets into short-term liquidity.

In the fall of 1836, Joseph Smith and his associates drew up a charter for such a bank, the Kirtland Safety Society. The question of fraud has long hovered over the Society. Its timing was unfortunate. During 1836 and 1837, the Ohio legislature, dominated by the hard-money wing of the Democratic party, refused all applications for bank charters. Within a week of realizing the hopelessness of their request for a charter, Church leaders, probably with legal counsel judging from the language of the document, formed a joint stock company and began issuing notes sometimes stamped "anti-banking" notes.

Because an 1816 Ohio law forbade the issuance of unauthorized money, some have thought that the Kirtland Safety Society notes were illegal. But the definition of what constituted "unauthorized" money remained controversial as late as 1873. Several other commercial institutions in Ohio issued notes or scrip, including the Ohio Railroad Company, which issued almost $100,000 of scrip during the same year as the Kirtland Safety Society. Whigs, soft-money Democrats, and several newspapers encouraged such action in opposition to what they considered the unlawful and unconstitutional behavior of the hard-money majority in the legislature.

Heavy demand for redemption of the Kirtland Safety Society's notes led to the suspension of specie payments within its first month of operation. Thereafter, the notes were backed by land values, rather than specie, and almost immediately its notes circulated at a heavy discount. It was further buffeted by the nationwide banking panic of May 1837, when all Ohio banks suspended specie payment. The tenacious Kirtland bank, or anti-bank, continued its faltering operations until November, when it closed its doors for the last time.

The Kirtland Safety Society's first note issue during January 1837 was probably not for more than $15,000. Subsequent note issues may have totaled as much as $85,000 in face value, but the increasing discounts against these issues probably kept the real value of outstanding notes at about the January level or lower. At the time of the initial issue, paid-in subscriptions were also approximately $15,000. That amount, plus the unusual loyalty of the LDS community and a $3,000 loan from the Bank of Geauga, might have provided resources sufficient for a legally chartered bank in Kirtland to experience modest success.

Whatever might have been, the institution did not have a bank charter and did not survive, thereby adding substantially to Joseph Smith's financial woes. He bought more stock, paid more per share than 85 percent of the other investors, and continued to add his own money to the assets of the bank as late as April 1837, well after it had suspended specie payments. After the banking panic of May, Joseph Smith transferred his interests in the bank and other financial assets to Oliver Granger and Jared Carter, who continued to attempt to settle Joseph's financial obligations as late as 1843.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Adams, Dale W. "Chartering the Kirtland Bank." BYU Studies 23 (Fall 1983):467-82.
- Fielding, R. Kent. "The Mormon Economy in Kirtland, Ohio." Utah Historical Quarterly 27 (Oct. 1959):331-56.
- Hill, Marvin S.; C. Keith Rooker; and Larry T. Wimmer. "The Kirtland Economy Revisited: A Market Critique of Sectarian Economies." BYU Studies 17 (Summer 1977):391-475.
- Parkin, Max H. "Conflict at Kirtland: A Study of the Nature and Causes of External and Internal Conflict of the Mormons in Ohio Between 1830 and 1838." M.A. thesis, Brigham Young University, 1966.
- Sampson, D. Paul, and Larry T. Wimmer. "The Kirtland Safety Society: The Stock Ledger Book and the Bank Failure." BYU Studies 12 (Summer 1972):427-36.

LARRY T. WIMMER

---

KIRTLAND, OHIO

[This entry presents the history of LDS settlement in Kirtland and gives an idea of what it would have been like to have lived among the Saints in this community in the 1830s.]

During most of the 1830s there were two gathering places for Latter-day Saints, one in western Missouri and the other in northeastern Ohio. Although more members gathered to the Missouri frontier, Kirtland, Ohio, was the principal administrative headquarters of the Church and the major base for directing missionary work from 1831 until early 1838.

demand cash from the sale of land or goods to his followers, many of whom were impoverished by the costly migration to Kirtland. The resulting cash-flow problem, common in frontier communities, could have been alleviated by a bank with the capacity to transfer long-term assets into short-term liquidity.

In the fall of 1836, Joseph Smith and his associates drew up a charter for such a bank, the Kirtland Safety Society. The question of fraud has long hovered over the Society. Its timing was unfortunate. During 1836 and 1837, the Ohio legislature, dominated by the hard-money wing of the Democratic party, refused all applications for bank charters. Within a week of realizing the hopelessness of their request for a charter, Church leaders, probably with legal counsel judging from the language of the document, formed a joint stock company and began issuing notes sometimes stamped "anti-banking" notes.

Because an 1816 Ohio law forbade the issuance of unauthorized money, some have thought that the Kirtland Safety Society notes were illegal. But the definition of what constituted "unauthorized" money remained controversial as late as 1873. Several other commercial institutions in Ohio issued notes or scrip, including the Ohio Railroad Company, which issued almost $100,000 of scrip during the same year as the Kirtland Safety Society. Whigs, soft-money Democrats, and several newspapers encouraged such action in opposition to what they considered the unlawful and unconstitutional behavior of the hard-money majority in the legislature.

Heavy demand for redemption of the Kirtland Safety Society's notes led to the suspension of specie payments within its first month of operation. Thereafter, the notes were backed by land values, rather than specie, and almost immediately its notes circulated at a heavy discount. It was further buffeted by the nationwide banking panic of May 1837, when all Ohio banks suspended specie payment. The tenacious Kirtland bank, or anti-bank, continued its faltering operations until November, when it closed its doors for the last time.

The Kirtland Safety Society's first note issue during January 1837 was probably not for more than $15,000. Subsequent note issues may have totaled as much as $85,000 in face value, but the increasing discounts against these issues probably kept the real value of outstanding notes at about the January level or lower. At the time of the initial issue, paid-in subscriptions were also approximately $15,000. That amount, plus the unusual loyalty of the LDS community and a $3,000 loan from the Bank of Geauga, might have provided resources sufficient for a legally chartered bank in Kirtland to experience modest success.

Whatever might have been, the institution did not have a bank charter and did not survive, thereby adding substantially to Joseph Smith's financial woes. He bought more stock, paid more per share than 85 percent of the other investors, and continued to add his own money to the assets of the bank as late as April 1837, well after it had suspended specie payments. After the banking panic of May, Joseph Smith transferred his interests in the bank and other financial assets to Oliver Granger and Jared Carter, who continued to attempt to settle Joseph's financial obligations as late as 1843.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Adams, Dale W. "Chartering the Kirtland Bank." BYU Studies 23 (Fall 1983):467-82.
- Fielding, R. Kent. "The Mormon Economy in Kirtland, Ohio." Utah Historical Quarterly 27 (Oct. 1959):331-56.
- Hill, Marvin S.; C. Keith Rooker; and Larry T. Wimmer. "The Kirtland Economy Revisited: A Market Critique of Sectarian Economies." BYU Studies 17 (Summer 1977):391-475.
- Parkin, Max H. "Conflict at Kirtland: A Study of the Nature and Causes of External and Internal Conflict of the Mormons in Ohio Between 1830 and 1838." M.A. thesis, Brigham Young University, 1966.
- Sampson, D. Paul, and Larry T. Wimmer. "The Kirtland Safety Society: The Stock Ledger Book and the Bank Failure." BYU Studies 12 (Summer 1972):427-36.

LARRY T. WIMMER

---

KIRTLAND, OHIO

[This entry presents the history of LDS settlement in Kirtland and gives an idea of what it would have been like to have lived among the Saints in this community in the 1830s.]

During most of the 1830s there were two gathering places for Latter-day Saints, one in western Missouri and the other in northeastern Ohio. Although more members gathered to the Missouri frontier, Kirtland, Ohio, was the principal administrative headquarters of the Church and the major base for directing missionary work from 1831 until early 1838.

BYU Geography Department

Latter-day Saint growth in northeastern Ohio began not long after the Church was organized in 1830. The Church was introduced into Ohio in late October 1830 and within a month gained 135 new members, of whom about 35 lived in Kirtland township (see LAMANITE MISSION). Joseph SMITH and his family moved there early in 1831, and in the spring and early summer of that year, other Latter-day Saints, primarily from Ohio and New York, followed. Although the Prophet made two trips to Missouri and lived for a time in nearby Hiram, Ohio, from the summer of 1832 until 1838 the Kirtland area was his primary residence.

The larger part of the first wave of Latter-day Saint settlers in Kirtland moved to Missouri before the end of 1831. The major growth of the LDS population in Kirtland began in 1833. The number rose from approximately 100 in that year to 2,000 in 1838. During the decade preceding the Mormon immigration, the population of the township doubled, increasing from 481 in 1820 to 1,018 in 1830. During the ensuing seven years, primarily as a result of immigration of Latter-day Saints, the population tripled.

Describing conditions in the Kirtland community in the mid-1830s, one contemporary wrote, "They came, men, women, and children, in every conceivable manner, some with horses, oxen, and vehicles rough and rude, while others had walked all or part of the distance. The future 'City of the Saints' appeared like one besieged. Every available house, shop, hut, or barn was filled to its utmost capacity. Even boxes were roughly extemporized and used for shelter until something more permanent could be secured" (History of Geauga and Lake Counties, Ohio, p. 248).

The sudden influx of Latter-day Saints to Kirtland had a major impact on the community. One of the visible changes was the increase of small temporary dwellings. Although log and small frame houses dotted the landscape during the first two decades of colonization, larger and more permanent frame and brick structures were erected before 1830. Squatters or renters, comprising half of the population in 1830, lived in small frame houses. As Mormon immigration increased, however, clusters of small unadorned cabins, a throwback to the dwellings of the earliest settlers, appeared primarily in the northwestern section of the township.

Most Latter-day Saints were poorer than the older settlers, partly because the Mormons were recent immigrants. Prior to joining the Church, most members were not transients, nor were they from the lowest economic classes in the East. Many, however, lost economic ground by migrating to Kirtland. Some sold farms in New York or New England for less than the market value, and many left equipment in the East because of the expense of transporting it. All spent a portion of the money derived from such sales on moving their families and supplies westward. The few Saints who moved from Jackson County, Missouri, to Kirtland were also in a difficult economic situation. In the course of their expulsion from that county in 1833, their homes were burned and their property was stolen. On arrival in Kirtland the new settlers faced inflated land values. Since the price of land increased in relation to the growth of population, most newcomers (both Mormon and non-Mormon) could not afford to buy sufficient land to support their families.

After arriving in Kirtland, Latter-day Saints fell further behind economically as a result of contributing labor and scarce resources to Church projects. The Church erected a variety of buildings in Kirtland between the east branch of the Chagrin River and the eastern portion of a plateau that overlooked the river. The principal structure was the KIRTLAND TEMPLE. For almost three years, between the summer of 1833 and the spring of 1836, nearly all members united in building the three-story "House of the Lord" to be used as a meetinghouse and school. While women and girls were carrying on their usual household duties, preparing food for their families, caring for young children, knitting and making clothes, and working in kitchen gardens, they also provided food and clothing for temple workers and drove supply wagons to the temple site. Meanwhile, men and boys worked on farms, cut wood for winter, tanned hides, hunted game, and fished, in addition to hauling stone to the temple site. They also cut, milled, and transported lumber for the construction.

While working on the temple, Latter-day Saints constructed a smaller building to the west Cemetery across the street to the north of the Kirtland Temple (1907). Louisa and Thaddeus (the twins born to Joseph and Emma Smith), as well as Jerusha Smith (Hyrum's wife) and Mary Duty Smith (grandmother of the Prophet), are buried in this cemetery. Photographer: George E. Anderson.

that was used as a school, printing establishment, and office building. They also erected a sawmill to assist with their building program, established a tannery and ashery, and constructed shops and stores that provided settlers with merchandise and employment opportunities.

Along with all these sacrifices, many of the men postponed improvement of their standard of living to serve on MISSIONS without pay. During the 1830s, traveling elders preached the gospel throughout the United States and eastern Canada, and Heber C. Kimball led a group of missionaries (many of them from Kirtland) to England in 1837.

While constructing the temple and supporting missionary work, the Kirtland Saints found time for school. Although growing out of their New England culture and impulses in the Ohio environment, the Saints' educational efforts received their greatest impetus from revelations recorded in Kirtland by Joseph Smith. While living in an apartment above the Newel K. WHITNEY STORE, the Prophet received a revelation that declared, "Teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning, even by study and also by faith" (D&C 88:118; cf. D&C 88:78-79, 93:36).

As a result of this and other divine commands, Joseph Smith in 1833 invited about twenty elders to attend a SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS. Following the initial sessions of that school, Church leaders and members established a school of the elders, a grammar school, and various private schools, in which adults and youth studied theology, philosophy, government, literature, history, geography, English grammar, penmanship, arithmetic, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. In 1836 more than one hundred Latter-day Saints commenced studying Hebrew. Women attended and taught school in Kirtland, and studied various subjects with their husbands.

To assist the Latter-day Saints in their educational pursuits and to promote missionary work, Church leaders sponsored a major publishing program in Kirtland beginning in 1834. Within four years, the Saints published a periodical, the Latter-day Saints' Messenger and Advocate; a secular and political paper, Northern Times; a hymnal (1835); a second edition of the Book of Mormon; and a collection of 102 sections of revelations recorded by Joseph Smith in the first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants (1835), which included the "Lectures on Faith." Historical and doctrinal information that is now included in the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST) and portions of the Pearl of Great Price (book of Moses) were also printed in Missouri and Kirtland during the early 1830s.

In addition to working long hours and studying, Latter-day Saints participated in regular worship services. The first day of the week (Sunday) was observed as the Lord's Day, during which members rested from their daily labors. Meetings were initially held in homes and schools. Following the construction of the Kirtland Temple, meetings were also held there. By the mid-1830s a pattern of Sunday worship had been established. Members attended morning and afternoon services during which they sang, prayed, and listened to sermons delivered by leaders and other members. They generally partook of the Lord's Supper not only during the afternoon meetings but also sometimes during the week in their homes. Confirmations of new members and marriages were also performed on Sunday in the temple and in homes on other days. On the first Thursday of each month, a FAST AND TESTIMONY MEETING was held in the temple, and many of these meetings continued from 10:00 A.M. to 4:00 P.M., with members singing, praying, bearing testimonies, and teaching one another.

During this decade Church members also participated in an unusual pentecostal season. Shortly before and after the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, many Latter-day Saints wrote of seeing visions, speaking in tongues, and receiving the spirit of prophecy. During a series of meetings held between late January and early May 1836, several Latter-day Saints declared that they saw the Savior, and many claimed to have communed with other heavenly messengers. Many also testified that they sang accompanied by a choir of heavenly personages.

Along with their other activities, Latter-day Saints found time for recreation. Hunting, fishing, swimming, sleighing, skating, wrestling, horseback riding, and riding in carriages were among the most popular leisure pursuits. Although children had few toys, they played with balls, marbles, whistles, and homemade dolls (Backman, pp. 275–83).

Some of the non-Mormon residents considered the intrusion of Latter-day Saints into the community a threat to their traditional pattern of living. Some complained that the Mormon practice of living in harmony with revelations recorded by a prophet was hostile to the American spirit of democracy. Residents not only rejected LDS beliefs regarding visions, revelations, and the restoration but also claimed that the Latter-day Saints had increased the poverty of the community and were a political and economic threat. The political competition reached a peak in 1837 when Latter-day Saints were elected to all local township offices except for the office of constable. Prior to that year, only four Latter-day Saints had been elected to a major office, and there had been a tendency for the citizens to reelect the earliest settlers. In addition to gaining control of the local government, Latter-day Saints transformed the township's voting pattern from Whig to Democratic. Since Kirtland was located in a Whig section of Ohio and all townships in Geauga County in the mid-1830s, except Kirtland, supported that party, Whigs in northeastern Ohio united in opposition to the Mormons. Complaints and charges escalated into threats and mob action.

Early in 1838, amid intensifying pressures from outside the Church and apostasy within, accentuated by the demise of the Kirtland Safety Society and the Panic of 1837 (see KIRTLAND ECONOMY), the exodus of Latter-day Saints from Kirtland and vicinity began. Joseph Smith, Sidney Ten-dollar note issued by the Kirtland Safety Society, March 1837, signed by Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon. Three months later Joseph Smith disassociated himself from this private financial institution, which failed to gain public confidence. It closed in 1837. Some of these notes were later countersigned and validated by Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball in Salt Lake City. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

RIGDON, and other leaders fled from mobs in January. Other members gradually followed.

In most instances small groups of less than fifty traveled westward. On July 5, 1838, however, more than 500 members left in a stream of fifty-nine wagons—with twenty-seven tents, ninety-seven horses, twenty-two oxen, sixty-nine cows, and one bull. As this long wagon train, known as Kirtland Camp, moved across the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, spectators gathered to watch the sight. Some gave encouragement, while others jeered and threatened violence. Because of financial problems, many in this group were asked by the leaders to leave the camp, so that only a portion of them reached the Missouri frontier.

By mid-July 1838, more than 1,600 Latter-day Saints in the Kirtland area had reluctantly left the temple, vacated their homes, and headed westward. Only a few Latter-day Saints remained in a neighborhood of predominantly empty cabins, and most of these people moved westward before the mid-1840s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Karl Ricks. Joseph Smith's Kirtland: Eyewitness Accounts. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Backman, Milton V., Jr. The Heaven's Resound: A History of the Latter-day Saints in Ohio 1830–1838. Salt Lake City, 1983.

Hill, S. Marvin; Keith Rooker; and Larry T. Wimmer. "The Kirtland Economy Revisited: A Market Critique of Seetarian Economics." BYU Studies 17 (Summer 1977):389–475.

History of Geauga and Lake Counties, Ohio. Philadelphia, 1878.

MILTON V. BACKMAN, JR.

KIRTLAND TEMPLE

The divine command that led to the building of the Kirtland Temple was given to the Prophet Joseph SMITH in January 1831 when the Church was beset by poverty and turmoil. At that time, the Saints were to gather to Ohio, where the Lord promised he would endow them "with power from on high" (D&C 38:32; cf. D&C 88:119; 95:3, 8, 11). Thus they began to build the first of the Latter-day Saint TEMPLES.

The Church then consisted of only a few hundred members, men, women, and children who labored together for the temple and contributed, as Eliza R. SNOW wrote, "brain, bone and sinew" and "all living as abstemiously as possible" so that "every cent might be appropriated to the grand object" (Tullidge, p. 82). According to Benjamin F. Johnson, "there was not a scraper and hardly a plow that could be obtained among the Saints," to prepare the ground for the foundation of the temple (Benjamin Johnson, My Life's Review, p. 16). Lumber was brought from nearby forests. Stone was hewn from a local quarry.

As the exact patterns of the Tabernacle of Moses and Solomon's temple had been revealed from on high (Ex. 25:9; 1 Chr. 28:11–12), so also were the design, measurements, and functions of the Kirtland Temple revealed. Its interior was to be fifty-five feet wide and sixty-five feet long and have a lower and a higher court. The lower part of the inner court was to be dedicated "for your sacrament offering, and for your preaching, and your fasting, and your praying, and the offering up of your most holy desires unto me, saith your Lord." The higher part of the inner court was to be "dedicated unto me for the school of mine apostles" (D&C 95:13–17).

The cornerstone was laid on July 23, 1833. Brigham YOUNG later explained that the first stone was laid at the southeast corner, the point of greatest light, and at high noon, the time of the greatest sunlight (JD 1:133). This was a symbolic reminder that the House of the Lord is a center of light and truth.

The external design of the Kirtland Temple is typical of other contemporary houses of worship at that time, but the arrangement of the interior is unique. On each of the two main floors are two series of four-tiered pulpits, one on the west side, the other on the east. These are symbolic of the offices of the Melchizedek and Aaronic Priesthoods and accommodated their presidencies.

The construction of the temple was abruptly slowed with the call of ZION'S CAMP to Missouri, though many of the women, older men, and the infirm remained in Kirtland. Sidney RIGDON, of the First Presidency, recorded walking the walls of the temple "by night and day and frequently wetting the walls" with his tears, praying for the completion of the temple. At other times the work was slowed because of harassment and threats by enemies of the Church. Elder George A. Smith recalled that sometimes guards attended the temple day and night and worked with a trowel in one hand and a gun in the other.

The women—who, Joseph once remarked, were "first in temple labors"—did spinning, knitting, and sewing so that temple laborers would have clothes to wear. To give the exterior glaze a sparkling appearance, the women contributed glassware to be broken in bits and applied to the plaster. In his dedicatory prayer, Joseph referred to the sacrifice of the Saints: "For thou knowest that we have done this work through great tribulation; and out of our poverty we have given of our substance to build a house to thy name, that the Son of Man might have a place to manifest himself to his people" (D&C 109:5).

An estimated 1,000 people attended the dedication on March 27, 1836. A repeat dedication ceremony was held on March 31. It was a time of great rejoicing. Dedicatory anthems were sung, including "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning," which was written for the occasion. The sacrament was administered. The inspired dedicatory prayer, filled with Hebraic overtones, became the pattern for all subsequent temple dedications. In it, the Prophet pleaded with the Lord for the visible manifestation of his divine presence (the Shekhinah), as in the Tabernacle of Moses, at Solomon's temple, and on the day of Pentecost, "And let thy house be filled as with a rushing mighty wind, with thy glory" (D&C 109:37; cf. Ex. 29:43; 33:9–10; 2 Chr. 7:1–3; Acts 2:1–4). Many recorded the fulfillment

Hill, S. Marvin; Keith Rooker; and Larry T. Wimmer. "The Kirtland Economy Revisited: A Market Critique of Seetarian Economics." BYU Studies 17 (Summer 1977):389–475.

History of Geauga and Lake Counties, Ohio. Philadelphia, 1878.

MILTON V. BACKMAN, JR.

KIRTLAND TEMPLE

The divine command that led to the building of the Kirtland Temple was given to the Prophet Joseph SMITH in January 1831 when the Church was beset by poverty and turmoil. At that time, the Saints were to gather to Ohio, where the Lord promised he would endow them "with power from on high" (D&C 38:32; cf. D&C 88:119; 95:3, 8, 11). Thus they began to build the first of the Latter-day Saint TEMPLES.

The Church then consisted of only a few hundred members, men, women, and children who labored together for the temple and contributed, as Eliza R. SNOW wrote, "brain, bone and sinew" and "all living as abstemiously as possible" so that "every cent might be appropriated to the grand object" (Tullidge, p. 82). According to Benjamin F. Johnson, "there was not a scraper and hardly a plow that could be obtained among the Saints," to prepare the ground for the foundation of the temple (Benjamin Johnson, My Life's Review, p. 16). Lumber was brought from nearby forests. Stone was hewn from a local quarry.

As the exact patterns of the Tabernacle of Moses and Solomon's temple had been revealed from on high (Ex. 25:9; 1 Chr. 28:11–12), so also were the design, measurements, and functions of the Kirtland Temple revealed. Its interior was to be fifty-five feet wide and sixty-five feet long and have a lower and a higher court. The lower part of the inner court was to be dedicated "for your sacrament offering, and for your preaching, and your fasting, and your praying, and the offering up of your most holy desires unto me, saith your Lord." The higher part of the inner court was to be "dedicated unto me for the school of mine apostles" (D&C 95:13–17).

The cornerstone was laid on July 23, 1833. Brigham YOUNG later explained that the first stone was laid at the southeast corner, the point of greatest light, and at high noon, the time of the greatest sunlight (JD 1:133). This was a symbolic reminder that the House of the Lord is a center of light and truth.

The external design of the Kirtland Temple is typical of other contemporary houses of worship at that time, but the arrangement of the interior is unique. On each of the two main floors are two series of four-tiered pulpits, one on the west side, the other on the east. These are symbolic of the offices of the Melchizedek and Aaronic Priesthoods and accommodated their presidencies.

The construction of the temple was abruptly slowed with the call of ZION'S CAMP to Missouri, though many of the women, older men, and the infirm remained in Kirtland. Sidney RIGDON, of the First Presidency, recorded walking the walls of the temple "by night and day and frequently wetting the walls" with his tears, praying for the completion of the temple. At other times the work was slowed because of harassment and threats by enemies of the Church. Elder George A. Smith recalled that sometimes guards attended the temple day and night and worked with a trowel in one hand and a gun in the other.

The women—who, Joseph once remarked, were "first in temple labors"—did spinning, knitting, and sewing so that temple laborers would have clothes to wear. To give the exterior glaze a sparkling appearance, the women contributed glassware to be broken in bits and applied to the plaster. In his dedicatory prayer, Joseph referred to the sacrifice of the Saints: "For thou knowest that we have done this work through great tribulation; and out of our poverty we have given of our substance to build a house to thy name, that the Son of Man might have a place to manifest himself to his people" (D&C 109:5).

An estimated 1,000 people attended the dedication on March 27, 1836. A repeat dedication ceremony was held on March 31. It was a time of great rejoicing. Dedicatory anthems were sung, including "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning," which was written for the occasion. The sacrament was administered. The inspired dedicatory prayer, filled with Hebraic overtones, became the pattern for all subsequent temple dedications. In it, the Prophet pleaded with the Lord for the visible manifestation of his divine presence (the Shekhinah), as in the Tabernacle of Moses, at Solomon's temple, and on the day of Pentecost, "And let thy house be filled as with a rushing mighty wind, with thy glory" (D&C 109:37; cf. Ex. 29:43; 33:9–10; 2 Chr. 7:1–3; Acts 2:1–4). Many recorded the fulfillment of that prayer. Eliza R. Snow wrote, “The ceremonies of that dedication may be rehearsed, but no mortal language can describe the heavenly manifestations of that memorable day. Angels appeared to some, while a sense of divine presence was realized by all present, and each heart was filled with ‘joy inexpressible and full of glory’” (Tullidge, p. 95). After the prayer, the entire congregation rose and, with hands uplifted, shouted hosannas “to God and the Lamb” (see HOSANNA SHOUT).

Interior of the Kirtland Temple, facing the Melehizedek Priesthood pulpits. Photograph, 1911, by C. R. Savage Co.

The climax of the spiritual outpouring occurred on April 3, 1836, when the Savior appeared in the Kirtland Temple to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY and said, “For behold I have accepted this house, and my name shall be here; and I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this house” (D&C 110:7). Then three other personages of former dispensations, or eras, came and restored KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD: Moses restored the keys of the gathering of Israel, Elias restored keys of the GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM, and Elijah restored the keys of SEALING. These keys represent three different aspects of the mission of the Church.

Without the keys restored in the Kirtland Temple, the Latter-day Saints would not have authority to perform the ordinances in their many temples. WASHINGS AND ANOINTINGS had been given in January 1836. After attending to the washing of feet, Joseph assured the quorums that he “had given them all the instruction they needed” to go forth and build up the kingdom of God, having “passed through all the necessary ceremonies” (TPJS, p. 110). These ceremonies were preliminary to the fulness of the ordinances and the temple endowment later administered in the Nauvoo Temple.

Abandoned by the Saints after severe persecution, the Kirtland Temple was for a time in the hands of dissidents. Today it is owned by the REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS and is used as a visitors center. It has been recognized as a National Historic Site.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Karl Ricks. Joseph Smith's Kirtland: Eyewitness Accounts. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Baekman, Milton V., Jr. The Heavens Resound: A History of the Latter-day Saints in Ohio, 1830–1838. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Madsen, Truman G. Joseph Smith, the Prophet, pp. 67–82. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Tullidge, Edward W. The Women of Mormondom. New York, 1877.

KEITH W. PERKINS

KNOWLEDGE

Latter-day Saints believe that certain forms of knowledge are essential for salvation and eternal life (John 17:3). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that “a man is saved no faster than he gets knowledge, for if he does not get knowledge, he will be brought into captivity,” and thus human beings have a need for “revelation to assist us, and give us knowledge of the things of God” (TPJS, p. 217). One of the purposes of the priesthood, which is the authority to administer the gospel, is to make this saving “knowledge of God” available to all (D&C 84:19). Those who die without a chance to obtain a knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ will be given opportunity to receive and accept the gospel in the life after death to become “heirs of the celestial kingdom” (D&C 128:5; 137:7–9; 138:28–34; see SALVATION OF THE DEAD).

Knowledge makes possible moral agency and freedom of choice (John 8:32; 2 Ne. 2:26–27; Hel. 14:30–31; Moro. 7:15–17). Those who receive knowledge are responsible to live in accordance with it. Those who sin after having received knowledge of the truth by revelation bear greater condemnation than those who sin in ignorance (Heb. 10:26–27; 2 Pet. 2:20–21; Mosiah 2:36–39; Alma 24:30), while mercy is extended to those who sin in ignorance, or without knowledge of the truth (Mosiah 3:11; Alma 9:14–17; Hel. 7:23–24).

Interior of the Kirtland Temple, facing the Melehizedek Priesthood pulpits. Photograph, 1911, by C. R. Savage Co.

of that prayer. Eliza R. Snow wrote, “The ceremonies of that dedication may be rehearsed, but no mortal language can describe the heavenly manifestations of that memorable day. Angels appeared to some, while a sense of divine presence was realized by all present, and each heart was filled with ‘joy inexpressible and full of glory’” (Tullidge, p. 95). After the prayer, the entire congregation rose and, with hands uplifted, shouted hosannas “to God and the Lamb” (see HOSANNA SHOUT).

The climax of the spiritual outpouring occurred on April 3, 1836, when the Savior appeared in the Kirtland Temple to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY and said, “For behold I have accepted this house, and my name shall be here; and I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this house” (D&C 110:7). Then three other personages of former dispensations, or eras, came and restored KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD: Moses restored the keys of the gathering of Israel, Elias restored keys of the GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM, and Elijah restored the keys of SEALING. These keys represent three different aspects of the mission of the Church.

Without the keys restored in the Kirtland Temple, the Latter-day Saints would not have authority to perform the ordinances in their many temples. WASHINGS AND ANOINTINGS had been given in January 1836. After attending to the washing of feet, Joseph assured the quorums that he “had given them all the instruction they needed” to go forth and build up the kingdom of God, having “passed through all the necessary ceremonies” (TPJS, p. 110). These ceremonies were preliminary to the fulness of the ordinances and the temple endowment later administered in the Nauvoo Temple.

Abandoned by the Saints after severe persecution, the Kirtland Temple was for a time in the hands of dissidents. Today it is owned by the REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS and is used as a visitors center. It has been recognized as a National Historic Site.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Karl Ricks. Joseph Smith's Kirtland: Eyewitness Accounts. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Baekman, Milton V., Jr. The Heavens Resound: A History of the Latter-day Saints in Ohio, 1830–1838. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Madsen, Truman G. Joseph Smith, the Prophet, pp. 67–82. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Tullidge, Edward W. The Women of Mormondom. New York, 1877.

KEITH W. PERKINS

KNOWLEDGE

Latter-day Saints believe that certain forms of knowledge are essential for salvation and eternal life (John 17:3). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that “a man is saved no faster than he gets knowledge, for if he does not get knowledge, he will be brought into captivity,” and thus human beings have a need for “revelation to assist us, and give us knowledge of the things of God” (TPJS, p. 217). One of the purposes of the priesthood, which is the authority to administer the gospel, is to make this saving “knowledge of God” available to all (D&C 84:19). Those who die without a chance to obtain a knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ will be given opportunity to receive and accept the gospel in the life after death to become “heirs of the celestial kingdom” (D&C 128:5; 137:7–9; 138:28–34; see SALVATION OF THE DEAD).

Knowledge makes possible moral agency and freedom of choice (John 8:32; 2 Ne. 2:26–27; Hel. 14:30–31; Moro. 7:15–17). Those who receive knowledge are responsible to live in accordance with it. Those who sin after having received knowledge of the truth by revelation bear greater condemnation than those who sin in ignorance (Heb. 10:26–27; 2 Pet. 2:20–21; Mosiah 2:36–39; Alma 24:30), while mercy is extended to those who sin in ignorance, or without knowledge of the truth (Mosiah 3:11; Alma 9:14–17; Hel. 7:23–24).

Knowledge is one of the gifts of the spirit that all people are commanded to seek (1 Cor. 12:8; Moro. 10:9–10; D&C 46:17–18). Knowledge of the truth of the gospel of Christ is conveyed as well as received by the power of the Holy Ghost (Moro. 10:5; 1 Cor. 2:9–16; D&C 50:19–21). Similarly, knowledge of the mysteries of God also comes through personal revelation. Shared knowledge of the things of God is available in the scriptures and other teachings of his prophets.

Knowledge is closely associated in scripture with other virtues such as meekness, long suffering, temperance, patience, godliness, kindness, and charity (2 Pet. 1:5–7; D&C 4:6; 107:30–31; 121:41–42). It is intimately related to truth; genuine knowledge is truth (D&C 93:24). Knowledge is understood to be an active, motivating force rather than simply a passive awareness, or collection of facts. This force is seen, for example, in acts of faith (Alma 32:21–43) and obedience (1 Jn. 2:4). The word “knowledge” is also used to refer to vain or false knowledge, and to the pride that often comes with knowledge based on human learning unaccompanied by righteousness and the spirit and knowledge of God (1 Cor. 8:1–2; 2 Tim. 3:7; 2 Ne. 9:28–29).

All people are encouraged to seek deeply and broadly to gain knowledge of both heavenly and earthly things (D&C 88:77–80). Such knowledge comes by study of the works of others, and also by faith (D&C 88:118). The LDS Church has traditionally encouraged and supported the pursuit of knowledge and education by its members. Knowledge gained through study and also by faith is obtained “line upon line and precept upon precept” (D&C 98:11–12; 128:21). All knowledge gained in this life stays with those who attain it and rises with them in the resurrection, bringing some advantage in the life to come (D&C 130:18–19). The next life holds the promise of “perfect knowledge” or understanding (2 Ne. 9:13–14).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Reynolds, Noel B. “Reason and Revelation.” In A Thoughtful Faith: Essays on Belief by Mormon Scholars, ed. P. Barlow, pp. 205–224. Centerville, Utah, 1986.

RICHARD N. WILLIAMS

---

KSL RADIO

KSL is a clear-channel Salt Lake City radio station, 1160 on the dial. Originally an independent KZN, it went on the air May 6, 1922. The Church bought controlling interest in the station on April 21, 1925.

Earl J. Glade, pioneer broadcaster, was general manager of the station for its first twenty years. He set standards and policies that continue to the present: a strong local and international news service, community and cultural interdependence, and sponsorship of quality-of-life improvements.

In 1932 KSL changed affiliation from NBC to CBS and, in the same year, increased its power to 50,000 watts. The station reaches into all the United States west of the Mississippi and, by occasional “skips,” is heard as far away as New Zealand and Norway.

On December 26, 1946, KSL began broadcasting the first FM radio signal in Utah under the call letters of KSL-FM, and on June 1, 1949, KSL Television went on the air. The FM station was sold in 1978. KSL-TV has a survey area that includes seven western states.

In 1961, BONNEVILLE CORPORATION was created to give unified leadership to KSL and other BROADCASTING entities acquired and developed by the Church.

ARCH L. MADSEN

Knowledge is one of the gifts of the spirit that all people are commanded to seek (1 Cor. 12:8; Moro. 10:9–10; D&C 46:17–18). Knowledge of the truth of the gospel of Christ is conveyed as well as received by the power of the Holy Ghost (Moro. 10:5; 1 Cor. 2:9–16; D&C 50:19–21). Similarly, knowledge of the mysteries of God also comes through personal revelation. Shared knowledge of the things of God is available in the scriptures and other teachings of his prophets.

Knowledge is closely associated in scripture with other virtues such as meekness, long suffering, temperance, patience, godliness, kindness, and charity (2 Pet. 1:5–7; D&C 4:6; 107:30–31; 121:41–42). It is intimately related to truth; genuine knowledge is truth (D&C 93:24). Knowledge is understood to be an active, motivating force rather than simply a passive awareness, or collection of facts. This force is seen, for example, in acts of faith (Alma 32:21–43) and obedience (1 Jn. 2:4). The word “knowledge” is also used to refer to vain or false knowledge, and to the pride that often comes with knowledge based on human learning unaccompanied by righteousness and the spirit and knowledge of God (1 Cor. 8:1–2; 2 Tim. 3:7; 2 Ne. 9:28–29).

All people are encouraged to seek deeply and broadly to gain knowledge of both heavenly and earthly things (D&C 88:77–80). Such knowledge comes by study of the works of others, and also by faith (D&C 88:118). The LDS Church has traditionally encouraged and supported the pursuit of knowledge and education by its members. Knowledge gained through study and also by faith is obtained “line upon line and precept upon precept” (D&C 98:11–12; 128:21). All knowledge gained in this life stays with those who attain it and rises with them in the resurrection, bringing some advantage in the life to come (D&C 130:18–19). The next life holds the promise of “perfect knowledge” or understanding (2 Ne. 9:13–14).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Reynolds, Noel B. “Reason and Revelation.” In A Thoughtful Faith: Essays on Belief by Mormon Scholars, ed. P. Barlow, pp. 205–224. Centerville, Utah, 1986.

RICHARD N. WILLIAMS

---

KSL RADIO

KSL is a clear-channel Salt Lake City radio station, 1160 on the dial. Originally an independent KZN, it went on the air May 6, 1922. The Church bought controlling interest in the station on April 21, 1925.

Earl J. Glade, pioneer broadcaster, was general manager of the station for its first twenty years. He set standards and policies that continue to the present: a strong local and international news service, community and cultural interdependence, and sponsorship of quality-of-life improvements.

In 1932 KSL changed affiliation from NBC to CBS and, in the same year, increased its power to 50,000 watts. The station reaches into all the United States west of the Mississippi and, by occasional “skips,” is heard as far away as New Zealand and Norway.

On December 26, 1946, KSL began broadcasting the first FM radio signal in Utah under the call letters of KSL-FM, and on June 1, 1949, KSL Television went on the air. The FM station was sold in 1978. KSL-TV has a survey area that includes seven western states.

In 1961, BONNEVILLE CORPORATION was created to give unified leadership to KSL and other BROADCASTING entities acquired and developed by the Church.

ARCH L. MADSEN

---

L

---

---

LAMAN

Laman was the eldest of six sons of LEHI and Sariah. Lehi was the patriarchal head and prophet at the beginning of the Book of Mormon, and Laman opposed his father and his younger brother NEPHI<sup>1</sup>. Unlike the family conflicts in the book of Genesis between Esau and Jacob and between Joseph and his jealous brothers, the hostilities between Laman and Nephi were never quieted or reconciled.

Laman's opposition to the things of God arose from a combination of conflicting spiritual values and a common reaction against the favor he perceived going to a younger brother. The record of Nephi portrays Laman as strong-willed, hard-hearted, impulsive, violent, judgmental, and lacking in faith. Though Laman followed his father in their journeyings, he never shared in the spiritual calling that inspired Lehi.

In his rebelliousness, Laman charged that Lehi was a visionary and foolish man (1 Ne. 2:11). Still Lehi continued to exhort him "with all the feeling of a tender parent," even though he feared from what he had seen in a vision that Laman and Lemuel would refuse to come into God's presence (1 Ne. 8:36-37).

Laman objected to leaving Jerusalem and the family's lands, possessions, and security, and to traveling to a new land (1 Ne. 2:11). Throughout their journey he complained of the hardships and was resentful that God had selected Nephi to become "a ruler and a teacher" ahead of him (1 Ne. 2:21-22; 16:36-38). Laman and Lemuel beat Nephi with a rod (1 Ne. 3:28), attempted to leave him tied up in the wilderness to die (1 Ne. 7:16), bound him on board ship, and treated him harshly (1 Ne. 18:11). On various occasions, Laman was rebuked by an angel, chastened by the voice of the Lord, or "shocked" by divine power. Still, he longed for the popular life of Jerusalem even though Lehi had prophesied the city would be destroyed.

Laman was supported in his stance by his wife and children, by Lemuel (the next eldest son) and his family, and by some of the sons of ISHMAEL and their families. Before he died, Lehi left his first blessing with Laman and Lemuel on the condition that they would "hearken unto the voice of Nephi" (2 Ne. 1:28-29), but they so opposed Nephi that he was instructed by God to lead the faithful to settle a new land away from Laman and Lemuel in order to preserve their lives and religious beliefs.

Laman and his followers became the LAMANITES, persistent enemies of the NEPHITES. Stemming from these early personal conflicts, the Lamanites insisted for many generations that Nephi had deprived them of their rights. Thus, the Lamanites taught their children "that they should hate [the Nephites] . . . and do all they could to destroy them” (Mosiah 10:17). When Laman’s descendants were converted to faith in Christ, however, they were exemplary in righteousness; and Book of Mormon prophets foretold a noteworthy future for them in the latter days.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Matthews, Robert J. Who’s Who in the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- McConkie, Joseph F., and Robert L. Millet. Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, Vol. 1. Salt Lake City, 1987.

ALAN K. PARRISH

---

LAMANITE MISSION OF 1830–1831

The mission to western Missouri in 1830–1831 was important for three reasons: it demonstrated the Church’s commitment to preach to the descendants of the LAMANITES of the Book of Mormon; it helped establish a stronghold for the Church in KIRTLAND, OHIO, where the missionaries found numerous unexpected converts; and it ultimately brought Joseph SMITH to Jackson County, Missouri, to lay the foundation of ZION, or the NEW JERUSALEM.

This mission, one of the Church’s earliest missionary expeditions, commenced in October 1830 in New York State with the call of Oliver COWDERY, “second elder” in the Church; Peter Whitmer, Jr.; Parley P. PRATT; and Ziba Peterson (D&C 28:8; 32:1–3). It initiated the long continuing Church practice of taking the gospel to NATIVE AMERICANS. The Book of Mormon, in part a record of American Indian origins, prophesies that the Lamanites will assist in building the millennial New Jerusalem (3 Ne. 20–21), to be located in the Western Hemisphere (Ether 13:3–6; cf. D&C 28:9).

In the early 1800s the U.S. government began removing eastern Indians to the American frontier west of all existing states. In May 1830 the U.S. Congress passed the Indian Removal Law, further ensuring that the missionaries’ ultimate destination was just west of Independence, Missouri, the last American outpost before “Indian country.” To arrive there, the elders traveled on foot from New York, a distance of fifteen hundred miles, in mid-winter.

These brethren soon found audiences of white settlers and some Indians. First, at nearby Buffalo,

New York, they taught the Catteraugus Indians, who accepted two copies of the Book of Mormon. In northeastern Ohio they preached widely, and their message excited public curiosity. While visiting Mentor, Ohio, Cowdery and Pratt contacted Sidney RIGDON, a dynamic Reformed Baptist minister who was promoting New Testament restorationist beliefs in his congregation and was Pratt’s friend and former pastor. They challenged Rigdon to read the Book of Mormon, which he promised to do. Rigdon also allowed the elders to speak in his Mentor church and to his congregation in Kirtland. Positive response to their message was almost immediate. Many members of the congregation, including Rigdon, were baptized. News of their success spread rapidly, sparking intense public feelings and leading to more conversions.

In four weeks in northeastern Ohio, the elders baptized approximately 130 converts, 50 of them from Kirtland. These new members made Kirtland their headquarters. Among the converts were men who would become leaders in the Church: Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G. Williams, Lyman Wight, Newel K. Whitney, Levi Hancock, and John Murdock. Two other prominent men, Edward Partridge and Orson HYDE, joined the Church soon after the missionaries departed. By the end of 1830, membership in Ohio had reached 300, nearly triple the number of members in New York. In December, after learning of the great Ohio harvest, Joseph Smith received a revelation directing the New York Saints to gather to the Kirtland area (D&C 37:1, 3), which most did in 1831.

Joined by Frederick G. Williams, a Kirtland physician, the four missionaries continued west in late November 1830, preaching as they traveled. They visited the Wyandot Indians at Sandusky, Ohio, where their hearers rejoiced over their message. However, during several days at Cincinnati, they were unable to interest other audiences. In late December, the elders took passage down the Ohio River toward St. Louis until encountering ice near Cairo, Illinois, which forced them to walk overland. Thereafter, their journey became increasingly arduous. Because of storms of rare severity, the winter of 1830–1831 is referred to in midwestern annals as “the winter of the deep snow.” Food was scarce, and the missionaries were forced to survive on meager rations of frozen bread and pork.

In late January 1831, still in the midst of intense cold, the missionaries arrived at Jackson destroy them” (Mosiah 10:17). When Laman’s descendants were converted to faith in Christ, however, they were exemplary in righteousness; and Book of Mormon prophets foretold a noteworthy future for them in the latter days.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Matthews, Robert J. Who’s Who in the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- McConkie, Joseph F., and Robert L. Millet. Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, Vol. 1. Salt Lake City, 1987.

ALAN K. PARRISH

---

LAMANITE MISSION OF 1830–1831

The mission to western Missouri in 1830–1831 was important for three reasons: it demonstrated the Church’s commitment to preach to the descendants of the LAMANITES of the Book of Mormon; it helped establish a stronghold for the Church in KIRTLAND, OHIO, where the missionaries found numerous unexpected converts; and it ultimately brought Joseph SMITH to Jackson County, Missouri, to lay the foundation of ZION, or the NEW JERUSALEM.

This mission, one of the Church’s earliest missionary expeditions, commenced in October 1830 in New York State with the call of Oliver COWDERY, “second elder” in the Church; Peter Whitmer, Jr.; Parley P. PRATT; and Ziba Peterson (D&C 28:8; 32:1–3). It initiated the long continuing Church practice of taking the gospel to NATIVE AMERICANS. The Book of Mormon, in part a record of American Indian origins, prophesies that the Lamanites will assist in building the millennial New Jerusalem (3 Ne. 20–21), to be located in the Western Hemisphere (Ether 13:3–6; cf. D&C 28:9).

In the early 1800s the U.S. government began removing eastern Indians to the American frontier west of all existing states. In May 1830 the U.S. Congress passed the Indian Removal Law, further ensuring that the missionaries’ ultimate destination was just west of Independence, Missouri, the last American outpost before “Indian country.” To arrive there, the elders traveled on foot from New York, a distance of fifteen hundred miles, in mid-winter.

These brethren soon found audiences of white settlers and some Indians. First, at nearby Buffalo,

New York, they taught the Catteraugus Indians, who accepted two copies of the Book of Mormon. In northeastern Ohio they preached widely, and their message excited public curiosity. While visiting Mentor, Ohio, Cowdery and Pratt contacted Sidney RIGDON, a dynamic Reformed Baptist minister who was promoting New Testament restorationist beliefs in his congregation and was Pratt’s friend and former pastor. They challenged Rigdon to read the Book of Mormon, which he promised to do. Rigdon also allowed the elders to speak in his Mentor church and to his congregation in Kirtland. Positive response to their message was almost immediate. Many members of the congregation, including Rigdon, were baptized. News of their success spread rapidly, sparking intense public feelings and leading to more conversions.

In four weeks in northeastern Ohio, the elders baptized approximately 130 converts, 50 of them from Kirtland. These new members made Kirtland their headquarters. Among the converts were men who would become leaders in the Church: Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G. Williams, Lyman Wight, Newel K. Whitney, Levi Hancock, and John Murdock. Two other prominent men, Edward Partridge and Orson HYDE, joined the Church soon after the missionaries departed. By the end of 1830, membership in Ohio had reached 300, nearly triple the number of members in New York. In December, after learning of the great Ohio harvest, Joseph Smith received a revelation directing the New York Saints to gather to the Kirtland area (D&C 37:1, 3), which most did in 1831.

Joined by Frederick G. Williams, a Kirtland physician, the four missionaries continued west in late November 1830, preaching as they traveled. They visited the Wyandot Indians at Sandusky, Ohio, where their hearers rejoiced over their message. However, during several days at Cincinnati, they were unable to interest other audiences. In late December, the elders took passage down the Ohio River toward St. Louis until encountering ice near Cairo, Illinois, which forced them to walk overland. Thereafter, their journey became increasingly arduous. Because of storms of rare severity, the winter of 1830–1831 is referred to in midwestern annals as “the winter of the deep snow.” Food was scarce, and the missionaries were forced to survive on meager rations of frozen bread and pork.

In late January 1831, still in the midst of intense cold, the missionaries arrived at Jackson

Joseph Smith Preaching to the Indians, by William Armitage (late nineteenth century, oil on canvas, 10' × 16'). In revelations given through the Prophet Joseph Smith in 1830, the Lord appointed several early Church leaders to preach the gospel to the Lamanites. They visited Native Americans in New York, Ohio, and Missouri. Several Native Americans visited Joseph Smith in the early 1840s in Nauvoo, which gave him an opportunity to tell them about the Book of Mormon. Church Museum of History and Art.

County (see MISSOURI: LDS COMMUNITIES IN JACKSON AND CLAY COUNTIES). Independence, the county seat, was a ragged and undisciplined frontier village twelve miles from the state's western border. Here the missionaries separated. Whitmer and Peterson set up a tailor shop to earn needed funds, while Cowdery, Pratt, and Williams crossed the state boundary, called by them "the border of the Lamanites," into Indian country. After first contacting the Shawnees, the elders crossed the frozen Kansas River and walked to the Delaware Indian village located about twelve miles west of the Missouri state line.

The Delaware Indians had arrived there only the previous November after a toilsome journey of their own. Because of their present poverty and mistreatment at the hands of whites, the aged Delaware chief, known to the white man as William Anderson Kithtilhund, viewed any Christian missionaries with suspicion. After his initial hesitation, however, Kithtilhund summoned his chiefs into council. For several days, through an interpreter, Cowdery shared with the receptive Delawares the Book of Mormon account of their ancestors.

Plans to establish a permanent school among the Delawares and to baptize converts were soon interrupted by an order to desist from the federal Indian agent, Richard W. Cummins. After issuing a second warning, he threatened to arrest the elders if they did not leave Indian lands. Pratt believed that the jealousy of the missionaries of other churches and Indian agents precipitated the order. In a letter to William Clark, superintendent of Indian affairs in St. Louis, Cummins indicated that the elders did not possess a certificate authorizing their presence on government Indian lands. Later in Independence, Cowdery wrote the superintendent requesting a license to return to Indian lands, but the request was never granted, and that effectively ended the Lamanite Mission.

From Independence, Oliver Cowdery dispatched Parley P. Pratt to the East to report on the mission while the remaining four missionaries preached to white settlers in Jackson County. In the summer of 1831, Joseph Smith led a group from Kirtland to Jackson County to meet the missionaries. Through revelation the Prophet identified a site a half mile from Independence as the temple lot for the New Jerusalem (D&C 57:1–3).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Backman, Milton, V., Jr. The Heavens Resound, pp. 1–12. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Pratt, Parley P. Autobiography of Parley Parker Pratt, pp. 47–58. Salt Lake City, 1938.

MAX H PARKIN

LAMANITES

The name Lamanite refers to an Israelite people spoken of in the Book of Mormon, who were descendants of LEHI and Ishmael, both of whom were descendants of JOSEPH OF EGYPT (1 Ne. 5:14). They were part of the prophet Lehi's colony, which was commanded of the Lord to leave Jerusalem and go to a new promised land (in the Western Hemisphere). The Lamanite peoples in the Book of Mormon during the first 600 years of their history are all linked in some way to LAMAN and Lemuel, Lehi's oldest sons. At times the name refers to "the people of Laman"; at other times it can identify unbelievers and ignore ancestral lines, depending on contextual specifics regarding peoples, time, and place.

LAMANITES IN THE BOOK OF MORMON. After the death of the prophet Lehi (c. 582 B.C.), the colony divided into two main groups, Lamanites and NEPHITES, (2 Ne. 5), each taking the name from their leader. These patronyms later evolved into royal titles (Mosiah 24:3; cf. Jacob 1:11). The Book of Mormon, though a Nephite record, focuses on both Lamanites and Nephites, by means of complex contrasts between the two groups. In the text, other peoples are generally subsumed under one of these two main divisions:

Now the people which were not Lamanites were Nephites; nevertheless, they were called Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites. But I, Jacob, shall not hereafter distinguish them by these names, but I shall call them Lamanites that seek to destroy the people of Nephi, and those who are friendly to Nephi I shall call Nephites, or the people of Nephi, according to the reigns of the kings [Jacob 1:13–14].

In the beginning, political and religious disagreements arose between the Lamanites and the Nephites. Subsequently, an increasing cultural differentiation of the Lamanite people from the Nephites seems to have resulted from their different responses to Lehi's religious teachings. Social change quickly took place along many lines. Consequently, the name Lamanite can refer to descendants of Laman and his party; to an incipient nationality based upon an ideology, with its own lineage history and religious beliefs (Mosiah 10:12–17); or to one or more cultures. The Book of Mormon describes several Lamanite cultures and lifestyles, including hunting-gathering (2 Ne. 5:24), commerce (Mosiah 24:7), sedentary herding, a city-state pattern of governance (Alma 17), and nomadism (Alma 22:28). The politicized nature of early Lamanite society is reflected in the way in which dissenters from Nephite society sought refuge among Lamanites, were accepted, and came to identify themselves with them, much as some Lamanites moved in the opposite direction.

Early in the sixth century of Lamanite history (c. 94–80 B.C.), large-scale Lamanite conversions further divided the Lamanite peoples as many embraced the messianic faith in Jesus Christ taught by Nephite missionaries (Alma 17–26). The Lamanite king Lamoni, a vassal; his father, the suzerain king; and many of their subjects accepted the prophesied Christ and rejected their former lifestyles. They took upon themselves a covenant of pacifism, burying their weapons and renouncing warfare, and moved into Nephite territory for their safety (Alma 27:21–26; 43:11–12). This pattern of Lamanite conversion lasted for at least eighty-four years and through several generations (cf. Alma 24:5–6, 15–19, 20–24; 26:31–34; 44:20; Hel. 5:51; 15:9). This major division of Lamanite society had significant political impact: the identity of some of these converts remained Lamanite, but distinct from those who rejected the religion; others chose to be numbered among the Nephites (3 Ne. 2:12, 14–16); and the unconverted Lamanites were strengthened by numerous dissenters from Nephite subgroups (Alma 43:13), some of whom chose explicitly to retain their former identities (3 Ne. 6:3).

After the destructions that occurred at the time of Christ's crucifixion and the subsequent conversions (3 Ne. 11–28), a new society was established in which ethnic as well as economic differences were overcome, and there were no

the summer of 1831, Joseph Smith led a group from Kirtland to Jackson County to meet the missionaries. Through revelation the Prophet identified a site a half mile from Independence as the temple lot for the New Jerusalem (D&C 57:1–3).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Backman, Milton, V., Jr. The Heavens Resound, pp. 1–12. Salt Lake City, 1983.

Pratt, Parley P. Autobiography of Parley Parker Pratt, pp. 47–58. Salt Lake City, 1938.

MAX H PARKIN

LAMANITES

The name Lamanite refers to an Israelite people spoken of in the Book of Mormon, who were descendants of LEHI and Ishmael, both of whom were descendants of JOSEPH OF EGYPT (1 Ne. 5:14). They were part of the prophet Lehi's colony, which was commanded of the Lord to leave Jerusalem and go to a new promised land (in the Western Hemisphere). The Lamanite peoples in the Book of Mormon during the first 600 years of their history are all linked in some way to LAMAN and Lemuel, Lehi's oldest sons. At times the name refers to "the people of Laman"; at other times it can identify unbelievers and ignore ancestral lines, depending on contextual specifics regarding peoples, time, and place.

LAMANITES IN THE BOOK OF MORMON. After the death of the prophet Lehi (c. 582 B.C.), the colony divided into two main groups, Lamanites and NEPHITES, (2 Ne. 5), each taking the name from their leader. These patronyms later evolved into royal titles (Mosiah 24:3; cf. Jacob 1:11). The Book of Mormon, though a Nephite record, focuses on both Lamanites and Nephites, by means of complex contrasts between the two groups. In the text, other peoples are generally subsumed under one of these two main divisions:

Now the people which were not Lamanites were Nephites; nevertheless, they were called Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites. But I, Jacob, shall not hereafter distinguish them by these names, but I shall call them Lamanites that seek to destroy the people of Nephi, and those who are friendly to Nephi I shall call Nephites, or the people of Nephi, according to the reigns of the kings [Jacob 1:13–14].

In the beginning, political and religious disagreements arose between the Lamanites and the Nephites. Subsequently, an increasing cultural differentiation of the Lamanite people from the Nephites seems to have resulted from their different responses to Lehi's religious teachings. Social change quickly took place along many lines. Consequently, the name Lamanite can refer to descendants of Laman and his party; to an incipient nationality based upon an ideology, with its own lineage history and religious beliefs (Mosiah 10:12–17); or to one or more cultures. The Book of Mormon describes several Lamanite cultures and lifestyles, including hunting-gathering (2 Ne. 5:24), commerce (Mosiah 24:7), sedentary herding, a city-state pattern of governance (Alma 17), and nomadism (Alma 22:28). The politicized nature of early Lamanite society is reflected in the way in which dissenters from Nephite society sought refuge among Lamanites, were accepted, and came to identify themselves with them, much as some Lamanites moved in the opposite direction.

Early in the sixth century of Lamanite history (c. 94–80 B.C.), large-scale Lamanite conversions further divided the Lamanite peoples as many embraced the messianic faith in Jesus Christ taught by Nephite missionaries (Alma 17–26). The Lamanite king Lamoni, a vassal; his father, the suzerain king; and many of their subjects accepted the prophesied Christ and rejected their former lifestyles. They took upon themselves a covenant of pacifism, burying their weapons and renouncing warfare, and moved into Nephite territory for their safety (Alma 27:21–26; 43:11–12). This pattern of Lamanite conversion lasted for at least eighty-four years and through several generations (cf. Alma 24:5–6, 15–19, 20–24; 26:31–34; 44:20; Hel. 5:51; 15:9). This major division of Lamanite society had significant political impact: the identity of some of these converts remained Lamanite, but distinct from those who rejected the religion; others chose to be numbered among the Nephites (3 Ne. 2:12, 14–16); and the unconverted Lamanites were strengthened by numerous dissenters from Nephite subgroups (Alma 43:13), some of whom chose explicitly to retain their former identities (3 Ne. 6:3).

After the destructions that occurred at the time of Christ's crucifixion and the subsequent conversions (3 Ne. 11–28), a new society was established in which ethnic as well as economic differences were overcome, and there were no

"Lamanites, nor any manner of -ites; but they were in one, the children of Christ" (4 Ne. 1:17). This situation persisted until almost the end of the second century A.D., when those who rejected the Christian church, regardless of their ancestry, "had revolted from the church and taken upon them the name of Lamanites; therefore there began to be Lamanites again in the land" (4 Ne. 1:20). Divisions increased, so that by A.D. 231 "there arose a people who were called the Nephites, and they were true believers in Christ; and among them there were those who were called by the Lamanites—Jacobites, and Josephites, and Zoramites. . . . and . . . they who rejected the gospel were called Lamanites, and Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites" (4 Ne. 1:36–45).

It had been prophesied that eventually only Lamanite peoples and those who joined them would remain of the original groups (Alma 45:13–14). After the final battles between Lamanites and Nephites, only those who accepted Lamanite rule survived in Book of Mormon lands (Morm. 6:15).

LAMANITES IN EARLY LDS HISTORY. At the beginning of LDS Church history, one reason the Book of Mormon was published was so that it could be taken to the Lamanites (D&C 19:26–27). Within six months of the Church's organization, missionaries were sent to people thought to have Lamanite ancestry (D&C 28:8; 32:2; see also LAMANITE MISSION).

[See also Book of Mormon Peoples; Indian Student Placement Services; Native Americans.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "The Church and Deseendants of Book of Mormon Peoples." Ensign 5 (Dec. 1975); the entire issue devoted to this topic.
- De Hoyos, Arturo. The Old and the Modern Lamanite. Provo, Utah, 1970.
- Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Tyler, S. Lyman. Modern Results of the Lamanite Dispersion: The Indians of the Americas. Provo, Utah, 1965.
- Widtsoe, John A., and Franklin S. Harris, Jr. Seven Claims of the Book of Mormon. Independence, Mo., 1935.

GORDON C. THOMASSON

LAST DAYS

The term "last days" refers to the current period of time, the preparatory era before the second coming of the Christ. This period is marked by prophetic signs (D&C 45:37–40). "The end of the world" is not the end of the earth, but the end of evil and the triumph of righteousness (JS—H 1:4). At the conclusion of these last days, the Lord Jesus Christ will come again and personally reign upon the renewed "paradisiacal" earth (A of F 10).

During the last days, many marvelous events will occur that are signs that this preparatory period has begun (Isa. 29:14). These include the RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST, the preaching of his gospel among all nations, the coming forth of modern scripture, and the gathering of scattered Israel. The restoration of the gospel before the coming of the Lord (Acts 3:19–21) includes the revealing anew of lost truths, priesthood power, temple worship, and the full organization of the Church of Jesus Christ, including apostles and prophets.

Christ prophesied that his gospel would be preached "in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:1, 4). The Savior also foretold to Enoch that in the last days righteousness would come "down out of heaven," and truth will come "forth out of the earth" to bear testimony of Jesus Christ and of "his resurrection from the dead" (Moses 7:62). The Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price have come forth in partial fulfillment of these prophecies. Additional sacred writings are yet to come forth (cf. 2 Ne. 29:13; Ether 4:5–7).

A further sign will be the gathering of Israel. The house of Joseph is to be gathered to the "tops of the mountains" of the Western Hemisphere (Isa. 2:2) and to "stakes" (centers of strength) in many lands (HC 3:390–91). The house of Judah will gather by the millions to Jerusalem and its environs in fulfillment of prophecy (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, p. 240; DS 3:257–59). Another gathering will bring the lost tribes of Israel "from the north countries," to join with the house of Joseph (DS 3:306).

In contrast to these preparatory events, the prophecies state that in the last days gross wickedness will cover the earth (2 Tim. 3:1–7). Ancient and modern prophets have written that the world's latter-day inhabitants will "defile the earth" (Isa.

LAMB OF GOD

See: Jesus Christ: Names and Titles of

"Lamanites, nor any manner of -ites; but they were in one, the children of Christ" (4 Ne. 1:17). This situation persisted until almost the end of the second century A.D., when those who rejected the Christian church, regardless of their ancestry, "had revolted from the church and taken upon them the name of Lamanites; therefore there began to be Lamanites again in the land" (4 Ne. 1:20). Divisions increased, so that by A.D. 231 "there arose a people who were called the Nephites, and they were true believers in Christ; and among them there were those who were called by the Lamanites—Jacobites, and Josephites, and Zoramites. . . . and . . . they who rejected the gospel were called Lamanites, and Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites" (4 Ne. 1:36–45).

It had been prophesied that eventually only Lamanite peoples and those who joined them would remain of the original groups (Alma 45:13–14). After the final battles between Lamanites and Nephites, only those who accepted Lamanite rule survived in Book of Mormon lands (Morm. 6:15).

LAMANITES IN EARLY LDS HISTORY. At the beginning of LDS Church history, one reason the Book of Mormon was published was so that it could be taken to the Lamanites (D&C 19:26–27). Within six months of the Church's organization, missionaries were sent to people thought to have Lamanite ancestry (D&C 28:8; 32:2; see also LAMANITE MISSION).

[See also Book of Mormon Peoples; Indian Student Placement Services; Native Americans.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "The Church and Deseendants of Book of Mormon Peoples." Ensign 5 (Dec. 1975); the entire issue devoted to this topic.
- De Hoyos, Arturo. The Old and the Modern Lamanite. Provo, Utah, 1970.
- Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Tyler, S. Lyman. Modern Results of the Lamanite Dispersion: The Indians of the Americas. Provo, Utah, 1965.
- Widtsoe, John A., and Franklin S. Harris, Jr. Seven Claims of the Book of Mormon. Independence, Mo., 1935.

GORDON C. THOMASSON

LAST DAYS

The term "last days" refers to the current period of time, the preparatory era before the second coming of the Christ. This period is marked by prophetic signs (D&C 45:37–40). "The end of the world" is not the end of the earth, but the end of evil and the triumph of righteousness (JS—H 1:4). At the conclusion of these last days, the Lord Jesus Christ will come again and personally reign upon the renewed "paradisiacal" earth (A of F 10).

During the last days, many marvelous events will occur that are signs that this preparatory period has begun (Isa. 29:14). These include the RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST, the preaching of his gospel among all nations, the coming forth of modern scripture, and the gathering of scattered Israel. The restoration of the gospel before the coming of the Lord (Acts 3:19–21) includes the revealing anew of lost truths, priesthood power, temple worship, and the full organization of the Church of Jesus Christ, including apostles and prophets.

Christ prophesied that his gospel would be preached "in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:1, 4). The Savior also foretold to Enoch that in the last days righteousness would come "down out of heaven," and truth will come "forth out of the earth" to bear testimony of Jesus Christ and of "his resurrection from the dead" (Moses 7:62). The Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price have come forth in partial fulfillment of these prophecies. Additional sacred writings are yet to come forth (cf. 2 Ne. 29:13; Ether 4:5–7).

A further sign will be the gathering of Israel. The house of Joseph is to be gathered to the "tops of the mountains" of the Western Hemisphere (Isa. 2:2) and to "stakes" (centers of strength) in many lands (HC 3:390–91). The house of Judah will gather by the millions to Jerusalem and its environs in fulfillment of prophecy (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, p. 240; DS 3:257–59). Another gathering will bring the lost tribes of Israel "from the north countries," to join with the house of Joseph (DS 3:306).

In contrast to these preparatory events, the prophecies state that in the last days gross wickedness will cover the earth (2 Tim. 3:1–7). Ancient and modern prophets have written that the world's latter-day inhabitants will "defile the earth" (Isa.

LAMB OF GOD

See: Jesus Christ: Names and Titles of

24:5) and become as wicked as Sodom and Gomorrah (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, p. 224) and as those of the time of Noah (DS 3:20), and that if Jesus “were here to-day, and should preach the same doctrine He did then, they would put Him to death” (HC 6:58).

This wickedness will result in wars of unprecedented destruction (George A. Smith, CR, Oct. 1946, p. 149), parents and children seeking each other’s lives (Mark 13:12; HC 3:391), great increases in crime (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, p. 228), the destruction of many cities (Brigham Young in Ludlow, p. 223), and a “desolating scourge” that will reach plague proportions (D&C 29:19).

As the end nears, the earth will be in commotion (D&C 45:26; cf. Joel 2:30–32). There will be severe lightnings and thunderings (D&C 87:6). The waves of the sea will heave themselves beyond their bounds (D&C 88:90). The earth will “reel to and fro as a drunken man” (D&C 49:23). A devastating hailstorm will destroy the crops of the earth (D&C 29:16), causing widespread famine (Brigham Young in Ludlow, p. 223). These judgments and wars will ultimately result in the “full end” of all nations (D&C 87:6).

Immediately preceding the Second Coming, unmistakable signs will appear in the heavens. The sun will be darkened, the moon will turn to blood, the stars will fall, and the powers of heaven will be shaken (D&C 45:42). In addition, the rainbow will be taken from the sky (HC 6:254). Finally, a great sign will be seen having the appearance of “seven golden lamps set in the heavens representing the various dispensations of God to man” (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, pp. 233–34). There will then be silence in heaven for half an hour, and “immediately after shall the curtain of heaven be unfolded as a scroll is unfolded after it is rolled up, and the face of the Lord shall be unveiled” (D&C 88:95).

As the earth becomes increasingly full of violence and immorality, the righteous will be watching the signs of the times and will call upon the Lord and seek to be worthy to abide the day of his coming (Luke 21:36; Acts 2:21). These faithful disciples of the Lord will experience “very little compared with the terrible destruction, the misery and suffering that will overtake the world” (John Taylor in Ludlow, p. 225; Moses 7:61); moreover, the righteous who fall victim to pestilence and to disease will be saved in the kingdom of God (HC 4:11).

To escape these judgments, the faithful will obey the commandments (DS 3:33–35; Luke 21:36), honor the priesthood (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, pp. 235–36), take the Holy Spirit for their guide (D&C 45:57), and stand in holy places (D&C 45:32). As the polarization of the righteous and the wicked increases, the righteous followers of the Savior will be called “Zion” (both the condition of purity of heart and the community of the pure-hearted). A city, Zion (the NEW JERUSALEM), will be established on the American continent and, together with her outlying stakes, will be a place of refuge (HC 3:391). And old Jerusalem will become a holy city (Ether 13:5). From these two capital cities of the millennial era, Jesus Christ will personally rule the renewed, paradisiacal world (see NEW JERUSALEM).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ludlow, Daniel H. Latter-day Prophets Speak. Salt Lake City, 1951.
Lund, Gerald N. The Coming of the Lord. Salt Lake City, 1971.

GRANT E. BARTON

---

LAST SUPPER

See: Sacrament

---

LATTER-DAY SAINTS (LDS)

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (D&C 115:4) sees itself as a RESTORATION of the original Church of Jesus Christ “of Former-day Saints.” Members of the Church in the time of Christ are often referred to as “saints.” Actually, the word “saint” predates Christ, and it is used thirty-six times in the Old Testament. It appears sixty-two times in the New Testament. The term “Christian” appears only three times in the New Testament, used by others to identify the followers of Christ. At the time of Christ and the Apostles, the term “saint” was accepted as a proper name for anyone who was a member of the Church, and was not used as a term of special sanctity as in earlier and later traditions. The phrase “latter days” designates the period leading to the LAST DAYS and the series of events that will culminate in the reappearance of Christ to all the world. By referring to themselves as Latter-day Saints, members of the Church reaffirm their historical tie to original

24:5) and become as wicked as Sodom and Gomorrah (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, p. 224) and as those of the time of Noah (DS 3:20), and that if Jesus “were here to-day, and should preach the same doctrine He did then, they would put Him to death” (HC 6:58).

This wickedness will result in wars of unprecedented destruction (George A. Smith, CR, Oct. 1946, p. 149), parents and children seeking each other’s lives (Mark 13:12; HC 3:391), great increases in crime (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, p. 228), the destruction of many cities (Brigham Young in Ludlow, p. 223), and a “desolating scourge” that will reach plague proportions (D&C 29:19).

As the end nears, the earth will be in commotion (D&C 45:26; cf. Joel 2:30–32). There will be severe lightnings and thunderings (D&C 87:6). The waves of the sea will heave themselves beyond their bounds (D&C 88:90). The earth will “reel to and fro as a drunken man” (D&C 49:23). A devastating hailstorm will destroy the crops of the earth (D&C 29:16), causing widespread famine (Brigham Young in Ludlow, p. 223). These judgments and wars will ultimately result in the “full end” of all nations (D&C 87:6).

Immediately preceding the Second Coming, unmistakable signs will appear in the heavens. The sun will be darkened, the moon will turn to blood, the stars will fall, and the powers of heaven will be shaken (D&C 45:42). In addition, the rainbow will be taken from the sky (HC 6:254). Finally, a great sign will be seen having the appearance of “seven golden lamps set in the heavens representing the various dispensations of God to man” (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, pp. 233–34). There will then be silence in heaven for half an hour, and “immediately after shall the curtain of heaven be unfolded as a scroll is unfolded after it is rolled up, and the face of the Lord shall be unveiled” (D&C 88:95).

As the earth becomes increasingly full of violence and immorality, the righteous will be watching the signs of the times and will call upon the Lord and seek to be worthy to abide the day of his coming (Luke 21:36; Acts 2:21). These faithful disciples of the Lord will experience “very little compared with the terrible destruction, the misery and suffering that will overtake the world” (John Taylor in Ludlow, p. 225; Moses 7:61); moreover, the righteous who fall victim to pestilence and to disease will be saved in the kingdom of God (HC 4:11).

To escape these judgments, the faithful will obey the commandments (DS 3:33–35; Luke 21:36), honor the priesthood (Wilford Woodruff in Ludlow, pp. 235–36), take the Holy Spirit for their guide (D&C 45:57), and stand in holy places (D&C 45:32). As the polarization of the righteous and the wicked increases, the righteous followers of the Savior will be called “Zion” (both the condition of purity of heart and the community of the pure-hearted). A city, Zion (the NEW JERUSALEM), will be established on the American continent and, together with her outlying stakes, will be a place of refuge (HC 3:391). And old Jerusalem will become a holy city (Ether 13:5). From these two capital cities of the millennial era, Jesus Christ will personally rule the renewed, paradisiacal world (see NEW JERUSALEM).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ludlow, Daniel H. Latter-day Prophets Speak. Salt Lake City, 1951.
Lund, Gerald N. The Coming of the Lord. Salt Lake City, 1971.

GRANT E. BARTON

---

LAST SUPPER

See: Sacrament

---

LATTER-DAY SAINTS (LDS)

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (D&C 115:4) sees itself as a RESTORATION of the original Church of Jesus Christ “of Former-day Saints.” Members of the Church in the time of Christ are often referred to as “saints.” Actually, the word “saint” predates Christ, and it is used thirty-six times in the Old Testament. It appears sixty-two times in the New Testament. The term “Christian” appears only three times in the New Testament, used by others to identify the followers of Christ. At the time of Christ and the Apostles, the term “saint” was accepted as a proper name for anyone who was a member of the Church, and was not used as a term of special sanctity as in earlier and later traditions. The phrase “latter days” designates the period leading to the LAST DAYS and the series of events that will culminate in the reappearance of Christ to all the world. By referring to themselves as Latter-day Saints, members of the Church reaffirm their historical tie to original

Christians (the Former-day Saints of the New Testament) but differentiate the two time periods. Also, they are striving to become sanctified through obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

The name unites three themes: (1) the restoration theme, since the term has a New Testament origin; (2) the preparation theme, since the Saints in the latter days anticipate the coming of Christ; and (3) the revelation theme, since the name was received by revelation and recorded in Doctrine and Covenants, section 115.

It is interesting to some that the people of the DEAD SEA SCROLLS also called themselves Latter-day Saints. These individuals believed themselves tied to the PROPHETS and the COVENANT (hence the name Saint) and anticipated the imminent coming of the MESSIAH (hence the term Latter-day).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nelson, Russell M. "Thus Shall My Church Be Called." Ensign 5 (May 1990):16–18.

Cross, Frank M., Jr. The Ancient Library of Qumran. New York, 1961.

ROBERT F. BENNETT

---

LAW

[Four different articles treat diverse aspects of LDS beliefs and experience with law. Two of the articles are grouped below:

Overview

Divine and Eternal Law

The Overview discusses the LDS concept of law in general and of divine and eternal law in particular. Divine and Eternal Law summarizes and describes the references in LDS scripture to the central role of law as pertaining to God.

The article Nature, Law of discusses the absence of a developed tradition of moral natural law among Latter-day Saints and describes their limited efforts to provide rational explanations for the laws of nature as described by the natural sciences. Constitutional Law summarizes the LDS respect for civil law in general and American constitutional law in particular.

The experience of Latter-day Saints and the Church in the courts is reported in Legal and Judicial History. Book of Mormon legal traditions and experience are described in Book of Mormon, Government and Legal History in. Regarding LDS views on specific aspects of civil law, see also Church and State; Civic Duties; Civil Rights; Constitution of the United States of America; Freedom; and Politics: Political Teachings. For information on other law-related topics, see Justice and Mercy; Law of Moses; and Witnesses, Law of. Commandments and gospel principles are often referred to as "laws"; on these subjects, see such entries as Commandments; Consecration: Law of Consecration; and Obedience.]

OVERVIEW

Three types of laws exist: spiritual or divine laws, laws of nature, and civil laws. Latter-day Saints are deeply and consistently law-oriented, because laws, whether spiritual, physical, or civil, are rules defining existence and guiding action. Through the observance of laws, blessings and rewards are expected, and by the violation of laws, suffering, deprivation, and even punishment will result.

Basic LDS attitudes toward law and jurisprudence are shaped primarily by revelations contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, and by explanations given by the Presidents of the Church. God is, by definition, a god of order: "Behold, mine house is a house of order, saith the Lord God, and not a house of confusion" (D&C 132:8). God and law are inseparable, for if there is no law, there is no sin; and if there is no sin, there is no righteousness, "and if these things are not there is no God" (2 Ne. 2:13). Law emanates from God through Christ. Jesus said, "I am the law, and the light" (3 Ne. 15:9), and God's word is his law (D&C 132:12).

In an 1832 revelation, Joseph SMITH learned that law is a pervasive manifestation of God's light and power: "The light which is in all things . . . is the law by which all things are governed" (D&C 88:12–13). In connection with both spiritual law and natural law, no space or relationship occurs in which law is nonexistent. "There are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; . . . and unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions" (D&C 88:37–38).

There are as many laws as there are kingdoms, which reflect greater or lesser light and truth. Some laws are higher, and some are lower. The kingdom of God operates in accordance with higher laws befitting God's exalted station, while the earth and all mortality and other kingdoms belong to lower spheres and therefore operate under different laws. The degree of glory that a person or thing can abide depends on how high a law he, she, or it is able to abide (D&C 88:22–25).

Christians (the Former-day Saints of the New Testament) but differentiate the two time periods. Also, they are striving to become sanctified through obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

The name unites three themes: (1) the restoration theme, since the term has a New Testament origin; (2) the preparation theme, since the Saints in the latter days anticipate the coming of Christ; and (3) the revelation theme, since the name was received by revelation and recorded in Doctrine and Covenants, section 115.

It is interesting to some that the people of the DEAD SEA SCROLLS also called themselves Latter-day Saints. These individuals believed themselves tied to the PROPHETS and the COVENANT (hence the name Saint) and anticipated the imminent coming of the MESSIAH (hence the term Latter-day).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nelson, Russell M. "Thus Shall My Church Be Called." Ensign 5 (May 1990):16–18.

Cross, Frank M., Jr. The Ancient Library of Qumran. New York, 1961.

ROBERT F. BENNETT

---

LAW

[Four different articles treat diverse aspects of LDS beliefs and experience with law. Two of the articles are grouped below:

Overview

Divine and Eternal Law

The Overview discusses the LDS concept of law in general and of divine and eternal law in particular. Divine and Eternal Law summarizes and describes the references in LDS scripture to the central role of law as pertaining to God.

The article Nature, Law of discusses the absence of a developed tradition of moral natural law among Latter-day Saints and describes their limited efforts to provide rational explanations for the laws of nature as described by the natural sciences. Constitutional Law summarizes the LDS respect for civil law in general and American constitutional law in particular.

The experience of Latter-day Saints and the Church in the courts is reported in Legal and Judicial History. Book of Mormon legal traditions and experience are described in Book of Mormon, Government and Legal History in. Regarding LDS views on specific aspects of civil law, see also Church and State; Civic Duties; Civil Rights; Constitution of the United States of America; Freedom; and Politics: Political Teachings. For information on other law-related topics, see Justice and Mercy; Law of Moses; and Witnesses, Law of. Commandments and gospel principles are often referred to as "laws"; on these subjects, see such entries as Commandments; Consecration: Law of Consecration; and Obedience.]

OVERVIEW

Three types of laws exist: spiritual or divine laws, laws of nature, and civil laws. Latter-day Saints are deeply and consistently law-oriented, because laws, whether spiritual, physical, or civil, are rules defining existence and guiding action. Through the observance of laws, blessings and rewards are expected, and by the violation of laws, suffering, deprivation, and even punishment will result.

Basic LDS attitudes toward law and jurisprudence are shaped primarily by revelations contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, and by explanations given by the Presidents of the Church. God is, by definition, a god of order: "Behold, mine house is a house of order, saith the Lord God, and not a house of confusion" (D&C 132:8). God and law are inseparable, for if there is no law, there is no sin; and if there is no sin, there is no righteousness, "and if these things are not there is no God" (2 Ne. 2:13). Law emanates from God through Christ. Jesus said, "I am the law, and the light" (3 Ne. 15:9), and God's word is his law (D&C 132:12).

In an 1832 revelation, Joseph SMITH learned that law is a pervasive manifestation of God's light and power: "The light which is in all things . . . is the law by which all things are governed" (D&C 88:12–13). In connection with both spiritual law and natural law, no space or relationship occurs in which law is nonexistent. "There are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; . . . and unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions" (D&C 88:37–38).

There are as many laws as there are kingdoms, which reflect greater or lesser light and truth. Some laws are higher, and some are lower. The kingdom of God operates in accordance with higher laws befitting God's exalted station, while the earth and all mortality and other kingdoms belong to lower spheres and therefore operate under different laws. The degree of glory that a person or thing can abide depends on how high a law he, she, or it is able to abide (D&C 88:22–25).

Lower laws are subsumed in higher laws. If people keep the laws of God, they have “no need to break the laws of the land” (D&C 58:21). Similarly, when the law of Moses was fulfilled by Jesus Christ, it was subsumed in him.

Existence is a process of progressively learning to obey higher law. Obeying and conforming to law are understood as a sign of growth, maturity, and understanding, and greater obedience to law produces greater freedom (D&C 98:5) and associated blessings (D&C 130:20–21).

At all levels, the principles of AGENCY and ACCOUNTABILITY are in effect: People may choose which laws to obey or to ignore, but God will hold them accountable and reward them accordingly (D&C 82:4). This is not viewed as a threat; law’s purpose is not to force or punish but to guide and provide structure.

In the divine or spiritual sphere, law is not the product of a philosophical or theoretical search for what is right or good. It emanates from deity and is revealed through Jesus Christ and his prophets.

Spiritual laws given by God to mankind are commonly called COMMANDMENTS, which consist variously of prohibitions (“thou shalt not”), requirements (“thou shalt”), and prescriptions (“if a man”). The commandments are uniformly coupled with promised blessings for faithful compliance. Thus, Latter-day Saints describe themselves as covenant people who may be rewarded now, and in the hereafter, for their faithfulness. Many such COVENANTS are bilateral in character; that is, members make personal commitments in a variety of formal ordinances to keep in accord with certain commandments.

Spiritual laws, or God’s commandments, are generally understood to have been purposefully decreed by a loving Heavenly Father, who desires to bring to pass the exaltation of his spirit children. Thus, “there is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated” (D&C 130:20). Latter-day Saints believe that God knows or stipulates all types of acts and forbearances required by all individuals in order for them to attain that blessed eternal state of exaltation and that he has revealed these requirements to humankind through his servants. No law given of God is temporal (D&C 29:34).

“Irrevocability” in the foregoing quotation connotes permanence and unchangeability. Since

God cannot lie, the commandments and promises contained in his covenants with people will not be revoked, though he can revoke a specific commandment to individuals when they have disobeyed (D&C 56:3–6). The fundamentals are not situational and do not ebb and flow with changing concepts of morality or theology outside the Church. The President of the Church is a prophet of God who receives revelations and inspiration to interpret and apply those basic principles as human circumstances change.

In accordance with the principle of agency, God commands, but he does not compel. No earthly mechanism exists for the enforcement of God’s laws. The prophet teaches the members correct principles, and they are expected to govern themselves. Missionary work and education of Church members are carried out so that people may make informed choices. They are taught that making an informed choice results either in a blessing (current or deferred) or an undesirable consequence (current or deferred). Ignorance of the law is considered a legitimate excuse. Because of the atonement of Jesus Christ, repentance is not required of those “who have ignorantly sinned” or “who have died not knowing the will of God concerning them” (Mosiah 3:11), even though failure to abide by the commandment may result in the loss of blessings that would flow from proper conduct. In most cases, violators of divine law can escape the punishment connected with the offense by repentance, the demands of justice having been satisfied by the atonement of Christ in the interest of all (see JUSTICE AND MERCY).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Firmage, Edwin B., and Christopher L. Blakesley. “J. Reuben Clark, Jr.: Law and International Order.” BYU Studies 13 (Spring 1973):273–346.
- Garrard, LaMar E. “God, Natural Law, and the Doctrine and Covenants.” In Doctrines for Exaltation, pp. 55–76. Salt Lake City, 1989.

JOHN S. WELCH

DIVINE AND ETERNAL LAW

LDS revelation emphasizes the existence and indispensability of law. The relation of divine law to other species of law has not been given systematic treatment in Mormon thought as it has in traditional Christian theology (e.g., the Summa Theolo- gica of Thomas Aquinas). But distinctive observations about divine law and eternal law may be drawn from Latter-day scriptures and related sources.

Aquinas identified four categories of law: (1) eternal law, which is coextensive with the divine mind and with the overall purpose and plan of God; (2) natural law, which addresses mankind's proper participation in eternal law but is discovered by reason without the assistance of revelation and promulgation; (3) divine positive law, also a part of the eternal law, which pertains to the SACRAMENTS and ORDINANCES necessary to the attainment of mankind's supernatural end made known by revelation; and (4) man-made positive law, which regulates the affairs of mankind not specifically addressed by God's law (e.g., laws that regulate such things as corporations, stocks, bonds, wills, and trusts) or which mandate the natural law with the power of the state.

LDS sources affirm laws roughly corresponding to each of these four types. Unlike traditional Jewish and Christian theologies, which place God outside of, and antecedent to, nature, however, LDS theology places God within nature.

"Divine" laws are instituted by God to govern his creations and kingdoms and to prescribe behavior for his offspring. Such law, in the terms of Aquinas's categories, would be divine positive law (i.e., law existing by virtue of being posited or enacted by God). Some Latter-day Saints believe that "eternal" law is self-existent, unauthored law, which God himself honors and administers as a condition of his perfection and Godhood. It should be noted that the adjectives "divine" and "eternal" do not have fixed usages in writing (see TIME AND ETERNITY).

Latter-day scriptures and other sources do not explicitly state that eternal law exists independently or coeternally with God. This characteristic of eternal law is sometimes inferred, however, from two concepts that do have support in scripture and other LDS sources:

1. God is governed (bound) by law. Latter-day scriptures state that "God would cease to be God" if he were to allow mercy to destroy justice, or justice to overpower mercy, or the plan of redemption to be fulfilled on unjust conditions (Alma 42:13). Scriptures further state that "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say" (D&C 82:10), implying that God by nature and definition—not by any external coercion—is righteous and trustworthy. Some Church writers have said that "[God] himself governs and is governed by law" (MD, p. 432) and that "the Lord works in accordance with natural law" (DS 2:27). They likewise speak of "higher laws" that account for providence and miracles.

2. Intelligence and truth were not created; they are coeternal with God. "Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be. All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself, as all intelligence also; otherwise there is no existence" (D&C 93:29–30). Joseph Smith expanded upon this teaching in his KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE, stating that "we infer that God had materials to organize the world out of chaos. . . . Element had an existence from the time he had. The pure principles of element . . . had no beginning, and can have no end. . . . The mind or the intelligence which man possesses is coeternal with God himself" (TPJS, pp. 350–53). If truth and intelligence were not created by God and are coeternal with him, it may be that they are ordered by and function according to eternal laws or principles that are self-existent. This may be implied in Joseph Smith's phrase "laws of eternal and self-existent principles" (TPJS, p. 181).

Consistent with the eternal laws, God fashions and decrees laws that operate in the worlds he creates and that set standards of behavior that must be observed in order to obtain the blessing promised upon obedience to that law. Joseph Smith taught that "[God] was the first Author of law, or the principle of it, to mankind" (TPJS, p. 56).

Latter-day scriptures emphasize the pervasive nature of divine law: "[God] hath given a law unto all things, by which they move in their times and their seasons" (D&C 88:42). "This is the light of Christ . . . which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space—The light which is in all things, which giveth life to all things, which is the law by which all things are governed, even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne" (D&C 88:7, 12–13).

These same sources suggest, however, that divine law operates within the domain to which it inherently pertains or is assigned by God and, therefore, has limits or bounds: "All kingdoms have a law given; and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or a lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions" (D&C 88:36–38).

The above references apparently pertain to descriptive law—that is, the divine law that operates directly upon or through physical and biological orders (see NATURE, LAW OF).

Other laws of God are prescriptive. They address the free will of man, setting forth standards and rules of behavior necessary for salvation and for social harmony. Latter-day Saints embrace such prescriptive commands of God as found in the TEN COMMANDMENTS and the SERMON ON THE MOUNT. Latter-day revelation also confirms that blessings and salvation come through compliance with divine laws: "There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—and when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated" (D&C 130:20–21). "And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom" (D&C 88:21).

Of these prescriptive laws or commandments of God, LDS teachings tend to emphasize the following characteristics: (1) the extent of the divine laws revealed to mankind may vary from dispensation to dispensation, according to the needs and conditions of mankind as God decrees; (2) they are given through and interpreted by his prophets; (3) they are relatively concise, but "gentle" or benevolent, given to promote the happiness he has designed for his children (TPJS, pp. 256–57); and (4) they are efficacious for mankind as God's harmony with eternal law was, and is, efficacious for him, and will bring to pass the exaltation of his righteous children.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Aquinas, Thomas. Summa Theologica 1266–73, trans. the Fathers of the English Dominican Province. London, 1915.
Widtsoe, John A. A Rational Theology. Salt Lake City, 1952.

CARL S. HAWKINS
DOUGLAS H. PARKER

---

LAW OF ADOPTION

The house of Israel in a spiritual and eternal perspective will finally include all who are the true followers of Jesus Christ. Although those of the direct blood lineage of the house of ISRAEL are genealogically the sheep of God's fold, they must fulfill all the spiritual conditions of discipleship. Those not of the blood of Israel can become Israel through adoption (cf. Rom. 8:14; Gal. 3:7, 29; 4:5–7; Matt. 3:9; JST Luke 3:8; Abr. 2:10), through the principles and the ordinances of the gospel: faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; repentance of sins; baptism by water and reception of the HOLY GHOST; and enduring to the end.

In a larger sense, everyone must be adopted into the family of God in order to enjoy the fulness of his blessings in the world to come. As the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, Jesus is the only natural HEIR and therefore the only one whose birthright is the kingdom of his Father. If others are to qualify as joint-heirs with Christ in his Father's kingdom, they must be fully adopted by God.

The adoption process is, in the Prophet Joseph SMITH's words, "a new creation by the Holy Ghost" (TPJS, p. 150). As summarized in the Doctrine and Covenants, individuals who enter into the COVENANT and "magnify their calling" are "sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies. They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God" (D&C 84:33–34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Irving, Gordon. "The Law of Adoption: One Phase in the Development of Mormon Concept of Salvation, 1830–1900." BYU Studies 14 (Spring 1974):291–314.

V. BEN BLOXHAM

---

LAW OF MOSES

Distinctive views concerning the law of Moses and its relationship to Christ and to the attainment of individual salvation are set forth in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that this law was given by God to MOSES, that it formed part of a peculiar COVENANT of obedience have a law given; and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or a lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions" (D&C 88:36–38).

The above references apparently pertain to descriptive law—that is, the divine law that operates directly upon or through physical and biological orders (see NATURE, LAW OF).

Other laws of God are prescriptive. They address the free will of man, setting forth standards and rules of behavior necessary for salvation and for social harmony. Latter-day Saints embrace such prescriptive commands of God as found in the TEN COMMANDMENTS and the SERMON ON THE MOUNT. Latter-day revelation also confirms that blessings and salvation come through compliance with divine laws: "There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—and when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated" (D&C 130:20–21). "And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom" (D&C 88:21).

Of these prescriptive laws or commandments of God, LDS teachings tend to emphasize the following characteristics: (1) the extent of the divine laws revealed to mankind may vary from dispensation to dispensation, according to the needs and conditions of mankind as God decrees; (2) they are given through and interpreted by his prophets; (3) they are relatively concise, but "gentle" or benevolent, given to promote the happiness he has designed for his children (TPJS, pp. 256–57); and (4) they are efficacious for mankind as God's harmony with eternal law was, and is, efficacious for him, and will bring to pass the exaltation of his righteous children.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Aquinas, Thomas. Summa Theologica 1266–73, trans. the Fathers of the English Dominican Province. London, 1915.
Widtsoe, John A. A Rational Theology. Salt Lake City, 1952.

CARL S. HAWKINS
DOUGLAS H. PARKER

---

LAW OF ADOPTION

The house of Israel in a spiritual and eternal perspective will finally include all who are the true followers of Jesus Christ. Although those of the direct blood lineage of the house of ISRAEL are genealogically the sheep of God's fold, they must fulfill all the spiritual conditions of discipleship. Those not of the blood of Israel can become Israel through adoption (cf. Rom. 8:14; Gal. 3:7, 29; 4:5–7; Matt. 3:9; JST Luke 3:8; Abr. 2:10), through the principles and the ordinances of the gospel: faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; repentance of sins; baptism by water and reception of the HOLY GHOST; and enduring to the end.

In a larger sense, everyone must be adopted into the family of God in order to enjoy the fulness of his blessings in the world to come. As the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, Jesus is the only natural HEIR and therefore the only one whose birthright is the kingdom of his Father. If others are to qualify as joint-heirs with Christ in his Father's kingdom, they must be fully adopted by God.

The adoption process is, in the Prophet Joseph SMITH's words, "a new creation by the Holy Ghost" (TPJS, p. 150). As summarized in the Doctrine and Covenants, individuals who enter into the COVENANT and "magnify their calling" are "sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies. They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God" (D&C 84:33–34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Irving, Gordon. "The Law of Adoption: One Phase in the Development of Mormon Concept of Salvation, 1830–1900." BYU Studies 14 (Spring 1974):291–314.

V. BEN BLOXHAM

---

LAW OF MOSES

Distinctive views concerning the law of Moses and its relationship to Christ and to the attainment of individual salvation are set forth in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that this law was given by God to MOSES, that it formed part of a peculiar COVENANT of obedience have a law given; and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or a lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions" (D&C 88:36–38).

The above references apparently pertain to descriptive law—that is, the divine law that operates directly upon or through physical and biological orders (see NATURE, LAW OF).

Other laws of God are prescriptive. They address the free will of man, setting forth standards and rules of behavior necessary for salvation and for social harmony. Latter-day Saints embrace such prescriptive commands of God as found in the TEN COMMANDMENTS and the SERMON ON THE MOUNT. Latter-day revelation also confirms that blessings and salvation come through compliance with divine laws: "There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—and when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated" (D&C 130:20–21). "And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom" (D&C 88:21).

Of these prescriptive laws or commandments of God, LDS teachings tend to emphasize the following characteristics: (1) the extent of the divine laws revealed to mankind may vary from dispensation to dispensation, according to the needs and conditions of mankind as God decrees; (2) they are given through and interpreted by his prophets; (3) they are relatively concise, but "gentle" or benevolent, given to promote the happiness he has designed for his children (TPJS, pp. 256–57); and (4) they are efficacious for mankind as God's harmony with eternal law was, and is, efficacious for him, and will bring to pass the exaltation of his righteous children.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Aquinas, Thomas. Summa Theologica 1266–73, trans. the Fathers of the English Dominican Province. London, 1915.
Widtsoe, John A. A Rational Theology. Salt Lake City, 1952.

CARL S. HAWKINS
DOUGLAS H. PARKER

---

LAW OF ADOPTION

The house of Israel in a spiritual and eternal perspective will finally include all who are the true followers of Jesus Christ. Although those of the direct blood lineage of the house of ISRAEL are genealogically the sheep of God's fold, they must fulfill all the spiritual conditions of discipleship. Those not of the blood of Israel can become Israel through adoption (cf. Rom. 8:14; Gal. 3:7, 29; 4:5–7; Matt. 3:9; JST Luke 3:8; Abr. 2:10), through the principles and the ordinances of the gospel: faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; repentance of sins; baptism by water and reception of the HOLY GHOST; and enduring to the end.

In a larger sense, everyone must be adopted into the family of God in order to enjoy the fulness of his blessings in the world to come. As the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, Jesus is the only natural HEIR and therefore the only one whose birthright is the kingdom of his Father. If others are to qualify as joint-heirs with Christ in his Father's kingdom, they must be fully adopted by God.

The adoption process is, in the Prophet Joseph SMITH's words, "a new creation by the Holy Ghost" (TPJS, p. 150). As summarized in the Doctrine and Covenants, individuals who enter into the COVENANT and "magnify their calling" are "sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies. They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God" (D&C 84:33–34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Irving, Gordon. "The Law of Adoption: One Phase in the Development of Mormon Concept of Salvation, 1830–1900." BYU Studies 14 (Spring 1974):291–314.

V. BEN BLOXHAM

---

LAW OF MOSES

Distinctive views concerning the law of Moses and its relationship to Christ and to the attainment of individual salvation are set forth in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that this law was given by God to MOSES, that it formed part of a peculiar COVENANT of obedience and favor between God and his people, that it symbolized and foreshadowed things to come, and that it was fulfilled in the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST.

The law of Moses is best understood in a broad sense. It consists of “judgments,” “statutes,” “ordinances,” and “commandments.” The Book of Mormon refers to its also including various “performances,” “sacrifices,” and “burnt offerings.” Nowhere in scripture is its full breadth, depth, diversity, and definition made explicit. On such matters, information can be drawn from the Pentateuch itself (the Torah) and from biblical scholarship, but one can only conjecture as to what these terms meant to Book of Mormon writers.

A narrow definition would confine the law of Moses to a body of prohibitions and commands set forth in separate, unrelated literary units within the first five books of the Bible. This view makes it difficult to speak of “biblical law,” since these provisions are not drawn together as a unity by the Torah itself. The scattered codes and series include the Covenant Code (Ex. 20:23–23:19), Deuteronomic Law (Deut. 12–26), the Holiness Code (Lev. 17–26), purity laws (Lev. 11–15), festival rituals (Deut. 16), regulations pertaining to sacrifices (Num. 28–29), and the TEN COMMANDMENTS (Ex. 20:2–17; Deut. 5:6–21). While some biblical scholars conclude that “these were once independent units, subsisting in their own right, each having its own purpose and sphere of validity, and having been transmitted individually for its own sake in the first place” (Noth, p. 7), Latter-day Saints generally accept at face value statements in the Bible that attribute authorship to Moses, but the Church has taken no official stand concerning the collection and transmission of these legal texts in the Pentateuch. Scribes and copyists evidently made a few changes after the time of Moses (e.g., compare Moses 1–5 with Gen. 1–6).

Compounding the question of what was meant by the term “law of Moses” in the Book of Mormon is the fact that the “five books of Moses” that the Nephites possessed predated Ezra’s redaction and canonization of the Pentateuch (444 B.C.). Quoted passages (e.g., Mosiah 13:12–24), however, indicate that the Nephite laws were substantially similar to the biblical texts that Jews and Christians have today.

As early as the third century A.D., the Jewish view held that the commandments numbered 613. Rabbi Simlai reportedly stated that “613 commandments were revealed to Moses at Sinai, 365 being prohibitions equal in number to the solar days, and 248 being mandates corresponding in number to the limbs [sic] of the human body” (Encyclopedia Judaica 5:760, quoting Talmud Bavli, Makkot 23b). About a third of these commandments have long been obsolete, such as those relating to the tabernacle and the conquest of Canaan. Others were directed to special classes, such as the Nazarites, judges, the king, or the high priest, or to circumstances that would rarely occur. Excluding these, about a hundred apply to the whole people and range from the spiritually sublime to the mundane. Examples of eternally relevant commandments of the law of Moses are the Ten Commandments and those relating to loving God, worshiping God, loving one’s neighbor, loving the stranger, giving charity to the poor, dealing honestly, not seeking revenge, and not bearing a grudge. Other commandments cover a kaleidoscope of daily matters, including valuing houses and fields, laws of inheritance, paying wages, agriculture, animal husbandry, and forbidden foods. Jewish scholars classify these as commandments vis-à-vis God and commandments vis-à-vis fellow human beings (Mishnah Yoma 8:9).

Two other definitions should be mentioned. One identifies the law of Moses as coextensive with the Pentateuch. Around the time of Christ, New Testament writers sometimes called the Pentateuch “the law” (Luke 24:44; Gal. 4:21), even though the word “torah” has broader meaning (i.e., “teachings”) and the Pentateuch contains poetry and narratives in addition to commandments, and some passages speak to all persons and nations (Gen. 9:1–7). The other defines the law as theologically synonymous with the doctrinal belief, whether mistaken or not, that salvation is dependent upon the keeping of commandments, thus distinguishing the law from grace, which for many Christians eliminates the task of sorting out which Mosaic laws are still in force.

Agreeing in some respects and departing in others from traditional Jewish or Christian views, the main lines of LDS belief about the law of Moses are as follows:

1. Jesus Christ was JEHOVAH, the God of the Old Testament who gave the law to Moses (3 Ne. 15:5; TPJS, p. 276). Jesus, speaking after his atonement and resurrection, stated, “The law is fulfilled that was given unto Moses. Behold, I am he that gave the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel" (3 Ne. 15:4–9).

2. The entire law was in several senses fulfilled, completed, superseded, and enlivened by Jesus Christ. Jesus said, "In me it hath all been fulfilled" (3 Ne. 12:17–18). Its "great and eternal gospel truths" (MD, p. 398) are applicable through Jesus Christ in all dispensations as he continues to reveal his will to prophets "like unto Moses" (2 Ne. 3:9–11).

3. Latter-day Saints believe that the law of Moses was issued to the Israelites as a preparatory gospel to be a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ and the fulness of his gospel (Gal. 3:24; cf. Jacob 4:5; Alma 34:14). The authority to act in the name of God is embodied in two priesthoods, the Melchizedek or higher, which embraces all divinely delegated authority and extends to the fulness of the law of the gospel, and Aaronic or lesser, which extends only to lesser things, such as the law of carnal commandments and baptism (D&C 84:26–27). While Moses and his predecessors had the higher PRIESTHOOD and the fulness of the gospel of Christ, both of which were to be given to the children of Israel, "they hardened their hearts and could not endure [God's] presence; therefore, the Lord in his wrath . . . took Moses out of their midst, and the Holy Priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued" (D&C 84:23–24; see Heb. 3:16–19; Mosiah 3:14; TPJS, p. 60).

4. Book of Mormon people brought the law of Moses with them from Jerusalem. Even though they endeavored to observe it strictly until the coming of Christ (e.g., 2 Ne. 5:10; Alma 30:3), they believed in Christ and knew that salvation did not come by the law alone but by Christ (2 Ne. 25:23–24), and understood that the law would be superseded by the Messiah (Mosiah 13:27–28; 2 Ne. 25:23–25).

5. For Latter-day Saints, all things are given of God to man as types and shadows of the redeeming and atoning acts of Christ (2 Ne. 11:4; Mosiah 13:31). Thus, the law of Moses typified various aspects of the atonement of Christ.

6. Covenant making, promises, and obedience to commandments are part of the fulness of the gospel of Christ: "Through the Atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel" (A of F 3). Both for Latter-day Saints and regarding Jewish observance of the law of Moses, GRACE, FAITH, and WORKS are all essential to salvation: "It is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do" (2 Ne. 25:23). No mortal's obedience to law will ever be perfect. By law alone, no one will be saved. The grace of God makes up the deficit. The Church does not subscribe to a doctrine of free-standing grace unrelated to instructions and expectations required of man. It does have commandments relating to diet (see WORD OF WISDOM), MODESTY, and CHASTITY, as well as many ORDINANCES, such as BAPTISM, LAYING ON OF HANDS, and WASHING AND ANOINTING. If man were perfect, salvation could come on that account; walking in the way of the Lord would be perfectly observed. Since man is mortal and imperfect, God in his love makes known the way his children should walk, and extends grace "after all they can do."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Daube, David. Studies in Biblical Law. New York, 1969.
 Falk, Ze'ev. Hebrew Law in Biblical Times. Jerusalem, 1964.
 Jackson, Kent P. "The Law of Moses and the Atonement of Christ." In Studies in Scripture, Vol. 3, pp. 153–72. Salt Lake City, 1985.
 Noth, Martin. The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies. Edinburgh, 1966.
 Patrick, Dale. Old Testament Law. Atlanta, 1985.

DOUGLAS H. PARKER
 ZE'EV W. FALK

---

LAWSUITS

Church members are usually inclined to avoid litigation and to find less contentious ways of resolving differences that may arise. This inclination is based primarily upon teachings in the New Testament and the Doctrine and Covenants. The early experience of the Church added powerful reinforcements to scriptural condemnations of litigation. In the 1840s the Prophet Joseph SMITH and other early leaders were obliged to defend themselves repeatedly against false charges. So oppressive were those charges that the Prophet at one time even said that he looked forward to the next life, where people would be reunited with their loved ones and where there "will be no fear of mobs, persecutions, or malicious lawsuits" (TPJS, p. 360).

the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel" (3 Ne. 15:4–9).

2. The entire law was in several senses fulfilled, completed, superseded, and enlivened by Jesus Christ. Jesus said, "In me it hath all been fulfilled" (3 Ne. 12:17–18). Its "great and eternal gospel truths" (MD, p. 398) are applicable through Jesus Christ in all dispensations as he continues to reveal his will to prophets "like unto Moses" (2 Ne. 3:9–11).

3. Latter-day Saints believe that the law of Moses was issued to the Israelites as a preparatory gospel to be a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ and the fulness of his gospel (Gal. 3:24; cf. Jacob 4:5; Alma 34:14). The authority to act in the name of God is embodied in two priesthoods, the Melchizedek or higher, which embraces all divinely delegated authority and extends to the fulness of the law of the gospel, and Aaronic or lesser, which extends only to lesser things, such as the law of carnal commandments and baptism (D&C 84:26–27). While Moses and his predecessors had the higher PRIESTHOOD and the fulness of the gospel of Christ, both of which were to be given to the children of Israel, "they hardened their hearts and could not endure [God's] presence; therefore, the Lord in his wrath . . . took Moses out of their midst, and the Holy Priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued" (D&C 84:23–24; see Heb. 3:16–19; Mosiah 3:14; TPJS, p. 60).

4. Book of Mormon people brought the law of Moses with them from Jerusalem. Even though they endeavored to observe it strictly until the coming of Christ (e.g., 2 Ne. 5:10; Alma 30:3), they believed in Christ and knew that salvation did not come by the law alone but by Christ (2 Ne. 25:23–24), and understood that the law would be superseded by the Messiah (Mosiah 13:27–28; 2 Ne. 25:23–25).

5. For Latter-day Saints, all things are given of God to man as types and shadows of the redeeming and atoning acts of Christ (2 Ne. 11:4; Mosiah 13:31). Thus, the law of Moses typified various aspects of the atonement of Christ.

6. Covenant making, promises, and obedience to commandments are part of the fulness of the gospel of Christ: "Through the Atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel" (A of F 3). Both for Latter-day Saints and regarding Jewish observance of the law of Moses, GRACE, FAITH, and WORKS are all essential to salvation: "It is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do" (2 Ne. 25:23). No mortal's obedience to law will ever be perfect. By law alone, no one will be saved. The grace of God makes up the deficit. The Church does not subscribe to a doctrine of free-standing grace unrelated to instructions and expectations required of man. It does have commandments relating to diet (see WORD OF WISDOM), MODESTY, and CHASTITY, as well as many ORDINANCES, such as BAPTISM, LAYING ON OF HANDS, and WASHING AND ANOINTING. If man were perfect, salvation could come on that account; walking in the way of the Lord would be perfectly observed. Since man is mortal and imperfect, God in his love makes known the way his children should walk, and extends grace "after all they can do."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Daube, David. Studies in Biblical Law. New York, 1969.
- Falk, Ze'ev. Hebrew Law in Biblical Times. Jerusalem, 1964.
- Jackson, Kent P. "The Law of Moses and the Atonement of Christ." In Studies in Scripture, Vol. 3, pp. 153–72. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Noth, Martin. The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies. Edinburgh, 1966.
- Patrick, Dale. Old Testament Law. Atlanta, 1985.

DOUGLAS H. PARKER
ZE'EV W. FALK

---

LAWSUITS

Church members are usually inclined to avoid litigation and to find less contentious ways of resolving differences that may arise. This inclination is based primarily upon teachings in the New Testament and the Doctrine and Covenants. The early experience of the Church added powerful reinforcements to scriptural condemnations of litigation. In the 1840s the Prophet Joseph SMITH and other early leaders were obliged to defend themselves repeatedly against false charges. So oppressive were those charges that the Prophet at one time even said that he looked forward to the next life, where people would be reunited with their loved ones and where there "will be no fear of mobs, persecutions, or malicious lawsuits" (TPJS, p. 360).

The disparaging view of litigation begins with the Sermon on the Mount. Jesus taught his followers to settle disputes quickly and avoid court proceedings, to “turn the other cheek,” and, if an adversary should obtain judgment against them in court to “let him have thy cloak also” (Matt. 5:25–26, 39–40). The apostle Paul condemned the practice that “brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers” (1 Cor. 6:6). He counseled the Corinthian Saints to find a wise person from among them to judge the matter and, failing that, to suffer the wrong rather than to take it to legal authorities for a decision (verses 5–7).

More detailed instructions for dealing with offenses are contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, which counsels members to resolve their differences. But it also recognizes that some offenses are violations of criminal law that should be reported to civil authorities, while other categories of offenders should be dealt with by the Church (D&C 42:79–92). Instructions for Church DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES are detailed (D&C 102:13–23).

When the main body of the Church was established in Utah in the mid-1800s, there was no civil authority, so Church courts exercised jurisdiction over secular as well as religious matters for the next several decades (see COURTS, ECCLESIASTICAL, NINETEENTH CENTURY). However, following the establishment of civil courts, the need for Church courts diminished. They were formally discontinued in 1989 in favor of disciplinary councils.

Church courts never were intended to absolve members from the duty of resolving their disputes by reconciliation and mutual understanding whenever possible. Even when Church courts were available, members were regularly admonished to settle their conflicts by informal means and to avoid litigation. A typical example: “Be reconciled to each other. Do not go to the courts of the Church nor to the courts of the land for litigation. Settle your own troubles and difficulties” (J. F. Smith, GD, p. 257).

The preference for forbearance, forgiveness, and informal means of resolution of disputes, both among Church members and with people outside the Church, continues today, as shown by counsel given in a 1988 general conference of the Church: “We live in an environment . . . of litigation and conflict, of suing and countersuing. Even here the powers of healing may be invoked” (G. B. Hinckley, Ensign 18 [Nov. 1988]:54).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Firmage, Edwin B., and Richard C. Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.

GERALD R. WILLIAMS

---

LAYING ON OF HANDS

The laying on of hands on the head of an individual as a religious ceremony has served many purposes historically and continues to do so for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The most common are the following:

THE SACRIFICIAL CEREMONIES OF ANCIENT ISRAEL. Anciently, in burnt and sin offerings, the offerer laid his hands on the sacrifice prior to its being slain (e.g., Ex. 29:10; Lev. 1:4; 4:4; 2 Chron. 29:23). In the case of the scapegoat, hands were laid on the head, symbolizing transference of the sins of the people to the animal (Lev. 16:21). The hands of the people were laid upon the Levites, and they in turn laid their hands upon the offerings (Num. 8:10–12).

BESTOWAL OF THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. CONFIRMATION and bestowing of the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands follows BAPTISM. The Doctrine and Covenants explains that the one performing the ORDINANCE is acting as proxy for the Lord himself: “I will lay my hand upon you by the hand of my servant Sidney RIGDON, and you shall receive my Spirit, the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which shall teach you the peaceable things of the kingdom” (D&C 36:2; cf. Moro. 2:2). This ordinance may be performed only by MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD holders, not by those of the lesser or AARONIC PRIESTHOOD (D&C 20:58). This explains why JOHN THE BAPTIST, though he performed water baptism, did not bestow the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands (Matt. 3:11), and it may explain why Philip did not do so for his Samaritan converts (Acts 8:5–17), or Apollos for the Ephesians (Acts 19:6; see also Acts 8:12–20). In Philip’s case, he baptized the Samaritans, but PETER and JOHN, who held the higher priesthood, were sent to confer the Holy Ghost, and they laid “their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost” (Acts 8:17).

Paul may have referred to this gift when he counseled his companion Timothy to “neglect not

The disparaging view of litigation begins with the Sermon on the Mount. Jesus taught his followers to settle disputes quickly and avoid court proceedings, to “turn the other cheek,” and, if an adversary should obtain judgment against them in court to “let him have thy cloak also” (Matt. 5:25–26, 39–40). The apostle Paul condemned the practice that “brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers” (1 Cor. 6:6). He counseled the Corinthian Saints to find a wise person from among them to judge the matter and, failing that, to suffer the wrong rather than to take it to legal authorities for a decision (verses 5–7).

More detailed instructions for dealing with offenses are contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, which counsels members to resolve their differences. But it also recognizes that some offenses are violations of criminal law that should be reported to civil authorities, while other categories of offenders should be dealt with by the Church (D&C 42:79–92). Instructions for Church DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES are detailed (D&C 102:13–23).

When the main body of the Church was established in Utah in the mid-1800s, there was no civil authority, so Church courts exercised jurisdiction over secular as well as religious matters for the next several decades (see COURTS, ECCLESIASTICAL, NINETEENTH CENTURY). However, following the establishment of civil courts, the need for Church courts diminished. They were formally discontinued in 1989 in favor of disciplinary councils.

Church courts never were intended to absolve members from the duty of resolving their disputes by reconciliation and mutual understanding whenever possible. Even when Church courts were available, members were regularly admonished to settle their conflicts by informal means and to avoid litigation. A typical example: “Be reconciled to each other. Do not go to the courts of the Church nor to the courts of the land for litigation. Settle your own troubles and difficulties” (J. F. Smith, GD, p. 257).

The preference for forbearance, forgiveness, and informal means of resolution of disputes, both among Church members and with people outside the Church, continues today, as shown by counsel given in a 1988 general conference of the Church: “We live in an environment . . . of litigation and conflict, of suing and countersuing. Even here the powers of healing may be invoked” (G. B. Hinckley, Ensign 18 [Nov. 1988]:54).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Firmage, Edwin B., and Richard C. Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.

GERALD R. WILLIAMS

---

LAYING ON OF HANDS

The laying on of hands on the head of an individual as a religious ceremony has served many purposes historically and continues to do so for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The most common are the following:

THE SACRIFICIAL CEREMONIES OF ANCIENT ISRAEL. Anciently, in burnt and sin offerings, the offerer laid his hands on the sacrifice prior to its being slain (e.g., Ex. 29:10; Lev. 1:4; 4:4; 2 Chron. 29:23). In the case of the scapegoat, hands were laid on the head, symbolizing transference of the sins of the people to the animal (Lev. 16:21). The hands of the people were laid upon the Levites, and they in turn laid their hands upon the offerings (Num. 8:10–12).

BESTOWAL OF THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. CONFIRMATION and bestowing of the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands follows BAPTISM. The Doctrine and Covenants explains that the one performing the ORDINANCE is acting as proxy for the Lord himself: “I will lay my hand upon you by the hand of my servant Sidney RIGDON, and you shall receive my Spirit, the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which shall teach you the peaceable things of the kingdom” (D&C 36:2; cf. Moro. 2:2). This ordinance may be performed only by MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD holders, not by those of the lesser or AARONIC PRIESTHOOD (D&C 20:58). This explains why JOHN THE BAPTIST, though he performed water baptism, did not bestow the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands (Matt. 3:11), and it may explain why Philip did not do so for his Samaritan converts (Acts 8:5–17), or Apollos for the Ephesians (Acts 19:6; see also Acts 8:12–20). In Philip’s case, he baptized the Samaritans, but PETER and JOHN, who held the higher priesthood, were sent to confer the Holy Ghost, and they laid “their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost” (Acts 8:17).

Paul may have referred to this gift when he counseled his companion Timothy to “neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery” (1 Tim. 4:14). On another occasion Paul admonished him to “stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands” (2 Tim. 1:6).

BESTOWAL OF THE GIFTS AND RIGHTS OF AN OFFICE. Moses ordained Joshua as his successor by the laying on of hands (Num. 27:18, 23; Deut. 34:9). Jesus’ apostles used this procedure in authorizing seven men to manage practical economic matters in the early church (Acts 6:1–6). Paul and Barnabas were ordained to a missionary journey by the laying on of hands of the “prophets and teachers at Antioch” (Acts 13:3).

The BOOK OF MORMON reports that Jesus conferred upon his disciples the power to give the Holy Ghost by laying his hands upon them (3 Ne. 18:37; Moro. 2:3). The Aaronic Priesthood was conferred on the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY by the hands of the resurrected John the Baptist (JS—H 1:68–69). All subsequent transmission of AUTHORITY comes from the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH by the laying on of hands. A REVELATION on priesthood states: “Wherefore, it must needs be that one be appointed of the High Priesthood to preside over the priesthood, and he shall be called President of the High priesthood of the Church . . . From the same comes the administering of ordinances and blessings upon the church, by the laying on of the hands” (D&C 107:65–67). Accordingly, all men and women are installed in any Church office or CALLING by a SETTING APART by the laying on of hands of those in authority.

HEALING THE SICK. The laying on of hands to heal the sick was a common practice of Jesus (Mark 5:23; 6:5; 16:18; Luke 13:12–13). Luke records that “all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them” (Luke 4:40). Jesus did not use this method exclusively. Sometimes a touch was sufficient, or his word only. In the case of a man who was deaf and had a speech impediment, Jesus touched his tongue and his ears (Mark 7:33).

Jesus conferred the power of healing on his followers: “And these signs shall follow them that believe . . . they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover” (Mark 16:18). Ananias laid hands on Paul that he might regain his sight (Acts 9:17–18). Paul thus healed the father of Publius in Malta (Acts 28:8). The Lord commanded that this practice should be continued in the Latter-day Church (D&C 42:43–44).

IMPARTING A BLESSING. Blessings in addition to those for health are given by the laying on of hands. Among these are PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS (as when Jacob blessed Ephraim and Manasseh [Gen. 48:14]), blessings for the Lord’s protecting care, blessings for success in the Lord’s work, blessings of counsel, and the blessing of children. (Matt. 19:15; Mark 10:13, 16; cf. Acts 8:12–20; Moro. 2:2).

C. KENT DUNFORD

---

LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP

One of the important defining characteristics of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is lay participation and leadership. The scope of volunteer service in the Church is extensive, both in the number of people involved and in the amount of their service.

In practice, the building up of the kingdom of God on earth is accomplished by individuals serving in numerous lay assignments, or CALLINGS. They speak in Church meetings and serve as athletic directors, teachers, family history specialists, financial secretaries, children’s music directors, and women’s and men’s organization presidents. The goal of many leaders is to make sure that each member has a calling, reflecting the belief that personal growth comes through service. Millions of people serve in the Church, and that service represents a significant time commitment. In one study, researchers found that on average a BISHOP, the leader of a local WARD (congregation), spends approximately twenty-seven hours weekly in his duties; the president of the RELIEF SOCIETY, or women’s organization, thirteen hours; the ward CLERK, eight hours; and so on. As of 1990, there were nearly 50,000 full-time MISSIONARIES contributing one and a half to two years of service. Lay members and leaders are organized and assisted through an extensive Church organization, including a substantial staff of employees located primarily at Church headquarters in Salt Lake City, Utah.

the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery” (1 Tim. 4:14). On another occasion Paul admonished him to “stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands” (2 Tim. 1:6).

BESTOWAL OF THE GIFTS AND RIGHTS OF AN OFFICE. Moses ordained Joshua as his successor by the laying on of hands (Num. 27:18, 23; Deut. 34:9). Jesus’ apostles used this procedure in authorizing seven men to manage practical economic matters in the early church (Acts 6:1–6). Paul and Barnabas were ordained to a missionary journey by the laying on of hands of the “prophets and teachers at Antioch” (Acts 13:3).

The BOOK OF MORMON reports that Jesus conferred upon his disciples the power to give the Holy Ghost by laying his hands upon them (3 Ne. 18:37; Moro. 2:3). The Aaronic Priesthood was conferred on the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY by the hands of the resurrected John the Baptist (JS—H 1:68–69). All subsequent transmission of AUTHORITY comes from the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH by the laying on of hands. A REVELATION on priesthood states: “Wherefore, it must needs be that one be appointed of the High Priesthood to preside over the priesthood, and he shall be called President of the High priesthood of the Church . . . From the same comes the administering of ordinances and blessings upon the church, by the laying on of the hands” (D&C 107:65–67). Accordingly, all men and women are installed in any Church office or CALLING by a SETTING APART by the laying on of hands of those in authority.

HEALING THE SICK. The laying on of hands to heal the sick was a common practice of Jesus (Mark 5:23; 6:5; 16:18; Luke 13:12–13). Luke records that “all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them” (Luke 4:40). Jesus did not use this method exclusively. Sometimes a touch was sufficient, or his word only. In the case of a man who was deaf and had a speech impediment, Jesus touched his tongue and his ears (Mark 7:33).

Jesus conferred the power of healing on his followers: “And these signs shall follow them that believe . . . they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover” (Mark 16:18). Ananias laid hands on Paul that he might regain his sight (Acts 9:17–18). Paul thus healed the father of Publius in Malta (Acts 28:8). The Lord commanded that this practice should be continued in the Latter-day Church (D&C 42:43–44).

IMPARTING A BLESSING. Blessings in addition to those for health are given by the laying on of hands. Among these are PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS (as when Jacob blessed Ephraim and Manasseh [Gen. 48:14]), blessings for the Lord’s protecting care, blessings for success in the Lord’s work, blessings of counsel, and the blessing of children. (Matt. 19:15; Mark 10:13, 16; cf. Acts 8:12–20; Moro. 2:2).

C. KENT DUNFORD

---

LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP

One of the important defining characteristics of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is lay participation and leadership. The scope of volunteer service in the Church is extensive, both in the number of people involved and in the amount of their service.

In practice, the building up of the kingdom of God on earth is accomplished by individuals serving in numerous lay assignments, or CALLINGS. They speak in Church meetings and serve as athletic directors, teachers, family history specialists, financial secretaries, children’s music directors, and women’s and men’s organization presidents. The goal of many leaders is to make sure that each member has a calling, reflecting the belief that personal growth comes through service. Millions of people serve in the Church, and that service represents a significant time commitment. In one study, researchers found that on average a BISHOP, the leader of a local WARD (congregation), spends approximately twenty-seven hours weekly in his duties; the president of the RELIEF SOCIETY, or women’s organization, thirteen hours; the ward CLERK, eight hours; and so on. As of 1990, there were nearly 50,000 full-time MISSIONARIES contributing one and a half to two years of service. Lay members and leaders are organized and assisted through an extensive Church organization, including a substantial staff of employees located primarily at Church headquarters in Salt Lake City, Utah.

The scriptures indicate that to serve in a priesthood office, a man must be called of God (Heb. 5:4; A of F 5). Likewise, men and women are called, by prophecy and by the laying on of hands, to serve one another in a variety of settings. No Church calling requires extensive formal training. The Lord outlined the requirements of service when speaking about missionary work: "Faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify [members] for the work" (D&C 4:5).

Though not formal in nature, training for leadership is provided in a variety of ways. First, and very important, members are given early and repeated opportunities to serve, thereby learning from experience. Beginning at age twelve, young men and women can serve as teachers for children or as members of class presidencies or of youth activities committees. In addition, teacher development courses and in-service lessons assist teachers, and LEADERSHIP TRAINING meetings instruct leaders of various organizations. Manuals and handbooks outline the responsibilities of individuals serving in different organizations at both ward and STAKE levels.

Lay participation and leadership have several implications for the Church and its members. Part of the mission of the Church is to perfect the Saints (Eph. 4:12), to sponsor growth in individual members. Utilizing volunteer members at all levels of the organization may not ensure peak efficiency, but it does provide the experiences and interactions that will help members progress. Volunteer staffing also means that in most of the callings members work part-time and that this service is in addition to regular employment and other responsibilities. This provides the opportunity for learning to SACRIFICE and to balance commitments. In general, members who serve maintain a high level of commitment to the Church, in part because of their awareness that they are responsible for making a contribution and because they take satisfaction from doing so. Because professional training is not required, lay leadership lessens the sense of hierarchy and increases feelings of UNITY. The children's music leader may have more formal education than the bishop. After being released in a few years, that bishop may serve as children's music leader. Opportunities to serve in a variety of callings and to be served by people in different capacities can increase the sense of BROTHERHOOD and SISTERHOOD shared by Church members.

Many callings require men and women to serve as administrators, doing practical tasks to enable the organization to run smoothly. While the role of administrator is a necessary one, it is not the most vital aspect of leadership, which is to minister. Christ's admonition "Feed my sheep" (John 21:15-17) applies to latter-day DISCIPLESHIP. The characteristics of effective spiritual leadership are those that enable individuals to minister to their brothers and sisters in the gospel, including a willingness to seek and follow the counsel of the Lord as manifested through the HOLY GHOST, on one's own behalf and on behalf of those in need of direction. In addition, leaders are to understand the nature of their STEWARDSHIPS and seek to fulfill their responsibilities in meekness and humility. Good leaders understand their roles as servants to others (Matt. 20:27). Thus, doubly benefited, persons gain from leadership experiences through unselfishly serving in a Christlike way and, through such service, come to know the Lord (Mosiah 5:13).

The gospel teaches that this life is a preparatory state for the life to come and that all people are on a course of ETERNAL PROGRESSION. Lay participation plays an important role in that progression by providing opportunities for service and learning. Church callings offer many opportunities to develop practical skills and spiritual qualities that contribute to continued service and fulfillment throughout life. Individuals may hold many different callings over a period of time and sometimes those callings increase in complexity or scope of influence. However, Latter-day Saints are encouraged not to view such changes as promotions. Callings of greater visibility or apparent influence are of no greater importance than humble and unseen service. The progression that is important, to the individual and to the Lord, is not evidenced by the different callings held by a person, but by the increase in Christlike characteristics developed through years of prayerful and thoughtful service. The potential for personal growth and righteous influence is as great for a nursery leader as for a STAKE PRESIDENT.

Latter-day SCRIPTURES encourage widespread participation, declaring that men and women "should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, [doing] many things of their own free will" (D&C 58:27). King Benjamin in the Book of Mormon taught that "when ye are in the service of your fellow beings ye are only in the service of your God" (Mosiah 2:17). Though he was the Master in all things, Christ stressed his role as servant, setting an example for others to follow (John 13:15). The emphasis on service as a mode of WORSHIP, as a requirement for becoming like Christ, and as a means of establishing the unity that distinguishes the people of God is a major reason for the commitment of the Church and its members to lay participation and leadership.

PAUL H. THOMPSON

---

LDS BUSINESS COLLEGE

The LDS Business College, located in Salt Lake City, Utah, is a fully-accredited, two-year institution of higher learning owned by the Church, and operated and partially funded through the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM (CES). The 800-plus students receive training for careers in business and industry.

Its forerunner, the Salt Lake Stake Academy, was founded in 1886 under the direction of Karl G. Macser. Church leaders originally intended to establish the Academy as the Church's leading institution of higher learning, and the name of the school was changed to LDS College in 1889. When Young University (later the Church University) replaced LDS College as the "flagship" of the educational system of the Church, LDS College declined in significance. However, the Church University was closed in 1894, contributing to the subsequent growth of both LDS College and Brigham Young Academy in Provo, later Brigham Young University (1903). An early emphasis on business courses at LDS College led to the creation of a department of business in 1895. When LDS College closed in 1931, the departments of business and music continued to function separately as the LDS Business College and the McCune School of Music.

After a long period in which Church policy required the college to be financially self-sufficient, CES resumed partial funding in 1986. At that time, a project to upgrade programs and facilities was begun. LDS Business College currently offers one- and two-year programs plus short courses and professional seminars in accounting, marketing/management, computer information systems, office administration, health services, fashion merchandising, and interior design. In all courses of study along with imparting information and developing skills, a major emphasis is placed on the importance of morality and ethics in the business profession.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Quinn, D. Michael. "The Brief Career of Young University at Salt Lake City." Utah Historical Quarterly 41 (1973):69-89.

KENNETH H. BEESLEY

---

LDS FOUNDATION

The LDS Foundation is the department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that encourages and facilitates voluntary charitable contributions to the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM and other charities of the Church.

Although it originated in the BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY development office, it now operates under the direction of the PRESIDING BISHOPRIC in serving a fuller Churchwide mission. Since 1972 the Foundation has assisted thousands of donors to contribute to the students and programs of Church institutions.

Support is received both from Church members and from individuals who are not members but who recognize the ability of Church institutions to assist humanity. Funding sources include corporations, private foundations, alumni of Church institutions of higher education, and private individuals.

The Foundation employs full-time professionals who help donors prepare contributions in the form of trusts, estates, planned gifts, and cash donations and accounts for all charitable donations to the Church other than the tithes and offerings of members (see TITHING and FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS). Main offices are in Salt Lake City and Provo, Utah.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Wilkinson, Ernest L., and Leonard J. Arrington, eds. Brigham Young University: The First One Hundred Years, Vol. 3, pp. 537-93. Provo, 1976.

DAVID A. WANAMAKER

God" (Mosiah 2:17). Though he was the Master in all things, Christ stressed his role as servant, setting an example for others to follow (John 13:15). The emphasis on service as a mode of WORSHIP, as a requirement for becoming like Christ, and as a means of establishing the unity that distinguishes the people of God is a major reason for the commitment of the Church and its members to lay participation and leadership.

PAUL H. THOMPSON

---

LDS BUSINESS COLLEGE

The LDS Business College, located in Salt Lake City, Utah, is a fully-accredited, two-year institution of higher learning owned by the Church, and operated and partially funded through the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM (CES). The 800-plus students receive training for careers in business and industry.

Its forerunner, the Salt Lake Stake Academy, was founded in 1886 under the direction of Karl G. Macser. Church leaders originally intended to establish the Academy as the Church's leading institution of higher learning, and the name of the school was changed to LDS College in 1889. When Young University (later the Church University) replaced LDS College as the "flagship" of the educational system of the Church, LDS College declined in significance. However, the Church University was closed in 1894, contributing to the subsequent growth of both LDS College and Brigham Young Academy in Provo, later Brigham Young University (1903). An early emphasis on business courses at LDS College led to the creation of a department of business in 1895. When LDS College closed in 1931, the departments of business and music continued to function separately as the LDS Business College and the McCune School of Music.

After a long period in which Church policy required the college to be financially self-sufficient, CES resumed partial funding in 1986. At that time, a project to upgrade programs and facilities was begun. LDS Business College currently offers one- and two-year programs plus short courses and professional seminars in accounting, marketing/management, computer information systems, office administration, health services, fashion merchandising, and interior design. In all courses of study along with imparting information and developing skills, a major emphasis is placed on the importance of morality and ethics in the business profession.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Quinn, D. Michael. "The Brief Career of Young University at Salt Lake City." Utah Historical Quarterly 41 (1973):69-89.

KENNETH H. BEESLEY

---

LDS FOUNDATION

The LDS Foundation is the department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that encourages and facilitates voluntary charitable contributions to the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM and other charities of the Church.

Although it originated in the BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY development office, it now operates under the direction of the PRESIDING BISHOPRIC in serving a fuller Churchwide mission. Since 1972 the Foundation has assisted thousands of donors to contribute to the students and programs of Church institutions.

Support is received both from Church members and from individuals who are not members but who recognize the ability of Church institutions to assist humanity. Funding sources include corporations, private foundations, alumni of Church institutions of higher education, and private individuals.

The Foundation employs full-time professionals who help donors prepare contributions in the form of trusts, estates, planned gifts, and cash donations and accounts for all charitable donations to the Church other than the tithes and offerings of members (see TITHING and FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS). Main offices are in Salt Lake City and Provo, Utah.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Wilkinson, Ernest L., and Leonard J. Arrington, eds. Brigham Young University: The First One Hundred Years, Vol. 3, pp. 537-93. Provo, 1976.

DAVID A. WANAMAKER

God" (Mosiah 2:17). Though he was the Master in all things, Christ stressed his role as servant, setting an example for others to follow (John 13:15). The emphasis on service as a mode of WORSHIP, as a requirement for becoming like Christ, and as a means of establishing the unity that distinguishes the people of God is a major reason for the commitment of the Church and its members to lay participation and leadership.

PAUL H. THOMPSON

---

LDS BUSINESS COLLEGE

The LDS Business College, located in Salt Lake City, Utah, is a fully-accredited, two-year institution of higher learning owned by the Church, and operated and partially funded through the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM (CES). The 800-plus students receive training for careers in business and industry.

Its forerunner, the Salt Lake Stake Academy, was founded in 1886 under the direction of Karl G. Macser. Church leaders originally intended to establish the Academy as the Church's leading institution of higher learning, and the name of the school was changed to LDS College in 1889. When Young University (later the Church University) replaced LDS College as the "flagship" of the educational system of the Church, LDS College declined in significance. However, the Church University was closed in 1894, contributing to the subsequent growth of both LDS College and Brigham Young Academy in Provo, later Brigham Young University (1903). An early emphasis on business courses at LDS College led to the creation of a department of business in 1895. When LDS College closed in 1931, the departments of business and music continued to function separately as the LDS Business College and the McCune School of Music.

After a long period in which Church policy required the college to be financially self-sufficient, CES resumed partial funding in 1986. At that time, a project to upgrade programs and facilities was begun. LDS Business College currently offers one- and two-year programs plus short courses and professional seminars in accounting, marketing/management, computer information systems, office administration, health services, fashion merchandising, and interior design. In all courses of study along with imparting information and developing skills, a major emphasis is placed on the importance of morality and ethics in the business profession.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Quinn, D. Michael. "The Brief Career of Young University at Salt Lake City." Utah Historical Quarterly 41 (1973):69-89.

KENNETH H. BEESLEY

---

LDS FOUNDATION

The LDS Foundation is the department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that encourages and facilitates voluntary charitable contributions to the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM and other charities of the Church.

Although it originated in the BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY development office, it now operates under the direction of the PRESIDING BISHOPRIC in serving a fuller Churchwide mission. Since 1972 the Foundation has assisted thousands of donors to contribute to the students and programs of Church institutions.

Support is received both from Church members and from individuals who are not members but who recognize the ability of Church institutions to assist humanity. Funding sources include corporations, private foundations, alumni of Church institutions of higher education, and private individuals.

The Foundation employs full-time professionals who help donors prepare contributions in the form of trusts, estates, planned gifts, and cash donations and accounts for all charitable donations to the Church other than the tithes and offerings of members (see TITHING and FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS). Main offices are in Salt Lake City and Provo, Utah.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Wilkinson, Ernest L., and Leonard J. Arrington, eds. Brigham Young University: The First One Hundred Years, Vol. 3, pp. 537-93. Provo, 1976.

DAVID A. WANAMAKER

---

LDS STUDENT ASSOCIATION

The LDS Student Association (LDSSA) is an organization which sponsors social, religious, and recreational activities for LDS college students and their friends. The organization provides a framework wherein students have access to all phases of the Church that affect their lives during the week.

The purposes of LDSSA are to help college and university students stay closely affiliated with the Church, succeed in their studies, and achieve a balanced educational-social life while on campus; to motivate LDS students to become a powerful influence for good on the campus; to provide meaningful activities that are consistent with Church standards; and to coordinate Church-related activities for college students. These purposes are accomplished under the direction of the priesthood and in cooperation with the institutes of the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM. These student associations create a sense of belonging, an opportunity for leadership, and an expanded circle of friends who share similar values. For some students, LDSSA is the center of their school experience.

LDSSA was established in 1960, and has expanded to every college campus where there is an LDS institute of religion. In 1990, some 290 LDSSA organizations existed within the United States and Canada in post-secondary institutions, including community colleges, universities, and trade and technical schools. Each campus organization operates under the direction of an assigned local stake president who is also the priesthood leader for all LDS affairs on campus. He presides over an executive committee consisting of a student president, vice president(s), a secretary, and an education adviser, who is usually the director of the institute associated with the campus. The student leaders are called, set apart, and serve under the direction of the priesthood leader. The executive committee is the policymaking body for the local student association.

A student president presides over the chapter LDSSA council. The membership includes representatives of all LDS organizations that function on, or are influenced by, the school. These may include LAMBDA DELTA SIGMA sorority and SIGMA GAMMA CHI fraternity, young single adults, married students, campus stakes or wards, and other interest groups. While each of these groups operates as an independent agency, their activities are correlated through the LDSSA council, which strives to meet needs without undue overlap. The type of institution, geographic location, number of LDS students, and the social, cultural, and academic traditions influence how LDSSA is organized and how it functions to meet local and individual student needs.

At the general level of the Church, a governing board is made up of an executive director, presidents of Sigma Gamma Chi and Lambda Delta Sigma, and representatives of the General Authorities, seminaries, and institutes.

ELAINE ANDERSON CANNON

---

LEADERSHIP TRAINING

The local and general leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are lay members; they have not received professional training for the ministry (see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP). Instead, Church members prepare to fulfill their callings by personal scripture study, prayer, inspiration, and righteous living; observing other leaders; assuming informal apprenticeships; studying Church-produced handbooks and manuals; participating in leadership training ("in-service") lessons; and accepting counsel and guidance from their presiding officers and from the General Authorities.

The expectation is that all faithful Latter-day Saints are entitled to the inspiration of the Holy Ghost and personal revelation to aid them in meeting the needs of those they teach, counsel, and serve. Reliance on divine guidance makes personal worthiness and Christlike attributes the most important qualifications for all callings in the Church. Attributes qualifying one for the work are "faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, . . . virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence" (D&C 4:5-6).

There are Church handbooks that outline the duties and activities of every leadership position and state the general principles that should apply. These handbooks are prepared by and revised periodically by appointed committees and reviewed by the Correlation Committee.

---

LDS STUDENT ASSOCIATION

The LDS Student Association (LDSSA) is an organization which sponsors social, religious, and recreational activities for LDS college students and their friends. The organization provides a framework wherein students have access to all phases of the Church that affect their lives during the week.

The purposes of LDSSA are to help college and university students stay closely affiliated with the Church, succeed in their studies, and achieve a balanced educational-social life while on campus; to motivate LDS students to become a powerful influence for good on the campus; to provide meaningful activities that are consistent with Church standards; and to coordinate Church-related activities for college students. These purposes are accomplished under the direction of the priesthood and in cooperation with the institutes of the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM. These student associations create a sense of belonging, an opportunity for leadership, and an expanded circle of friends who share similar values. For some students, LDSSA is the center of their school experience.

LDSSA was established in 1960, and has expanded to every college campus where there is an LDS institute of religion. In 1990, some 290 LDSSA organizations existed within the United States and Canada in post-secondary institutions, including community colleges, universities, and trade and technical schools. Each campus organization operates under the direction of an assigned local stake president who is also the priesthood leader for all LDS affairs on campus. He presides over an executive committee consisting of a student president, vice president(s), a secretary, and an education adviser, who is usually the director of the institute associated with the campus. The student leaders are called, set apart, and serve under the direction of the priesthood leader. The executive committee is the policymaking body for the local student association.

A student president presides over the chapter LDSSA council. The membership includes representatives of all LDS organizations that function on, or are influenced by, the school. These may include LAMBDA DELTA SIGMA sorority and SIGMA GAMMA CHI fraternity, young single adults, married students, campus stakes or wards, and other interest groups. While each of these groups operates as an independent agency, their activities are correlated through the LDSSA council, which strives to meet needs without undue overlap. The type of institution, geographic location, number of LDS students, and the social, cultural, and academic traditions influence how LDSSA is organized and how it functions to meet local and individual student needs.

At the general level of the Church, a governing board is made up of an executive director, presidents of Sigma Gamma Chi and Lambda Delta Sigma, and representatives of the General Authorities, seminaries, and institutes.

ELAINE ANDERSON CANNON

---

LEADERSHIP TRAINING

The local and general leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are lay members; they have not received professional training for the ministry (see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP). Instead, Church members prepare to fulfill their callings by personal scripture study, prayer, inspiration, and righteous living; observing other leaders; assuming informal apprenticeships; studying Church-produced handbooks and manuals; participating in leadership training ("in-service") lessons; and accepting counsel and guidance from their presiding officers and from the General Authorities.

The expectation is that all faithful Latter-day Saints are entitled to the inspiration of the Holy Ghost and personal revelation to aid them in meeting the needs of those they teach, counsel, and serve. Reliance on divine guidance makes personal worthiness and Christlike attributes the most important qualifications for all callings in the Church. Attributes qualifying one for the work are "faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, . . . virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence" (D&C 4:5-6).

There are Church handbooks that outline the duties and activities of every leadership position and state the general principles that should apply. These handbooks are prepared by and revised periodically by appointed committees and reviewed by the Correlation Committee.

All Church officers are responsible for training those who serve under them. Leadership training or instructional meetings are held regularly for every group of leaders. For example, members of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve meet weekly in the Salt Lake Temple for counsel and instruction. These leaders hold training sessions for other General Authorities, who in turn instruct the STAKE PRESIDENTS and other stake leaders under their jurisdiction. Stake officers periodically conduct training sessions for WARD leaders, who in turn instruct other ward officers under their supervision.

Leaders are given virtual autonomy in the performance of their duties and responsibilities. At the same time, they are charged to follow the principles of the gospel and policies of the Church, and they are enjoined to be mindful of service, gentleness, and humility: "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant" (Matt. 20:27). They are also charged to avoid unrighteous dominion: "No power or influence can or ought to be maintained . . . [except] by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned" (D&C 121:39–42).

Emphasis is placed on the need for leaders to learn their duties: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. . . . He that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved shall not be counted worthy to stand" (D&C 107:99–100).

Leadership training of LDS boys and girls begins at a young age. As children, they observe their parents and other adults serving in a variety of callings. As youth they are called to serve in presidencies in their Aaronic Priesthood, Young Men, Young Women, and seminary organizations. The attempt is made to have all boys and girls hold some kind of leadership position during their teens. Serving missions places many young men and women into a wide variety of leadership positions (e.g., as senior companions, district leaders, zone leaders, and assistants to the mission president). Virtually all Latter-day Saints are asked to serve in the Church in one way or another. In general, the guidelines for leadership are the same for men and women.

For many callings, an unofficial apprenticeship system is followed. Often, a counselor in a PRESIDENCY or another officer in the respective organization will be called as its next president; similarly, a man trained as an assistant clerk may be called as the next clerk. Sometimes, however, one is appointed to a position to which he has had no training, as the BISHOP or stake president follows the impressions of the Spirit in extending calls to service.

Bishops, Relief Society presidents, and other leaders concerned with the welfare of individuals employ many leadership and organizational skills, such as evaluating alternatives, scheduling, delegating, and motivating others. However, all Church leaders are encouraged to focus principally on people, to feed the sheep in the Lord's flock, to know and love the members, to listen, love, and help with personal needs. "It is the leader's duty . . . to teach the member to love—not the leader or teacher, but the truth of the gospel" (D. McKay, IE 71 [Dec. 1968]:108). To do this, leaders are frequently counseled to seek the spiritual gifts of discernment and wisdom (cf. Luke 12:12; D&C 84:85).

In addition to inspiration, leaders may look to others for training or assistance. A leader may confer with his or her own priesthood leader about a problem or need, especially in one's "stewardship review"—a one-on-one session with one's organizational leader. These personal interviews are customarily held four times a year, "for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity" (D&C 72:3).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Barker, Shade R. Youth Leading Youth. Salt Lake City, 1987.
 Bennion, Lowell L. Fundamentals of Leadership. Salt Lake City, 1965.
 Lythgoe, Dennis L. The Sensitive Leader. Salt Lake City, 1986.
 Maxwell, Neal A. A More Excellent Way. Salt Lake City, 1967.
 Preece, Kendall O., and Kent Lloyd. "New Approaches to Church Executive Leadership: Behavioral Science Perspectives." Dialogue 2 (Winter 1967):41–49.

WILLIAM G. DYER

---

LECTURES ON FAITH

Included under the title "Lectures on Faith" in the 1835 edition of the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS, these seven "lectures on theology" (HC 2:176) were presented to the School for the Elders in the early winter of 1834–1835 in Kirtland, Ohio. The school was organized to help Church leaders and missionaries "[qualify] themselves as messengers

All Church officers are responsible for training those who serve under them. Leadership training or instructional meetings are held regularly for every group of leaders. For example, members of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve meet weekly in the Salt Lake Temple for counsel and instruction. These leaders hold training sessions for other General Authorities, who in turn instruct the STAKE PRESIDENTS and other stake leaders under their jurisdiction. Stake officers periodically conduct training sessions for WARD leaders, who in turn instruct other ward officers under their supervision.

Leaders are given virtual autonomy in the performance of their duties and responsibilities. At the same time, they are charged to follow the principles of the gospel and policies of the Church, and they are enjoined to be mindful of service, gentleness, and humility: "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant" (Matt. 20:27). They are also charged to avoid unrighteous dominion: "No power or influence can or ought to be maintained . . . [except] by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned" (D&C 121:39–42).

Emphasis is placed on the need for leaders to learn their duties: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. . . . He that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved shall not be counted worthy to stand" (D&C 107:99–100).

Leadership training of LDS boys and girls begins at a young age. As children, they observe their parents and other adults serving in a variety of callings. As youth they are called to serve in presidencies in their Aaronic Priesthood, Young Men, Young Women, and seminary organizations. The attempt is made to have all boys and girls hold some kind of leadership position during their teens. Serving missions places many young men and women into a wide variety of leadership positions (e.g., as senior companions, district leaders, zone leaders, and assistants to the mission president). Virtually all Latter-day Saints are asked to serve in the Church in one way or another. In general, the guidelines for leadership are the same for men and women.

For many callings, an unofficial apprenticeship system is followed. Often, a counselor in a PRESIDENCY or another officer in the respective organization will be called as its next president; similarly, a man trained as an assistant clerk may be called as the next clerk. Sometimes, however, one is appointed to a position to which he has had no training, as the BISHOP or stake president follows the impressions of the Spirit in extending calls to service.

Bishops, Relief Society presidents, and other leaders concerned with the welfare of individuals employ many leadership and organizational skills, such as evaluating alternatives, scheduling, delegating, and motivating others. However, all Church leaders are encouraged to focus principally on people, to feed the sheep in the Lord's flock, to know and love the members, to listen, love, and help with personal needs. "It is the leader's duty . . . to teach the member to love—not the leader or teacher, but the truth of the gospel" (D. McKay, IE 71 [Dec. 1968]:108). To do this, leaders are frequently counseled to seek the spiritual gifts of discernment and wisdom (cf. Luke 12:12; D&C 84:85).

In addition to inspiration, leaders may look to others for training or assistance. A leader may confer with his or her own priesthood leader about a problem or need, especially in one's "stewardship review"—a one-on-one session with one's organizational leader. These personal interviews are customarily held four times a year, "for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity" (D&C 72:3).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Barker, Shade R. Youth Leading Youth. Salt Lake City, 1987.
 Bennion, Lowell L. Fundamentals of Leadership. Salt Lake City, 1965.
 Lythgoe, Dennis L. The Sensitive Leader. Salt Lake City, 1986.
 Maxwell, Neal A. A More Excellent Way. Salt Lake City, 1967.
 Preece, Kendall O., and Kent Lloyd. "New Approaches to Church Executive Leadership: Behavioral Science Perspectives." Dialogue 2 (Winter 1967):41–49.

WILLIAM G. DYER

---

LECTURES ON FAITH

Included under the title "Lectures on Faith" in the 1835 edition of the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS, these seven "lectures on theology" (HC 2:176) were presented to the School for the Elders in the early winter of 1834–1835 in Kirtland, Ohio. The school was organized to help Church leaders and missionaries "[qualify] themselves as messengers of Jesus Christ, to be ready to do His will in carrying glad tidings to all that would open their eyes, ears, and hearts,” by being “more perfectly instructed in the great things of God” (HC 2:169–70; see also SCHOOLS OF THE PROPHETS).

The lectures address three major themes: “first, faith itself—what it is; secondly, the object on which it rests; and thirdly, the effects which flow from it” (Dahl and Tate, p. 31). The first lecture explains what faith is; the second shows how the knowledge of God first came into the world and traces this knowledge from Adam to Abraham; the third and fourth discuss the necessary and unchanging attributes of God; the fifth deals with the nature of GOD THE FATHER, his son JESUS CHRIST, and the HOLY GHOST; the sixth teaches that acquiring faith unto salvation depends on knowing that one’s life is pleasing to God, which knowledge can be obtained only by the willingness to sacrifice all earthly things; and the seventh treats the fruits of faith—perspective, power, and ultimately PERFECT-ION. In the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants the seven lectures comprised seventy-four pages. The lectures are organized in numbered paragraphs in which principles are stated and supporting scriptures quoted. Appended to the first five lectures are lists of questions and answers restating the principles discussed. These catechisms are about as long as the lectures themselves.

No clear evidence documents who actually wrote the lectures. Recent authorship studies ascribe the wording of the lectures “mainly to Sidney Rigdon,” with Joseph Smith substantially involved, and others perhaps having some influence. Joseph Smith’s close involvement with the lectures is suggested by Willard Richards’s history, which reports that Joseph was “busily engaged” in November in making “preparations for the School for the Elders, wherein they might be more perfectly instructed in the great things of God” (HC 2:169–70). The same source indicates that in January 1835 Joseph was engaged in “preparing the lectures on theology for publication” (HC 2:180). From these references and other circumstances it seems evident that the lectures were prepared and published with Joseph Smith’s approval (Dahl and Tate, pp. 7–10; 16, n. 8).

Until 1921 the “Lectures on Faith” were printed in almost all the English-language editions of the Doctrine and Covenants, and in many, but not all, non-English editions. An introductory statement in the 1921 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants explains that the lectures were deleted because “they were never presented to nor accepted by the Church as being otherwise than theological lectures or lessons” (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS EDITIONS). The decision may also have been influenced by what many readers have perceived as conflicts between statements about the Godhead in the fifth lecture and certain later revelations (D&C 130; Dahl and Tate, pp. 16–19). Others have found these conflicts to be more apparent than real and have attempted reconciliations (R. Millet, in Dahl and Tate, pp. 221–40).

The “Lectures on Faith” have been published separately from the Doctrine and Covenants for the LDS community four times: in 1840–1843, by Parley P. Pratt in England; in 1940, by compiler N. B. Lundwall in Salt Lake City; in 1985, by Deseret Book Company, Salt Lake City; and in 1990, by the Religious Studies Center at Brigham Young University. They were published separately twice by SCHISMATIC GROUPS: in 1845–1846, by Sidney RIGDON (in Pittsburgh, soon after he left the Church); and in 1952, by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The Religious Studies Center publication includes a newly edited version of the lectures designed to make the text more readable. It provides textual comparison charts that identify all textual changes that have occurred in various printings of the lectures from 1835 to 1990. It also contains a summary of historical information, a doctrinal discussion of the topic of each lecture, and an extensive bibliography (Dahl and Tate).

Most members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are not acquainted with the text of the “Lectures on Faith,” though many may recognize excerpts that are occasionally quoted in speeches and writings of leaders and scholars. A sampling of these quotations as printed in the 1990 edited edition follows:

Lecture One

1. Faith [is] the first principle in revealed religion, and the foundation of all righteousness.
9. Faith is the assurance which men have of the existence of things which they have not seen and . . . the principle of action in all intelligent beings.
12. As faith is the moving cause of all action in temporal concerns, so it is in spiritual.
13. But faith is not only the principle of action, but it is also the principle of power in all intelligent beings, whether in heaven or on earth.

15. The principle of power which existed in the bosom of God, by which he framed the worlds, was faith.

Lecture Two

55. Let us here observe that after any members of the human family are made acquainted with the important fact that there is a God who has created and does uphold all things, the extent of their knowledge respecting his character and glory will depend upon their diligence and faithfulness in seeking after him, until, like Enoch, the brother of Jared, and Moses, they shall obtain faith in God and power with him to behold him face to face.

Lecture Three

2-5. Let us here observe that three things are necessary for any rational and intelligent being to exercise faith in God unto life and salvation. First, the idea that he actually exists; Secondly, a correct idea of his character, perfections, and attributes; Thirdly, an actual knowledge that the course of life which one is pursuing is according to His will.

Lecture Four

11. Without the knowledge of all things God would not be able to save any portion of his creatures. For it is the knowledge which he has of all things from the beginning to the end that enables him to give that understanding to his creatures by which they are made partakers of eternal life. And if it were not for the idea existing in the minds of men that God has all knowledge, it would be impossible for them to exercise faith in him.

13. It is also necessary that men should have the idea of the existence of the attribute justice in God in order to exercise faith in him unto life and salvation. For without the idea of the existence of the attribute justice in the Deity, men could not have confidence sufficient to place themselves under his guidance and direction. For they would be filled with fear and doubt lest the Judge of all the earth would not do right, and thus fear or doubt existing in the mind would preclude the possibility of the exercise of faith in him for life and salvation. But when the idea of the existence of the attribute justice in the Deity is fairly planted in the mind, it leaves no room for doubt to get into the heart; and the mind is enabled to cast itself upon the Almighty without fear, and without doubt, and with the most unshaken confidence, believing that the Judge of all the earth will do right.

Lecture Five

2. There are two personages who constitute the great, matchless, governing, and supreme power over all things, by whom all things were created and made. . . . They are the Father and the Son: the Father being a personage of spirit, glory, and power, possessing all perfection and fulness. The Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, is a personage of tabernacle, made or fashioned like unto man, being in the form and likeness of man, or rather man was formed after his likeness and in his image. He is also the express image and likeness of the personage of the Father, possessing all the fulness of the Father, or the same fulness with the Father; being begotten of him, and ordained from before the foundation of the world to be a propitiation for the sins of all those who should believe on his name. He is called the Son because of the flesh . . . possessing the same mind with the Father, which mind is the Holy Spirit that bears record of the Father and the Son. These three are one; or, in other words, these three constitute the great, matchless, governing and supreme power over all things.

Q & A 15. Do the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit constitute the Godhead? They do.

Lecture Six

2. It is essential for any person to have an actual knowledge that the course of life which he is pursuing is according to the will of God to enable him to have that confidence in God without which no person can obtain eternal life.

4. Such was and always will be the situation of the Saints of God. Unless they have an actual knowledge that the course they are pursuing is according to the will of God, they will grow weary in their minds and faint.

7. Let us here observe that a religion that does not require the sacrifice of all things never has power sufficient to produce the faith necessary unto life and salvation. For from the first existence of man, the faith necessary unto the enjoyment of life and salvation never could be obtained without the sacrifice of all earthly things. It is through this sacrifice, and this only, that God has ordained that men should enjoy eternal life. And it is through the medium of the sacrifice of all earthly things that men do actually know that they are doing the things that are well pleasing in the sight of God.

12. But those who have not made this sacrifice to God do not know that the course which they pursue is well pleasing in his sight. For whatever may be their belief or their opinion, it is a matter of doubt and uncertainty in their mind; and where doubt and uncertainty are, there faith is not, nor can it be. For doubt and faith do not exist in the same person at the same time. So persons whose minds are under doubts and fears cannot have unshaken confidence, and where unshaken confidence is not, there faith is weak. And where faith is weak, the persons will not be able to contend against all the opposition, tribulations, and afflictions which they will have to encounter in order to be heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ Jesus. But they will grow weary in their minds, and the adversary will have power over them and destroy them.

Lecture Seven

19. All things which pertain to life and godliness are the effects of faith.

20. When faith comes, it brings its train of attendants with it—apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, gifts, wisdom, knowledge, miracles, healings, tongues, interpretation of tongues, etc. All these appear when faith appears on the earth and disappear when it disappears from the earth. For these are the effects of faith and always have attended and always will attend it. For where faith is, there will the knowledge of God be, also, with all things which pertain thereto: revelations, visions, and dreams, as well as every other necessary thing, so the possessors of faith may be perfected and obtain salvation [Dahl and Tate, pp. 31–104].

The Prophet Joseph SMITH, Oliver COWDERY, Sidney RIGDON, and Frederick G. Williams, who compiled the first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, said in the “Lectures on Faith” preface “that it contains, in short, the leading items of the religion which we have professed to believe,” and “we have . . . endeavored to present our belief, though in few words, and when we say this, we humbly trust that it is the faith and principles of this society as a body” (Dahl and Tate, pp. 29–30).

Although it is impossible to evaluate the long-term impact of the lectures on LDS belief and teaching, the process of producing the lectures led early Church leaders to articulate and synthesize some of what they had learned from the revelations of the Restoration with the understanding of the Bible that they inherited from American Christianity. Although these lectures have received limited attention from most Latter-day Saints, others have taken them quite seriously and praised their value. LDS scripturalist and apostle Bruce R. McConkie wrote regarding the lectures, “They were not themselves classed as revelations, but in them is to be found some of the best lesson material ever prepared on the Godhead; on the character, perfections, and attributes of God; on faith, miracles, and sacrifice. They can be studied with great profit by all gospel scholars” (MD, p. 439). The 1990 republication of the lectures signals the desire of some LDS scholars to stimulate interest in their historical and doctrinal significance for the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dahl, Larry E., and Charles D. Tate, eds. The Lectures on Faith in Historical Perspective. Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Gentry, Leland H. “What of the Lectures on Faith?” BYU Studies 19 (Fall 1978):5–19.

Larsen, Wayne A.; Alvin C. Rencher; and Tim Layton. “Who Wrote the Book of Mormon? An Analysis of Wordprints.” BYU Studies 20 (Spring 1980):249, app. E (“Lectures on Faith”); rev. repr. in Book of Mormon Authorship, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, pp. 183–84. Provo, Utah, 1982.

Phipps, Alan J. “The Lectures on Faith: An Authorship Study.” Master’s thesis, Brigham Young University, 1977.

Van Wagoner, Richard S.; Steven C. Walker; and Allen D. Roberts. “The ‘Lectures on Faith’: A Case Study in Decanonization.” Dialogue 20 (Fall 1987):71–77.

LARRY E. DAHL

LEE, HAROLD B.

Harold Bingham Lee (1899–1973) became the eleventh President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints on July 7, 1972, and served until his death on December 26, 1973. His 538-day tenure was the shortest service by a Church President in history, despite the fact that at age seventy-three President Lee was the youngest person to hold the office initially in nearly forty years. One of his greatest contributions to the Church, the organization of the correlation program, was made when he was still a member of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

President Lee was born on March 28, 1899, in Clifton, Idaho, to Samuel Marion Lee and Louisa Emiline Bingham. He grew up in impoverished, rural conditions, and from childhood he advanced faster than his peers. He started school a year earlier than was the practice in his farming community because he could already write his name and knew the alphabet. As a young boy, he was large for his age, and when his friends were ordained to the priesthood, he became a deacon also, although he was technically not quite old enough for the honor.

In keeping with this pattern, he began his career in education at a young age. He earned a teaching certificate at Albion State Normal School in Idaho, and at seventeen was appointed to be principal of the one-room Silver Star School at Weston, Idaho, teaching twenty to twenty-five pupils, ranging from first to eighth grade. One year later, he was appointed principal of the larger grade school at Oxford, Idaho, where he served for three winters.

These responsibilities prepared him for his call in 1920 to the Western States Mission, headquartered in Denver, Colorado. After nine months

Lecture Seven

19. All things which pertain to life and godliness are the effects of faith.

20. When faith comes, it brings its train of attendants with it—apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, gifts, wisdom, knowledge, miracles, healings, tongues, interpretation of tongues, etc. All these appear when faith appears on the earth and disappear when it disappears from the earth. For these are the effects of faith and always have attended and always will attend it. For where faith is, there will the knowledge of God be, also, with all things which pertain thereto: revelations, visions, and dreams, as well as every other necessary thing, so the possessors of faith may be perfected and obtain salvation [Dahl and Tate, pp. 31–104].

The Prophet Joseph SMITH, Oliver COWDERY, Sidney RIGDON, and Frederick G. Williams, who compiled the first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, said in the “Lectures on Faith” preface “that it contains, in short, the leading items of the religion which we have professed to believe,” and “we have . . . endeavored to present our belief, though in few words, and when we say this, we humbly trust that it is the faith and principles of this society as a body” (Dahl and Tate, pp. 29–30).

Although it is impossible to evaluate the long-term impact of the lectures on LDS belief and teaching, the process of producing the lectures led early Church leaders to articulate and synthesize some of what they had learned from the revelations of the Restoration with the understanding of the Bible that they inherited from American Christianity. Although these lectures have received limited attention from most Latter-day Saints, others have taken them quite seriously and praised their value. LDS scripturalist and apostle Bruce R. McConkie wrote regarding the lectures, “They were not themselves classed as revelations, but in them is to be found some of the best lesson material ever prepared on the Godhead; on the character, perfections, and attributes of God; on faith, miracles, and sacrifice. They can be studied with great profit by all gospel scholars” (MD, p. 439). The 1990 republication of the lectures signals the desire of some LDS scholars to stimulate interest in their historical and doctrinal significance for the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dahl, Larry E., and Charles D. Tate, eds. The Lectures on Faith in Historical Perspective. Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Gentry, Leland H. “What of the Lectures on Faith?” BYU Studies 19 (Fall 1978):5–19.

Larsen, Wayne A.; Alvin C. Rencher; and Tim Layton. “Who Wrote the Book of Mormon? An Analysis of Wordprints.” BYU Studies 20 (Spring 1980):249, app. E (“Lectures on Faith”); rev. repr. in Book of Mormon Authorship, ed. Noel B. Reynolds, pp. 183–84. Provo, Utah, 1982.

Phipps, Alan J. “The Lectures on Faith: An Authorship Study.” Master’s thesis, Brigham Young University, 1977.

Van Wagoner, Richard S.; Steven C. Walker; and Allen D. Roberts. “The ‘Lectures on Faith’: A Case Study in Decanonization.” Dialogue 20 (Fall 1987):71–77.

LARRY E. DAHL

LEE, HAROLD B.

Harold Bingham Lee (1899–1973) became the eleventh President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints on July 7, 1972, and served until his death on December 26, 1973. His 538-day tenure was the shortest service by a Church President in history, despite the fact that at age seventy-three President Lee was the youngest person to hold the office initially in nearly forty years. One of his greatest contributions to the Church, the organization of the correlation program, was made when he was still a member of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

President Lee was born on March 28, 1899, in Clifton, Idaho, to Samuel Marion Lee and Louisa Emiline Bingham. He grew up in impoverished, rural conditions, and from childhood he advanced faster than his peers. He started school a year earlier than was the practice in his farming community because he could already write his name and knew the alphabet. As a young boy, he was large for his age, and when his friends were ordained to the priesthood, he became a deacon also, although he was technically not quite old enough for the honor.

In keeping with this pattern, he began his career in education at a young age. He earned a teaching certificate at Albion State Normal School in Idaho, and at seventeen was appointed to be principal of the one-room Silver Star School at Weston, Idaho, teaching twenty to twenty-five pupils, ranging from first to eighth grade. One year later, he was appointed principal of the larger grade school at Oxford, Idaho, where he served for three winters.

These responsibilities prepared him for his call in 1920 to the Western States Mission, headquartered in Denver, Colorado. After nine months he became conference president, presiding over both missionaries and local Church members in Denver. During his two year missionary service, he baptized forty-five converts to the Church.

Twenty-two-year-old Harold B. Lee, seated to the right of mission president John M. Knight, served as president of the Denver Conference of the Western States Mission (photo of the Denver Conference, 1921).

President Lee was one of the youngest stake presidents in the Church when at thirty-one, he was set apart as president of Pioneer Stake in Salt Lake City. Within a few years, he was faced with the suffering among stake members brought on by the Great Depression. With his counselors, he struggled to save his people from hunger and financial ruin. His ingenuity in helping them obtain basic necessities led to his appointment by the First Presidency in 1935 to organize a welfare program for the entire Church.

In 1932 President Lee was appointed to fill a vacancy in the Salt Lake City Commission and was assigned to direct the Department of Streets and Public Improvements. A year later, he was elected to the same position. For years Utah citizens urged him to run for the governorship or for the U.S. Senate.

Elder Lee was called as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles on April 6, 1941. As he looked around the council room in the Salt Lake Temple where the quorum held its meetings, Elder Lee, then forty-two, discovered that every man there was at least twenty years his senior. He thought of himself as a seedling among giant redwoods, causing his tutor and friend J. Reuben Clark, Jr., a counselor in the First Presidency, to refer affectionately to him as the "Kid."

Early in his apostleship, Elder Lee served on a committee to simplify Church organization and functions. For two decades, he studied the subject and prepared proposals. Finally when the time for implementing them came in the 1960s, the CORRELATION program was introduced, with Lee serving as chairman of the Correlation Committee. Correlation emphasized the family and the home, the connection of auxiliary organizations with the priesthood, simplification of the curriculum, the teaching of the scriptures, and restructuring the Church magazines to serve children, youth, and adults better.

In January 1970, Elder Lee was called to serve as a counselor in the First Presidency while concurrently presiding over the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. He was called to be PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH after President Joseph Fielding Smith died on July 2, 1972.

Following a long period when age and illness had prevented the previous Church Presidents from traveling, President Lee moved out among the people. He attended area conferences in England, Mexico, and Germany. President Lee also conscientiously and purposefully devoted much time to address youth conferences, to restore the prophetic image to the young members of the Church. He was the first to visit Israel and Palestine as President of the Church.

President Lee possessed a remarkable candor about himself and the office of President. He talked openly of his feelings about his calling, allowing people to look into his heart. Sensitive spirituality was his greatest leadership quality. He sought answers to prayers for the Saints and boldly labeled the answers revelations. He was a forceful preacher of the gospel. His sermons were always based upon solid scriptural foundations, and yet the lessons were invariably illustrated with poignant and often tender stories of everyday life, appropriate to the day and its challenges. His counsel was practical; for him the most important commandment was the one a person was having difficulty living at the moment.

President Lee's spirituality resulted partly from his personal struggles. He learned to control a fiery temper and a quick, action-oriented disposition that had earlier in his life offended some. In his later years, President Lee was perceived as being more gentle in manner, compassionate, gracious, hospitable, and thoughtful of others. He was always a gentleman, impeccably dressed. At age seventy-four he served as though in the prime of life, with a rich, full voice and characteristic vigor. His sudden death on December 26, 1973, from cardiac and lung failure stunned the Church.

Harold B. Lee (photo 1959) became a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles in 1941 and eleventh President of the Church in 1972.

President Lee found great pleasure, and also experienced sorrows, in his family. In 1923 he married Fern Lucinda Tanner, whom he first met in the Western States Mission. To them were born two daughters, Maurine and Helen. They had ten grandchildren. Fern died September 24, 1962, and Maurine died shortly thereafter, making this a difficult period in President Lee's life. He married Freda Johanna (Joan) Jensen, an educator, on June 17, 1963.

In the conference meeting in which he was sustained as President of the Church, President Lee characterized his own life: "At times it seemed as though I, too, was like a rough stone rolling down from a high mountainside, being buffeted and polished, I suppose, by experiences, that I, too, might overcome and become a polished shaft in the quiver of the Almighty" (CR, Oct. 1972, p. 20).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Arrington, Leonard J. "Harold B. Lee." In, The Presidents of the Church, ed. Leonard J. Arrington, pp. 342-71. Salt Lake City, 1986.

Coates, L. Brent. Harold B. Lee, Prophet and Seer. Salt Lake City, 1985.

———. He Changed My Life. Salt Lake City, 1988.

L. BRENT GOATES

LEGAL AND JUDICIAL HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has usually relied upon the law for protection and has honored its judgments in principle and practice. The one significant exception was its resistance to antipolygamy laws before PLURAL MARRIAGE was discontinued in 1890. Obedience to the law of the land is a tenet of LDS belief (see POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS).

Despite this respect for law, nineteenth-century LDS history includes numerous encounters with the law. Peculiarities of doctrine and practice, accompanied by social cohesion that appeared threatening to outsiders, spawned both PERSECUTION and frequent litigation for the Church and its leaders. In western New York, where the Church had its genesis, and in OHIO, where the Prophet Joseph SMITH moved in 1831, evenhanded justice was generally available in the courts. Three times in New York, Joseph Smith was tried and acquitted for "vagrancy" and "disorderly conduct," the charges stemming largely from religious hostility (see SMITH, JOSEPH: LEGAL TRIALS). In Ohio the Prophet and other Church leaders used the courts affirmatively to obtain redress against religious persecution. Near the close of the Ohio period, the failure of the Kirtland Safety Society (see KIRTLAND ECONOMY), a lending institution, brought a host of lawsuits against individual Church leaders who had sponsored it. The society was engaged in banking activities without a legal charter and collapsed in the wake of bank failures that swept the nation in 1837. Numerous judgments were obtained against Joseph Smith and other principals, some of which they were un-being more gentle in manner, compassionate, gracious, hospitable, and thoughtful of others. He was always a gentleman, impeccably dressed. At age seventy-four he served as though in the prime of life, with a rich, full voice and characteristic vigor. His sudden death on December 26, 1973, from cardiac and lung failure stunned the Church.

Harold B. Lee (photo 1959) became a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles in 1941 and eleventh President of the Church in 1972.

President Lee found great pleasure, and also experienced sorrows, in his family. In 1923 he married Fern Lucinda Tanner, whom he first met in the Western States Mission. To them were born two daughters, Maurine and Helen. They had ten grandchildren. Fern died September 24, 1962, and Maurine died shortly thereafter, making this a difficult period in President Lee's life. He married Freda Johanna (Joan) Jensen, an educator, on June 17, 1963.

In the conference meeting in which he was sustained as President of the Church, President Lee characterized his own life: "At times it seemed as though I, too, was like a rough stone rolling down from a high mountainside, being buffeted and polished, I suppose, by experiences, that I, too, might overcome and become a polished shaft in the quiver of the Almighty" (CR, Oct. 1972, p. 20).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Arrington, Leonard J. "Harold B. Lee." In, The Presidents of the Church, ed. Leonard J. Arrington, pp. 342-71. Salt Lake City, 1986.

Coates, L. Brent. Harold B. Lee, Prophet and Seer. Salt Lake City, 1985.

———. He Changed My Life. Salt Lake City, 1988.

L. BRENT GOATES

LEGAL AND JUDICIAL HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has usually relied upon the law for protection and has honored its judgments in principle and practice. The one significant exception was its resistance to antipolygamy laws before PLURAL MARRIAGE was discontinued in 1890. Obedience to the law of the land is a tenet of LDS belief (see POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS).

Despite this respect for law, nineteenth-century LDS history includes numerous encounters with the law. Peculiarities of doctrine and practice, accompanied by social cohesion that appeared threatening to outsiders, spawned both PERSECUTION and frequent litigation for the Church and its leaders. In western New York, where the Church had its genesis, and in OHIO, where the Prophet Joseph SMITH moved in 1831, evenhanded justice was generally available in the courts. Three times in New York, Joseph Smith was tried and acquitted for "vagrancy" and "disorderly conduct," the charges stemming largely from religious hostility (see SMITH, JOSEPH: LEGAL TRIALS). In Ohio the Prophet and other Church leaders used the courts affirmatively to obtain redress against religious persecution. Near the close of the Ohio period, the failure of the Kirtland Safety Society (see KIRTLAND ECONOMY), a lending institution, brought a host of lawsuits against individual Church leaders who had sponsored it. The society was engaged in banking activities without a legal charter and collapsed in the wake of bank failures that swept the nation in 1837. Numerous judgments were obtained against Joseph Smith and other principals, some of which they were unable to pay, but anti-Mormon bias appears not to have been a factor in the decisions.

In Missouri, where the Latter-day Saints began to gather in 1831 and where the Prophet went after fleeing Kirtland in January 1838, the courts were less sympathetic. In 1833–1834 the Saints were forcibly expelled from Jackson County and forced into Clay County, Missouri, by mob violence. After resettling in nearby Caldwell and other Missouri counties, they were again driven from their homes in 1838–1839 by armed mobs abetted by the state militia. In neither instance were they able to obtain judicial redress for loss of life and property. Instead, incident to the expulsion from Caldwell County, Joseph Smith and other Church leaders were arrested as instigators of the violence on charges of larceny, arson, and murder. Most of the prisoners, including the Prophet, were later allowed to escape, and they fled to Illinois. Two who reached trial were acquitted for lack of evidence.

In Illinois, for a time, the Saints had a more favorable experience with the law. Courted by Illinois politicians, they obtained a liberal state charter for their city of Nauvoo. Under the NAUVOO CHARTER the local court consisted of the mayor of Nauvoo and the city aldermen, who were also Church leaders. By ordinance, no legal process issued in any other jurisdiction could be served in Nauvoo except by the city marshal, and then only when countersigned by the mayor. The Nauvoo court made extensive use of the writ of habeas corpus to free persons held under arrest warrants issued by courts outside Nauvoo. Joseph Smith was discharged from arrest several times on writs issued by the Nauvoo court; he also obtained habeas relief from the federal district court in Springfield, Illinois. In June 1844 the Prophet accepted the need to stand trial at Carthage, the county seat, on charges arising from the Nauvoo city council's decision to declare the NAUVOO EXPOSITOR (a newly created opposition newspaper) a nuisance and destroy its printing press. While imprisoned in CARTHAGE JAIL awaiting trial, he and his brother Hyrum were killed by a mob. His accused assassins were tried and acquitted. The Illinois legislature repealed the Nauvoo Charter in January 1845, and in early 1846, threatened by mob violence, the Saints began a westward exodus that ultimately led to Utah.

In Utah, local government officials were usually Church leaders, and the territorial legislature and local judges were drawn almost exclusively from Church membership. When the UTAH TERRITORY was formally organized in 1850, Brigham YOUNG, President of the Church, was appointed territorial governor. A system of ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS was established alongside the territorial courts, and most disputes between Church members were settled there rather than in the civil courts. Except in special circumstances, suing a brother or sister in a civil court constituted "un-Christianlike conduct," for which a penalty of Church disfellowshipment was often imposed. Nonmembers occasionally took their civil claims to ## Pleas for Religious Liberty and the Rights of Conscience.

ARGUMENTS

DELIVERED IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

April 28, 1886, in three cases of

LORENZO SNOW, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR,

v.

THE UNITED STATES,

On Writs of Error to the Supreme Court of Utah Territory.

By GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS

AND

FRANKLIN S. RICHARDS.

When we compare the strange respect of mankind for liberty with their strange want of respect for it, we might imagine that a man had an indispensable right to do harm to others, and no right at all to please himself without giving pain to any one.

JOHN STUART MILL.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

GIBSON BROS., PRINTERS AND BOOKBINDERS.

1886.

Two appeals to the U.S. Supreme Court by Lorenzo Snow regarding "cohabitation" were dismissed on jurisdictional or procedural grounds. However, Snow's arguments, published in this 1886 document, maintained that his case turned, not on procedure, but on basic religious freedoms and rights of conscience, as had the earlier case of Reynolds v. United States. Courtesy John W. Welch.

Church courts as well. The county probate judge was usually a local Church leader, and probate courts were important in the judicial system because the territorial legislature had given them broad jurisdiction in both criminal and civil matters. Congress abolished the general jurisdiction of the probate courts in 1874 as part of the federal campaign against polygamy.

Tension between the Church and the federal government in Utah appeared almost from the beginning. Several federal appointees to the territorial government in 1851, including two of three federal judges, clashed with Church officials and the territorial legislature and quickly left the territory. Their negative reports to the President of the United States and to the public helped lay the foundation for future misunderstanding. The tension reached crisis proportions in 1857 when U.S. President James Buchanan, acting on false reports of a Mormon rebellion, sent an army of 2,500 men to ensure the authority of a new territorial governor, Alfred Cumming of Georgia (see UTAH EXPEDITION). The confrontation was resolved without bloodshed, but it signaled a conflict not to be mitigated until after 1890, when the Church officially discontinued the practice of plural marriage and adopted a less intrusive role in the political and economic life of Utah.

Courts and the law, rather than military force, became the means of enforcing Church capitulation to the mandates of the larger secular society. The U.S. Supreme Court, in Reynolds v. United States (98 U.S. 145 [1879]), ruled that the First Amendment right to free exercise of religion did not exempt Mormon polygamists from prosecution under the Morrill Anti-Bigamy Act (1862), and this paved the way for even harsher anti-Mormon legislation (see ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION). Unlawful cohabitation, easier to prove than a bigamous marriage, was made a crime in 1882. Other legislation found constitutional by the courts had the effect of excluding Latter-day Saints from territorial juries, denying them the right to vote or hold public office, denying polygamists' children the right of inheritance, and hindering the immigration of Church members from abroad. Church leaders were repeatedly harassed by vexatious lawsuits. Pressure on the Church climaxed when the U.S. Supreme Court, in The Late Corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints v. United States (136 U.S. 1 [1890]), upheld provisions of the 1887 Edmunds-Tucker Act that disincorporated the Church and authorized confiscation of most of its property. On September 24, 1890, President Wilford WOODRUFF, by revelation, issued the MANIFESTO discontinuing the practice of plural marriage. Although a number of property issues remained, the Manifesto spelled the end of the nineteenth-century legal confrontation between the Church and the U.S. government.

A trial in Richfield, Territory of Utah. Frontier justice was often rough and arbitrary by modern standards. Courtesy Nelson Wadsworth.

In the twentieth century, the Church has avoided conduct that might bring it into conflict with the law of the land. Since the official discontinuance of plural marriage, no Church-sanctioned practices have posed a direct challenge to current legal norms. Disputes over property, business matters, and personal-injury claims have occasionally led to lawsuits, and legal claims sometimes have arisen out of specialized Church operations, such as LDS Social Services and BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY. Church activities outside the United States have also produced occasional lawsuits as the Church has expanded internationally. For the most part, this litigation has had little significance for the central mission of the Church or for issues of RELIGIOUS FREEDOM. Compared with other large institutions in modern society, the Church has not been litigious.

A few court actions affecting the Church have had special significance, however. The decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints et al. v. Amos et al. (483 U.S. 327 [1987]) was a notable affirmation of religious group rights under the U.S. CONSTITUTION. The suit was brought by former employees of the Church-owned Deseret Gymnasium, Beehive Clothing Mills, and Deseret Industries who were discharged for failing to meet religious qualifications for participation in LDS temple worship. The employees alleged religious discrimination in violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. In defense, the Church invoked section 702 of the act, which expressly exempts religious organizations from the statutory prohibition of religious discrimination in employment. The lower court found that the section 702 exemption violated the establishment clause of the First Amendment, a constitutional bar to laws having the purpose or primary effect of advancing religion. The Supreme Court unanimously disagreed, holding the statutory exemption to be a permissible governmental accommodation of religion, at least as to nonprofit activities. The Amos decision is an important statement of the right of religious organizations to preserve their institutional integrity by maintaining religious qualifications for employees.

In two other establishment clause cases, Church practices were implicated, although the Church was not a party. Lanner v. Wimmer (662 F.2d 1349 [10th Cir. 1981]) was a challenge to the Logan, Utah, school district policy of granting released time and high school credit for students attending weekday LDS seminary classes. The court decided that released time was permissible governmental accommodation of religion but that granting of credit was not. The second case, Foremaster v. City of St. George (882 F.2d 1485 [10th Cir. 1989]), involved a citizen's objection to the city's subsidization of exterior lighting of the LDS St. George Temple and to the use of a replica of the temple on the St. George city logo. Although St. George claimed it was using the temple to enhance the city's image, the federal appeals court ruled that the city was thereby endorsing the Church in violation of the constitutional rule against establishment of religion.

The Church and its members have helped to define the statutory rights of religious groups through litigation of tax exemption laws in a number of U.S. and foreign jurisdictions. In England the Church's claim to a statutory property tax exemption for its London Temple was ultimately decided by the House of Lords, the highest court of appeal (Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints v. Henning, 2 All E.R. 733 [1963]). The Lords denied the exemption because the temple, with its restrictive admission requirements, did not qualify under the statute as a place of "public worship." Henning has been frequently cited in British cases interpreting the property tax exemption statute. It was cited but not followed in the New Zealand Supreme Court decision of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Trust Board v. Waipa County Council (2 N.Z.L.R. 710 [1980]), in which the court, interpreting a New Zealand statute, granted a property tax exemption to the LDS temple in New Zealand. Property tax exemptions for Church property have also been litigated in a number of U.S. states, most commonly in relation to Church welfare farms. Exemption for such property has been denied by courts in Arizona, Idaho, and Oregon, but upheld in South Carolina. In each case, the outcome has turned on the wording of the statute defining the tax exemption.

Of some practical importance for Church members in the United States was the 1990 decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Davis v. United States (110 S.Ct. 2014 [U.S. 1990]). In an income-tax refund suit brought by parents of two former missionaries, the Court held that funds sent directly to missionaries for their support were not deductible as a charitable contribution. To qualify as a charitable deduction, the funds had to be given to the Church itself or else donated through a trust or other legally enforceable arrangement, for the benefit of the Church.

Occasionally other legal actions have been of interest to the Church, even though the Church was not a party and no Church activities were directly at issue. One highly publicized case was the prosecution of Mark Hofmann for two 1985 Utah murder-bombings and various document FORGERIES. The Church was interested because many of the Hofmann forgeries purported to shed new light on the early history of the Church and had been widely accepted as authentic. After a preliminary hearing, the prosecutors accepted a plea bargain mandating life imprisonment. Another widely noted case indirectly affecting the Church arose from an Idaho court challenge to the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA). The Church had taken a strong official stand against the ERA, and proponents of the amendment claimed that U.S. District Judge Marion J. Callister would be biased on the issue because he was a prominent local Church leader. Judge Callister refused to disqualify himself (Idaho v. Freeman, 478 F.Supp. 33 [1979], 507 F.Supp 706 [1981]) and subsequently ruled against the ERA on the major issues. On appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, the case was dismissed as moot because the time for ratification of the ERA had expired (National Organization for Women, Inc., et al. v. Idaho et al., 459 U.S. 809 [1982]).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Glen M. Leonard. The Story of the Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Burman, Jennifer Mary. "Corporation of Presiding Bishop v. Amos: The Supreme Court and Religious Discrimination by Religious Educational Institutions." Notre Dame Journal of Law, Ethics and Public Policy 3 (1988):629–62.
- Driggs, Kenneth David. "The Mormon Church-State Confrontation in Nineteenth-Century America." Journal of Church and State 30 (1988):273–89.
- Firmage, Edwin Brown, and Richard Collin Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.

ROBERT E. RIGGS

LEHI

The patriarch and prophet Lehi led his family from Jerusalem to the western hemisphere about 600 B.C. and was the progenitor of two major Book of Mormon peoples, the NEPHITES and the LAMANITES. His visions and prophecies were concerned chiefly with the pending destruction of Jerusalem, the mortal ministry of the coming Messiah—including the time of his coming and the prophet who would precede him—and future events among his own descendants in the PROMISED LAND. His words provided spiritual guidance to both lines of his posterity during their mutual history (1 Ne. 1, 8, 10; 2 Ne. 1–3). Several of his prophecies concerning his posterity remain to be fulfilled. Although Lehi wrote much, only portions were preserved in the present Book of Mormon from the records of two of his sons NEPHI and JACOB (cf. 1 Ne. 1:16–17; 19:1; Jacob 2:23–34; 3:5; see Brown).

At the time of his first known vision, Lehi lived near Jerusalem, was familiar with "the learning of the Jews," and possessed "gold and silver, and all manner of riches" (1 Ne. 1:2; 3:16). He knew the Egyptian language and was familiar with desert nomadic life. Some scholars have suggested that Lehi was a merchant or smith with ties to Egypt (CWHN 5:34–42; 6:58–92).

His life was dramatically changed when he beheld a "pillar of fire" and "saw and heard much" while praying about the predicted fall of Jerusalem (1 Ne. 1:6). In a vision he saw God and a radiant being—accompanied by twelve others—who gave him a book in which he read of the impending destruction of the city and of "the coming of a Messiah, and also the redemption of the world" (1 Ne. 1:19). Like the speeches of his contemporary JEREMIAH, Lehi's warnings to the people of Jerusalem roused strong opposition. Surrounded by growing hatred, he was warned by God that the people sought his life; therefore, he was to flee with his family, consisting of his wife Sariah, his sons LAMAN, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi, and his daughters (1 Ne. 1:8–2:5).

Sariah once accused her husband of being a "visionary man" in a hard test of her faith (1 Ne. 5:2). The phrase aptly characterizes Lehi, for he dreamed dreams and saw visions through which God guided his family to the promised land. After fleeing Jerusalem, at divine behest Lehi twice sent his sons back: once to obtain written records (containing the holy scriptures, a record of the Jews from the beginning, the law, prophecies, and genealogical records) needed to preserve the family's history, language and religion; and a second time to invite ISHMAEL and his family—including marriageable daughters—to join the exodus (chaps. 3–4, 7).

Through revelation, Lehi instructed his sons where game could be hunted in the wilderness (16:30–31). In this he was assisted by a curious compasslike object (see LIAHONA) that operated according to the faith, diligence, and heed they gave it (16:10, 28–29).

One of Lehi's grandest visions was of the tree of life (1 Ne. 8). In a highly symbolic setting, Lehi saw the prospects for his family members measured against the PLAN OF SALVATION. Nephi had the same vision opened to him and gave details and interpretation to what his father had seen (1 Ne. 11–14). Lehi first saw a man dressed in white who led him through a "dark and dreary waste." After traveling many hours, he prayed for divine help, and found himself in a large field where there grew a tree whose fruit was white and desirable (symbolic of God's love). When he urged his family to come and partake, all did so except Laman and Lemuel. Lehi also saw a path, alongside which ran [1979], 507 F.Supp 706 [1981]) and subsequently ruled against the ERA on the major issues. On appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, the case was dismissed as moot because the time for ratification of the ERA had expired (National Organization for Women, Inc., et al. v. Idaho et al., 459 U.S. 809 [1982]).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Glen M. Leonard. The Story of the Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Burman, Jennifer Mary. "Corporation of Presiding Bishop v. Amos: The Supreme Court and Religious Discrimination by Religious Educational Institutions." Notre Dame Journal of Law, Ethics and Public Policy 3 (1988):629–62.
- Driggs, Kenneth David. "The Mormon Church-State Confrontation in Nineteenth-Century America." Journal of Church and State 30 (1988):273–89.
- Firmage, Edwin Brown, and Richard Collin Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.

ROBERT E. RIGGS

LEHI

The patriarch and prophet Lehi led his family from Jerusalem to the western hemisphere about 600 B.C. and was the progenitor of two major Book of Mormon peoples, the NEPHITES and the LAMANITES. His visions and prophecies were concerned chiefly with the pending destruction of Jerusalem, the mortal ministry of the coming Messiah—including the time of his coming and the prophet who would precede him—and future events among his own descendants in the PROMISED LAND. His words provided spiritual guidance to both lines of his posterity during their mutual history (1 Ne. 1, 8, 10; 2 Ne. 1–3). Several of his prophecies concerning his posterity remain to be fulfilled. Although Lehi wrote much, only portions were preserved in the present Book of Mormon from the records of two of his sons NEPHI and JACOB (cf. 1 Ne. 1:16–17; 19:1; Jacob 2:23–34; 3:5; see Brown).

At the time of his first known vision, Lehi lived near Jerusalem, was familiar with "the learning of the Jews," and possessed "gold and silver, and all manner of riches" (1 Ne. 1:2; 3:16). He knew the Egyptian language and was familiar with desert nomadic life. Some scholars have suggested that Lehi was a merchant or smith with ties to Egypt (CWHN 5:34–42; 6:58–92).

His life was dramatically changed when he beheld a "pillar of fire" and "saw and heard much" while praying about the predicted fall of Jerusalem (1 Ne. 1:6). In a vision he saw God and a radiant being—accompanied by twelve others—who gave him a book in which he read of the impending destruction of the city and of "the coming of a Messiah, and also the redemption of the world" (1 Ne. 1:19). Like the speeches of his contemporary JEREMIAH, Lehi's warnings to the people of Jerusalem roused strong opposition. Surrounded by growing hatred, he was warned by God that the people sought his life; therefore, he was to flee with his family, consisting of his wife Sariah, his sons LAMAN, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi, and his daughters (1 Ne. 1:8–2:5).

Sariah once accused her husband of being a "visionary man" in a hard test of her faith (1 Ne. 5:2). The phrase aptly characterizes Lehi, for he dreamed dreams and saw visions through which God guided his family to the promised land. After fleeing Jerusalem, at divine behest Lehi twice sent his sons back: once to obtain written records (containing the holy scriptures, a record of the Jews from the beginning, the law, prophecies, and genealogical records) needed to preserve the family's history, language and religion; and a second time to invite ISHMAEL and his family—including marriageable daughters—to join the exodus (chaps. 3–4, 7).

Through revelation, Lehi instructed his sons where game could be hunted in the wilderness (16:30–31). In this he was assisted by a curious compasslike object (see LIAHONA) that operated according to the faith, diligence, and heed they gave it (16:10, 28–29).

One of Lehi's grandest visions was of the tree of life (1 Ne. 8). In a highly symbolic setting, Lehi saw the prospects for his family members measured against the PLAN OF SALVATION. Nephi had the same vision opened to him and gave details and interpretation to what his father had seen (1 Ne. 11–14). Lehi first saw a man dressed in white who led him through a "dark and dreary waste." After traveling many hours, he prayed for divine help, and found himself in a large field where there grew a tree whose fruit was white and desirable (symbolic of God's love). When he urged his family to come and partake, all did so except Laman and Lemuel. Lehi also saw a path, alongside which ran an iron rod (representing God's word) leading to the tree and extending along the bank of a river. Many people pressing forward to reach the path became lost in a mist of darkness (temptations); some reached the tree and partook, only to become ashamed and fall away; others, following the rod of iron, reached the tree and enjoyed the fruit. On the other side of the river Lehi saw a large building (the PRIDE of the world) whose inhabitants ridiculed those eating the fruit. LDS scholars have pointed out that the features of Lehi's dream are quite at home in the desert in which Lehi was traveling (CWHN 6:253–64; cf. Griggs; Welch).

Lehi's prophecies concerned the future redemption of Israel. He spoke of the destruction of Jerusalem (587 B.C.), the taking of the Jews to Babylon, and their subsequent return to Jerusalem. He foretold the mission of JOHN THE BAPTIST and the Messiah's coming, death, and RESURRECTION. Finally, Lehi compared Israel's eventual scattering to "an olive-tree, whose branches should be broken off and . . . scattered upon all the face of the earth" (1 Ne. 10:12; cf. ALLEGORY OF ZENOS).

In the wilderness Sariah bore two sons, Jacob and Joseph (1 Ne. 18:7). Apparently the journey was so difficult that she and Lehi aged substantially. During the transoceanic voyage, their grief—caused by the rebellion of their two eldest sons—brought them close to death (18:17–18).

In the New World, Lehi gathered his family before his death to give them final teachings and blessings (2 Ne. 1–4). He taught them that he had received a great promise regarding his descendants and the land they now possessed. This promise was conditioned upon their righteousness: "Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land; but inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from my presence" (2 Ne. 1:20; cf. Abr. 2:6).

Lehi addressed his son Jacob about the plan of salvation (2 Ne. 2). Instead of using imagery, he explained it plainly and logically. He taught that while all know good from evil, many have fallen short. However, the Messiah has paid the debt if men and women will accept his help with a contrite spirit. He further explained that a fundamental OPPOSITION in all things exists so that people must choose. He reasoned that, as freedom of choice allowed ADAM and EVE to fall, so it permits each to choose between "liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil" (2 Ne. 2:27).

Before giving his final blessings to others in the family (2 Ne. 4:3–11), Lehi spoke to Joseph, his youngest (2 Ne. 3), mentioning two other Josephs: JOSEPH who was sold into Egypt, and another, of whom the first Joseph had prophesied—Joseph SMITH. He then set forth Joseph Smith's mission of bringing forth the Book of Mormon, prophesying that a "cry from the dust" would summon Lehi's seed (2 Ne. 3:19–25), and he promised the sons and daughters of Laman and Lemuel, "in the end thy seed shall be blessed" (2 Ne. 4:9).

After Lehi's death, family dissensions forced Nephi and others who believed the revelations of God to separate from the group led by the two oldest brothers, causing a rupture in the colony. While Lehi lived, his family stayed together, a demonstration of his leadership abilities.

[See also Book of Mormon: First Book of Nephi.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, S. Kent. "Lehi's Personal Record: Quest for a Missing Source." BYU Studies 24 (Winter 1984):19–42.
- Griggs, C. Wilfred. "The Book of Mormon As an Ancient Book." BYU Studies 22 (Summer 1982):259–78.
- Nibley, Hugh. Lehi in the Desert, An Approach to the Book of Mormon, and Since Cumorah. In CWHN, Vols. 5–7.
- Welch, John W. "The Narrative of Zosimus and the Book of Mormon." BYU Studies 22 (Summer 1982):311–32.

S. KENT BROWN
TERRENCE L. SZINK

---

LEVITICAL PRIESTHOOD

Levitical Priesthood is a rarely used term today, and it is sometimes applied to the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD (Heb. 7:11; D&C 107:1, 6, 10). MOSES and his brother AARON belonged to the tribe of Levi. Latter-day revelation indicates that before Moses died, the Melchizedek Priesthood and the higher law of the gospel were withdrawn from the Israelites because of their disobedience. Aaron and his sons were then given a lesser PRIESTHOOD to administer the lesser LAW OF MOSES as priests in Israel (D&C 84:18–28; Ex. 28:1). To assist Aaron and his sons, other worthy male members of the tribe of Levi were also given authority in the lesser priesthood, although they

an iron rod (representing God's word) leading to the tree and extending along the bank of a river. Many people pressing forward to reach the path became lost in a mist of darkness (temptations); some reached the tree and partook, only to become ashamed and fall away; others, following the rod of iron, reached the tree and enjoyed the fruit. On the other side of the river Lehi saw a large building (the PRIDE of the world) whose inhabitants ridiculed those eating the fruit. LDS scholars have pointed out that the features of Lehi's dream are quite at home in the desert in which Lehi was traveling (CWHN 6:253–64; cf. Griggs; Welch).

Lehi's prophecies concerned the future redemption of Israel. He spoke of the destruction of Jerusalem (587 B.C.), the taking of the Jews to Babylon, and their subsequent return to Jerusalem. He foretold the mission of JOHN THE BAPTIST and the Messiah's coming, death, and RESURRECTION. Finally, Lehi compared Israel's eventual scattering to "an olive-tree, whose branches should be broken off and . . . scattered upon all the face of the earth" (1 Ne. 10:12; cf. ALLEGORY OF ZENOS).

In the wilderness Sariah bore two sons, Jacob and Joseph (1 Ne. 18:7). Apparently the journey was so difficult that she and Lehi aged substantially. During the transoceanic voyage, their grief—caused by the rebellion of their two eldest sons—brought them close to death (18:17–18).

In the New World, Lehi gathered his family before his death to give them final teachings and blessings (2 Ne. 1–4). He taught them that he had received a great promise regarding his descendants and the land they now possessed. This promise was conditioned upon their righteousness: "Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments ye shall prosper in the land; but inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from my presence" (2 Ne. 1:20; cf. Abr. 2:6).

Lehi addressed his son Jacob about the plan of salvation (2 Ne. 2). Instead of using imagery, he explained it plainly and logically. He taught that while all know good from evil, many have fallen short. However, the Messiah has paid the debt if men and women will accept his help with a contrite spirit. He further explained that a fundamental OPPOSITION in all things exists so that people must choose. He reasoned that, as freedom of choice allowed ADAM and EVE to fall, so it permits each to choose between "liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil" (2 Ne. 2:27).

Before giving his final blessings to others in the family (2 Ne. 4:3–11), Lehi spoke to Joseph, his youngest (2 Ne. 3), mentioning two other Josephs: JOSEPH who was sold into Egypt, and another, of whom the first Joseph had prophesied—Joseph SMITH. He then set forth Joseph Smith's mission of bringing forth the Book of Mormon, prophesying that a "cry from the dust" would summon Lehi's seed (2 Ne. 3:19–25), and he promised the sons and daughters of Laman and Lemuel, "in the end thy seed shall be blessed" (2 Ne. 4:9).

After Lehi's death, family dissensions forced Nephi and others who believed the revelations of God to separate from the group led by the two oldest brothers, causing a rupture in the colony. While Lehi lived, his family stayed together, a demonstration of his leadership abilities.

[See also Book of Mormon: First Book of Nephi.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, S. Kent. "Lehi's Personal Record: Quest for a Missing Source." BYU Studies 24 (Winter 1984):19–42.
- Griggs, C. Wilfred. "The Book of Mormon As an Ancient Book." BYU Studies 22 (Summer 1982):259–78.
- Nibley, Hugh. Lehi in the Desert, An Approach to the Book of Mormon, and Since Cumorah. In CWHN, Vols. 5–7.
- Welch, John W. "The Narrative of Zosimus and the Book of Mormon." BYU Studies 22 (Summer 1982):311–32.

S. KENT BROWN
TERRENCE L. SZINK

---

LEVITICAL PRIESTHOOD

Levitical Priesthood is a rarely used term today, and it is sometimes applied to the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD (Heb. 7:11; D&C 107:1, 6, 10). MOSES and his brother AARON belonged to the tribe of Levi. Latter-day revelation indicates that before Moses died, the Melchizedek Priesthood and the higher law of the gospel were withdrawn from the Israelites because of their disobedience. Aaron and his sons were then given a lesser PRIESTHOOD to administer the lesser LAW OF MOSES as priests in Israel (D&C 84:18–28; Ex. 28:1). To assist Aaron and his sons, other worthy male members of the tribe of Levi were also given authority in the lesser priesthood, although they could not be priests. The keys of that priesthood remained with Aaron and his direct posterity (MD, pp. 9–10; Widtsoe, pp. 12–17). Hence, the lesser priesthood was called the Aaronic Priesthood, after Aaron, but is sometimes referred to as the Levitical Priesthood because all those who possessed it in ancient times belonged to the tribe of Levi (Num. 3:12–13). In the strict sense the Levitical Priesthood is a lesser part of the Aaronic Priesthood, held among those who were Levites, but not of the family of Aaron. The Doctrine and Covenants states that “there are, in the church, two priesthoods, namely, the Melchizedek and Aaronic, including the Levitical Priesthood” (D&C 107:1). It is anticipated that in the restoration of all things, the sons of Levi will once again function in the Levitical Priesthood on the earth (Mal. 3:2–3).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Palmer, Lee A. Aaronic Priesthood Through the Centuries. Salt Lake City, 1964.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1954.

VERDON W. BALLANTYNE

LIAHONA

The Liahona was a compass or director “prepared . . . by the hand of the Lord” for the Book of Mormon prophet LEHI as he and his family traveled in the wilderness (2 Ne. 5:12). It was shown to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and the Three Witnesses in 1829 along with the Book of Mormon plates (D&C 17:1). The Liahona was also understood as a symbol for the words of Christ: “For just as surely as this [Liahona] did bring our fathers, by following its course, to the promised land, shall the words of Christ, if we follow their course, carry us . . . into a far better land of promise” (Alma 37:45).

Described as a ball made of fine brass and “of curious workmanship,” it had two spindles, one pointing the direction Lehi’s family should travel (1 Ne. 16:10). The term “Liahona” appears only once in the Book of Mormon (Alma 37:38). It was usually referred to as “the ball” (1 Ne. 16:16, 26–27; etc.), “compass” (1 Ne. 18:12; Alma 37:43–44; etc.), or “director” (Mosiah 1:16; cf. D&C 17:1).

Lehi found the Liahona, provided by the Lord (Alma 37:38), outside of his tent door while camp-

Lehi and His People Discover the Liahona, by Arnold Friberg (1951; oil on canvas, 43" × 61"), in the South Visitors Center, Temple Square, Salt Lake City. While traveling in the wilderness south of Jerusalem, the Book of Mormon prophet Lehi and his family found the Liahona, a compass or director prepared by the Lord.

could not be priests. The keys of that priesthood remained with Aaron and his direct posterity (MD, pp. 9–10; Widtsoe, pp. 12–17). Hence, the lesser priesthood was called the Aaronic Priesthood, after Aaron, but is sometimes referred to as the Levitical Priesthood because all those who possessed it in ancient times belonged to the tribe of Levi (Num. 3:12–13). In the strict sense the Levitical Priesthood is a lesser part of the Aaronic Priesthood, held among those who were Levites, but not of the family of Aaron. The Doctrine and Covenants states that “there are, in the church, two priesthoods, namely, the Melchizedek and Aaronic, including the Levitical Priesthood” (D&C 107:1). It is anticipated that in the restoration of all things, the sons of Levi will once again function in the Levitical Priesthood on the earth (Mal. 3:2–3).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Palmer, Lee A. Aaronic Priesthood Through the Centuries. Salt Lake City, 1964.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1954.

VERDON W. BALLANTYNE

LIAHONA

The Liahona was a compass or director “prepared . . . by the hand of the Lord” for the Book of Mormon prophet LEHI as he and his family traveled in the wilderness (2 Ne. 5:12). It was shown to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and the Three Witnesses in 1829 along with the Book of Mormon plates (D&C 17:1). The Liahona was also understood as a symbol for the words of Christ: “For just as surely as this [Liahona] did bring our fathers, by following its course, to the promised land, shall the words of Christ, if we follow their course, carry us . . . into a far better land of promise” (Alma 37:45).

Described as a ball made of fine brass and “of curious workmanship,” it had two spindles, one pointing the direction Lehi’s family should travel (1 Ne. 16:10). The term “Liahona” appears only once in the Book of Mormon (Alma 37:38). It was usually referred to as “the ball” (1 Ne. 16:16, 26–27; etc.), “compass” (1 Ne. 18:12; Alma 37:43–44; etc.), or “director” (Mosiah 1:16; cf. D&C 17:1).

Lehi found the Liahona, provided by the Lord (Alma 37:38), outside of his tent door while camping in the wilderness after leaving Jerusalem (1 Ne. 16:10). As his party traveled through the Arabian desert and across the ocean to the PROMISED LAND, one of the spindles pointed the direction to travel. Moreover, the Liahona was a medium through which God communicated with Lehi's family. Written messages occasionally appeared on it, giving them specific directions (1 Ne. 16:26–29).

Lehi and His People Discover the Liahona, by Arnold Friberg (1951; oil on canvas, 43" × 61"), in the South Visitors Center, Temple Square, Salt Lake City. While traveling in the wilderness south of Jerusalem, the Book of Mormon prophet Lehi and his family found the Liahona, a compass or director prepared by the Lord.

The instrument worked according to the faith and obedience of Lehi's family. When they lacked faith or disobeyed, it ceased to function. Passed down from generation to generation along with the sacred records, it was stored with the GOLD PLATES.

Liahona is the title of an international Spanish-language magazine published by the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nibley, Hugh. Since Cumorah. 2nd ed. CWHN 7:251–63. Salt Lake City, 1988.

DOUGLAS KENT LUDLOW

LIAHONA THE ELDERS' JOURNAL

The official publication for all the North American missions of the Church from 1907 to 1945 was Liahona the Elders' Journal, published in Independence, Missouri. It arose from the merger of The Elders' Journal, published by the Southern States Mission from 1903 to 1907, and The Liahona, a multimission publication begun by the Central States Mission in Independence on April 6, 1907. Publishing articles of interest to missionaries, people considering membership in the Church, and general members, it helped build a feeling of community among the Saints scattered throughout the North American missions. Thomas C. Romney's World Religions in the Light of Mormonism (1946) grew out of articles he first published in the Liahona. In its prime, the journal had nearly 20,000 subscribers.

With several missions publishing their own bulletins after World War I and the Deseret News introducing the weekly "Church Section" in 1931, Liahona subscriptions continually decreased until it ceased publication in 1945.

[See also Liahona.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Garr, Arnold K. "A History of Liahona the Elders' Journal, A Magazine Published for the Mormon Missions of America, 1903–1945." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1986.

ARNOLD K. GARR

LIBERTY JAIL

In 1833 a small jail was constructed in Liberty, the seat of Clay County, Missouri. In 1856 the building was abandoned. After a short tenure as an ice house, it fell into disrepair and was finally demolished near the turn of the century. Today, thousands of Latter-day Saints and other tourists visit the partially reconstructed jail and view it as what the LDS historian B. H. Roberts called a "prison temple" because of a notable prisoner it housed: the Prophet Joseph SMITH languished within its four-foot-thick walls from December 1, 1838 until April 6, 1839. Sharing this incarceration were his brother Hyrum (see Hyrum SMITH), who served as his second counselor in the presidency of the Church; Sidney RIGDON, his first counselor; and three other brethren—Lyman Wight, Alexander McRae, and Caleb Baldwin.

They were held on a variety of unsubstantiated charges stemming from the "Mormon War" (see MISSOURI CONFLICT), which had culminated in their betrayal and the fall of the LDS settlement of Far West, Missouri, a few weeks earlier. As they awaited trial, they suffered severe privation. Confined to the lower level or dungeon portion of the building, they slept on the straw-strewn stone floor with little light and scant protection from the Missouri winter. Alexander McRae described the food they were served as "very coarse, and so filthy that we could not eat it until we were driven to it by hunger" (CHC 1:521). He also recorded that several attempts were made to poison them.

Notwithstanding these trying physical conditions, Joseph Smith's greater suffering seemed to come from his anguish for the thousands of Latter-day Saints, including his own family, who were being driven from the state under the executive order of Governor Lilburn W. Boggs calling for the extermination of the Mormons (see EXTERMINATION ORDER). In a very long, two-part letter to the Church, written between March 20 and March 25, Joseph cried out, "O God, where art thou? And where is the pavilion that covereth thy hiding

ing in the wilderness after leaving Jerusalem (1 Ne. 16:10). As his party traveled through the Arabian desert and across the ocean to the PROMISED LAND, one of the spindles pointed the direction to travel. Moreover, the Liahona was a medium through which God communicated with Lehi's family. Written messages occasionally appeared on it, giving them specific directions (1 Ne. 16:26–29).

The instrument worked according to the faith and obedience of Lehi's family. When they lacked faith or disobeyed, it ceased to function. Passed down from generation to generation along with the sacred records, it was stored with the GOLD PLATES.

Liahona is the title of an international Spanish-language magazine published by the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nibley, Hugh. Since Cumorah. 2nd ed. CWHN 7:251–63. Salt Lake City, 1988.

DOUGLAS KENT LUDLOW

LIAHONA THE ELDERS' JOURNAL

The official publication for all the North American missions of the Church from 1907 to 1945 was Liahona the Elders' Journal, published in Independence, Missouri. It arose from the merger of The Elders' Journal, published by the Southern States Mission from 1903 to 1907, and The Liahona, a multimission publication begun by the Central States Mission in Independence on April 6, 1907. Publishing articles of interest to missionaries, people considering membership in the Church, and general members, it helped build a feeling of community among the Saints scattered throughout the North American missions. Thomas C. Romney's World Religions in the Light of Mormonism (1946) grew out of articles he first published in the Liahona. In its prime, the journal had nearly 20,000 subscribers.

With several missions publishing their own bulletins after World War I and the Deseret News introducing the weekly "Church Section" in 1931, Liahona subscriptions continually decreased until it ceased publication in 1945.

[See also Liahona.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Garr, Arnold K. "A History of Liahona the Elders' Journal, A Magazine Published for the Mormon Missions of America, 1903–1945." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1986.

ARNOLD K. GARR

LIBERTY JAIL

In 1833 a small jail was constructed in Liberty, the seat of Clay County, Missouri. In 1856 the building was abandoned. After a short tenure as an ice house, it fell into disrepair and was finally demolished near the turn of the century. Today, thousands of Latter-day Saints and other tourists visit the partially reconstructed jail and view it as what the LDS historian B. H. Roberts called a "prison temple" because of a notable prisoner it housed: the Prophet Joseph SMITH languished within its four-foot-thick walls from December 1, 1838 until April 6, 1839. Sharing this incarceration were his brother Hyrum (see Hyrum SMITH), who served as his second counselor in the presidency of the Church; Sidney RIGDON, his first counselor; and three other brethren—Lyman Wight, Alexander McRae, and Caleb Baldwin.

They were held on a variety of unsubstantiated charges stemming from the "Mormon War" (see MISSOURI CONFLICT), which had culminated in their betrayal and the fall of the LDS settlement of Far West, Missouri, a few weeks earlier. As they awaited trial, they suffered severe privation. Confined to the lower level or dungeon portion of the building, they slept on the straw-strewn stone floor with little light and scant protection from the Missouri winter. Alexander McRae described the food they were served as "very coarse, and so filthy that we could not eat it until we were driven to it by hunger" (CHC 1:521). He also recorded that several attempts were made to poison them.

Notwithstanding these trying physical conditions, Joseph Smith's greater suffering seemed to come from his anguish for the thousands of Latter-day Saints, including his own family, who were being driven from the state under the executive order of Governor Lilburn W. Boggs calling for the extermination of the Mormons (see EXTERMINATION ORDER). In a very long, two-part letter to the Church, written between March 20 and March 25, Joseph cried out, "O God, where art thou? And where is the pavilion that covereth thy hiding

ing in the wilderness after leaving Jerusalem (1 Ne. 16:10). As his party traveled through the Arabian desert and across the ocean to the PROMISED LAND, one of the spindles pointed the direction to travel. Moreover, the Liahona was a medium through which God communicated with Lehi's family. Written messages occasionally appeared on it, giving them specific directions (1 Ne. 16:26–29).

The instrument worked according to the faith and obedience of Lehi's family. When they lacked faith or disobeyed, it ceased to function. Passed down from generation to generation along with the sacred records, it was stored with the GOLD PLATES.

Liahona is the title of an international Spanish-language magazine published by the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nibley, Hugh. Since Cumorah. 2nd ed. CWHN 7:251–63. Salt Lake City, 1988.

DOUGLAS KENT LUDLOW

LIAHONA THE ELDERS' JOURNAL

The official publication for all the North American missions of the Church from 1907 to 1945 was Liahona the Elders' Journal, published in Independence, Missouri. It arose from the merger of The Elders' Journal, published by the Southern States Mission from 1903 to 1907, and The Liahona, a multimission publication begun by the Central States Mission in Independence on April 6, 1907. Publishing articles of interest to missionaries, people considering membership in the Church, and general members, it helped build a feeling of community among the Saints scattered throughout the North American missions. Thomas C. Romney's World Religions in the Light of Mormonism (1946) grew out of articles he first published in the Liahona. In its prime, the journal had nearly 20,000 subscribers.

With several missions publishing their own bulletins after World War I and the Deseret News introducing the weekly "Church Section" in 1931, Liahona subscriptions continually decreased until it ceased publication in 1945.

[See also Liahona.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Garr, Arnold K. "A History of Liahona the Elders' Journal, A Magazine Published for the Mormon Missions of America, 1903–1945." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1986.

ARNOLD K. GARR

LIBERTY JAIL

In 1833 a small jail was constructed in Liberty, the seat of Clay County, Missouri. In 1856 the building was abandoned. After a short tenure as an ice house, it fell into disrepair and was finally demolished near the turn of the century. Today, thousands of Latter-day Saints and other tourists visit the partially reconstructed jail and view it as what the LDS historian B. H. Roberts called a "prison temple" because of a notable prisoner it housed: the Prophet Joseph SMITH languished within its four-foot-thick walls from December 1, 1838 until April 6, 1839. Sharing this incarceration were his brother Hyrum (see Hyrum SMITH), who served as his second counselor in the presidency of the Church; Sidney RIGDON, his first counselor; and three other brethren—Lyman Wight, Alexander McRae, and Caleb Baldwin.

They were held on a variety of unsubstantiated charges stemming from the "Mormon War" (see MISSOURI CONFLICT), which had culminated in their betrayal and the fall of the LDS settlement of Far West, Missouri, a few weeks earlier. As they awaited trial, they suffered severe privation. Confined to the lower level or dungeon portion of the building, they slept on the straw-strewn stone floor with little light and scant protection from the Missouri winter. Alexander McRae described the food they were served as "very coarse, and so filthy that we could not eat it until we were driven to it by hunger" (CHC 1:521). He also recorded that several attempts were made to poison them.

Notwithstanding these trying physical conditions, Joseph Smith's greater suffering seemed to come from his anguish for the thousands of Latter-day Saints, including his own family, who were being driven from the state under the executive order of Governor Lilburn W. Boggs calling for the extermination of the Mormons (see EXTERMINATION ORDER). In a very long, two-part letter to the Church, written between March 20 and March 25, Joseph cried out, "O God, where art thou? And where is the pavilion that covereth thy hiding place? How long shall thy hand be stayed, and thine eye, yea thy pure eye, behold from the eternal heavens the wrongs of thy people and of thy servants, and thine ear be penetrated with their cries? Yea, O Lord, how long shall they suffer these wrongs and unlawful oppressions?" (D&C 121:1–3).

In answer, he was told to be of good cheer: "My son, peace be unto thy soul; thine adversity and thine afflictions shall be but a small moment; And then, if thou endure it well, God shall exalt thee on high; thou shalt triumph over all thy foes" (D&C 121:7–8). Some of Joseph Smith's most sublime writings are found in this letter. The counsel of the Lord concerning the proper exercise of priesthood authority (D&C 121:33–46) is among the most quoted latter-day scripture. Excerpts from the letter make up sections 121, 122, and 123 of the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

In early April 1839, the prisoners were moved to Daviess County for trial; and then while being taken to Columbia, Boone County, on yet another change of venue, they learned from their captors that, for a variety of reasons, it would be agreeable to the officials if they would escape. With the aid of their guards, the prisoners hastened to join the exiled Latter-day Saints who were gathering in western Illinois.

Today, a commodious visitors center houses Liberty Jail that, in cutaway form, has been partially rebuilt from the original stones.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dyer, Alvin R. The Refiner's Fire. Salt Lake City, 1968.
Maxwell, Neal A. But for a Small Moment. Salt Lake City, 1986.
Roberts, B. H. CHC, chap. 38.

LAWRENCE R. FLAKE

LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES

Latter-day Saints believe that people should document God's dealings with them. Without sacred records, people are destined to "dwindle and perish in unbelief" (1 Ne. 3:13). In one of the first revelations received after the Church was formally organized, the Prophet Joseph SMITH was instructed that "there shall be a record kept among you" (D&C 21:1). This directive, followed a few years later by instruction "to gather up the libelous publications that are afloat" (D&C 123:4), led to the appointment of a succession of Church historians, each charged with keeping an account of the activities of Joseph Smith, his successors, and the Church in general (see RECORD KEEPING). Many of these ongoing chronicles, together with the accumulation of day-to-day records of Church enterprises and the papers of Church members, became the foundation of the modern Church Archives in Salt Lake City. The establishment of such archives was accomplished when there were few historical societies and no national or state archives in the United States.

Liberty Jail, in Liberty, Missouri, 1888. On top, Church Historian Andrew Jenson; left Joseph S. Black; right, Edward Stevenson. This building, whose outside dimensions are 22 feet square, held Joseph Smith for six months. It was used as a prison until 1856. Photographer: J. T. Hicks.

Andrew Jenson, who served as an Assistant Church Historian for fifty years (1891–1941), tirelessly combed LDS communities and foreign missions for records. He wrote histories of hundreds of local wards, branches, missions, and settlements, and established a system for having local leaders produce manuscript histories (quarterly records of Church events and activities). His efforts greatly enriched the Church Archives, and the records have continued to expand with the donations of papers and diaries of many Church members throughout the years. Because of the growth of the Church, minutes of meetings of local congregaplace? How long shall thy hand be stayed, and thine eye, yea thy pure eye, behold from the eternal heavens the wrongs of thy people and of thy servants, and thine ear be penetrated with their cries? Yea, O Lord, how long shall they suffer these wrongs and unlawful oppressions?" (D&C 121:1–3).

In answer, he was told to be of good cheer: "My son, peace be unto thy soul; thine adversity and thine afflictions shall be but a small moment; And then, if thou endure it well, God shall exalt thee on high; thou shalt triumph over all thy foes" (D&C 121:7–8). Some of Joseph Smith's most sublime writings are found in this letter. The counsel of the Lord concerning the proper exercise of priesthood authority (D&C 121:33–46) is among the most quoted latter-day scripture. Excerpts from the letter make up sections 121, 122, and 123 of the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

In early April 1839, the prisoners were moved to Daviess County for trial; and then while being taken to Columbia, Boone County, on yet another change of venue, they learned from their captors that, for a variety of reasons, it would be agreeable to the officials if they would escape. With the aid of their guards, the prisoners hastened to join the exiled Latter-day Saints who were gathering in western Illinois.

Today, a commodious visitors center houses Liberty Jail that, in cutaway form, has been partially rebuilt from the original stones.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dyer, Alvin R. The Refiner's Fire. Salt Lake City, 1968.
Maxwell, Neal A. But for a Small Moment. Salt Lake City, 1986.
Roberts, B. H. CHC, chap. 38.

LAWRENCE R. FLAKE

LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES

Latter-day Saints believe that people should document God's dealings with them. Without sacred records, people are destined to "dwindle and perish in unbelief" (1 Ne. 3:13). In one of the first revelations received after the Church was formally organized, the Prophet Joseph SMITH was instructed that "there shall be a record kept among you" (D&C 21:1). This directive, followed a few years later by instruction "to gather up the libelous publications that are afloat" (D&C 123:4), led to the appointment of a succession of Church historians, each charged with keeping an account of the activities of Joseph Smith, his successors, and the Church in general (see RECORD KEEPING). Many of these ongoing chronicles, together with the accumulation of day-to-day records of Church enterprises and the papers of Church members, became the foundation of the modern Church Archives in Salt Lake City. The establishment of such archives was accomplished when there were few historical societies and no national or state archives in the United States.

Liberty Jail, in Liberty, Missouri, 1888. On top, Church Historian Andrew Jenson; left Joseph S. Black; right, Edward Stevenson. This building, whose outside dimensions are 22 feet square, held Joseph Smith for six months. It was used as a prison until 1856. Photographer: J. T. Hicks.

Andrew Jenson, who served as an Assistant Church Historian for fifty years (1891–1941), tirelessly combed LDS communities and foreign missions for records. He wrote histories of hundreds of local wards, branches, missions, and settlements, and established a system for having local leaders produce manuscript histories (quarterly records of Church events and activities). His efforts greatly enriched the Church Archives, and the records have continued to expand with the donations of papers and diaries of many Church members throughout the years. Because of the growth of the Church, minutes of meetings of local congregations are no longer sent to the Archives, and the Manuscript Histories have been replaced by brief annual historical reports.

In the early days of the Church, leaders sought after texts that demonstrated a broad-based learning and cultural understanding. A library was established in Nauvoo in the Seventies Hall that contained many books, including those brought by missionaries who had served abroad. Although the disposition of the Nauvoo library is not known, the Latter-day Saints continued to maintain libraries after they moved west.

